Prince. I thinke to ſteale Creame indeed, for thy theft hath already made thee Butter: but tell me, Iack, whoſe fellowes are theſe that come after?
Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.
Prince. I did neuer ſee ſuch pittifull Rafcals.
Fal. Tut, tut, good enough to toſſe; foode for Powder, foode for Powder: they'le fill a Pit, as well as better:
tuſh man, mortall men, mortall men.
Weſtm. I, but Sir Iohn, me thinkes they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.
Fal. Faith, for their pouertie, I know not where they had that: and for their bareneſſe, I am ſure they neuer learn'd that of me.
Prince. No, Ile be ſworne, vnleſſe you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But ſirra, make haſte, Percy is already in the field.
Fal. What, is the King encamp'd?
Weſtm. Hee is, Sir Iohn, I feare wee ſhall ſtay too long.
Fal. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feaſt, fits a dull fighter, and a keene Gueſt.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Hotſpur, Worceſter, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hotſp. Wee'le fight with him to Night.
Worc. It may not be.
Doug. You giue him then aduantage.
Vern. Not a whit.
Hotſp. Why ſay you ſo? lookes he not for ſupply?
Vern. So doe wee.
Hotſp. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.
Worc. Good Couſin be aduis'd, ſtirre not to night.
Vern. Doe not, my Lord.
Doug. You doe not counſaile well:
You ſpeake it out of feare, and cold heart.
Vern. Doe me no ſlander, Douglas: by my Life,
And I dare well maintaine it with my Life,
If well-reſpected Honor bid me on,
I hold as little counſaile with weake feare,
As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day liues.
Let it be ſeene to morrow in the Battell,
Which of vs feares.
Doug. Yea, or to night.
Vern. Content.
Hotſp. To night, ſay I.
Vern. Come, come, it may not be.
I wonder much, being me of ſuch great leading as you are
That you fore-ſee not what impediments
Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horſe
Of my Couſin Vernons are not yet come vp.
Your Vncle Worceſters Horſe came but to day,
And now their pride and mettell is aſleepe,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
That not a Horſe is halfe the halfe of himſelfe.
Hotſp. So are the Horſes of the Enemie
In generall iourney bated, and brought low:
The better part of ours are full of reſt.

Were. The number of the King exceedeth ours:
For Gods sake, Cousin, stay till all come in.

The Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the King,
If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.
Hotsp. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt.
And would to God you were of our determination.
Some of vs loue you well: and euen those some Enuie your great deseruings, and good name,
Because you are not of our qualitie.
But stand against vs like an Enemie.
Blunt. And Heauen defend, but still I should stand so,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You stand against anoynted Maiestie.
But to my Charge.
The King hath sent to know
The nature of your Griefes, and whereupon
You conjure from the Brest of Ciuill Peace,
Such bold Hostilitie, teaching his dutious Land
Audacious Cruelties. If that the King
Haue any way your good Deserts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your Griefes, and with all speed
You shall haue your desires, with interest;
And Pardon absolute for your selfe, and these,
Herein mis-led, by your suggestion.
Hotsp. The King is kinde:
And well wee know, the King
Knowes at what time to promise, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnckle, and my selfe,
Did giue him that same Royaltie he weares:
And when he was not sixe and twentie strong,
Sicke in the Worlds regard, wretched, and low,
A poore vnminded Out-law, sneaking home,
My Father gaue him welcome to the shore:
And when he heard him sweare, and vow to God,
He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his Liuerie, and beg his Peace,
With teares of Innocencie, and terrmes of Zeale;
My Father, in kinde heart and pitty mou'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Perceiu'd Northumberland did leane to him.
The more and lesse came in with Cap and Knee,
Met him in Boroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, stood in Lanes,
Layd Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Oathes,
Gaue him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Euen at the heeles, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as Greatnesse knowes it selfe,
Steps me a little higher then his Vow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Vpon the naked shore at Raunspurgh:
And now (forsooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Edicts, and some strait Decrees,
That lay too heauie on the Common-wealth;
Cryes out vpon abuses, seemes to weepe
Ouer his Countries Wrongs: and by this Face,
This seeming Brow of Iustice, did he winne
The hearts of all that hee did angle for.
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the Fauorites, that the absent King
In deputation left behinde him heere,
When hee was personall in the Irish Warre.
Blunt. Tut, I came not to heare this.
Hotsp. Then to the poine.
In short time after, hee depos'd the King.
Soone after that, depriu'd him of his Life:
And in the neck of that, rank't the whole State,
To make that worse, suffer'd his Kinsman March,
Who is, if euery Owner were plac'd,
Indeede his King, to be engag'd in Wales,
There, without Ransome, to lye forfeited:
Disgrac'd me in my happie Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Rated my Vnckle from the Councell-Boord,
In rage dismiss'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committed Wrong on Wrong,
And in conclusion, droue vs to seeke out
This Head of safetie; and withall, to pole
Into his Title: the which wee finde
Too indirect, for long continuance.
Blunt. Shall I returne this answer to the King?
Hotsp. Not so, Sir Walter,
Wee'le with-draw a while.
Goe to the King, and let there be impawn'd
Some suretie for a safe returne againe,
And in the Morning early shall my Vnckle
Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.
Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Loue.
Hotsp. And 'tmay be, so wee shall.
Blunt. Pray Heauen you doe. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Arch-Bishop of Yorke and Sir Michell.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michell, beare this sealed Briefe
With winged haste to the Lord Marshall,
This to my Cousin Scroope, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haste.
Sir Mich. My good Lord, I guesse their tenor.
Arch. Like enough you doe.
To morrow, good Sir Michell, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch. For Sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly giuen to vnderstand,
The King, with mightie and quick-raysed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harry: and I feare, Sir Michell,
What with the sicknesse of Northumberland,
Whose Power was in the first proportion;
And what with Owen Glendowers absence thence,
Who with them was rated firmely too,
And comes not in, ouer-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an instant tryall with the King.
Sir Mich. Why, my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.
Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.
Sir Mic. But there is Mordake Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And

freſh. And ſo there is, but yet the King hath drawne peciall head of all the Land together:
rince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, oble Weſtmerland, and warlike Blunt;
many more Corriuals, and deare men
imation, and command in Armes.
M. Doubt not my Lord, he ſhall be well oppoſ'd reſh. I hope no leſſe? Yet needfull 'tis to feare, o preuent the worſt, Sir Michell ſpeed;
Lord Percy thriue not, ere the King
ſſe his power, he meanes to viſit vs:
hath heard of our Confederacie,
tis but Wiſedome to make ſtrong againſt him:
fore make haſt, I muſt go write againe her Friends: and ſo farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

r the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, Earle of Weſtmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falſtaffe.

g. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere r yon buſky hill: the day lookes pale i diſtemperature.
n. The Southerne winde play the Trumpet to his purpoſes, y his hollow whiſtling in the Leaues,
ls a Tempeſt, and a bluſt'ring day.
g. Then with the loſers let it ſympathize, othing can ſeeme foule to thoſe that win.
The Trumpet ſounds.
Enter Worceſter.

g. How now my Lord of Worſter? 'Tis not well you and I ſhould meet vpon ſuch termes,
w we meet. You haue decreu'd our truſt, nade vs doffe our eaſie Robes of Peace,
uſh our old limbes in vngentle Steele:
s not well, my Lord, this is not well.
ſay you to it? Will you againe vnknit thurliſh knot of all-abhorred Warre?
nourn in that obedient Orbe againe,
re you did giue a faire and naturall light,
e no more an exhal'd Meteor, digie of Feare, and a Portent oached Miſcheefe, to the vnborne Times?
r. Heare me, my Liege:
ine owne part, I could be well content tertaine the Lagge-end of my life quiet houres: For I do proteſt, not ſought the day of this diſlike.
g. You haue not ſought it: how comes it then?
f. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
n. Peace, Chewet, peace.
r. It pleas'd your Maieſty, to turne your lookes uour, from my Selfe, and all our Houſe;
et I muſt remember you my Lord,
were the firſt, and deareſt of your Friends:
ou, my ſtaffe of Office did I breake thwards time, and poaſted day and night
eete you on the way, and kiſſe your hand,
When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing ſo ſtrong and fortunate, as I;
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You ſwore to vs,
And you did ſweare that Oath at Doncaſter,
That you did nothing of purpoſe 'gainſt the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The ſeate of Gaunt, Dukedome of Lancaſter,
To this, we ſware our aide: But in ſhort ſpace,
It rain'd downe Fortune ſhowring on your head,
And ſuch a flood of Greatneſſe fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the abſent King,
What with the iniuries of wanton time,
The ſeeming ſufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the vnlucky Iriſh Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead:
And from this ſwarme of faire aduantages,
You tooke occaſion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the generall ſway into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to vs at Doncaſter,
And being fed by vs, you vs'd vs ſo,
As that vngentle gull the Cuckowes Bird
Vſeth the Sparrow, did oppreſſe our Neſt,
Grew by our Feeding, to ſo great a bulke,
That euen our Loue durſt not come neere your ſight
For feare of ſwallowing: But with nimble wing
We were inforc'd for ſafety ſake, to flye
Out of your ſight, and raiſe this preſent Head,
Whereby we ſtand oppoſed by ſuch meanes
As you your ſelfe, haue forg'd againſt your ſelfe,
By vnkinde vſage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworne to vs in your younger enterprize.
Kin. Theſe things indeede you haue articulated,
Proclaim'd at Market Croſſes, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With ſome fine colour, that may pleaſe the eye
Of fickle Changelings, and poore Diſcontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hurly burly Innouation:
And neuer yet did Inſurrection want
Such water-colours, to impaint his cauſe:
Nor moody Beggars, ſtarting for a time
Of pell-mell hauocke, and confuſion.
Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a ſoule
Shall pay full dearely for this encounter,
If once they ioyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth ioyne with all the world
In praiſe of Henry Percie: By my Hopes,
This preſent enterprize ſet off his head,
I do not thinke a brauer Gentleman,
More actiue, valiant, or more valiant young,
More daring, or more bold, is now aliue,
To grace this latter Age with Noble deeds.
For my part, I may ſpeake it to my ſhame,
I haue a Truant beene to Chiualry,
And ſo I heare, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my Fathers Maieſty,
I am content that he ſhall take the oddes
Of his great name and eſtimation,
And will, to ſaue the blood on either ſide,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.
King. And Prince of Wales, ſo dare we venter thee,
Albeit, conſiderations infinite

Do make againſt it: No good Worſter, no,
We loue our people well; euen thoſe we loue
That are miſled vpon your Coſſins part:
And will they take the offer of our Grace:
Both he, and they, and you; yea, euery man
Shall be my Friend againe, and I'le be his.
So tell your Coſſin, and bring me word,
What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on vs,
And they ſhall do their Office. So be gone,
We will not now be troubled with reply.
We offer faire, take it aduiſedly.

Exit Worceſter.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my life,
The Dowglas and the Hoſpurre both together,
Are confident againſt the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, euery Leader to his charge:
For on their anſwer will we ſet on them;
And God befriend vs, as our cauſe is iuſt. Exeunt.

Manet Prince and Falſtaffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou ſee me downe in the battell,
And beſtride me, ſo; 'tis a point of friendſhip.

Prin. Nothing but a Coloſſus can do thee that friendſhip
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'ſt heauen a death.

Falſt. 'Tis not due yet: I would be loath to pay him before his day. What needs I bee ſo forward with him, that call's not on me? Well, 'tis no matter, Honor prickes me on. But how if Honour pricke me off when I come on? How then? Can Honour ſet too a legge? No: or an arme? No: Or take away the greefe of a wound? No.
Honour hath no skill in Surgerie, then? No. What is Honour? A word. What is that word Honour? Ayre: A trim reckoning. Who hath it? He that dy'de a Wedneſday. Doth he feele it? No. Doth hee heare it? No. Is it inſenſible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not liue with the liuing? No. Why? Detraction will not ſuffer it, therfore I'le none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and ſo ends my Catechiſme. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Worceſter, and Sir Richard Vernon.

Wor. O no, my Nephew muſt not know, Sir Richard,
The liberall kinde offer of the King.

Ver. 'Twere beſt he did.

Wor. Then we are all vndone.
It is not poſſible, it cannot be,
The King would keepe his word in louing vs,
He will ſuſpect vs ſtill, and finde a time
To puniſh this offence in others faults.
Suppoſition, all our liues, ſhall be ſtucke full of eyes;
For Treaſon is but truſted like the Foxe,
Who ne're ſo tame, ſo cheriſht, and lock'd vp,
Will haue a wilde tricke of his Anceſtors:
Looke how he can, or ſad or merrily,
Interpretation will miſquote our lookes,
And we ſhall feede like Oxen at a ſtall,
The better cheriſht, ſtill the neerer death.
My Nephewes treſpaſſe may be well forgot,
It hath the excuſe of youth, and heate of blood,
And an adopted name of Priuiledge,
A haire-brain'd Hoſpurre, gouern'd by a Spleene:
All his offences liue vpon my head,
And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
And his corruption being tane from vs,
We as the Spring of all, ſhall pay for all:
Therefore good Coſſin, let not Harry know
In any caſe, the offer of the King.

Ver. Deliuer what you will, I'le ſay 'tis ſo.
Heere comes your Coſſin.

Enter Hoſpurre.

Hot. My Vnkle is return'd,
Deliuer vp my Lord of Weſtmerland.
Vnkle, what newes?

Wor. The King will bid you battell preſently.

Dow. Defie him by the Lord of Weſtmerland.

Hot. Lord Dowglas: Go you and tell him ſo.

Dow. Marry and ſhall, and very willingly.

Exit Dowglas

Wor. There is no ſeeming mercy in the King.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid.

Wor. I told him gently of our grieuances,
Of his Oath-breaking: which he mended thus,
By now forſwearing that he is forſworne.
He calls vs Rebels, Traitors, and will ſcourge
With haughty armes, this hatefull name in vs.

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I haue thrown
A braue defiance in King Henries teeth:
And Weſtmerland that was engag'd did beare it,
Which cannot chooſe but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales ſteps forth before the king,
And Nephew, challeng'd you to ſingle fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrell lay vpon our heads,
And that no man might draw ſhort breath to day,
But I and Harry Monmouth. Tell me, tell mee,
How ſhew'd his Talking? Seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my Soule: I neuer in my life
Did heare a Challenge vrg'd more modeſtly,
Vnleſſe a Brother ſhould a Brother dare
To gentle exerciſe, and proofe of Armes.
He gaue you all the Duties of a Man,
Trimm'd vp your praiſes with a Princely tongue,
Spoke your deſeruings like a Chronicle,
Making you euer better than his praiſe.
By ſtill diſpraiſing praiſe, valew'd with you:
And which became him like a Prince indeed,
He made a bluſhing citall of himſelfe,
And chid his Trewant youth with ſuch a Grace,
As if he maſtred there a double ſpirit
Of teaching, and of learning inſtantly:
There did he pauſe. But let me tell the World,
If he out-liue the enuie of this day,
England did neuer owe ſo ſweet a hope,
So much miſconſtrued in his Wantonneſſe.

Hot. Coſſin, I thinke thou art enamoured
On his Follies: neuer did I heare
Of any Prince ſo wilde at Liberty
But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
I will imbrace him with a Souldiers armes,
That he ſhall ſhrinke vnder my courteſie.
Arme, arme with ſpeed. And Fellow's, Soldiers, Friends,
Better conſider what you haue to do,
That I that haue not well the gift of Tongue,

Can

Can lift your blood vp with perſwaſion.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord, heere are Letters for you.

Hot. I cannot reade them now.

O Gentlemen, the time of life is ſhort;
To ſpend that ſhortneſſe baſely, were too long.
If life did ride vpon a Dials point,
Still ending at the arriuall of an houre,
And if we liue, we liue to tread on Kings:
If dye, braue death, when Princes dye with vs.
Now for our Conſciences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent of bearing them is iuſt.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace.

Hot. I thanke him, that he cuts me from my tale:
For I profeſſe not talking. Only this,
Let each man do his beſt. And here I draw a Sword,
Whoſe worthy temper I intend to ſtaine
With the beſt blood that I can meete withall,
In the aduenture of this perilous day.
Now Eſperance Percy, and ſet on:
Sound all the lofty Inſtruments of Warre,
And by that Muſicke, let vs all imbrace:
For heauen to earth, ſome of vs neuer ſhall,
A ſecond time do ſolemne curteſie.

They imbrace, the Trumpets ſound, the King entereth with his power, alarum vnto the battell. Then enter Douglas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battel thus ſ troſſeſt me?
What honor doſt thou ſeeke vpon my head?

Dou. Know then my name is Douglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battell thus,
Becauſe ſome tell me, that thou art a King.

Blun. They tell thee true.

Dou. The Lord of Stafford deere to day hath bought Thy likeneſſe: for inſtead of thee King Harry,
This Sword hath ended him. ſo ſhall it thee,
Vnleſſe thou yeeld thee as a Priſoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld, thou haughty Scot,
And thou ſhalt finde a King that will reuenge
Lords Staffords death.

Fight, Blunt is ſlaine, then enters Hotſpur.

Hot. O Douglas, hadſt thou fought at Holmedon thus
I neuer had triumphed o're a Scot.

Dou. All's done, all's won, here breathleſs lies the king.

Hot. Where?

Dou. Heere.

Hot. This Douglas? No, I know this face full well:
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblably furniſh'd like the King himſelfe.

Dou. Ah foole: go with thy ſoule whether it goes,
A borrowed Title haſt thou bought too deere.
Why dideſt thou tell me, that thou wer't a King?

Hot. The King hath many marching in his Coates.

Dou. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
Ile murder all his Wardrobe peece by peece,
Vntill I meet the King.

Hot. Vp, and away,
Our Soldiers ſtand full fairely for the day. Exeunt

Alarum, and enter Falſtaffe ſolus.

Fal. Though I could 'ſcape ſhot-free at London, I feare the ſhot heere: here's no ſcoring, but vpon the pate. Soft: who are you? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you: here's no vanity. I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heauy too; heauen keepe Lead out of mee. I needs no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I haue led my ragg of Muffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my 150. left aliue, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What, ſtand'ſt thou idle here? Lend me thy ſword.
Many a Nobleman lies ſtarke and ſtiffe
Vnder the hooues of vaunting enemies,
Whoſe deaths are vnreuenged. Prethy lend me thy ſword.

Fal. O Hal, I prethee giue me leaue to breath awhile. Turke Gregory neuer did ſuch deeds in Armes, as I haue done this day. I haue paid Percy, I haue made him ſure.

Prin. He is indeed, and liuing to kill thee:
I prethee lend me thy ſword.

Fall. Nay Hal, if Percy bee aliue, thou geſt not my Sword; but take my Piſtoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Giue it me: What, is it in the Caſe?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot: There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Prin. What, is it a time to ieſt and dally now. Exit.

Throwes it at him.

Fal. If Percy be aliue, Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, ſo: if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me. I like not ſuch grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Giue me life, which if I can ſaue, ſo: if not, honour comes vnlook'd for, and there's an end. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Alarum, excurſions, enter the King the Prince, Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, and Earle of Weſtmerland.

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy ſelfe, thou bleedeſt too much: Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, go you with him.

P. Iohn. Not I, my Lord, vnleſſe I did bleed too.

Prin. I beſeech your Maieſty make vp,
Leaſt you retirement do amaze your friends.

King. I will do ſo:
My Lord of Weſtmerland leade him to his Tent.

Weſt. Come my Lord, Ile leade you to your Tent.

Prin. Lead me my Lord? I do not need your helpe;
And heauen forbid a ſhallow ſcratch ſhould driue
The Prince of Wales from ſuch a field as this,
Where ſtain'd Nobility lyes troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in maſſacres.

Iohn. We breath too long: Come coſin Weſtmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heauens ſake come.

Prin. By heauen thou haſt deceiu'd me Lancaſter,
I did not thinke thee Lord of ſuch a ſpirit:
Before, I lou'd thee as a Brother, Iohn;
But now, I do reſpect thee as my Soule.

King. I ſaw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With luſtier maintenance then I did looke for
Of ſuch an vngrowne Warriour.

Prin. O this Boy, lends mettall to vs all. Exit

Enter Douglas.

Dou. Another King? They grow like Hydra's head:
I am the Douglas, fatall to all thoſe
That weare thoſe colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeit'ſt the perſon of a King?

King. The King himſelfe: who Douglas grieues at hart

So

So many of his shadowes thou hast met,
And not the very King. I have two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy selfe about the Field:
But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee: so defend thy selfe.

Dou. I feare thou art another counterfeit:
And yet in faith thou bear'st thee like a King:
But mine I am sure thou art, whoere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the King in danger,
Enter Prince.

Prin. Hold vp thy head vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it vp againe: the Spirits
Of valiant Shirly, Stafford, Blunt, are in my Armes:
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee.
Who never promiseth, but he meanes to pay.
They Fight, Douglas flyeth.
Cheerely My Lord: how fare's your Grace?
Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton: Ile to Clifton straight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to mee.

Prin. O heauen, they did me too much injury,
That ever said I hearkned to your death.
If it were so, I might haue let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you,
Which would haue bene as speedy in your end,
As all the poysonous Potions in the world,
And sau'd the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make vp to Clifton Ile to Sir Nicholas Gawsey. Exit
Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prin. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harrie Percie.

Prin. Why then I see a very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of vs; and would to heauen,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prin. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honors on thy Creast,
Ile crop, to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.
Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. Well said Hal, to it Hal. Nay you shall finde no
Boyes play heere, I can tell you.

Enter Douglas he fights with Falstaffe, who falls downe
as if he were dead. The Prince killeth Percie.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of brittle life,
Then those proud Titles thou hast wonne of me,
They wound my thoghts worse, then the sword my flesh:
But thought's the slaue of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must haue a stop. O, I could Prophesie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue: No Percy, thou art dust
And food for——

Prin. For Wormes, braue Percy Farewell great heart:
Ill-weau'd Ambition, how much art thou shrunke?
When this bodie did containe a spirit,
A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two paces of the vilest Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead,
Beares not alive so stout a Gentleman.
If thou wer't sensible of courtesie,
I should not make so great a shew of Zeale.
But let my fauours hide thy mangled face,
And even in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my selfe
For doing these fayre Rites of Tenderneesse.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heauen,
Thy ignomy sleepe with thee in the grave,
But not remembred in thy Epitaph.
What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Jacke, farewell:
I could haue better spar'd a better man.
O, I should haue a heavy misse of thee,
If I were much in loue with Vanity.
Death hath not strucke so fat a Deare to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percie lye. Exit.
Falstaffe riseth up.

Falst. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile giue you leaue to powder me, and eat me too to morrow.
'Twas time to counterfeit, or that hotte Termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I am no counterfeit: to dye, is to be a counterfeit, for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: But to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liueth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life in-deede. The better part of Valour, is Discretion; in the which better part, I haue saued my life. I am afeard of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afeard he would prooue the better counterfeit: therefore Ile make him sure yea, and Ile sweare I kill'd him. Why may not he rise as well as I: Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no-body sees me. Therefore sirra, with a new wound in your thigh come you along me. Takes Hotspurre on his backe.
Enter Prince and John of Lancaster.

Prin. Come Brother John, full bravely hast thou fleshe thy Maiden sword.

John. But soft, who haue we heere?
Did you not tell me this Fat man was dead?

Prin. I did, I saw him dead,
Breathlesse, and bleeding on the ground: Art thou alive?
Or is it fantasie that playes vpon our eye-sight?
I prethee speake, we will not trust our eyes
Without our eares. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certaine: I am not a double man: but if I be not Jacke Falstaffe, then am I a Jacke: There is Per- cy, if your Father will do me any Honor, so: if not, let him kill the next Percie himselfe. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can assure you.

Prin. Why, Percy I kill'd my selfe, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Did'st thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is given to Lying? I grant you I was downe, and out of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long houre by Shrewsburie clocke. If I may be beleeued, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour, beare
the sinne vpon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death,
I gaue him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were aliue, and would deny it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

John. This is the strangest Tale that e're I heard.

Prin. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother John.

Come,

bring your luggage Nobly on your backe:
part, a lye may do thee grace,
d it with the happiest teames I haue.
A Retreat is sounded.
umpets sound Retreat, the day is ours
Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
what Friends are liuing, who are dead. Exeunt Ile follow as they say, for Reward. He that reme heauen reward him. If I do grow great again, w leane? For Ile purge, and leaue Sacke, and liue as a Nobleman should do. Exit

Scena Quarta.

The Trumpets sound.
the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster
Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester &
Vernon Prisoners.

. Thus euer did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
ked Worcester, did we not send Grace,
, and teames of Loue to all of you?
ow? Fie thou turne our offers contrary?
the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust?
Knights vpon our party slaine to day,
e Earle, and many a creature else,
ene since this houre,
a Christian thou had'st truly borne t our Armies, true Intelligence.
. What I haue done, my safety vrg'd me to
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be auoyded, it falls on me.
King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too:
Other Offenders we will pause vpon.
Exit Worcester and Vernon.
How goes the Field?
Prin. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when hee saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruis'd
That the pursuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.
King. With all my heart.
Prin. Then Brother Iohn of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliuer him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free:
His Valour shewne vpon our Crests to day,
Hath taught vs how to cherish such high deeds,
Euen in the bosome of our Aduersaries.
King. Then this remaines: that we diuide our Power.
You Sonne Iohn, and my Cousin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deerest speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are busily in Armes.
My Selfe, and you Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day:
And since this Businesse so faire is done,
Let vs not leaue till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death: and the Coronation of King Henry the Fift.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Indvction.

Enter Rumour.

OPen your Eares: For which of you will ſtop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumor ſpeakes?
I, from the Orient, to the drooping Weſt
(Making the winde my Poſt-horſe) ſtill vnfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth.
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in euery Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the Eares of them with falſe Reports.
I ſpeake of Peace, while couert Enmitie
(Vnder the ſmile of Safety) wounds the World:
And who but Rumour, who but onely I
Make fearfull Muſters, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil'ſt the bigge yeare, ſwolne with ſome other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the ſterne Tyrant, Warre,
And no ſuch matter? Rumour, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmiſes, Ieloufies, Coniectures;
And of ſo eaſie, and ſo plaine a ſtop,
That the blunt Monſter, with vncounted heads,
The ſtill diſcordant, wauering Multitude,
Can play vpon it. But what needs I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anathomize
Among my houſhold? Why is Rumour heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe yong Hotſpurre, and his Troopes,
Quenching the flame of bold Rebellion,
Euen with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To ſpeake ſo true at firſt? My Office is
To noyſe abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hotſpurres Sword:
And that the King, before the Douglas Rage
Stoop'd his Anoynted head, as low as death.
This haue I rumour'd through the peaſant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hotſpurres Father, old Northumberland, Lyes craſty ſicke. The Poſtes come tyring on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they haue learn'd of Me. From Rumours Tongues,
They bring ſmooth-Comforts-falſe, worſe then True-wrongs. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L.Bar. Who keepes the Gate heere hoa?
Where is the Earle?
Por. What ſhall I ſay you are?
Bar. Tell thou the Earle
That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.
Por. His Lordſhip is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Pleaſe it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himſelfe will anſwer.

Enter Northumberland.

L.Bar. Heere comes the Earle.
Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Euery minute now
Should be the Father of ſome Stratagem;
The Times are wilde: Contention (like a Horſe
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke looſe,
And beares downe all before him.
L.Bar. Noble Earle,
I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury
Nor. Good, and heauen will.
L.Bar. As good as heart can wiſh:
The King is almoſt wounded to the death:
And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harrie ſlaine out-right: and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas. Yong Prince Iohn,
And Weſtmerland, and Stafford fled the Field,
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Hulke Sir Iohn)
Is priſoner to your Sonne. O ſuch a Day,
(So fought, ſo follow'd, and ſo fairely wonne)
Came not, till now, to diſguiſe the Times
Since Cæſars Fortunes.
Nor. How is this deriu'd?
Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?
L.Bar. I ſpake with one (my L.) that came from thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me theſe newes for true.
Nor. Heere comes my Seruant Trauers, whom I ſent
On Tueſday laſt, to liſten after Newes.

Enter Trauers.

L.Bar. My Lord, I ouer-rod him on the way,
And he is furniſh'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may retaile from me.
Nor. Now Trauers, what good tidings comes frō you?

Tra.

Lord, Sir Iohn Umfreuile turn'd me backe
tydings; and (being better horn'd)
After him, came ſpurring head s (almoſt fore-ſpeut with ſpeed)
by me, to breath his bloodied horſe.

Enter Morton.

Sigh, to blow away this Praiſe,
Brother, Sonne, and all are dead.

Lord, your Sonne.
Why, he is dead.

ou are too great, to be (by me) gainſaid:
Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.
North. Yet for all this, ſay not that Percies dead.
I ſee a ſtrange Confeſſion in thine Eye:
Thou ſhak'ſt thy head, and hold'ſt it Feare, or Sinne,
To ſpeake a truth. If he be ſlaine, ſay ſo:
The Toogue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth ſinne that doth belye the dead:
Not he, which ſayes the dead is not aliue:
Yet the firſt bringer of vnwelcome Newes
Hath but a looſing Office: and his Tongue,
Sounds euer after as a ſullen Bell
Remembred, knolling a departing Friend.
L. Bar. I cannot thinke (my Lord) your ſon is dead.
Mor. I am ſorry, I ſhould force you to beleeue
That, which I would to heauen, I had not ſeene.
But theſe mine eyes, ſaw him in bloody ſtate,
Rend'ring faint quittance (wearied, and out-breath'd)
To Henrie Monmouth, whoſe ſwift wrath beate downe
The neuer-daunted Percie to the earth,
From whence (with life) he neuer more ſprung vp.
In few; his death (whoſe ſpirit lent a fire, Euen to the dulleſt Peazant in his Campe)
Being bruited once, tooke fire and heate away
From the beſt temper'd Courage in his Troopes.
For from his Mettle, was his Party ſteel'd;
Which once, in him abated, all the reſt
Turn'd on themſelues, like dull and heauy Lead:
And as the Thing, that's heauy in it ſelfe,
Vpon enforcement, flyes with greateſt ſpeede,
So did our Men, heauy in Hotſpurres loſſe,
Lend to this weight, ſuch lightneſſe with their Feare,
That Arrowes fled not ſwifter toward their ayme,
Then did our Soldiers (ayming at their ſafety)
Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worceſter
Too ſoone ta'ne priſoner: and that furious Scot,
(The bloody Douglas) whoſe well-labouring ſword
Had three times ſlaine th'appearance of the King,
Gan vaile his ſtomacke, and did grace the ſhame
Of thoſe that turn'd their backes: and in his flight,
Stumbling in Feare, was tooke. The ſumme of all,
Is, that the King hath wonne: and hath ſent out
A ſpeedy power, to encounter you my Lord,
Vnder the Conduct of yong Lancaſter
And Weſtmerland. This is the Newes at full.
North. For this, I ſhall haue time enough to mourne.
In Poyſon, there is Phyſicke: and theſe newes
(Hauing beene well) that would haue made me ſicke,
Being ſicke, haue in ſome meaſure, made me well.
And as the Wretch, whoſe Feauer-weakned ioynts,
Like ſtrengthleſſe Hindges, buckle vnder life,
Impatient of his Fit, breakes like a fire
Out of his keepers armes: Euen ſo, my Limbes
(Weak'ned with greefe) being now inrag'd with greefe,
Are thrice themſelues. Hence therefore thou nice crutch,
A ſcalie Gauntlet now, with ioynts of Steele
Muſt glouе this hand. And hence thou ſickly Quoife,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which Princes, fleſh'd with Conqueſt, ayme to hit.
Now binde my Browes with Iron, and approach
The ragged'ſt houre, that Time and Spight dare bring
To frowne vpon th'enrag'd Northumberland.
Let Heauen kiſſe Earth: now let not Natures hand
Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd: Let Order
And let the world no longer be a ſtage
To feede Contention in a ling'ring Act:
But let one ſpirit of the Firſt-borne Cains

Reigne in all bosomes, that each heart being set
On bloody Courses, the rude Scene may end,
And darknesse be the burier of the dead. (Honor
L.Bar. Sweet Earle, diuorce not wisedom from your
Mor. The hiues of all your louing Complices
Leane on your health, the which if you giue-o're
To stormy Passion, must perforce decay.
You cast th'euent of Warre (my Noble Lord)
And summ'd the accompt of Chance, before you said
Let vs make head: It was your presurmize,
That in the dole of blowes, your Son might drop.
You knew he walk'd o're perils, on an edge
More likely to fall in, then to get o're:
You were aduis'd his flesh was capeable
Of Wounds, and Scarres; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd,
Yet did you say go forth: and none of this (Though strongly apprehended) could restraine
The stiffe-borne Action: What hath then befalne?
Or what hath this bold enterprize bring forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?
L.Bar. We all that are engaged to this losse,
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought out life, was ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the respect of likely perill fear'd,
And since we are o're-set, venture againe.
Come, we will all put forth; Body, and Goods,
Mor. 'Tis more then time: And (my most Noble Lord)
I heare for certaine, and do speake the truth:
The gentle Arch-bishop of Yorke is vp
With well appointed Powres: he is a man
Who with a double Surety binds his Followers.
My Lord (your Sonne) had only but the Corpes,
But shadowes, and the shewes of men to fight.
For that same word (Rebellion) did diuide
The action of their bodies, from their soules,
And they did fight with queasinesse, constrain'd
As men drinke Potions; that their Weapons only
Seem'd on our side: but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them vp,
As Fish are in a Pond. But now the Bishop
Turnes Insurrection to Religion,
Supposd sincere, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Minde:
And doth enlarge his Rising, with the blood
Of faire King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones,
Deriues from heauen, his Quarrell, and his Cause:
Tels them, he doth bestride a bleeding Land,
Gasping for life, vnder great Bullingbrooke,
And more, and lesse, do flocke to follow him.
North. I knew of this before. But to speake truth,
This present greefe had wip'd it from my minde.
Go in with me, and councell every man
The aptest way for safety, and reuenge:
Get Posts, and Letters, and make Friends with speed,
Neuer so few, nor neuer yet more need. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe and Page.

Fal. Sirra, you giant, what saies the Doct. to my water?

Pag. He said sir, the water it selfe was a good healthy water: but for the party that ow'd it, he might haue more diseases then he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at mee: the braine of this foolish compounded Clay-man, is not able to inuent any thing that tends to laughter, more then I inuent, or is inuented on me. I am not only witty in my selfe, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walke before thee, like a Sow, that hath o'rewhelm'd all her Litter, but one. If the Prince put thee into my Seruice for any other reason, then to set mee off, why then I haue no iudgement. Thou horson Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, then to wait at my heeles. I was neuer mann'd with an Agot till now: but I will set you neyther in Gold, nor Siluer, but in vilde apparell, and send you backe againe to your Master, for a Iewell. The Iuuenall (the Prince your Master) whose Chin is not yet fledg'd, I will sooner haue a beard grow in the Palme of my hand, then he shall get one on his cheeke: yet he will not sticke to say, his Face is a Face-Royall. Heauen may finish it when he will, it is not a haire amisse yet: he may keepe it still at a Face-Royall, for a Barber shall neuer earne six pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man euer since his Father was a Batchellour. He may keepe his owne Grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said M. Dombledon, about the Satten for my short Cloake, and Slops?

Pag. He said sir, you should procure him better Assurance, then Bardolfe: he would not take his Bond & yours, he lik'd not the Security.

Fal. Let him bee damn'd like the Glutton, may his Tongue be hotter, a horson Achitophel; a Rascally-yea-forsooth-knaue, to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then stand vpon Security? The horson smooth-pates doe now weare nothing but high shoes, and bunches of Keyes at their girdles: and if a man is through with them in honest Taking-vp, then they must stand vpon Security: I had as liefe they would put Rats-bane in my mouth, as offer to stoppe it with Security. I look'd he should haue sent me two and twenty yards of Satten (as I am true Knight) and he sends me Security. Well, he may sleep in Security, for he hath the horne of Abundance: and the lightnesse of his Wife shines through it, and yet cannot he see, though he haue his owne Lanthorne to light him. Where's Bardolfe?

Pag. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paules, and he'l buy me a horse in Smithfield. If I could get mee a wife in the Stewes, I were Mann'd, Hors'd, and Wiu'd.

Enter Chiefe Iustice and Seruant.

Pag. Sir, heere comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for striking him, about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch.Iust. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falstaffe, and'a please your Lordship.

Iust. He that was in question for the Robbery?

Ser. He my Lord, but he hath since done good seruice at Shrewsbury: and (as I heare) is now going with some Charge, to the Lord Iohn of Lancaster.

Iust. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.

Pag. You must speake lowder, my Master is deafe.

Iust. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good. Go plucke him by the Elbow, I must speake with him.

Ser. Sir Iohn.

Fal. What a young knaue and beg? Is there not warres? is there not employment? Doth not the King lacke subiects? Do not the Rebels want Soldiers? Though it be a shame to be Vertue is of ſo little regard in theſe Coſtor-mongers, that true valor is turn'd Beare-herd. Pregnancie is made a Tapſter, and hath his quicke wit waſted in giuing Recknings: all the other gifts appertinent to man (as the malice of this Age ſhapes them) are not woorth a Gooſeberry. You that are old, conſider not the capacities of vs that are yong: you meaſure the heat of our Liuers, with the bitternes of your gals. & we that are in the vaward of our youth, I muſt confeſſe, are wagges too.

Iuſt. Do you ſet downe your name in the ſcrowle of youth, that are written downe old, with all the Charracters of age? Haue you not a moiſt eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheeke? a white beard? a decreaſing leg? an increaſing belly? Is not your voice broken? your winde ſhort? your wit ſingle? and euery part about you blaſted with Antiquity? and will you call your ſelfe yong? Fy, fy, fy, ſir Iohn.
Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & ſomthing a round belly. For my voice, I haue loſt it with hallowing and ſinging of Anthemes. To approue my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am onely olde in iudgement and vnderſtanding: and he that will caper with mee for a thouſand Markes, let him lend me the mony, & haue at him. For the boxe of th'eare that the Prince gaue you, he gaue it like a rude Prince, and you tooke it like a ſenſible Lord. I haue checkt him for it, and the yong Lion repents: Marry not in aſhes and ſacke-cloath, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.
Iuſt. Wel, heauen ſend the Prince a better companion
Fal. Heauen ſend the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him.
Iuſt. Well, the King hath ſeuer'd you and Prince Harry, I heare you are going with Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, againſt the Archbiſhop, and the Earle of Northumberland
Fal. Yes, I thanke your pretty ſweet wit for it: but looke you pray, (all you that kiſſe my Ladie Peace, at home) that our Armies ioyn not in a hot day: for if I take but two ſhirts out with me, and I meane not to ſweat extraordinarily: if it bee a hot day, if I brandiſh any thing but my Bottle, would I might neuer ſpit white againe: There is not a daungerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thruſt vpon it. Well, I cannot laſt euer.
Iuſt. Well, be honeſt, be honeſt, and heauen bleſſe your Expedition.
Fal. Will your Lordſhip lend mee a thouſand pound, to furniſh me forth?
Iuſt. Not a penny, not a penny: you are too impatient to beare croſſes. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Coſin Weſtmerland.
Fal. If I do, fillop me with a three-man-Beetle. A man can no more ſeparate Age and Couetouſneſſe, then he can part yong limbes and lecherie: but the Gowt galles the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the Degrees prevent my curses. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seuen groates, and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing onely lingers, and lingers it out, but the disease is incureable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmerland, and this to old Mistris Vrsula, whome I haue weekly sworne to marry, since I perceiu'd the first white haire on my chin. About it: you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Poxe: for the one or th'other playes the rogue with my great toe: It is no matter, if I do halt, I haue the warres for my colour, and my Pension shall seeme the more reasonable. A good wit will make vse of any thing: I will turne diseases to commodity. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, Hastings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Arch. Thus haue you heard our causes, & know our Means:
And my most noble Friends, I pray you all
Speake plainly your opinions of our hopes,
And first (Lord Marshall) what say you to it?

Mow. I well allow the occasion of our Armes,
But gladly would be better satisfied,
How (in our Meanes) we should aduance our selues
To looke with forhead bold and big enough
Vpon the Power and puissance of the King.

Hast. Our present Musters grow vpon the File
To fiue and twenty thousand men of choice:
And our Supplies, liue largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosome burnes
With an incensed Fire of Iniuries.

L. Bar. The question then (Lord Hastings) standeth thus Whether our present fiue and twenty thousand
May hold-vp-head, without Northumberland:

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bar. I marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought to feeble,
My iudgement is, we should not step too farre
Till we had his Assistance by the hand.
For in a Theame so bloody fac'd, as this,
Conieciure, Expectation, and Surmise
Of Aydes incertaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed
It was yong Hotspurres case, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himself with hope,
Eating the ayre, on promise of Supply,
Flatt'ring himselfe with Project of a power,
Much smaller, then the smallest of his Thoughts,
And so with great imagination
(Proper to mad men) led his Powers to death,
And (winking) leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But (by your leaue) it neuer yet did hurt,
To lay downe likely-hoods, and formes of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this present quality of warre,
Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot,
Liues so in hope: As in an early Spring,
We see th'appearing buds, which to proue fruite,
Hope giue not so much warrant, as Dispaire
That Frosts will bite them. When we meane to build,
We first survey the Plot, then draw the Modell,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the Erection,
Which if we finde out-weighes Ability,
What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell
In fewer offices? Or at least, desist
To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke, (Which is (almost) to plucke a Kingdome downe,
And set another vp) should we survey
The plot of Situation, and the Modell;
Consent vpon a sure Foundation.
Question Surueyors, know our owne estate,
How able such a Worke to vndergo,
To weigh against his Opposite? Or else,
We fortifie in Paper, and in Figures,
Vsing the Names of men, instead of men:
Like one, that drawes the Modell of a house
Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through)
Giues o're, and leaues his part-created Cost
A naked subiect to the Weeping Clouds,
And waste, for churlish Winters tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire byrth)
Should be still-borne: and that we now possest
The vtmost man of expectation:
I thinke we are a Body strong enough
(Euen as we are) to equall with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but fiue & twenty thousand?

Hast. To vs no more: nay not so much Lord Bardolfe.
For his diuisions (as the Times do braul)
Are in three Heads: one Power against the French,
And one against Glendower: Perforce a third
Must take vp vs: So is the vnfirme King
In three diuided: and his Coffers sound
With hollow Pouerty, and Emptinesse.

Arch. That he should draw his seuerall strengths together
And come against vs in full puissance
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaues his backe vnarm'd, the French, and Welch
Baying him at the heeles: neuer feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmerland: Against the Welsh himselfe, and Harrie Monmouth.
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I haue no certaine notice.

Arch. Let vs on:
And publish the occasion of our Armes.
The Common-wealth is sicke of their owne Choice,
Their ouer-greedy loue hath surfetted:
An habitation giddy, and vnsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond Many, with what loud applause
Did'st thou beate heauen with blessing Bullingbrooke
Before he was, what thou would'st haue him be?
And being now trimm'd in thine owne desires,
Thou (beastly Feeder) art so full of him,
That thou prouok'st thy selfe to cast him vp.
So, so, (thou common Dogge) did'st thou disgorge
Thy glutton-bosome of the Royall Richard,
And now thou would'st eate thy dead vomit vp,
And howl'st to finde it. What trust is in these Times!
They, that when Richard liu'd, would haue him dyt,
Are now become enamour'd on his graue
Thou that threw'st dust vpon his goodly head
When through proud London he came sighing on,
After th'admired heeles of Bullingbrooke,
Cri'st now, O Earth, yeeld vs that King againe,

And

And take thou this (O thoughts of men accurs'd)
Paſt, and to Come, ſeemes beſt; things Preſent, worſt.
Mow. Shall we go draw our numbers, and ſet on?
Hall. We are Times ſubiects, and Time bids, be gon.

Actus Secundus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Hoſteſſe, with two Officers, Fang, and Snare.

Hoſteſſe. Mr. Fang, haue you entred the Action?
Fang. It is entred.
Hoſteſſe. Where's your Yeoman? Is it a luſty yeoman? Will he ſtand to it?
Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?
Hoſteſſe. I, I, good M. Snare.
Snare. Heere, heere.
Fang. Snare, we muſt Arreſt Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.
Hoſt. I good M. Snare, I haue entred him, and all.
Snare. It may chance coſt ſome of vs our liues: he will ſtab
Hoſteſſe. Alas the day, take heed of him: he ſtabd me in mine owne houſe, and that moſt beaſtly: he cares not what miſchiefe he doth, if his weapon be out. Hee will ſweare like any diuell, he will ſpare neither man, woman, nor childe.
Fang. If I can cloſe with him, I care not for his thruſt.
Hoſteſſe. No, nor I neither: Ile be at your elbow.
Fang. If I but fiſt him once: if he come but within my Vice.
Hoſt. I am vndone with his going. I warrant he is an infinitiue thing vpon my ſcore. Good M. Fang hold him ſure: good M. Snare let him not ſcape, he comes continuantly to Py-Corner (ſauing your manhoods) to buy a ſaddle, and hee is indited to dinner to the Lubbars head in Lombard ſtreet, to M. Smoothes the Silkman. I pra'ye, ſince my Exion is entred, and my Caſe ſo openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his anſwer: A 100. Marke is a long one, for a poore lone woman to beare: & I haue borne, and borne, and borne, and haue bin fub'd off, and fub'd-off, from this day to that day, that it is a ſhame to be thought on. There is no honeſty in ſuch dealing, vnles a woman ſhould be made an Aſſe and a Beaſt, to beare euery Knaues wrong. Enter Falſtaffe and Bardolfe.
Yonder he comes, and that arrant Malmeſey-Noſe Bardolfe with him. Do your Offices, do your offices: M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices.
Fal. How now? whoſe Mare is dead? what's the matter?
Fang. Sir Iohn, I arreſt you, at the ſuit of Miſt. Quickly.
Falſt. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe: Cut me off the Villaines head: throw the Queane in the Channell.
Hoſt. Throw me in the channell? Ile throw thee there. Wilt thou? wilt thou, thou baſtardly rogue. Murder, murder, O thou Hony-ſuckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers, and the Kings? O thou hony-ſeed Rogue, thou art a honyſeed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.
Falſt. Keep them off, Bardolfe. Fang A reſcue, a reſcue.
Hoſt. Good people bring a reſcue. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? Do, do thou Rogue. Do thou Hempſeed.
Iuſt. What's the matter? Keepe the Peace here, hoa.
Hoſt. Good my Lord be good to me. I beſeech you ſtand to me.
Ch Iuſt. How now ſir Iohn? What are you brauling here? Doth this becom your place, your time, and buſineſſe? You ſhould haue bene well on your way to Yorke. Stand from him Fellow, wherefore hang'ſt vpon him?
Hoſt. Oh my moſt worſhipfull Lord, and 'tpleaſe your Grace, I am a poore widdow of Eaſtcheap, and he is arreſted at my ſuit. Ch. Iuſt. For what ſumme?
Hoſt. It is more then for ſome (my Lord) it is for all: all I haue, he hath eaten me out of houſe and home; her hath put all my ſubſtance into that fat belly of his: but I will haue ſome of it out againe, or I will ride thee o Nights, like the Mare.
Falſt. I thinke I am as like to ride the Mare, if I haue any vantage of ground, to get vp.
Ch Iuſt. How comes this, Sir Iohn? Fy, what a man of good temper would endure this tempeſt of exclamation? Are you not aſham'd to inforce a poore Widdowe to ſo rough a courſe, to come by her owne?
Falſt. What is the groſſe ſumme that I owe thee?
Hoſt. Marry (if thou wer't an honeſt man) thy ſelfe, & the mony too. Thou didſt ſweare to mee vpon a parcell gilt Goblet, ſitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a ſea-cole fire, on Wedneſday in Whitſon week: when the Prince broke thy head for likning him to a ſinging man of Windſor; Thou didſt ſweare to me then (as I was waſhing thy wound) to marry me, and make mee my Lady thy wife. Canſt § deny it? Did not goodwife Keech the Butchers wife come in then, and cal me goſſip Quickly? comming in to borrow a meſſe of Vinegar: telling vs, ſhe had a good diſh of Prawnes, whereby § didſt deſire to eat ſome: whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound? And didſt not thou (when ſhe was gone downe ſtaires) deſire me to be no more familiar with ſuch poore people, ſaying, that ere long they ſhould call me Madam? And didſt § not kiſſe me, and bid mee fetch thee 30. ſh? I put thee now to thy Book-oath, deny it if thou canſt?
Fal. My Lord, this is a poore mad ſoule: and ſhe ſayes vp & downe the town, that her eldeſt ſon is like you. She hath bin in good caſe, & the truth is, pouerty hath diſtracted her: but for theſe fooliſh Officers, I beſeech you, I may haue redreſſe againſt them.
Iuſt. Sir Iohn, ſir Iohn, I am well acquainted with your maner of wrenching the true cauſe, the falſe way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words, that come with ſuch (more then impudent) ſawcineſs from you, can thruſt me from a leuell conſideration, I know you ha'practis'd vpon the eaſie-yeelding ſpirit of this woman.
Hoſt. Yes in troth my Lord.
Iuſt. Prethee peace: pay her the debt you owe her, and vnpay the villany you haue done her: the one you may do with ſterling mony, & the other with currant repentance.
Fal. My Lord, I will not vndergo this ſneape without reply. You call honorable Boldneſs, impudent Sawcineſſe: If a man will curt'ſie, and ſay nothing, he is vertuous: No, my Lord (your humble duty remembred) I will not be your ſutor, I ſay to you, I deſire deliu'rance from theſe Officers being vpon haſty employment in the Kings Affaires.
Iuſt. You ſpeake, as hauing power to do wrong: But anſwer in the effect of your Reputation, and ſatisfie the poore woman.
Falſt. Come hither Hoſteſſe. Enter M. Gower
Ch. Iuſt. Now Maſter Gower; What newes?
Gow. The King (my Lord) and Henrie Prince of Wales Are neere at hand: The reſt the Paper tells.
Falſt. As I am a Gentleman.
Hoſt. Nay, you ſaid ſo before.
Fal. As I am a Gentleman. Come, no more words of it
Hoſt. By this Heauenly ground I tread on, I muſt be faine to pawne both my Plate, and the Tapiſtry of my dyning Chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the onely drinking: and for thy walles a pretty slight Drollery, or the Storie of the Prodigall, or the Germane hunting in Watervvorke, is worth a thousand of these Bed-hangings, and these Fly-bitten Tapistries. Let it be tenne pound (if thou canst.) Come, if it were not for thy humours, there is not a better Wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou must not bee in this humour with me, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Host. Prethee (Sir John) let it be but twenty Nobles, I loath to pawne my Plate, in good earnest Ia.

Fal. Let it alone, Ile make other shift: you'l be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it although I pawne my Gowne. I hope you'l come to Supper. You'l pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I live? Go with her, with her; hooke-on, hooke-on.

Host. Will you have Doll Teare sheete meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words. Let's have her.

Ch. Iust. I have heard better newes.

Fal. What's the newes (my good Lord?)

Ch. Iu. Where lay the King last night?

Mess. At Basingstoke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord) all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. Iust. Come all his Forces backe?

Mess. No. Fifteene hundred Foot, five hundred Horse Are march'd up to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland, and the Archbishop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble Lo?

Ch. Iust. You shall have Letters of me presently. Come, go along with me, good M. Gower.

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. Iust. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreate you with mee to dinner?

Gow. I must waite upon my good Lord heere. I thanke you, good Sir John.

Ch. Iust. Sir John, you loyter heere too long, being you are to take Souldiers up, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gower?

Ch. Iust. What foolish Master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become mee not, hee was a Foole that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) tap for tap, and so part faire.

Ch. Iust. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foole. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Poines, Bardolfe, and Page.

Prin. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poin. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durst not have snatch'd one of so high blood.

Prin. It doth me: though it discolours the complexion of my Greatnesse to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vildely in me, to desire small Beere?

Poin. Why, a Prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weake a Compositions.

Prince. Belike then, my Appetite was not Princely got. for (in troth) I do now remember the poore Creature, Small Beere. But indeede these humble considerations make me out of love with my Greatnesse. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many pair of Silk stockings thou hast (Viz. these, and those that were thy peach-colour'd ones:) Or to beare the Inventorie of thy shirts, as one for superfluity, and one other, for use. But that the Tennis-Court-keeper knowes better than I, for it is a low ebbe of Linnen with thee, when thou keep'st not Racket there, as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy Low Countries, have made a shift to eate up thy Holland.

Poin. How ill it followes, after you have labour'd so hard, you should talke so idlely? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do so, their Fathers lying so sicke, as yours is?

Prin. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poines?

Poin. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prin. It shall serve among wittes of no higher breeding then thine.

Poin. Go to: I stand the push of your one thing, that you'l tell.

Prin. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I should be sad now my Father is sicke: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poin. Very hardly, upon such a subiect.

Prin. Thou think'st me as farre in the Diuels Booke, as thou, and Falstaffe, for obduracie and perssistencie. Let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly, that my Father is so sicke: and keeping such vild company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me, all ostentation of sorrow.

Poin. The reason?

Prin. What would'st thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poin. I would thinke thee a most Princely hypocrite.

Prin. It would be every mans thought: and thou art a blessed Fellow, to thinke as every man thinkes: never a mans thought in the world, keepes the Roade-way better then thine: every man would thinke me an Hypocrite indeede. And what accites your most worshipfull thought to thinke so?

Poin. Why, because you have beene so lewde, and so much ingraffed to Falstaffe.

Prin. And to thee.

Poines. Nay, I am well spoken of, I can heare it with mine owne eares: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second Brother, and that I am a proper Fellow of my hands: and those two things I confesse I cannot helpe. Looke, looke, heere comes Bardolfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gave Falstaffe, he had him from me Christian, and see if the fat villain have not transform'd him Ape.

Enter Bardolfe.

Bar. Saue your Grace.

Prin. And yours, most Noble Bardolfe.

Poin. Come you pernitious Asse, you bashfull Foole, must you be blushing? Wherefore blush you now? What a Maidenly man at Armes are you become? Is it such a matter to get a Pottle-pots Maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me even now (my Lord) through a red Lattice, and I could discerne no part of his face from the window.

window: at laſt I ſpy'd his eyes, and me thought he had made two holes in the Ale-wiues new Petticoat, & peep'd through.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bar. Away, you horſon vpright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you raſcally Althea's dreame, away.

Prin. Inſtruct vs Boy: what dreame, Boy?

Page. Marry (my Lord) Althea dream'd, ſhe was deliuer'd of a Firebrand, and therefore I call him her dream.

Prince. A Crowne-worth of good Interpretation: There it is, Boy.

Poin. O that this good Blоſſome could be kept from Caterers: Well, there is ſix pence to preſerue thee.

Bard. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallowes ſhall be wrong'd.

Prince. And how doth thy Maſter, Bardolph?

Bar. Well, my good Lord: he heard of your Graces comming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Poin. Deliuer'd with good reſpect: And how doth the Martlemas, your Maſter?

Bard. In bodily health Sir.

Poin. Marry, the immortall part needes a Phyſitian: but that moues not him: though that bee ſicke, it dyes not.

Prince. I do allow this Wen to bee as familiar with me, as my dogge: and he holds his place, for looke you he writes.

Poin. Letter. Iohn Falſtaffe Knight: (Euery man muſt know that, as oft as hee hath occaſion to name himſelfe:) Euen like thoſe that are kinne to the King, for they neuer pricke their finger, but they ſay, there is ſom of the kings blood ſpilt. How comes that (ſayes he) that takes vpon him not to conceiue? the anſwer is as ready as a borrowed cap: I am the Kings poore Coſin, Sir.

Prince. Nay, they will be kin to vs, but they will fetch it from Iaphet. But to the Letter: —Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, Knight, to the Sonne of the King, neareſt his Father, Harrie Prince of Wales greeting.

Poin. Why this is a Certificate.

Prin. Peace.

I will imitate the honourable Romaines in breuitie.

Poin. Sure he meanes breuity in breath: ſhort-winded. I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leaue thee. Be not too familiar with Poines, for he miſuſes thy Fauours ſo much, that he ſweares thou art to marrie his Siſter Nell. Repent at idle times as thou maiſt, and ſo farewell.

Thine by yea and no: which is as much as to ſay, as thou vſeſt him. Iacke Falſtaffe with my Familiars Iohn with my Brothers and Siſters: & Sir Iohn, with all Europe.

My Lord, I will ſteepe this Letter in Sack, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you vſe me thus Ned? Muſt I marrie your Siſter?

Poin. May the Wench haue no worſe Fortune. But I neuer ſaid ſo.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Fooles with the time, & the ſpirits of the wiſe, ſit in the clouds, and mocke vs: Is your Maſter heere in London?

Bard. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where ſupples he? Doth the old Bore, feede in the old Franke?

Bard. At the old place my Lord, in Eaſt-cheape.

Prin. What Company?

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Page. None my Lord, but old Miſtris Quickly, and M. Doll Teare-ſheet.

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman, Sir, and a Kinſwoman of my Maſters.

Prin. Euen ſuch Kin, as the Pariſh Heyfers are to the Towne-Bull? Shall we ſteale vpon them (Ned) at Supper?

Poin. I am your Shadow, my Lord, Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Maſter that I am yet in Towne. There's for your ſilence.

Bar. I haue no tongue, ſir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will gouerne it.

Prin. Fare ye well: go.

This Doll Teare-ſheet ſhould be ſome Rode.

Poin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we ſee Falſtaffe beſtow himſelfe to night, in his true colours, and not our ſelues be ſeene?

Poin. Put on two Leather Ierkins, and Aprons, and waite vpon him at his Table, like Drawers.

Prin. From a God, to a Bull? A heauie declenſion: It was Ioues caſe. From a Prince, to a Prentice, a low tranſformation, that ſhall be mine: for in euery thing, the purpoſe muſt weigh with the folly. Follow me Ned. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland, his Lady, and Harrie Percies Ladie.

North. I prethee louing Wife, and gentle Daughter,
Giue an euen way vnto my rough Affaires:
Put not you on the viſage of the Times,
And be like them to Percie, troubleſome.

Wife. I haue giuen ouer, I will ſpeak no more,
Do what you will: your Wiſedome, be your guide.

North. Alas (ſweet Wife) my Honor is at pawne,
And but my going, nothing can redeeme it.

La. Oh yet, for heauens ſake, go not to theſe Warres;
The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,
When you were more endeer'd to it, then now,
When your owne Percy when my heart-deere Harry,
Threw many a Northward looke, to ſee his Father
Bring vp his Powres: but he did long in vaine.
Who then perſwaded you to ſtay at home?
There were two Honors loſt, Yours, and your Sonnes.
For Yours, may heauenly glory brighten it:
For His, it ſtucke vpon him, as the Sunne
In the gray vault of Heauen: and by his Light
Did all the Cheualrie of England moue
To do braue Acts. He was (indeed) the Glaſſe
Wherein the Noble-Youth did dreſſe themſelues.
He had no Legges, that practiſe'd not his Gate:
And ſpeaking thicke (which Nature made his blemiſh)
Became the Accents of the Valiant.
For thoſe that could ſpeake low, and tardily.
Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abuſe,
To ſeeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,
In Diet, in Affections of delight,
In Militarie Rules, Humors of Blood,

He was the Marke, and Glasse, Copy, and Booke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous! him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) vn-seconded by you,
To looke vpon the hideous God of Warre,
In dis-aduantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspurs Name
Did seeme defensible: so you left him.
Neuer, O neuer doe his Ghost the wrong,
To hold your Honor more precise and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Arch-bishop are strong.
Had my sweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotspurs Neck)
Haue talk'd of Mamouth's Graue.

North. Beshrew your heart,
(Faire Daughter) you doe draw my Spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Ouer-sights.
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will seeke me in another place,
And finde me worse prouided.

Wife. O stye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Haue of their Puissance made a little taste.

Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then ioyne you with them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make Strength stronger. But, for all our loues,
First let them trye themselues. So did your Sonne,
He was so suffer'd; so came I a Widow
And neuer shall haue length of Life enough,
To raine vpon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow, and sprowt, as high as Heauen,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me: 'tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde, swell'd vp vnto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neyther way.
Fame would I goe to meet the Arch-bishop,
But many thousand Reasons hold me backe.
I will resolue for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage craue my company. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter two Drawers.

1. Draw. What hast thou brought there? Apple-Johns? Thou know'st Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Draw. Thou say'st true: the Prince once set a Dish of Apple-Johns before him, and told him there were fiue more Sir Iohns: and, putting off his Hat, said, I will now take my leaue of these fiue dry, round, old-wither'd Knights. It angerd him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

1. Draw. Why then couer, and set them downe: and see if thou canst finde out Sneakes Noyse; Mistris Tearesheet would faine haue some Musique.

2. Draw. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Master Poines, anon: and they will put on two of our Ierkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Draw. Then here will be old Vice: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2. Draw. Ile see if I can finde out Sneakes. Exit.

Enter Hostesse, and Dol.

Host. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperalitie: your Pulsidge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would desire; and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Rose: But you haue drunke too much Canaries, and that's a marueilous searching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere one can say what's this. How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Host. Why that was well said. A good heart's worth Gold. Looke, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falstaffe.

Falst. when Arthur first in Court—(empties the Iordan) and was a worthy King. How now Mistris Doll?

Host. Sick of a Calme: yea, good-sooth.

Falst. So is all her Sect: if they be once in a Calme, they are sick.

Dol. You muddie Rascall, is that all the comfort you giue me?

Falst. You make fat Rascalls, Mistris Doll.

Dol. I make them? Gluttonie and Diseases make them, I make them not.

Falst. If the Cooke make the Gluttonie, you helpe to make the Diseases (Doll) we catch of you (Doll) we catch of you: Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes, and our Iewels.

Falst. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to serue bravely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent bravely, and to Surgerie bravely; to venture vpon the charg'd-Chambers bravely.

Host. Why this is the olde fashion: you two neuer meete, but you fall to some discord: you are both (in good troth) as Rheumatike as two dry Toasts, you cannot one beare with another's Confirmities. What the good-yere? One must beare, and that must be you: you are the weaker Vessell; as they say, the emptier Vessell.

Dol. Can a weake empty Vessell beare such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeux-Stuffe in him; you haue not seene a Hulke better stuft in the Hold. Come, Ile be friends with thee, Iacke: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I shall euer see thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Drawer. Sir, Ancient Pistoll is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither: it is the foule-mouth'dst Rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: I must liue amongst my Neighbors, Ile no Swaggerers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very best: Shut the doore, there comes no Swaggerers heere. I haue not liu'd all this while, to haue swaggering now: shut the doore, I pray you.

Falst. Do'st thou heare, Hostesse?

Host. Pray you pacifie your selfe (Sir Iohn) there's no Swaggerers heere.

Falst. Do'st

Bard. Pray thee goe downe, good Ancient.

Falſt. Hearke thee hither, Miſtris Dol.

Piſt. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: Ile be reueng'd on her.

Piſt. Ile ſee her damn'd firſt: to Pluto's damn'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Torcures vilde alſo. Hold Hooke and Line, ſay I: Downe: downe Dogges, downe Fates: haue wee not Hiren here?

Hoſt. Good Captaine Peeſel be quiet, it is very late; I beſeeke you now, aggrauate your Choler.

Piſt. Theſe be good Humors indeede. Shall Pack-Horſes, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Aſia, which cannot goe but thirtie miles a day, compare with Cæſar, and with Caniballs, and Troian Greekes? nay, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roare: ſhall wee fall foule for Toyes?

Hoſt. By my troth Captaine, theſe are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Piſt. Die men, like Dogges; giue Crownes like Pinnes: Haue we not Hiren here?

Hoſt. On my word (Captaine) there's none ſuch here. What the good-yere, doe you thinke I would deny her? I pray be quiet.

Piſt. Then feed, and be fat (my faire Calipolis.) Come, giue me ſome Sack, Si fortune me tormente, ſperato me contento. Feare wee broad-ſides? No, let the Fiend giue fire: Giue me ſome Sack: and Sweet-heart lye thou there: Come wee to full Points here, and are et cetera's nothing?

Fal. Piſtol, I would be quiet.

Piſt. Sweet Knight, I kiſſe thy Neaſſes: what? wee haue ſeene the ſeuen Starres.

Dol. Thruſt him downe ſtayres, I cannot endure ſuch a Fuſtian Raſcall.

Piſt. Thruſt him downe ſtayres? know we not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a ſhoue-groat ſhilling: nay, if hee doe nothing but ſpeake nothing, hee ſhall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you downe ſtayres.

Piſt. What? ſhall wee haue Inciſion? ſhall wee embrew? then Death rocke me aſleepe, abridge my doleſull dayes: why then let grieuous, gaſtly, gaping Wounds, vntwin'd the Sifters three: Come Atropos, I ſay.

Hoſt. Here's good ſtuffe toward.

Fal. Giue me my Rapier, Boy.

Dol. I prethee Iack, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe ſtayres.

Hoſt. Here's a goodly tumult: Ile forſweare keeping houſe, before Ile be in theſe tirrits, and frights. So: Murther I warrant now. Alas, alas, put vp your naked Weapons, put vp your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee Iack be quiet, the Raſcall is gone: ah, you whorſon little valiant Villaine, you.

Hoſt. Are you not hurt i'th' Groyne? me thought hee made a threwd Thruſt at your Belly.

Fal. Haue you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard. Yes Sir: the Raſcall's drunke: you haue hurt him (Sir) in the ſhoulder.

Fal. A Raſcall to braue me.

Dol. Ah, you ſweet little Rogue, you: alas, poore Ape, how thou ſweat'ſt? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorſon Chops: Ah Rogue, I loue thee: Thou art

art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine.

Fal. A raſcally Slaue, I will toſſe the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dol. Doe, if thou dar'ſt for thy heart: if thou doo'ſt, Ile canuas thee betweene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Muſique.

Page. The Muſique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play: play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Raſcall, bragging Slaue: the Rogue fled from me like Quick-ſiluer.

Dol. And thou followd'ſt him like a Church: thou whorſon little tydie Bartholmew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou leaue fighting on dayes, and foyning on nights, and begin to patch vp thine old Body for Heauen?

Enter the Prince and Poines diſguis'd.

Fal. Peace (good Dol) doe not ſpeake like a Death's-head: doe not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrha, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A good ſhallow young fellow: hee would haue made a good Pantler, hee would haue chipp'd Bread well.

Dol. They ſay Poines hath a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Baboone, his Wit is as thicke as Tewkſburie Muſtard: there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Dol. Why doth the Prince loue him ſo then?

Fal. Becauſe their Legges are both of a bigneſſe: and hee playes at Quoits well, and eates Conger and Fennell, and drinkes off Candles ends for Flap-dragons, and rides the wilde-Mare with the Boyes, and iumpes vpon Ioynd-ſtooles, and ſweares with a good grace, and weares his Boot very ſmooth, like vnto the Signe of the Legge; and breedes no bate with telling of diſcreete ſtories: and ſuch other Gamboll Facolties hee hath, that ſhew a weake Minde, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admits him: for the Prince himſelfe is ſuch another: the weight of an hayre will turne the Scales betweene their Haber-de-poiſe.

Prince. Would not this Naue of a Wheele haue his Eares cut off?

Poin. Let vs beat him before his Whore.

Prince. Looke, if the wither'd Elder hath not his Poll claw'd like a Parrot.

Poin. Is it not ſtrange, that Deſire ſhould ſo many yeeres out-liue performance?

Fal. Kiſſe me Dol.

Prince. Saturne and Venus this yeere in Coniunction? What ſayes the Almanack to that?

Poin. And looke whether the fierie Trigon, his Man, be not liſping to his Maſters old Tables, his Note-Booke, his Councell-keeper?

Fal. Thou do'ſt giue me flatt'ring Buſſes.

Dol. Nay truely, I kiſſe thee with a moſt conſtant heart.

Fal. I am olde, I am olde.

Dol. I loue thee better, then I loue ere a ſcuruie young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Stuffe wilt thou haue a Kirtle of? I ſhall receiue Money on Thurſday: thou ſhalt haue a Cappe to morrow. A merrie Song, come: it growes late, wee will to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt ſet me a weeping, if thou ſay'ſt ſo: proue that euer I dreſſe my ſelfe handſome, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Prin. Poin. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Baſtard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poines his Brother?

Prince. Why thou Globe of ſinfull Continents, what a Life do'ſt thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prince. Very true, Sir: and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Hoſt. Oh, the Lord preſerue thy good Grace: Welcome to London. Now Heauen bleſſe that ſweete Face of thine: what, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whorſon mad Compound of Maieſtie: by this light Fleſh, and corrupt Blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How? you fat Foole, I ſcorne you.

Poin. My Lord, hee will driue you out of your reuenge, and turne all to a merryment, if you take not the heat.

Prince. You whorſon Candle-myne you, how vildly did you ſpeake of me euen now, before this honeſt, vertuous, ciuill Gentlewoman?

Hoſt. Bleſſing on your good heart, and ſo ſhee is by my troth.

Fal. Didſt thou heare me?

Prince. Yes: and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill: you knew I was at your back, and ſpoke it on purpoſe, to trie my patience.

Fal. No, no, no: not ſo: I did not thinke, thou waſt within hearing.

Prince. I ſhall driue you then to confeſſe the wilfull abuſe, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuſe (Hall) on mine Honor, no abuſe.

Prince. Not to diſpraiſe me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuſe (Hal.)

Poin. No abuſe?

Fal. No abuſe (Ned) in the World: honeſt Ned, none. I diſprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in loue with him: In which doing, I haue done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subiect, and thy Father is to giue me thankes for it. No abuſe (Hal:) none (Ned) none; no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entire Cowardiſe, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to cloſe with vs? Is ſhee of the Wicked? Is thine Hoſteſſe heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wicked? Or honeſt Bardolph (whoſe Zeale burnes in his Noſe) of the Wicked?

Poin. Anſwere thou dead Elme, anſwere.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irrecouerable, and his Face is Lucifers Priuy-Kitchen, where he doth nothing but roſt Mault-Wormes: for the Boy, there is a good Angell about him, but the Deuill outbids him too.

Prince. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, ſhee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules: for the other, I owe her Money; and whether ſhee bee damn'd for that, I know not.

Hoſt. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No,

No, I thinke thou art not: I thinke thou art quit

Enter the King, with a Page.

Goe, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick:
they come, bid them ore-reade theſe Letters,
ell conſider of them: make good ſpeed. Exit.

How many thouſand of my pooreſt Subiects
Are at this howre aſleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe, Natures ſoft Nurſe, how haue I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids downe,
And ſteepe my Sences in Forgetfulneſſe?
Why rather (Sleepe) lyeſt thou in ſmoakie Cribs,
Vpon vneaſie Pallads ſtretching thee,
And huſſht with buſſing Night, flyes to thy ſlumber,
Then in the perfum'd Chambers of the Great?
Vnder the Canopies of coſtly State,
And lull'd with ſounds of ſweeteſt Melodie?
O thou dull God, why lyeſt thou with the vilde,
In loathſome Beds, and leau'ſt the Kingly Couch,
A Watch-caſe, or a common Larum-Bell?
Wilt thou, vpon the high and giddie Maſt,
Seale vp the Ship-boyes Eyes, and rock his Braines,
In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge,
And in the viſitation of the Windes,
Who take the Ruffian Billowes by the top,
Curling their monſtrous heads, and hanging them
With deaffning Clamors in the ſlipp'ry Clouds,
That with the hurley, Death it ſelfe awakes?
Canſt thou (O partiall Sleepe) giue thy Repoſe
To the wet Sea-Boy, in an houre ſo rude:
And in the calmeſt, and moſt ſtilleſt Night,
With all appliances, and meanes to boote,
Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lye downe, Vneaſie lyes the Head, that weares a Crowne.

Enter Warwicke and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrowes to your Maieſtie.
King. Is it good-morrow, Lords?
War. 'Tis One a Clock, and paſt.
King. Why then good-morrow to you all (my Lords:)
Haue you read o're the Letters that I ſent you?
War. We haue (my Liege.)
King. Then you perceiue the Body of our Kingdome,
How ſoule it is: what ranke Diſeaſes grow,
And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?
War. It is but as a Body, yet diſtemper'd,
Which to his former ſtrength may be reſtor'd,
With good aduice, and little Medicine:
My Lord Northumberland will ſoone be cool'd.
King. Oh Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate,
And ſee the reuolution of the Times
Make Mountaines leuell, and the Continent
(Wearie of ſolide firmneſſe) melt it ſelfe
Into the Sea: and other Times, to ſee
The beachie Girdle of the Ocean
Too wide for Neptunes hippes; how Chances mocks
And Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration
With diuers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeeres gone,
Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends,
Did feaſt together; and in two yeeres after,
Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres ſince,
This Percie was the man, neereſt my Soule,
Who, like a Brother, toyl'd in my Affaires,
And layd his Loue and Life vnder my foot:
Yea, for my ſake, euen to the eyes of Richard Gaue him defiance. But which of you was by (You Couſin Neuil, as I may remember)
When Richard, with his Eye, brim-full of Teares,
(Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland)
Did ſpeake theſe words (now prou'd a Prophecie:)
Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My

My Cousin Bullingbrooke aſcends my Throne:
(Though then, Heauen knowes, I had no ſuch intent,
But that neceſſitie ſo bow'd the State,
That I and Greatneſſe were compell'd to kiſſe:)
The Time ſhall come (thus did hee follow it)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head, Shall breake into Corruption: ſo went on,
Fore-telling this ſame Times Condition,
And the diuiſion of our Amitie.

War. There is a Hiſtorie in all mens Liues,
Figuring the nature of the Times deceaſ'd:
The which obſerued, a man may prophecie
With a neere ayme, of the maine chance of things,
As yet not come to Life, which in their Seedes
And weake beginnings lye entreaſured:
Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time;
And by the neceſſarie forme of this,
King Richard might create a perfect gueſſe,
That great Northumberland, then falſe to him,
Would of that Seed, grow to a greater falſeneſſe,
Which ſhould not finde a ground to roote vpon,
Vnleſſe on you.

King. Are theſe things then Neceſſities?
Then let vs meete them like Neceſſities;
And that ſame word, euen now cryes out on vs:
They ſay, the Biſhop and Northumberland
Are fifteene thouſand ſtrong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord:)
Rumor doth double, like the Voice, and Eccho,
The numbers of the feared. Pleaſe it your Grace
To goe to bed, vpon my Life (my Lord)
The Pow'rs that you already haue ſent forth,
Shall bring this Prize in very eaſily.
To comfort you the more, I haue receiu'd
A certaine inſtance, that Glendower is dead.
Your Maieſtie hath beene this fort-night ill,
And theſe vnſeaſon'd houres perforce muſt adde
Vnto your Sickneſſe.

King. I will take your counſaile:
And were theſe inward Warres once out of hand,
Wee would (deare Lords) vnto the Holy-Land.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence: with Mouldie, Shadow, Wart, Feeble, Bull-calfe.

Shal. Come-on, come-on, come-on: giue mee your Hand, Sir; giue mee your Hand, Sir: an early ſtirrer, by the Rood. And how doth my good Couſin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Couſin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my Couſin, your Bed-fellow? and your faireſt Daughter, and mine, my God-Daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blacke Ouzell (Couſin Shallow.)

Shal. By yea and nay, Sir, I dare ſay my Couſin Willam is become a good Scholler? hee is at Oxford ſtill, is hee not?

Sil. Indeede Sir, to my coſt.

Shal. Hee muſt then to the Inner of Court ſhortly: I was once of Clements Inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd luſtie Shallow then (Couſin.)

Shal. I was call'd any thing: and I would haue done any thing indeede too, and roundly too. There was I, and little Iohn Doit of Staffordſhire, and blacke George Bare, and Francis Pick-bone, and Will Squele a Cot-ſal-man, you had not ſeene ſuch Swindge-bucklers in all the Inner of Court againe: And I may ſay to you, we knew where the Bona-Roba's were, and had the beſt of them all at commandement. Then was Iacke Falſtaffe (now Sir Iohn) a Boy, and Page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolke.

Sil. This Sir Iohn (Couſin) that comes hither anon about Souldiers?

Shal. The ſame Sir Iohn, the very ſame. I ſee him breake Scoggan's Head at the Court-Gate, when he was a Crack, not thus high: and the very ſame day did I fight with one Sampſon Stock-fiſh, a Fruiterer, behinde Gerrard Inne. Oh the mad dayes that I haue ſpent! and to ſee how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. We ſhall all follow (Couſin.)

Shal. Certaine: 'tis certaine: very ſure, very ſure: Death is certaine to all, all ſhall dye. How a good Yoke of Bullocks at Stamford Fayre?

Sil. Truly Couſin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certaine. Is old Double of your Towne liuing yet?

Sil. Dead, Sir.

Shal. Dead? See, ſee: hee drew a good Bow: and dead? hee ſhot a fine ſhoote. Iohn of Gaunt loued him well, and betted much Money on his head. Dead? hee would haue clapt in the Clowt at Twelue-ſcore, and carryed you a fore-hand Shaft at fourteene, and fourteene and a halfe, that it would haue done a mans heart good to ſee. How a ſcore of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a ſcore of good Ewes may be worth tenne pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Heere come two of Sir Iohn Falſtaffes Men (as I thinke.)

Shal. Good-morrow, honeſt Gentlemen.

Bard. I beſeech you, which is Iuſtice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow (Sir) a poore Eſquire of this Countie, and one of the Kings Iuſtices of the Peace: What is your good pleaſure with me?

Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you: my Captaine, Sir Iohn Falſtaffe: a tall Gentleman, and a moſt gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greetes me well: (Sir) I know him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I aske, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a Souldier is better accommodated, then with a Wife.

Shal. It is well ſaid, Sir; and it is well ſaid, indeede, too: Better accommodated? it is good, yea indeede is it: good phraſes are ſurely, and ever where very commendable. Accommodated, it comes of Accommodo: very good, a good Phraſe.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I haue heard the word. Phraſe call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phraſe: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword, to be a Souldiers-like Word, and a Word of exerciſing good Command. Accommodated: that is, when a man is (as they ſay) accommodated: or, when a man is, being whereby whereby he thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Shal. It is very iuſt : Looke, heere comes good Sir Iohn. Giue me your hand, giue me your Worſhips good hand : Truſt me, you looke well : and beare your yeares very well. Welcome, good Sir Iohn.

Fal. I am glad to ſee you well, good M. Robert Shallow: Maſter Sure-card as I thinke?

Shal. No ſir Iohn, it is my Coſin Silence : in Commiſſion with vee.

Fal. Good M. Silence, it well befits you ſhould be of the peare.

Sil. Your good Worſhip is welcome.

Fal. Fye, this is hot weather (Gentlemen) haue you prouided me heere halfe a dozen of ſufficient men?

Shal. Marry haue we ſir : Will you ſit?

Fal. Let me ſee them, I beſeech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me ſee, let me ſee, let me ſee : ſo, ſo, ſo, ſo : yes marry Sir Raphe Mouldie : let them appeare as I call; let them do ſo, let them do ſo : Let mee ſee, Where is Mouldie?

Mould. Heere, if it pleaſe you.

Shal. What thinke you (Sir Iohn) a good limb'd fellow : yoong, ſtrong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldie?

Mould. Yea, if it pleaſe you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert vs'd.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, moſt excellent. Things that are mouldie, lacke vſe : very ſingular good. Well ſaide Sir Iohn, very well ſaid.

Fal. Pricke him.

Mould. I was pricke well enough before, if you could haue let me alone : my old Dame will be vndone now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery ; you need not to haue prickt me, there are other men fitter to goe out, then I.

Fal. Go too: peace Mouldie, you ſhall goe. Mouldie, it is time you were ſpent.

Mould. Spent?

Shallow. Peace, fellow, peace, ſtand aſide : Know you where you are? For the other ſir Iohn. Let me ſee: Simon Shadow.

Fal. I marry, let me haue him to ſit vnder : he's like to be a cold ſoulder.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Heere ſir.

Fal. Shadow, whoſe ſonne art thou?

Shad. My Mothers ſonne, Sir.

Falſt. Thy Mothers ſonne : like enough, and thy Fathers ſhadow : ſo the ſonne of the Female, is the ſhadow of the Male : it is often ſo indeede, but not of the Fathers ſubſtance.

Shal. Do you like him, ſir Iohn?

Falſt. Shadow will ſerue for Summer : pricke him : For we haue a number of ſhadowes to fill vppe the Muſter-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart?

Falſt. Where's he?

Wart. Heere ſir.

Falſt. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea ſir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I pricke him downe, Sir Iohn?

Falſt. It were ſuperfluous: for his apparrel is built vpon his backe, and the whole frame ſtands vpon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can do it ſir : you can doe it : I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere ſir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?

Feeble. A Womans Taylor ſir.

Shal. Shall I pricke him, ſir?

Fal. You may :

But if he had beene a mans Taylor, he would haue prick'd you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Battaile, as thou haſt done in a Womans petticote?

Feeble. I will doe my good will ſir, you can haue no more.

Falſt. Well ſaid, good Womans Tailour : Well ſayde Courragious Feeble: thou wilt bee as valiant as the wrathfull Doue, or moſt magnanimous Mouſe. Pricke the woman Taylour well Maſter Shallow, deepe Maſter Shallow.

Feeble. I would Wart might haue gone ſir.

Fal. I would thou wert a mans Tailor, that he might'ſt mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a priuate ſouldier, that is the Leader of ſo many thouſands : Let that ſuffice, moſt Forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It ſhall ſuffice

Falſt. I am bound to thee, reuerend Feeble. Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bullcalfe of the Greene.

Falſt. Yea marry, let vs ſee Bullcalfe.

Bull. Heere ſir.

Fal. Truſt me, a likely Fellow. Come, pricke me Bullcalfe till he roare againe.

Bul. Oh, good my Lord Captaine.

Fal. What? do'ſt thou roare before th'art prickt.

Bul. Oh ſir, I am a diſeaſed man.

Fal. What diſeaſe haſt thou?

Bul. A whorſon cold ſir, a cough ſir, which I caught with Ringing in the Kings affayres, vpon his Coronation day, ſir.

Fal. Come thou ſhalt go to the Warres in a Gowne : we will haue away thy Cold, and I will take ſuch order, that thy friends ſhall ring for thee. Is heere all?

Shal. There is two more called then your number : you muſt haue but foure heere ſir, and ſo I pray you go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to ſee you in good troth, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. O ſir Iohn, doe you remember ſince wee lay all night in the Windo mill, in S Georges Field.

Falſtaffe. No more of that good Maſter Shallow : No more of that.

Shal. Ha' ſir it was a merry night. And is Iane Nightwarke aliue?

Fal. She liues, M. Shallow.

Shal. She neuer could away with me.

Fal. Neuer, neuer : ſhe would alwayes ſay ſhee could not abide M. Shallow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart : ſhee was then a Bona Roba. Doth ſhe hold her owne well.

Fal. Old, old, M. Shallow.

Shal. Nay, ſhe muſt be old, ſhe cannot choooſe but be old: certaine thee's old: and had Robin Night-works, by old Night-worke, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's fiftie five yeeres agoe.

Shal. Hah, Cousin Silence, that thou hadst seene that, that this Knight and I have seene: hah, Sir Iohn, said I well?

Fals. Wee have heard the Chymes at mid-night, Master Shallow.

Shal. That wee have, that wee have; in faith, Sir Iohn, wee have: our watch-word was, Hem-Boyes. Come, let's to Dinner; come Let's to Dinner: Oh the dayes that wee have seene. Come, come.

Bul. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend, and heere is fourte Harry tenne shillings in French Crownes for you: in very truth, sir, I had as lief be hang'd sir, as goe: and yet, for mine owne part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am vnwilling, and for mine owne part, haue a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine owne part, so much.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Mould. And good Master Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames sake, stand my friend: shee hath no body to doe any thing about her, when I am gone: and she is old, and cannot helpe her selfe: you shall haue fortie, sir.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Feeble. I care not, a man can die but once: wee owe a deuth. I will neuer beare a base minde: if it be my destinie, so: if it be not, so: no man is too good to serue his Prince: and let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yeere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said, thou art a good fellow

Feeble. Nay, I will beare no base minde.

Fals. Come sir, which men shall I haue?

Shal. Foure of which you please

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I haue three pound, to free Mouldie and Bull-calfe.

Fals. Go-too: well.

Shal. Come, sir Iohn, which foure will you haue?

Fals. Doe you chuse for me.

Shal. Marry then, Mouldie, Bull-calfe, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fals. Mouldie, and Bull-calfe: for you Mouldie, stay at home, till you are past seruice: and for your part, Bull-calfe, grow till you come vnto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir Iohn, Sir Iohn, doe not your selfe wrong, they are your likelyest men, and I would haue you serv'd with the best.

Fals. Will you tell me (Master Shallow) how to chuse a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Thewes, the stature, bulke, and bigge assemblance of a man? giue mee the spirit (Master Shallow.) Where's Wart? you see what a ragged appearance it is: hee shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a Pewterers Hammer: come off, and on, swifter then hee that gibbets on the Brewers Bucket. And this same halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, giue me this man: hee presents no marke to the Enemie, the foe-man may with as great aymo levell at the edge of a Pen-knife: and for a Retreat, how swiftly will this Feeble, the Womans Taylor, runne off. O, giue me the spare men, and spare me the great ones. Put me a Caliuer into Warts hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Wart, Traverse: thus, thus, thus.

Fals. Come, manage me your Caliuer: so: very well, go-too, very good, exceeding good. O, giue me alwayes a little leane, olde, chapt, bald Shot. Well said Wart, thou art a good Scab. hold, there is a Tester for thee.

Shal. Hee is not his Crafts-master, hee doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthurs Show: there was a little quiuer fellow, and hee would manage you his Peece thus: and hee would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: Rah, tah, tah, would hee say, Bowmee would hee say, and away againe would hee goe, and againe would he come: I shall neuer see such a fellow.

Fals. These fellowes will doe well. Master Shallow. Farewell Master Silence, I will not vse many words with you: fare you well, Gentlemen both: I thanke you: I must a dozen mile to night. Bardolph, giue the Souldiers Coates.

Shal. Sir Iohn, Heauen blesse you, and prosper your Affaires, and send vs Peace. As you returne, visit my house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure I will with you to the Court.

Fals. I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go-too: I haue spoke at a word. Fare you well. Exeu.

Fals. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, leade the men away. As I returne, I will seeke out these Iustices: I doe see the bottome of Iustice Shallow. How subiect we old men are to this vice of Lying? This same staru'd Iustice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildenesse of his Youth, and the Pranks hee hath done about Turnball-streets, and every third word a Lye, duer pay'd to the hearer, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after Supper, of a Cheese-paring. When hee was naked, hee was, for all the world, like a forked Radish, with a Head fantastically carv'd vpon it with a Knife. Hee was so forlorne, that his Dimensions (to any thicke sight) were insuncible. Hee was the very Genius of Famine: hee came ever in the rere-ward of the Fashion: And now is this Vices Dagger become a Squire, and talkes as familiarly of Iohn of Gaunt, as if hee had beene sworne Brother to him: and I'le be sworne hee never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and there he burst his Head, for crowding among the Marshals men. I saw it, and told Iohn of Gaunt, hee beat his owne Name, for you might haue truss'd him and all his Apparrell into an Eele-skinne: the Case of a Treble Hoboy was a Mansion for him: a Court: and now hath hee Land, and Beeues. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne: and it shall goe hard, but I will make him a Philosophers two Stones to me. If the young Dace be a Bayt for the old Pike. I see no reason, in the Law of Nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Archbishop, Mowbray, Hastings, Westmerland, Colevile.

Bish. What is this Forrest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forrest, and't shall please your Grace.

…our King Richard (being infected) dy'd.
…my moſt Noble Lord of Weſtmerland)
…mor on me here as a Phyſician,
…doe I as an Enemie to Peace,
Troope in the Throngs of Militarie men
But rather ſhew a while like fearefull Warre,
To dyet ranke Mindes, ſicke of happineſſe,
And purge th'obſtructions, which begin to ſtop
Our very Veines of Life: heare me more plainely.
I haue in equall ballance iuſtly weigh'd,
What wrongs our Armes may do, what wrongs we ſuffer,
And finde our Griefes heauier then our Offences.
Wee ſee which way the ſtreame of Time doth runne,
And are enforc'd from our moſt quiet there,
By the rough Torrent of Occaſion,
And haue the ſummarie of all our Griefes
(When time ſhall ſerue) to ſhew in Articles;
Which long ere this, wee offer'd to the King,
And might, by no Suit, gayne our Audience:
When wee are wrong'd, and would vnfold our Griefes,
Wee are deny'd acceſſe vnto his Perſon,
Euen by thoſe men, that moſt haue done vs wrong.
The dangers of the dayes but newly gone,
Whoſe memorie is written on the Earth
With yet-appearing blood; and the examples
Of euery Minutes inſtance (preſent now)
Hath put vs in theſe ill-beſeeming Armes:
Not to breake Peace, or any Branch of it,
But to eſtabliſh here a Peace indeede,
Concurring both in Name and Qualitie.
Weſt. When euer yet was your Appeale deny'd?
Wherein haue you beene galled by the King?
What Peere hath beene ſuborn'd, to grace on you,
That you ſhould ſeale this lawleſſe bloody Booke
Of forg'd Rebellion, with a Seale diuine?
Bish. My Brother generall, the Common-wealth,
I make my Quarrell, in particular.
Weſt. There is no neede of any ſuch redreſſe:
Or if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mow. Why not to him in part, and to vs all,
That feele the brutzes of the dayes before,
And ſuffer the Condition of theſe Times
To lay a heauie and vnequall Hand vpon our Honors?
Weſt. O my good Lord Mowbray,
Conſtrue the Times to their Neceſſities,
And you ſhall ſay (indeede) it is the Time,
And not the King, that doth you iniuries.
Yet for your part, it not appeares to me.
Either from the King, or in the preſent Time,
That you ſhould haue an inch of any ground
To build a Griefe on: were you not reſtor'd
To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seigniories,
Your Noble, and right well-remembred Fathers?
Mow. What thing, in Honor, had my Father loſt,
That need to be reuiu'd, and breath'd in me?
The King that lou'd him, as the State ſtood then,
Was forc'd, perforce compell'd to baniſh him:
And then, that Henry Bullingbrooke and hee
Being mounted, and both rowſed in their Seates,
Their neighing Courſers daring of the Spurre,
Their armed Staues in charge, their Beauers downe,
Their eyes of fire, ſparkling through ſights of Steele,
And the lowd Trumpet blowing them together:
Then, then, when there was nothing could haue ſtay'd
My Father from the Breaſt of Bullingbrooke:
O, when the King did throw his Warder downe,
(His owne Life hung vpon the Staffe he threw)
Then threw hee downe himſelfe, and all their Liues,
That by Indictment, and by dint of Sword,
Haue ſince mis-carryed vnder Bullingbrooke.

Weſt. You ſpeak (Lord Mowbray) now you know not what.
The Earle of Hereford was reputed then
In England the moſt valiant Gentleman.
Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then haue ſmil'd?
But if your Father had beene Victor there,
Hee ne're had borne it out of Couentry.
For all the Countrey, in a generall voyce,
Cry'd hate vpon him: and all their prayers, and loue,
Were ſet on Herford, whom they doted on,
And bleſs'd, and grac'd, and did more then the King.
But this is meere digreſſion from my purpoſe.
Here come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Griefes; to tell you, from his Grace,
That hee will giue you Audience: and wherein
It ſhall appeare, that your demands are iuſt,
You ſhall enioy them, euery thing ſet off,
That might ſo much as thinke you Enemies.

Mow. But hee hath forc'd vs to compell this Offer,
And it proceedes from Pollicy, not Loue.

Weſt. Mowbray, you ouer-weene to take it ſo:
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
For loe, within a Ken our Army lyes,
Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
To giue admittance to a thought of feare.
Our Battaile is more full of Names then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the vſe of Armes,
Our Armor all as ſtrong, our Cauſe the beſt;
Then Reaſon will, our hearts ſhould be as good.
Say you not then, our Offer is compell'd.

Mow. Well, by my will, wee ſhall admit no Parley.

Weſt. That argues but the ſhame of your offence:
A rotten Caſe abides no handling.

Haſt. Hath the Prince Iohn a full Commiſſion,
In very ample vertue of his Father,
To heare, and abſolutely to determine
Of what Conditions wee ſhall ſtand vpon?

Weſt. That is intended in the Generals Name:
I muſe you make ſo ſlight a Queſtion.

Biſh. Then take (my Lord of Weſtmerland) this Schedule,
For this containes our generall Grieuances:
Each ſeuerall Article herein redreſs'd,
All members of our Cauſe, both here, and hence,
That are ingaged to this Action,
Acquitted by a true ſubſtantiall forme,
And preſent execution of our wills,
To vs, and to our purpoſes confin'd,
Wee come within our awfull Banks againe,
And knit our Powers to the Arme of Peace.

Weſt. This will I ſhew the Generall. Please you Lords,
In ſight of both our Battailes, wee may meete
At either end in peace: which Heauen ſo frame,
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which muſt decide it.

Biſh. My Lord, wee will doe ſo.

Mow. There is a thing within my Boſome tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can ſtand.

Haſt. Feare you not, that if wee can make our Peace
Vpon ſuch large termes, and ſo abſolute,
As our Conditions ſhall conſiſt vpon,
Our Peace ſhall ſtand as firme as Rockie Mountaines.

Mow. I, but our valuation ſhall be ſuch,
That euery ſlight, and falſe-deriued Cauſe,
Yea, euery idle, nice, and wanton Reaſon,
Shall, to the King, taſte of this Action:
That were our Royall faiths, Martyrs in Loue,
Wee ſhall be winnowed with ſo rough a winde,
That euen our Corne ſhall ſeeme as light as Chaffe,
And good from bad finde no partition.

Biſh. No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is weake
Of daintie, and ſuch picking Grieuances:
For hee hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Reuiues two greater in the Heires of Life,
And therefore will hee wipe his Tables cleane,
And keepe no Tell-tale to his Memorie,
That may repeat, and Hiſtorie his loſſe,
To new remembrance. For full well hee knowes,
Hee cannot ſo preciſely weede this Land,
As his miſ-doubts preſent occaſion:
His foes are ſo en-rooted with his friends,
That plucking to vnfixe an Enemie,
Hee doth vnfaſten ſo, and ſhake a friend.
So that this Land, like an offenſiue wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer ſtrokes,
As he is ſtriking, holds his Infant vp,
And hangs reſolu'd Correction in the Arme,
That was vprear'd to execution.

Haſt. Beſides, the King hath waſted all his rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very Inſtruments of Chaſticement:
So that his power, like to a Fangleſſe Lion
May offer, but not hold.

Biſh. Tis very true:
And therefore be aſſur'd (my good Lord Marſhall)
If we do now make our attonement well,
Our Peace, will (like a broken Limbe vnited)
Grow ſtronger, for the breaking.

Mow. Be it ſo:
Heere is return'd my Lord of Weſtmerland.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Weſt. The Prince is here at hand: pleaſeth your Lordſhip
To meet his Grace, iuſt diſtance 'tweene our Armies?

Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in heauen's name then forward.

Biſh. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince Iohn.

Iohn. You are well encountred here (my cuſin Mowbray)
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbiſhop,
And ſo to you Lord Haſtings, and to all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better ſhew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (aſſembled by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reuerence
Your expoſition on the holy Text,
Then now to ſee you heere an Iron man
Cheariog a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword; and Life to death:
That man that ſits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunne-ſhine of his fauor,
Would hee abuſe the Countenance of the King,
Alack, what Miſchiefes might hee ſet abroach,
In ſhadow of ſuch Greatneſſe? With you, Lord Biſhop,
It is euen ſo. Who hath not heard it ſpoken,
How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heauen?
To vs, the Speaker in his Parliament;
To vs, th'imagine Voyce of Heauen it ſelfe:
The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
Betweene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heauen;
And our dull workings. O, who ſhall beleeue,
But you miſ-vſe the reuerence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heauen,
As a falſe Fauorite doth his Princes Name,
In deedes diſ-honorable? You haue taken vp,

Vnder

Vnder the counterfeited Zeale of Heauen,
The Subiects of Heauens Subſtitute, my Father,
And both againſt the Peace of Heauen, and him,
Haue here vp-ſwarmed them.

Bath. Good my Lord of Lancaſter,
I am not here againſt your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Weſtmerland)
The Time (miſ-order'd) doth in common ſence
Crowd vs, and crush vs, to this monſtrous Forme,
To hold our ſafetie vp. I ſent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath been with ſcorne ſhou'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whoſe dangerous eyes may well be charm'd aſleepe,
With grauntof our moſt iuſt and right deſires;
And true Obedience, of this Madneſſe cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Maieſtie.

Mow. If not, wee readie are to try our fortunes,
To the laſt man.

Haſt. And though wee here fall downe,
Wee haue Supplyes, to ſecond our Attempt:
If they miſ-carry, theirs ſhall ſecond them:
And ſo, ſucceſſe of Miſchiefe ſhall be borne,
And Heire from Heire ſhall hold this Quarrell vp,
Whiles England ſhall haue generation.

Iohn. You are too ſhallow (Haſtings)
Much too ſhallow,
To ſounde the bottome of the after-Times.

Weſt. Pleaſeth your Grace, to anſwere them directly,
How farre-forth you doe like their Articles.

Iohn. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And ſweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My Fathers purpoſes haue beene miſtooke,
And ſome, about him, haue too lauiſhly
Wreſted his meaning, and Authoritie.
My Lord, theſe Grieues ſhall be with ſpeed redreſt:
Vpon my Life, they ſhall. If this may pleaſe you,
Diſcharge your Powers vnto their ſeuerall Counties,
As wee will ours: and here, betweene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare thoſe Tokens home,
Of our reſtored Loue, and Amitie.

Bath. I take your Princely word, for theſe redreſſes.

Iohn. I giue it you, and will maintaine my word:
And thereupon I drinke vnto your Grace.

Haſt. Goe Captaine, and deliuer to the Armie
This newes of Peace: let them haue pay, and part:
I know, it will well pleaſe them.
Hie thee Captaine Exit.

Bath. To you, my Noble Lord of Weſtmerland,

Weſt. I pledge your Grace:
And if you knew what paines I haue beſtow'd,
To breede this preſent Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my loue to ye,
Shall ſhew it ſelfe more openly hereafter.

Bath. I doe not doubt you.

Weſt. I am glad of it.
Health to my Lord, and gentle Couſin Mowbray.

Mow. You wiſh me health in very happy ſeaſon,
For I am, on the ſodaine, ſomething ill.

Bath. Againſt ill Chances, men are euer merry,
But heauineſſe fore-runnes the good euent.

Weſt. Therefore be merry (Coſen) ſince ſodaine ſorrow
Serues to ſay thus: ſome good thing comes to morrow.

Bath. Beleeue me, I am paſſing light in ſpirit.

Mow. So much the worſe, if your owne Rule be true.

Iohn. The word of Peace is rendred: hearke how they ſhout.

Mow. This had been chearefull, after Victorie.

Bish. A Peace is of the nature of a Conqueſt:
For then both parties nobly are ſubdu'd,
And neither partie looſer.

Iohn. Goe (my Lord)
And let our Army be diſcharged too:
And good my Lord (ſo pleaſe you) let our Traines
March by vs, that wee may peruſe the men Exit.
Wee ſhould haue coap'd withall.

Bath. Goe, good Lord Haſtings:
And ere they be diſmiſs'd, let them march by. Exit.

Iohn. I truſt (Lords) wee ſhall lye to night together.
Enter Weſtmerland.
Now Couſin, wherefore ſtands our Army ſtill?

Weſt. The Leaders hauing charge from you to ſtand,
Will not goe off, vntill they heare you ſpeake.

Iohn. They know their duties. Enter Haſtings.

Haſt. Our Army is diſperſ'd:
Like youthfull Steeres, vnyoak'd, they tooke their courſe Eaſt, Weſt, North, South: or like a Schoole, broke vp,
Each hurryes towards his home, and ſporting place.

Weſt. Good tidings (my Lord Haſtings) for the which,
I doe arreſt thee (Traytor) of high Treaſon:
And you Lord Arch-biſhop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treaſon, I attach you both.

Mow. Is this proceeding iuſt, and honorable?

Weſt. Is your Aſſembly ſo?

Bath. Will you thus breake your faith?

Iohn. I pawn'd thee none:
I promis'd you redreſſe of theſe ſame Grieuances
Whereof you did complaine; which, by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a moſt Chriſtian care.
But for you (Rebels) looke to taſte the due
Meet for Rebellion, and ſuch Acts as yours.
Moſt ſhallowly did you theſe Armes commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolliſhly ſent hence.
Strike vp our Drummes, purſue the ſcatter'd ſtray,
Heauen, and not wee, haue ſafely fought to day.
Some guard theſe Traitors to the Block of Death,
Treaſons true Bed, and yeelder vp of breath. Exeunt.
Enter Falſtaffe and Coleuile.

Falſt. What's your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you? and of what place, I pray?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir:
And my Name is Coleuile of the Dale.

Falſt. Well then, Coleuile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Coleuile ſhall ſtill be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough: ſo ſhall you be ſtill Coleuile of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir Iohn Falſtaffe?

Falſt. As good a man as he ſir, who ere I am: doe yee yeelde ſir, or ſhall I ſweate for you? if I doe ſweate, they are the drops of thy Louers, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowze vp Feare and Trembling, and do obſeruance to my mercy.

Col. I thinke you are Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, & in that thought yeeld me.

Fal. I haue a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, ſpeakes any other word but my name: and I had but a belly of any indifferencie. I were ſimply the moſt actiue fellow in Europe: my wombe, my wombe, my wombe vndoes me. Heere comes our Generall.

Enter Prince Iohn, and Westmerland.

Iohn. The heat is paſt, follow no farther now:
Call in the Powers, good Couſin Weſtmerland.
Now Falſtaffe, where haue you beene all this while?
When euery thing is ended, then you come.
Theſe tardie Tricks of yours will (on my life)
One time or other, breake ſome Gallowes back.

Falſt. I would bee ſorry (my Lord) but it ſhould bee thus: I neuer knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you thinke me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Haue I, in my poore and olde Motion, the expedition of Thought? I haue ſpeeded hither with the very extremeſt inch of poſſibilitie. I haue ſwounded nine ſcore and odde Poſtes: and here (trauell-tainted as I am) haue, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir Iohn Collenile of the Dale, a moſt furious Knight, and glorious Enemie: But what of that? hee ſaw mee, and yeelded: that I may iuſtly ſay with the hooke-nos'd fellow of Rome, I came, ſaw, and ouer-came.

Iohn. It was more of his Courteſie, then your deſeruing.

Falſt. I know not: heere hee is, and heere I yeeld him: and I beſeech your Grace, let it be book'd, with the reſt of this dayes deedes; or I ſweare, I will haue it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Collenile kiſſing my foot:) To the which courſe, if I be enforc'd, if you do not all ſhew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the cleare Skie of Fame, o're-ſhine you as much as the Full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element (which ſhew like Pinnes-heads to her) beleeue no the Word of the Noble: therefore let mee haue right, and let deſert mount.

Iohn. Thine's too heauie to mount.

Falſt. Let it ſhine then.

Iohn. Thine's too thick to ſhine.

Falſt Let it doe ſomething (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

Iohn. Is thy Name Collenile?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

Iohn. A famous Rebell art thou, Collenile.

Falſt. And a famous true Subiect tooke him

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betters are,
That led me hither: had they beene rul'd by me,
You ſhould haue wonne them dearer then you haue.

Falſt. I know not how they ſold themſelues, but thou like a kinde fellow, gau'ſt thy ſelfe away, and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Iohn. Haue you left purſuit?

Weſt. Retreat is made, and Execution ſtay'd.

Iohn. Send Collenile, with his Confederates,
To Yorke, to preſent Execution.
Blunt, leade him hence, and ſee you guard him ſure.

Exit with Collenile.

And now diſpatch we toward the Court (my Lords)
I heare the King, my Father, is ſore ſicke.
Our Newes ſhall go before vs, to his Maieſtie,
Which (Couſin) you ſhall beare, to comfort him:
And we with ſober ſpeede will follow you.

Falſt. My Lord, I beſeech you, giue me leaue to goe through Glouceſterſhire: and when you come to Court, ſtand my good Lord, 'pray, in your good report.

Iohn. Fare you well, Falſtaffe: I, in my condition, Shall better ſpeake of you, then you deſerue. Exit.

Falſt. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better then your Dukedome. Good faith, this ſame young ſober-blooded Boy doth not loue me, nor a man cannot make him laugh: but that's no marualle, hee drinkes no Wine. There's neuer any of theſe demure Boyes come to any proofe: for thinne Drinke doth ſo ouer-coole their blood, and making many Fiſh-Meales, that they fall into a kinde of Male Greene-ſickneſſe: and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Fooles, and Cowards; which ſome of vs ſhould be too, but for inflamation. A good Sherris-Sack hath a two-fold operation in it: it aſcends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the fooliſh, and dull, and crudde Vapours, which enuiron it: makes it apprehenſiue, quicke, forgetiue, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable ſhapes; which deliuer'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The ſecond propertie of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood: which before (cold, and ſeeled) leſt the Liuer white, and pale; which is the Badge of Puſillanimitie, and Cowardize: but the Sherris warmes it, and makes it courſe from the Inwards, to the parts extremes: it illumineteth the Face, which (as a Beacon) giues warning to all the reſt of this little Kingdome (Man) to Armes: and then the Vitall Commoners, and in-land petite Spirits, muſter me all to their Captaine, the Heart; who great, and puffe vp with his Retinue, doth any Deed of Courage: and this Valour comes of Sherris. So, that ſkill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sack (for that ſets it a-worke) and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Deuill, till Sack commences it, and ſets it in act, and vſe. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blond hee did naturally inherite of his Father, hee hath, like leane, ſtirrill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyll'd, with excellent endeauour of drinking good, and good ſtore of fertile Sherris, that hee is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thouſand Sonnes, the firſt Principle I would teach them, ſhould be to forſweare thinne Potations, and to addict themſelues to Sack. Enter Bardolph. How now Bardolph?

Bard. The Armie is diſcharged all, and gone.

Falſt. Let them goe: Ile through Glouceſterſhire, and there will I viſit Maſter Robert Shallow, Eſquire: I haue him already tempering betweene my finger and my thombe, and ſhortly will I ſeale with him. Come away.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Glouceſter.

King. Now Lords, if Heauen doth giue ſucceſſefull end
To this Debate that bleedeth at our doores,
Wee will our Youth lead on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are ſanctify'd.
Our Nauie is addreſſed, our Power collected,
Our Subſtitutes, in abſence, well inueſted,
And euery thing lyes leuell to our wiſh;
Onely wee want a little perſonall Strength:
And pauſe vs, till theſe Rebels, now a-foot,
Come vnderneath the yoake of Gouernment.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Maieſtie
Shall ſoone enioy.

King. How-

King. Humphrey (my Sonne of Glouceſter) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I thinke hee's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windſor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I doe not know (my Lord.)

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) hee is in preſence heere.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence. How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother? Hee loues thee, and thou do'ſt neglect him (Thomas.) Thou haſt a better place in his Affection, Then all thy Brothers: cherish it (my Boy) And Noble Offices thou may'ſt effect Of Mediation (after I am dead) Betweene his Greatneſſe, and thy other Brethren. Therefore omit him not: blunt not his Loue, Nor loose the good aduantage of his Grace, By ſeeming cold, or careleſſe of his will. For hee is gracious, if hee be obſerv'd: Hee hath a Teare for Pitie, and a Hand Open (as Day) for melting Charitie: Yet notwithſtanding, being incens'd, hee's Flint, As humorous as Winter, and as ſudden, As Flawes congealed in the Spring of day. His temper therefore muſt be well obſerv'd: Chide him for faults, and doe it reuerently, When you perceiue his blood enclin'd to mirth: But being moodie, giue him Line, and ſcope, Till that his paſſions (like a Whale on ground) Confound themſelues with working. Learne this Thomas, And thou ſhalt proue a ſhelter to thy friends, A Hoope of Gold, to binde thy Brothers in: That the vnited Veſſell of their Blood (Mingled with Venome of Suggeſtion, As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in) Shall neuer leake, though it doe worke as ſtrong As Aconitum, or rath Gun-powder.

Clar. I ſhall obſerue him with all care, and loue.

King. Why art thou not at Windſor with him (Thomas?)

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanyed? Canſt thou tell that?

Clar. With Poines, and other his continuall followers.

King. Moſt ſubiect is the fatteſt Soyle to Weedes: And hee (the Noble Image of my Youth) Is ouer-ſpread with them: therefore my griefe Stretches it ſelfe beyond the howre of death. The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe ſhape (In formes imaginarie) th'vnguided Dayes, And rotten Times, that you ſhall looke vpon, When I am ſleeping with my Anceſtors. For when his head-ſtrong Riot hath no Curbe, When Rage and hot-Blood are his Counſellors, When Meanes and lauiſh Manners meete together: Oh, with what Wings ſhall his Affections flye Towards fronting Perill, and oppos'd Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite: The Prince but ſtudies his Companions, Like a ſtrange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language, 'Tis needfull, that the moſt immodeſt word Be look'd vpon, and learn'd: which once attayn'd, Your Highneſſe knowes, comes to no further vſe, But to be knowne, and hated. So, like groſſe termes, The Prince will, in the perfectneſſe of time, Caſt off his followers: and their memorie Shall as a Patterne, or a Meaſure, liue, By which his Grace muſt mete the liues of others, Turning paſt-euills to aduantages.

King. 'Tis ſeldome, when the Bee doth leaue her Comb In the dead Carrion.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Who's heere? Weſtmerland?

Weſt. Health to my Soueraigne, and new happineſſe Added to that, that I am to deliuer. Prince Iohn, your Sonne, doth kiſſe your Graces Hand: Mowbray, the Biſhop, Scroope, Haſtings, and all, Are brought to the Correction of your Law. There is not now a Rebels Sword vnſheath'd, But Peace puts forth her Oliue euery where. The manner how this Action hath beene borne, Here (at more leyſure) may your Highneſſe reade, With euery courſe, in his particular.

King. O Weſtmerland, thou art a Summer Bird, Which euer in the haunch of Winter ſings The lifting vp of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere's more newes.

Harc. From Enemies, Heauen keepe your Maieſtie: And when they ſtand againſt you, may they fall, As thoſe that I am come to tell you of. The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe, With a great Power of Engliſh, and of Scots, Are by the Sheriſe of Yorkeſhire ouerthrowne. The manner, and true order of the fight, This Packet (pleaſe it you) containes at large.

King. And wherefore ſhould theſe good newes Make me ſicke? Will Fortune neuer come with both hands full, But write her faire words ſtill in foulеſt Letters? She either giues a Stomack, and no Foode, (Such are the poore, in health) or elſe a Feaſt, And takes away the Stomack (ſuch are the Rich, That haue abundance, and enioy it not.) I ſhould reioyce now, at this happy newes, And now my Sight fayles, and my Braine is giddie. O me, come neere me, now I am much ill.

Glo. Comfort your Maieſtie.

Cla. Oh, my Royall Father.

Weſt. My Soueraigne Lord, cheare vp your ſelfe, looke vp.

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, thoſe Fits Are with his Highneſſe very ordinarie. Stand from him, giue him ayre: Hee'le ſtraight be well.

Clar. No, no, hee cannot long hold out: theſe pangs, Th'inceſſant care, and labour of his Minde, Hath wrought the Mure, that ſhould confine it in, So thinne, that Life lookes through, and will breake out.

Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obſerue Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature: The Seaſons change their manners, as the Yeare Had found ſome Moneths aſleepe, and leap'd them ouer.

Clar. The Riuer hath thrice Flow'd, no ebbe betweene: And the old folke (Times doting Chronicles) Say it did ſo, a little time before That our great Grand-ſire Edward ſick'd, and dy'de.

War. Speake lower (Princes) for the King recouers.

Glo. This Apoplexie will (certaine) be his end.

King. I pray you take me vp, and beare me hence
Into some other Chamber softly pray.
Let there be no noyse made (my gentle friends)
Vnleſſe some dull and fauourable hand
Will whiſper Muſicke to my wearie Spirit.

War. Call for the Muſicke in the other Roome.

King. Set me the Crowne vpon my Pillow here.

Cla. His eye is hollow, and hee changes much.

War. Leſſe noyſe, leſſe noyſe.

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who ſaw the Duke of Clarence?

Cla. I am here (Brother) full of heauineſſe.

P. Hen. How now? Raine within doores, and none abroad? How doth the King?

Glo. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard hee the good newes yet?
Tell it him.

Glo. Hee alter'd much, vpon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If hee be ſicke with ioy,
Hee'le recouer without Phyſicke.

War. Not ſo much noyſe (my Lords)
Sweet Prince ſpeake lowe.
The King your Father, is diſpos'd to ſleepe.

Cla. Let vs with-draw into the other Roome.

War. Will't pleaſe your Grace to goe along with vs?

P. Hen. No. I will ſit, and watch here, by the King.
Why doth the Crowne lye there, vpon his Pillow,
Being ſo troubleſome a Bed-fellow?
O pollitik'd Perturbation! Golden Care!
That keep'ſt the Ports of Slumber open wide,
To many a watchfull Night: ſleepe with it now,
Yet not ſo ſound, and halfe ſo deepely ſweete,
As hee whoſe Brow (with homely Biggen bound)
Snores out the Watch of Night. O Maieſtie!
When thou do'ſt pinch thy Bearer, thou do'ſt ſit
Like a rich Armor, worne in heate of day,
That ſcald'ſt with ſafetie: by his Gates of breath,
There lyes a downy feather which ſtirres not:
Did hee ſuſpire, that light and weightleſſe downe
Perforce muſt moue. My gracious Lord, my Father,
This ſleepe is ſound indeede: this is a ſleepe,
That from this Golden Rigoll hath diuorc'd
So many Engliſh Kings. Thy due, from me,
Is Teares, and hearte Sorrowes of the Blood,
Which Nature, Loue, and filiall tenderneſſe,
Shall (O deare Father) pay thee plenteouſly.
My due, from thee, is this Imperiall Crowne,
Which (as immediate from thy Place and Blood)
Deriues it ſelfe to me. Loe, heere it ſits,
Which Heauen ſhall guard:
And put the worlds whole ſtrength into one gyant Arme,
It ſhall not force this lineall Honor from me.
This, from thee, will I to mine leaue,
As 'tis left to me. Exit.

Enter Warwicke, Glouceſter, Clarence.

King. Warwicke? Glouceſter? Clarence.

Cla. Doth the King call?

War. What would your Maieſtie? how fares your Grace?

King. Why did you leaue me here alone (my Lords?)

Cla. We left the Prince (my Brother) here (my Liege)
Who vndertooke to ſit and watch by you.

King. The Prince of Wales? where is hee? let me ſee him.

War. This doore is open, hee is gone this way.

Glo. Hee came not through the Chamber where we ſtay'd.

King. Where is the Crowne? who tooke it from my Pillow?

War. When we with-drew (my Liege) we left it heere.

King. The Prince hath ta'ne it hence:
Goe ſeeke him out.
Is hee ſo haſtie, that hee doth ſuppoſe
My ſleepe, my death? Finde him (my Lord of Warwick)
Chide him hither: this part of his conioynes
With my diſeaſe, and helpes to end me.
See Sonnes, what things you are:
How quickly Nature falls into reuolt,
When Gold becomes her Obiect?
For this, the foolish ouer-carefull Fathers
Haue broke their ſleepes with thoughts,
Their braines with care, their bones with induſtry.
For this, they haue ingroſſed and pyl'd vp
The canker'd heapes of ſtrange-atchieued Gold:
For this, they haue beene thoughtfull, to inueſt
Their Sonnes with Arts, and Martiall Exerciſes:
When, like the Bee, culling from euery Flower
The vertuous Sweetes, our Thighes packt with Wax,
Our Mouthes with Honey, wee bring it to the Hiue;
And like the Bees, are murthered for our paines.
This bitter taſte yeelds his engroſſements,
To the ending Father.

Enter Warwicke.

Now, where is hee, that will not ſtay ſo long,
Till his Friend Sickneſſe hath determin'd me?

War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Roome, Waſhing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheekes,
With ſuch a deepe demeanure, in great ſorrow,
That Tyranny, which neuer quaffit but blood,
Would (by beholding him) haue waſh'd his Knife
With gentle eye-drops. Hee is comming hither.

King. But wherefore did hee take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.

Loe, where hee comes. Come hither to me (Harry.) Depart the Chamber, leaue vs heere alone. Exit.

P. Hen. I neuer thought to heare you ſpeake againe.

King. Thy wiſh was Father (Harry) to that thought:
I ſtay too long by thee, I wearie thee.
Do'ſt thou ſo hunger for my emptie Chayre,
That thou wilt needes inueſt thee with mine Honors,
Before thy howre be ripe? O foolish Youth!
Thou ſeek'ſt the Greatneſſe, that will ouer-whelme thee.
Stay but a little: for my Cloud of Dignitie
Is held from falling, with ſo weake a winde,
That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.
Thou haſt ſtolne that, which after ſome few howres
Were thine, without offence: and at my death
Thou haſt ſeal'd vp my expectation.
Thy Life did manifeſt, thou lou'dſt me not,
And thou wilt haue me dye aſſur'd of it.
Thou hid'ſt a thouſand Daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou haſt whetted on thy ſtonie heart,
To ſtab at halfe an howre of my Life.
What? canſt thou not forbeare me halfe an howre?

King. O my Sonne!
Heauen put it in thy minde to take it hence,
That thou might'ſt ioyne the more, thy Fathers loue,
Pleading ſo wiſely, in excuſe of it.
Come hither Harry, ſit thou by my bedde,
And heare (I thinke, the very lateſt Counſell
That euer I ſhall breath: Heauen knowes, my Sonne)
By what by-paſhes, and indirect crook'd-wayes
I met this Crowne: and I my ſelfe know well
How troubleſome it ſate vpon my head.
To thee, it ſhall deſcend with better Quiet,
Better Opinion, better Confirmation:
For all the ſoyle of the Atchieuement goes
With me, into the Earth. It ſeem'd in mee,
But as an Honour ſnatch'd with boyſt'rous hand,
And I had many liuing, to vpbraide
My gaine of it, by their Aſſiſtances,
Which dayly grew to Quarrell, and to Blood-ſhed,
Wounding ſuppoſed Peace.
All theſe bold Feares,
Thou ſeeſt (with perill) I haue anſwered:
For all my Reigne, hath beene but as a Scene
Acting that argument. And now my death
Changes the Moode: For what in me, was purchas'd,
Falles vpon thee, in a more Fayrer ſort.
So thou, the Garland wear'ſt ſucceſſiuely.
Yet, though thou ſtand'ſt more ſure, then I could do,
Thou art not firme enough, ſince greefes are greene:
And all thy Friends, which thou muſt make thy Friends
Haue but their ſtings, and teeth, newly ta'k'n out,
By whoſe fell working, I was firſt aduanc'd,
And by whoſe power, I well might lodge a Feare
To be againe diſplac'd. Which to auoyd,
I cut them off: and had a purpoſe now
To leade out many to the Holy Land;
Leaſt reſt, and lying ſtill, might make them looke
Too neere vnto my State.
Therefore (my Harry)
Be it thy courſe to buſie giddy Minds
With Forraigne Quarrels: that Action hence borne out,
May waſte the memory of the former dayes.
More would I, but my Lungs are waſted ſo,
That ſtrength of Speech is vtterly deni'de mee.
How I came by the Crowne, O heauen forgiue:
And grant it may, with thee, in true peace liue.
Prince. My gracious Liege:
You wonne it, wore it: keepe it, gaue it me,
Then plaine and right muſt my poſſeſſion be:
Which I, with more, then with a Common paine,
'Gainſt all the World, will rightfully maintaine

Enter Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, and Warwicke

King. Looke, looke,
Heere comes my Iohn of Lancaſter.
Iohn. Health, Peace, and Happineſſe,
To my Royall Father.
King. Thou bring'ſt me happineſſe and Peace (Sonne Iohn:
But health (alacke) with youthfull wings is flowne
From this bare, wither'd Trunke. Vpon thy ſight
My worldly buſineſſe makes a period.

Where

Where is my Lord of Warwicke?
Prin. My Lord of Warwicke.
King. Doth any name particular belong
Vnto the Lodging, where I first did swoond?
War. Tis call'd Ierusalem, my Noble Lord.
King. Laud be to heauen:
Euen there my life must end.
It hath beene propheſi'de to me many yeares,
I should not dye, but in Ierusalem:
Which (vainly) I suppos'd the Holy-Land.
But beare me to that Chamber, there lle lye:
In that Ierusalem, shall Harry dye. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falſtaffe, Bardolfe, Page, and Dauie.

Shal. By Cocke and Pye, you shall not away to night. What Dauy, I say.
Fal. You must excuſe me, M. Robert Shallow.
Shal I will not excuſe you: you shall not be excuſed. Excuſes shall not be admitted: there is no excuſe shall ſerue: you shall not be excus'd.
Why Dauie
Dauie. Heere ſir.
Shal. Dauy, Dauy, Dauy, let me ſee (Dauy) let me ſee: William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir Iohn, you shal not be excus'd.
Dauy. Marry ſir, thus: thoſe Preceptes cannot bee ſerue'd. and againe ſir, shall we ſowe the head-land with Wheate?
Shal With't red Wheate Dauy. But for William Cook: are there no young Pigeons?
Dauy. Yes Sir.
Heere is now the Smithes note, for Shoeing,
And Plough-Irons.
Shal. Let it be caſt, and payde: Sir Iohn, you shall not be excus'd.
Dauy Sir, a new linke to the Bucket muſt needes bee had: And Sir, doe you meane to ſtoppe any of Williams Wages, about the Sacke he loſt the other day, at Hinckley Fayre?
Shal. He ſhall anſwer it:
Some Pigeons Dauy, a couple of ſhort-legg'd Hennes: a ioynt of Mutton, and any pretty little tine Kickſhawes, tell William Cooke.
Dauy Doth the man of Warre, ſtay all night ſir?
Shal Yes Dauy:
I will vſe him well. A Friend i'th Court, is better then a penny in purſe. Vſe his men well Dauy, for they are arrant Knaues, and will backe-bite.
Dauy No worſe then they are bitten, ſir: For they haue marueilous fowle hones.
Shallow. Well conceited Dauy: about thy Buſineſſe, Dauy.
Dauy. I beſeech you ſir,
To countenance William Viſor of Woncot, againſt Clement Perkes of the hill.
Shal. There are many Complaints Dauy, againſt that Viſor, that Viſor is an arrant Knaue, on my knowledge.
Dauy. I graunt your Worſhip, that he is a knaue Sir) But yet heauen forbid Sir, but a Knaue ſhould haue ſome Countenance, at his Friends requeſt. An honeſt man is able to ſpeake for himſelfe, when a Knaue is not. I haue ſerue'd your Worſhippe truely ſir, theſe eight yeares: and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knaue, againſt an honeſt man, I haue but a very little credite with your Worſhippe. The Knaue is mine honeſt Friend Sir, therefore I beſeech your Worſhip, let him bee Countenanc'd.
Shal Go too,
I ſay he ſhall haue no wrong: Looke about Dauy.
Where are you Sir Iohn? Come, off with your Boots.
Giue me your hand M. Bardolfe.
Bard. I am glad to ſee your Worſhip.
Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kinde Maiſter Bardolfe: and welcome my tall Fellow:
Come Sir Iohn.
Falſtaffe. Ile follow you, good Maſter Robert Shallow. Bardolfe, looke to our Horſes If I were ſaw'de into Quantities, I ſhould make foure dozen of ſuch bearded Hermites ſtaues, as Maſter Shallow. It is a wonderfull thing to ſee the ſemblable Coherence of his mens ſpirits, and his: They, by obſeruing of him, do beare themſelues like prooliſh Iuſtices: Hee, by conuerſing with them, is turn'd into a Iuſtice-like Seruingman. Their ſpirits are ſo married in Coniunction, with the participation of Society, that they flocke together in conſent, like ſo many Wilde-Geeſe. If I had a ſuite to Maſter Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being neere their Maſter. If to his Men, I would currie with Maiſter Shallow, that no man could better command his Seruants. It is certaine, that either wiſe bearing, or ignorant Carriage is caught, as men take diſeaſes, one of another: therefore, let men take heede of their Company. I will deuiſe matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of ſixe Faſhions (which is foure Termes) or two Actions, and he ſhall laugh with Interuallums. O it is much that a Lye (with a ſlight Oath) and a ſelt (with a ſaddle brow) will doe, with a Fellow, that never had the Ache in his ſhoulders O you ſhall ſee him laugh, till his Face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid vp.
Shal. Sir Iohn.
Falſt. I come Maſter Shallow, I come Maſter Shallow. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

Warwicke How now, my Lord Chiefe Iuſtice, whether away?
Ch. Iuſt. How doth the King?
Warw. Exceeding well: his Cares
Are now, all ended.
Ch. Iuſt I hope, not dead.
Warw. Hee's walk'd the way of Nature,
And to our purpoſes, he liues no more.
Ch. Iuſt I would his Maieſty had call'd me with him,
The ſeruice, that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all iniuries.

War.

ndeed I thinke the yong King loues you not.
I know he doth not, and do arme my ſelfe
ne the condition of the Time,
nnot looke more hideouſly vpon me,
e drawne it in my fantaſie.

Enter Iohn of Lancaſter, Gloucester, and Clarence.

leere come the heauy Iſſue of dead Harry:
liuing Harrie had the temper
worſt of theſe three Gentlemen:
Nobles then, ſhould hold their places,
ſtrike ſaile, to Spirits of vilde ſort?
Alas, I feare, all will be ouer-turn'd.
ood morrow Coſin Warwick, good morrow.
2. Good morrow, Coſin.
'e meet, like men, that had forgot to ſpeake.
'e do remember: but our Argument
eury, to admit much talke.
1. Peace be with him, that hath made vs heauy
Peace be with vs, leſt we be heauier.
good my Lord, you haue loſt a friend indeed:
weare, you borrow not that face
ſorrow, it is ſure your owne.
hough no man be aſſur'd what grace to finde,
n coldeſt expectation.
rier, would 'twere otherwiſe.
, you muſt now ſpeake Sir Iohn Falſtaffe faire,
mmes againſt your ſtreame of Quality.
Sweet Princes: what I did, I did in Honor,
mperiall Conduct of my Soule, hall you ſee, that I will begge
nd lore-ſtall'd Remiſſion.
nd vpright Innocency fayle me,
ing (my Maſter) that is dead,

eere comes the Prince.

Enter Prince Henrie.

Good morrow: and heauen ſaue your Maieſty
This new, and gorgeous Garment, Maieſty, eaſie on me, as you thinke.
ou mixe your Sadneſſe with ſome Feare:
Engliſh, not the Turkiſh Court:
ah, an Amurah ſucceeds,
Harry: Yet be ſad (good Brothers) ake truth) it very well becomes you Royally in you appeares, deeply put the Faſhion on,
it in my heart. Why then be ſad, ine no more of it (good Brothers)
ſe burthen, laid vpon vs all.
Heauen (I bid you be aſſur'd)
Father, and your Brother too:
beare your Loue, Ile beare your Cares;
that Harrie's dead, and ſo will I.
liues, that ſhall conuert thoſe Teares
, into houres of Happineſſe.
We hope no other from your Maieſty.
ou all looke ſtrangely on me: and you moſt, thinke) aſſur'd, I loue you not.
I am aſſur'd (if I be meaſur'd rightly)
ſty hath no iuſt cauſe to hate me.
How might a Prince of my great hopes forget dignities you laid vpon me?
What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly ſend to Priſon Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this eaſie?
May this be waſh'd in Lethe, and forgotten?
Ch. Iuſt. I then did vſe the Perſon of your Father:
The Image of his power, lay then in me,
And in th'adminiſtration of his Law,
Whiles I was buſie for the Commonwealth,
Your Highneſſe pleaſed to forget my place,
The Maieſty, and power of Law, and Iuſtice,
The Image of the King, whom I preſented,
And ſtrooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement:
Whereon (as an Offender to your Father)
I gaue bold way to my Authority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,
To haue a Sonne, ſet your Decrees at naught?
To plucke downe Iuſtice from your awefull Bench?
To trip the courſe of Law, and blunt the Sword
That guards the peace, and ſafety of your Perſon?
Nay more, to ſpurne at your moſt Royall Image,
And mocke your workings, in a Second body?
Queſtion your Royall Thoughts, make the caſe yours:
Be now the Father, and propoſe a Sonne,
Heare your owne dignity ſo much prophan'd,
See your moſt dreadfull Lawes, ſo loofely ſlighted;
Behold your ſelfe, ſo by a Sonne diſdained:
And then imagine me, taking you part,
And in your power, ſoft ſilencing your Sonne:
After this cold conſiderance, ſentence me;
And, as you are a King, ſpeake in your State,
What I haue done, that miſbecame my place,
My perſon, or my Lieges Soueraignetie.
Prin. You are right Iuſtice, and you weigh this well:
Therefore ſtill beare the Ballance, and the Sword:
And I do wiſh your Honors may encreaſe,
Till you do liue, to ſee a Sonne of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
So ſhall I liue, to ſpeake my Fathers words:
Happy am I, that haue a man ſo bold,
That dares do Iuſtice, on my proper Sonne;
And no leſſe happy, hauing ſuch a Sonne,
That would deliuer vp his Greatneſſe ſo,
Into the hands of Iuſtice. You did commit me:
For which, I do commit into your hand,
Th'vnſtained Sword that you haue vs'd to beare:
With this Remembrance; That you vſe the ſame
With the like bold, iuſt, and impartiall ſpirit
As you haue done 'gainſt me. There is my hand,
You ſhall be as a Father, to my Youth:
My voice ſhall ſound, as you do prompt mine eare,
And I will ſtoope, and humble my Intents,
To your well-practis'd, wiſe Directions
And Princes all, beleeue me, I beſeech you:
My Father is gone wilde into his Graue,
(For in his Tombe, lye my Affections)
And with his Spirits, ſadly I ſuruiue,
To mocke the expectation of the World;
To ſruſtrate Propheſies, and to race out
Rotten Opinion, who hath writ me downe
After my ſeeming. The Tide of Blood in me,
Hath proudly flow'd in Vanity, till now.
Now doth it turne, and ebbe back e to the Sea,
Where it ſhall mingle with the ſtate of Floods,
And flow henceforth in formall Maieſty.
Now call we our High Court of Parliament,
And let vs chooſe ſuch Limbes of Noble Counſaile,

That

That the great Body of our State may go
In equall ranke, with the best gouern'd Nation,
That Warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to vs,
In which you (Father) shall haue foremost hand.
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our State,
And (heauen consigning to my good intents)
No Prince, nor Peere, shall haue iust cause to say, Heauen shorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Fal. There's a merry heart, good M. Silence, Ile giue you a health for that anon.

Shal. Good M. Bardolfe: some wine, Dauie.

Da. Sweet sir, sit: Ile be with you anon: most sweete sir, sit. Master Page good M. Page, sit: Proface. What you want in meate, we'l haue in drinke: but you beare, the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry M. Bardolfe, and my little Souldiour there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all.
For women are Shrewes, both short, and tall:
'Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shrouetide. Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not thinke M. Silence had bin a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who I? I haue beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Dau. There is a dish of Leather-coats for you.

Shal. Dauie.

Dau. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine, sir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briske and fine, & drinke vnto the Leman mine: and a merry heart liues long-a.

Fal. Well said, M. Silence.

Sil. If we shall be merry, now comes in the sweete of the night.

Fal. Health, and long life to you, M. Silence.

Sil. Fill the Cuppe, and let it come. Ile pledge you a mile to the bottome.

Shal. Honest Bardolfe, welcome: If thou want'st any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart. Welcome my little tyne theefe, and welcome indeed too: Ile drinke to M. Bardolfe, and to all the Cauileroes about London.

Dau. I hope to see London, once ere I die.

Bar. If I might see you there, Dauie.

Shal. You'l cracke a quart together? Ha, will you not M. Bardolfe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knaue will sticke by thee, I can assure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bar. And Ile sticke by him, sir.

Shal. Why there spoke a King: lacke nothing, be merry. Looke, who's at doore there, ho: who knockes?

Fal Why now you haue done me right.

Sil. Do me right, and dub me Knight, Samingo. Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why then say an old man can do somwhat.

Dau. If it please your Worshippe, there's one Pistoll come from the Court with newes.

Fal. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Pistoll.

How now Pistoll?

Pist. Sir Iohn, 'saue you sir.

Fal. What winde blew you hither, Pistoll?

Pist. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good, sweet Knight: Thou art now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he bee, but Goodman Puffe of Barson.

Pist. Puffe? puffe in thy teeth, most recreant Coward base. Sir Iohn, I am thy Pistoll, and thy Friend: I helter skelter haue I rode to thee, and tydings do I bring, and lucky ioyes, and golden Times, and happie Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliuer them, like a man of this World.

Pist. A footra for the World, and Worldlings base. I speake of Affrica, and Golden ioyes.

Fal. O base Assyrian Knight, what is thy newes? Let King Cuthalo know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Pist. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Hellenes?
And shall good newes be baffel'd?
Then Pistoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honest Gentleman,
I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then Lament therefore.

Shal. Giue me pardon, Sir,
If sir, you come with news from the Court, I take it, there is but two wayes, either to vtter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, vnder the King, in some Authority.

Pist. Vnder which King?
Bezonian, speake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or Fift?

Shal Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A footra for thine Office.
Sir Iohn, thy tender Lamb-kinne, now is King.
Harry the Fift's the man, I speake the truth.
When Pistoll lyes, do this, and fig me, like
The bragging Spaniard.

Fal.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groo. More Ruſhes, more Ruſhes.

2. Groo. The Trumpets haue ſounded twice.

1. Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falſtaffe, Shallow, Piſtoll, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falſtaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere vpon him, as he comes by: and do but marke the countenance that hee will giue me.

Piſtol. Bleſſe thy Lungs good Knight.

Falſt. Come heere, Piſtol, ſtand behind me. O if I had had time to haue made new Liueries, I would haue beſtowed the thouſand pound I borrowed of you. But it is no matter, this poore ſhew doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to ſee him.

Shal. It doth ſo.

Falſt. It ſhewes my earneſtneſſe in affection.

Piſt. It doth ſo.

Fal. My deuotion.

Piſt. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
And not to deliberate, not to remember,
Not to haue patience to ſhift me.

Shal. It is moſt certaine.

Fal. But to ſtand ſtained with Trauaile, and ſweating with deſire to ſee him, thinking of nothing elſe, putting all affayres in oblimon, as if there were nothing els to bee done, but to ſee him.

Piſt. 'Tis ſemper idem: for obſque hoc nihil eſt. 'Tis all in euery part.

Shal. 'Tis ſo indeed.

Piſt. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liuer, and make thee rage. Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoghts is in baſe Durance, and contagious priſon: Hall'd thither by moſt Mechanicall and durty hand. Rowze vppe Reuenge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Doll is in. Piſtol, ſpeakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliuer her.

Piſtol. There roar'd the Sea, and Trumpet Clangour ſounds.

The Trumpets ſound. Enter King Henrie the Fift, Brothers, Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

Falſt. Saue thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.

Piſt. The heauens thee guard, and keepe, moſt royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. 'Saue thee my ſweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chiefe Iuſtice, ſpeake to that vaine man.

Ch. Iuſt. Haue you your wits?
Know you what 'tis you ſpeake?

Falſt. My King, my Ioue; I ſpeake to thee, my heart.

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers:
How ill white haires become a Foole, and Ieſter?

I haue

I haue long dream'd of such a kinde of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so prophane:
But being awake, I do despise my dreame.
Make lesse thy body (hence) and more thy Grace,
Leaue gormandizing; Know the Graue doth gape
For thee, thrice wider then for other men.
Reply not to me, with a Foole-borne iest,
Presume not, that I am the thing I was,
For heauen doth know (so shall the world perceiue)
That I haue turn'd away my former Selfe,
So will I those that kept me Companie.
When thou dost heare I am, as I haue bin,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't
The Tutor and the Feeder of my Riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on paine of death,
As I haue done the rest of my Misleaders,
Not to come neere our Person, by ten mile.
For competence of life, I will allow you,
That lacke of meanes enforce you not to euill:
And as we heare you do reforme your selues,
We will according to your strength, and qualities,
Giue you aduancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
To see perform'd the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. I marry Sir Iohn, which I beseech you to let me haue home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, M. Shallow, do not you grieue at this: I shall be sent for in priuate to him: Looke you, he must seeme thus to the world: feare not your aduancement: I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceiue how, vnlesse you should giue me your Doublet, and stuffe me out with Straw. I beseech you, good Sir Iohn, let me haue fiue hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour I feare, that you will dye, in Sir Iohn.

Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner: Come Lieutenant Pistoll, come Bardolfe, I shall be sent for soone at night.

Ch. Iust. Go carry Sir Iohn Falstaffe to the Fleete, Take all his Company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Iust. I cannot now speake, I will heare you soone: Take them away.

Pist. Si fortune me tormente, spera me contento.

Exeunt. Manet Lancaster and Chiefe Iustice.

Iohn. I like this faire proceeding of the King's: He hath intent his wonted Followers Shall all be very well prouided for: But all are banisht, till their conuersations Appeare more wise, and modest to the world.

Ch. Iust. And so they are.

Iohn. The King hath call'd his Parliament, My Lord.

Ch. Iust. He hath.

Iohn. I will lay odds, that ere this yeere expire, We beare our Ciuill Swords, and Natiue fire As farre as France. I heare a Bird so sing, Whose Musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King. Come, will you hence?

Exeunt.

FINIS.

EPILOGVE.

FIRST, my Feare: then, my Curtſie: laſt, my Speech. My Feare, is your Diſpleaſure: My Curtſie, my Dutie: And my Speech, to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good Speech now, you vndoe me: For what I haue to ſay, is of mine owne making: and what (indeed) I ſhould ſay, will (I doubt) prooue mine owne marring. But to the Purpoſe, and ſo to the Venture. Be it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a diſpleaſing Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promiſe you a Better: I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come vnluckily home, I breake: and you, my gentle Creditors loſe. Heere I proniſt you I would be, and heere I commit my Bodie to your Mercies: Bate me ſome, and I will pay you ſome, and (as moſt Debtors do) promiſe you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me: Will you command me to vſe my Legges? And yet that were but light payment, to Dance out of your debt: But a good Conſcience, will make any poſſible ſatisfaction, and ſo will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, haue forgiuen me, if the Gentlemen will not, then the Gentlemen do not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was neuer ſeene before, in ſuch an Aſſembly.

One word more, I beſeech you: if you be not too much cloid with Fat Meate, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Falſtaffe ſhall dye of a ſweat, vnleſſe already he be kill'd with your hard Opinions: For Old-Caſtle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is weary, when my Legs are too, I will bid you good night; and ſo kneele downe before you: But (indeed) to pray for the Queene.

A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act,
And Monarchs to behold the ſwelling Scene.
Then ſhould the Warlike Harry, like himſelfe,
Aſſume the Port of Mars, and at his heeles
(Leaſh'd in like Hounds) ſhould Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentles all,
The flat vnraiſed Spirits, that hath dar'd,
On this vnworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Obiect: Can this Cock-Pit hold
The vaſtie fields of France? Or may we cramme
Within this wooden O, the very Caskes
That did affright the Aire at Agincourt?
O pardon, ſince a crooked Figure may
Attest in little place a Million,
And let vs, Cyphers to this great Accompt,
On your imaginarie Forces worke.
Suppoſe within the Girdle of theſe Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarchies,
Whoſe high, vp-reared, and abutting Fronts,
The perillous narrow Ocean parts aſunder.
Peece out our imperfections with your thoughts:
Into a thouſand parts diuide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puiſſance.
Thinke when we talke of Horſes, that you ſee them
Printing their proud Hoofes i'th' receiuing Earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now muſt deck our Kings,
Carry them here and there: Iumping o're Times:
Turning th'accompliſhment of many yeeres
Into an Houres glaſſe: for the which ſupplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Hiſtorie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to iudge our Play. Exit.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the two Biſhops of Canterbury and Ely.

Biſh. Cant. My Lord, Ile tell you, that ſelfe Bill is vrg'd,
Which in th'eleuenth yeere of the laſt Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed againſt vs paſt,
But that the ſcambling and vnquiet time
Did puſh it out of further queſtion.
But how my Lord ſhall we reſiſt it now?
It muſt be thought on: if it paſſe againſt vs,
We loſe the better halfe of our Poſſeſſion:
For all the temporall Lands, which men deuout
By Teſtament haue giuen to the Church,
Would they ſtrip from vs; being valu'd thus,
As much would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fifteene Earles, and fifteene hundred Knights,
Six thouſand and two hundred good Eſquires:
And to releefe of Lazars, and weake age
Of indigent faint Soules, paſt corporall toyle,
A hundred Almes-houſes, right well ſupply'd:
And to the Coffers of the King beſide,
A thouſand pounds by th'yeere. Thus runs the Bill.
Biſh. Ely. This would drinke deepe.
Biſh. Cant. 'Twould drinke the Cup and all.
But what preuention?

Biſh. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.
Biſh. Ely. And a true louer of the holy Church.
Biſh. Cant. The courſes of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no ſooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildneſſe, mortify'd in him,
Seem'd to dye too: yea, at that very moment,
Conſideration like an Angell came,
And whipt th'offending Adam out of him;
Leauing his body as a Paradiſe,
T'inuelop and containe Celeſtiall Spirits.
Neuer was ſuch a ſodaine Scholler made:
Neuer came Reformation in a Flood,
With ſuch a heady currance ſcowring faults:
Nor neuer Hydra-headed Wilfulneſſe
So ſoone did looſe his Seat; and all at once;
As in this King.
Biſh. Ely. We are bleſſed in the Change.
Biſh. Cant. Heare him but reaſon in Diuinitie;
And all-admiring, with an inward wiſh
You would deſire the King were made a Prelate:
Heare him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;
You would ſay, it hath been all in all his ſtudy:
Liſt his diſcourſe of Warre; and you ſhall heare
A fearefull Battaile rendred you in Muſique.

Turne him to any Cause of Pollicy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will vnloose,
Familiar as his Garter: that when he speakes,
The Ayre, a Charter'd Libertine, is still,
And the mute Wonder lurketh in mens eares,
To steale his sweet and honyed Sentences:
So that the Art and Practique part of life,
Must be the Mistresse to this Theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace should gleane it,
Since his addiction was to Courses vaine,
His Companies vnletter'd, rude, and shallow,
His Houres fill'd vp with Ryots, Banquets, Sports;
And neuer noted in him any studie,
Any retyrement, any sequestration,
From open Haunts and Popularitie.

B. Ely. The Strawberry growes vnderneath the Nettle,
And holesome Berryes thriue and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by Fruit of baser qualitie:
And so the Prince obscur'd his Contemplation
Vnder the Veyle of Wildnesse, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Grasse, fastest by Night,
Vnseene, yet crescive in his facultie.

B. Cant. It must be so; for Miracles are ceas't:
And therefore we must needes admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.

B. Ely. But my good Lord:
How now for mittigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons? doth his Maiestie
Incline to it, or no?

B. Cant. He seemes indifferent:
Or rather swaying more vpon our part,
Then cherishing th'exhibiters against vs:
For I haue made an offer to his Maiestie,
Vpon our Spirituall Conuocation,
And in regard of Causes now in hand,
Which I haue open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to giue a greater Summe,
Then euer at one time the Clergie yet
Did to his Predecessors part withall.

B. Ely. How did this offer seeme receiu'd, my Lord?

B. Cant. With good acceptance of his Maiestie:
Saue that there was not time enough to heare,
As I perceiu'd his Grace would faine haue done,
The seueralls and vnhidden passages
Of his true Titles to some certaine Dukedomes,
And generally, to the Crowne and Seat of France,
Deriu'd from Edward, his great Grandfather.

B. Ely. What was th'impediment that broke this off?

B. Cant. The French Embassador vpon that instant
Crau'd audience; and the howre I thinke is come,
To giue him hearing: Is it foure a Clock?

B. Ely. It is.

B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embassie:
Which I could with a ready guesse declare,
Before the Frenchman speake a word of it.

B. Ely. Ile wait vpon you, and I long to heare it.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Humfrey, Bedford, Clarence, Warwick, Westmerland, and Exeter.

King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exeter. Not here in presence.

King. Send for him, good Vnckle.

Westm. Shall we call in th'Ambassador, my Liege?

King. Not yet, my Cousin: we would be resolu'd,
Before we heare him, of some things of weight,
That stake our thoughts, concerning vs and France.

Enter two Bishops.

B. Cant. God and his Angels guard your sacred Throne,
And make you long become it.

King. Sure we thanke you.
My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And iustly and religiously vnfold,
Why the Law Salike, that they haue in France,
Or should or should not barre vs in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my deare and faithfull Lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your vnderstanding Soule,
With opening Titles miscreate, whose rights
Sutes not in native colours with the truth:
For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reuerence shall incite vs to.
Therefore take heed how you impawne our Person,
How you awake our sleeping Sword of Warre;
We charge you in the Name of God take heed:
For neuer two such Kingdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are euery one, a Woe a sore Complaint,
'Gainst him, whose wrongs giues edge vnto the Swords,
That makes such waste in briefe mortalitie.
Vnder this Conjuration, speake my Lord:
For we will heare, note, and beleeue in heart,
That what you speake, is in your Conscience washt,
As pure as sinne with Baptisme.

B. Can. Then heare me gracious Soueraign, & you Peers,
That owe your selues, your liues, and seruices,
To this Imperiall Throne. There is no barre
To make against your Highnesse Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne succedant,
No Woman shall succeed in Salike Land:
Which Salike Land, the French vniustly gloze
To be the Realme of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this Law, and Female Barre.
Yet their owne Authors faithfully affirme,
That the Land Salike is in Germanie,
Betweene the Flouds of Sala and of Elue:
Where Charles the Great hauing subdu'd the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certaine French:
Who holding in disdaine the German Women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establisht then this Law; to wit, No Female
Should be Inheritrix in Salike Land:
Which Salike (as I said) 'twixt Elue and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appeare, the Salike Law
Was not deuised for the Realme of France:
Nor did the French possesse the Salike Land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Foure hundred twentie six: and Charles the Great Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the Riuer Sala, in the yeere
Eight hundred fiue. Besides, their Writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerike,
Did as Heire Generall, bring descended
Of Blithild, which was Daughter to King Clothar,
Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France.
Hugh Capet also, who vsurpt the Crowne

King. We muſt not onely arme t'inuade the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Againſt the Scot, who will make roade vpon vs,
With all aduantages.
Bish. Can. They of thoſe Marches, gracious Soueraign, Shall be a Wall ſufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilfering Borderers.
King. We do not meane the courſing ſnatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been ſtill a giddy neighbour to vs:
For you ſhall reade, that my great Grandfather
Neuer went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his vnfurniſht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulneſſe of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot Aſſayes,
Girding with grieuous ſiege, Caſtles and Townes:
That England being emptie of defence,
Hath ſhooke and trembled at th'ill neighbourhood.
B. Can. She hath bin thē more fear'd thē harm'd, my Liege:
For heare her but exampl'd by her ſelfe,
When all her Chiualrie hath been in France,
And ſhee a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,
Shee hath her ſelfe not onely well defended,
But taken and impounded as a Stray.
The King of Scots: whom ſhee did ſend to France,
To fill King Edwards fame with priſoner Kings,
And make their Chronicle as rich with prayſe,
As is the Owſe and bottome of the Sea
With ſunken Wrack, and ſum-leſſe Treaſuries.
Bish. Ely. But there's a ſaying very old and true,
If that you will France win, then with Scotland firſt begin.
For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,
To her vnguarded Neſt, the Weaſell (Scot)
Comes ſneaking, and ſo ſucks her Princely Egges,
Playing the Mouſe in abſence of the Cat,
To tame and haſoocke more then ſhe can eate.
Exet. It followes then, the Cat muſt ſtay at home,
Yet that is but a crush'd neceſſity,
Since we haue lockes to ſafegard neceſſaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty theeues.
While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th'aduiſed head defends it ſelfe at home:
For Gouernment, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one conſent,
Congreeing in a full and natural cloſe,
Like Muſicke.
Cant. Therefore doth heauen diuide
The ſtate of man in diuers functions,
Setting endeuour in continual motion:
To which is fixed as an ayme or butt,
Obedience: for ſo worke the Hony Bees,
Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach
The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome.
They haue a King, and Officers of ſorts,
Where ſome like Magiſtrates correct at home:
Others, like Merchants venter Trade abroad:
Others, like Souldiers armed in their ſtings,
Make boote vpon the Summers Veluet buddes:
Which pillage, they with merry march bring home:
To the Tent-royal of their Emperor
Who buſied in his Maieſties ſurueyes
The ſinging Maſons building roofes of Gold,
The ciuill Citizens kneading vp the hony;
The poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in Their heauy burthens at his narrow gate:

The ſad-ey'd Iuſtice with his ſurly humme,
Delivering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I this inferre,
That many things having full reference
To one conſent, may worke contrariouſly,
As many Arrowes looſed ſeverall wayes
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many freſh ſtreames meet in one ſalt ſea;
As many Lynes cloſe in the Dials center:
So may a thouſand actions once a foote,
And in one purpoſe, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege.
Divide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall ſhall make all Gallia ſhake.
If we with thrice ſuch powers left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation loſe
The name of hardineſſe and policie.

King. Call in the Meſſengers ſent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well reſolu'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble ſinewes of our power,
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l ſit,
(Ruling in large and ample Emperie,
Ore France, and all her (almoſt) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay theſe bones in an vnworthy Vrne,
Tombleſſe, with no remembrance over them
Either our Hiſtory ſhall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or elſe our graue
Like Turkiſh mute, ſhall have a tongueleſſe mouth,
Not worſhipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambaſſadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleaſure
Of our faire Coſin Dolphin: for we heare,
Your greeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't pleaſe your Maieſtie to giue vs leave
Freely to render what we haue in charge:
Or ſhall we ſparingly ſhew you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embaſſie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Chriſtian King,
Vnto whoſe grace our paſſion is as ſubiect
As is our wretches fettred in our priſons,
Therefore with franke and with vncurbed plainneſſe,
Tell vs Dolphins minde

Amb. Thus than in few:
Your Highneſſe lately ſending into France,
Did claime ſome certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predeceſſor, King Edward the third.
In anſwer of which claime, the Prince our Maſter
Sayes, that you ſauour too much of your youth,
And bids you be aduis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble Gallyard wonne:
You cannot reuell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore ſends you meeter for your ſpirit
This Tun of Treaſure; and in lieu of this,
Deſires you let the dukedomes that you claime
Heare no more of you. This the Dolphin ſpeakes.

King. What Treaſure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.

King. We are glad the Dolphin is ſo pleaſant with vs,
His Preſent, and your paines we thanke you for:
When we haue matcht our Rackets to theſe Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a ſet,
Shall ſtrike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with ſuch a Wrangler,
That all the Courts of France will be diſturb'd
With Chaces. And we vnderſtand him well,
How he comes o're vs with our wilder dayes,
Not meaſuring what vſe we made of them.
We never valew'd this poore ſeate of England,
And therefore living hence, did giue our ſelfe
To barbarous licenſe: As 'tis ever common,
That men are merrieſt, when they are from home
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and ſhew my ſayle of Greatneſſe,
When I do rowſe me in my Throne of France.
For that I haue layd by my Maieſtie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will riſe there with ſo full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yea ſtrike the Dolphin blinde to looke on vs,
And tell the pleaſant Prince, this Mocke of his
Hath turn'd his balles to Gun-ſtones, and his ſoule
Shall ſtand ſore charged, for the waſtefull vengeance
That ſhall flye with them: for many a thouſand widowes
Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their dear husbands,
Mocke mothers from their ſonnes, mock Caſtles downe;
And ſome are yet vngotten and vnborne,
That ſhal haue cauſe to curſe the Dolphins ſcorne.
But this lyes all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whoſe name
Tell you the Dolphin, I am comming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a well-hallow'd cauſe.
So get you hence in peace: And tell the Dolphin,
His Ieſt will ſauour but of ſhallow wit,
When thouſands weepe more then did laugh at it.
Convey them with ſafe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt Ambaſſadors.

Exe. This was a merry Meſſage.

King. We hope to make the Sender bluſh at it
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may giue furth'rance to our Expedition:
For we haue now no thought in vs but France,
Saue thoſe to God, that runne before our buſineſſe.
Therefore let our proportions for theſe Warres
Be ſoone collected, and all things thought vpon,
That may with reaſonable ſwiftneſſe adde
More Feathers to our Wings: for God before,
We'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let every man now taſke his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt

Flouriſh. Enter Chorus.

Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And ſilken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes:
Now thrive the Armorers, and Honors thought
Reignes ſolely in the breaſt of every man.
They ſell the Paſture now, to buy the Horſe;
Following the Mirror of all Chriſtian Kings,
With winged heeles, as Engliſh Mercuries.
For now ſits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts vnto the Point,
With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French aduis'd by good intelligence
Of this moſt dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Policy
Seeke to diuert the Engliſh purpoſes.

ler be vnto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Give me thy hand.

Nym. I ſhall haue my Noble?
Piſt. In caſh, moſt iuſtly payd.
Nym. Well, then that the humor of't.

Enter Hoſteſſe.

Hoſt. As euer you come of women, come in quickly to ſir Iohn: A poore heart, hee is ſo ſhak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is moſt lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the euen of it.

Piſt. Nym, thou haſt ſpoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it muſt bee as it may: he paſſes ſome humors, and carreeres.

Piſt. Let vs condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will liue.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Weſtmerland.

Bed Fore God his Grace is bold to truſt theſe traitors
Exe. They ſhall be apprehended by and by.
Weſt. How ſmooth and euen they do beare themſelues,
As if allegeance in their boſomes ſate
Crowned with faith, and conſtant loyalty.
Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,
By interception, which they dreame not of.
Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious fauours;
That he ſhould for a forraigne purſe, ſo ſell
His Soueraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now ſits the winde faire, and we will aboord.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Maſham,
And you my gentle Knight, giue me your thoughts:
Thinke you not that the powres we beare with vs
Will cut their paſſage through the force of France?
Doing the execution, and the acte,
For which we haue in head aſſembled them.
Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his beſt.
King. I doubt not that, ſince we are well perſwaded
We carry not a heart with vs from hence,
That growes not in a faire conſent with ours:
Nor leaue not one behinde, that doth not wiſh
Succeſſe and Conqueſt to attend on vs.
Cam. Neuer was Monarch better feat'd and lou'd,
Then is your Maieſty; there's not I thinke a ſubiect
That ſits in heart-greeſe and vneaſineſſe
Vnder the ſweet ſhade of your gouernment.
Kni. True: thoſe that were your Fathers enemies,
Haue ſteep'd their gauls in hony, and do ſerue you
With hearts create of duty, and of zeale.
King. We therefore haue great cauſe of thankfulnes,
And ſhall forget the office of our hand
Sooner then quittance of deſert and merit,
According to the weight and worthineſſe.
Scro. So ſeruice ſhall with ſteeled ſinewes toyle,
And labour ſhall refreſh it ſelfe with hope
To do your Grace inceſſant ſeruices.
King. We iudge no leſſe. Vnkle of Exeter,
Inlarge the man committed yeſterday,
That rayl'd againſt our perſon: We conſider
It was exceſſe of Wine that ſet him on,
And on his more aduice, We pardon him.
Scro. That's mercy, but too much ſecurity:
Let him be puniſh'd Soueraigne, leaſt example
Breed (by his ſufferance) more of ſuch a kind.
King. O let vs yet be mercifull.
Cam. So may your Highneſſe, and yet puniſh too.
Grey. Sir, you ſhew great mercy if you giue him life,
After the taſte of much correction.
King. Alas, your too much loue and care of me,
Are heauy Orizons 'gainſt this poore wretch:
If little faults proceeding on diſtemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how ſhall we ſtretch our eye
When capitall crimes, chew'd, ſwallow'd, and digeſted,
Appeare before vs? Wee'l yet inlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deare care
And tender preſeruation of our perſon
Would haue him puniſh'd. And now to our French cauſe,
Who are the late Commiſſioners?
Cam. I one my Lord,
Your Highneſſe bad me aske for it to day.
Scro. So did you me my Liege.
Gray. And I my Royall Soueraigne.
King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours:
There yours Lord Scroope of Maſham, and Sir Knight
Gray of Northumberland, this ſame is yours:
Reade them, and know I know your worthineſſe.
My Lord of Weſtmerland, and Vnkle Exeter,
We will aboord to night. Why how now Gentlemen?
What ſee you in thoſe papers, that you loſe
So much complexion? Looke ye how they change:
Their cheekes are paper. Why, what read you there,
That haue ſo cowarded and chac'd your blood
Out of apparance.
Cam. I do confeſſe my fault,
And do ſubmit me to your Highneſſe mercy.
Gray. Scro. To which we all appeale.
King. The mercy that was quicke in vs but late,
By your owne counſaile is ſuppreſt and kill'd:
You muſt not dare (for ſhame) to talke of mercy.
For your owne reaſons turne into your boſomes,
As dogs vpon their maiſters, worrying you:
See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres,
Theſe Engliſh monſters: My Lord of Cambridge here,
You know how apt our loue was, to accord
To furniſh with all appertinents
Belonging to his Honour; and this man,
Hath for a few light Crowners, lightly conſpir'd
And ſworne vnto the practiſes of France
To kill vs heere in Hampton. To the which,
This Knight no leſſe for bounty bound to Vs
Then Cambridge is, hath likewiſe ſworne. But O,
What ſhall I ſay to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell,
Ingratefull, ſauage, and inhumane Creature?
Thou that didſt beare the key of all my counſailes,
That knew'ſt the very bottome of my ſoule,
That (almoſt) might'ſt haue coyn'd me into Golde,
Would'ſt thou haue practiſ'd on me, for thy vſe?
May it be poſſible, that forraigne hyre
Could out of thee extract one ſparke of euill
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis ſo ſtrange,
That though the truth of it ſtands off as groſſe
As blacke and white, my eye will ſcarſely ſee it.
Treaſon, and murther, euer kept together,
As two yoake diuels ſworne to eythers purpoſe,
Working ſo groſſely in an naturall cauſe,
That admiration did not hoope at them.
But thou (gainſt all proportion) didſt bring in Wonder to waite on treaſon, and on murther:
And whatſoeuer cunning fiend it was
That wrought vpon thee ſo prepoſterouſly,
Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

And

I did admit it as a motiue,

Neuer did faithfull ſubiect more reioyce

God quit you in his mercy: Hear your ſentence

You patience to indure, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence. Exit.
Now Lords for France: the enterpriſe whereof
Shall be to you as vs, like glorious.
We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,
Since God ſo graciouſly hath brought to light
This dangerous Treaſon, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now,
But euery Rubbe is ſmoothed on our way.
Then forth, deare Countreymen: Let vs deliuer
Our Puiſſance into the hand of God,
Putting it ſtraight in expedition.
Cheerely to Sea, the ſignes of Warre aduance,
No King of England, if not King of France. Flouriſh.

Enter Piſtoll, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Hoſteſſe.

Hoſteſſe. Prythee honey ſweet Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Piſtoll. No: for my manly heart doth erne. Bardolph, be blythe: Nim, rowſe thy vaunting Veines: Boy, briſtle thy Courage vp: for Falſtaffe hee is dead, and wee muſt erne therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, whereſomere hee is, either in Heauen, or in Hell.

Hoſteſſe. Nay ſure, hee's not in Hell: hee's in Arthurs Boſome, if euer man went to Arthurs Boſome: a made a finer end, and went away and it had beene any Chriſtome Child: a parted euen iuſt betweene Twelue and One, euen at the turning o'th' Tyde: for after I ſaw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and ſmile vpon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Noſe was as ſharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now Sir Iohn (quoth I?) what man? be a good cheare: ſo a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a ſhould not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himſelfe with any ſuch thoughts yet: ſo a bad me lay more Clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any ſtone: then I felt to his knees, and ſo vp-peer'd, and vpward, and all was as cold as any ſtone.

Nim. They ſay he cryed out of Sack.

Hoſteſſe. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Hoſteſſe. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and ſaid they were Deules incarnate.

Woman. A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he neuer lik'd.

Boy. A ſaid once, the Deule would haue him about Women.

Hoſteſſe. A did in ſome ſort (indeed) handle Women: but then hee was rumetique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember, a ſaw a Flea ſticke vpon Bardolphs Noſe, and a ſaid it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire: that's all the Riches I got in his ſeruice.

Nim. Shall wee ſhogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Piſt. Come, let's away. My Loue, giue me thy Lippes: Looke to my Chattels, and my Moueables: Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: truſt none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-faſt is the only Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Cauſe bee thy Counſailor. Goe, cleare thy Chryſtalls. Yoke-fellowes in Armes, let vs to France, like Horſe-leeches leeches my Boyes, to ſucke, to ſucke, the very blood to ſucke.

Boy. And that's but vnwholeſome food, they ſay.

Piſt. Touch her ſoft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farwell Hoſteſſe.

Nym. I cannot kiſſe, that is the humor of it: but adieu.

Piſt. Let Huſwiferie appeare: keepe cloſe, I thee command.

Hoſteſſe. Farwell: adieu. Exeunt

Flouriſh.

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Dukes of Berry and Britaine.

King. Thus comes the Engliſh with full power vpon vs, And more then carefully it vs concernes, To anſwer Royally in our defences. Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine, Of Brabant and of Orleance, ſhall make forth, And you Prince Dolphin, with all ſwift diſpatch To lyne and new repayre our Townes of Warre With eyen of courage, and with meanes defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As Waters to the ſucking of a Gulfe. It fits vs then to be as prouident, As feare may teach vs, out of late examples Left by the fatall and neglected Engliſh, Vpon our fields.

Dolphin. My moſt redoubted Father, It is moſt meet we arme vs 'gainſt the Foe: For Peace it ſelfe ſhould not ſo dull a Kingdome, (Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in queſtion) But that Defences, Muſters, Preparations, Should be maintain'd, aſſembled, and collected, As were a Warre in expectation. Therefore I ſay, 'tis meet we all goe forth, To view the ſick and feeble parts of France: And let vs doe it with no ſhew of feare, No, with no more, then if we heard that England Were buſied with a Whitſon Morris-dance: For, my good Liege, thee is ſo idly King'd, Her Scepter ſo phantaſtically borne, By a vaine giddie ſhallow humorous Youth, That feare attends her not.

Conſt. O peace, Prince Dolphin, You are too much miſtaken in this King: Queſtion your Grace the late Embaſſadors, With what great State he heard their Embaſſie, How well ſupply'd with Noble Councellors, How modeſt in exception; and withall, How terrible in conſtant reſolution: And you ſhall find, his Vanities fore-ſpent, Were but the out-ſide of the Roman Brutus, Couering Diſcretion with a Coat of Folly; As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide thoſe Roots That ſhall firſt ſpring, and be moſt delicate.

Dolphin. Well, 'tis not ſo, my Lord High Conſtable. But though we thinke it ſo, it is no matter: In caſes of defence, 'tis beſt to weigh The Enemie more mightie then he ſeemes, So the proportions of defence are fill'd: Which of a weake and niggardly proiection, Doth like a Miſer ſpoyle his Coat, with ſcanting A little Cloth.

King. Thinke we King Harry ſtrong: And Princes, looke you ſtrongly arme to meet him. The Kindred of him hath beene fleſhed vpon vs: And he is bred out of that bloodie ſtraine, That haunted vs in our familiar Paths: Witneſſe our too much memorable ſhame, When Creſſy Battell fatally was ſtrucke, And all our Princes captiu'd, by the hand Of that black Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales: Whiles that his Mountaine Sire, on Mountaine ſtanding Vp in the Ayre, crow n'd with the Golden Sunne, Saw his Heroicall Seed, and ſmil'd to ſee him Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface The Patterns, that by God and by French Fathers Had twentie yeeres been made. This is a Stem Of that Victorious Stock: and let vs feare The Native mightineſſe and fate of him.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Embaſſadors from Harry King of England, Doe craue admittance to your Maieſtie.

King. Weele giue them preſent audience. Goe, and bring them. You ſee this Chaſe is hotly followed, friends.

Dolphin. Turne head, and ſtop purſuit: for coward Dogs Moſt ſpend their mouths, when what they ſeem to threaten Runs farre before them. Good my Soueraigne Take vp the Engliſh ſhort, and let them know Of what a Monarchie you are the Head: Selfe-loue, my Liege, is not ſo vile a ſinne, As ſelfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England?

Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Maieſtie: He wills you in the Name of God Almighty, That you deueſt your ſelfe, and lay apart The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heauen, By Law of Nature, and of Nations, longs To him and to his Heires, namely the Crowne, And all wide-ſtretched Honors, that pertaine By Cuſtome, and the Ordinance of Times, Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know 'Tis no ſiniſter, nor no awk-ward Clayme, Pickt from the worme-holes of long-vaniſht dayes, Nor from the duſt of old Oblitions rake, He ſends you this moſt memorable Lyne, In euery Branch truly demonſtratiue; Willing you ouer-looke this Pedigree: And when you find him euenly deriu'd From his moſt fam'd, of famous Anceſtors, Edward the third, he bids you then reſigne Your Crowne and Kingdome, indirectly held From him, the Native and true Challenger.

King. Or elſe what followes?

Exe. Bloody conſtraint: for if you hide the Crowne Euen in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Therefore in fierce Tempeſt is he comming, In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a Ioue: That if requiring faile, he will compell. And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord, Deliuer vp the Crowne, and to take mercie On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre Opens his vaſtie Iawes: and on your head Turning the Widdowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes, The dead-mens Blood, the priuy Maidens Groanes, For Husbands, Fathers, and betrothed Louers, That ſhall be ſwallowed in this Controuerſie. This is his Clayme, his Threatning, and my Meſſage: Vnleſſe the Dolphin be in preſence here; To whom expreſſely I bring greeting to.

King. For

r vs, we will conſider of this further:
ſhall you beare our full intent
Brother of England.
or the Dolphin.
for him: what to him from England?
rne and defiance, ſleighe regard, contempt,
g that may not miſ-become
Sender, doth he prize you at.
ny King: and if your Fathers Highneſſe grount of all demands at large,
bitter Mock you ſent his Maieſtie;
ou to ſo hot an Anſwer of it,
and Wombie Vaultages of France
your Treſpas, and returne your Mock ccents of his Ordinance.
ay: if my Father render faire returne,
my will: for I deſire
Oddes with England.
,as matching to his Youth and Vanitie.
him with the Paris-Balls.
e'le make your Paris Louer ſhake for it,
Miſtreſſe Court of mightie Europe:
'd, you'le find a diff'rence, bieſts haue in wonder found,
he promiſe of his greener dayes,
r maſters now: now he weighes Time
vmoſt Graine: that you ſhall reade
he Loſſes, if he ſtay in France.
o morrow ſhall you know our mind at full.
Flouriſh.
ſpatch vs with all ſpeed, leaſt that our King
himſelfe to queſtion our delay;
ored in this Land already.
ſhalbe ſoone diſpeſcht, with faire conditions.
but ſmall breathe, and little pawſe,
matters of this conſequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Flouriſh. Enter Chorus.

magin'd wing our ſwift Scene flyes,
of no leſſe celeritie then that of Thought.
at you haue ſeene
ppointed King at Douer Peer,
a Royaltie: and his braue Fleet,
Sereamers, the young Phebus fayning;
ecer Fancies: and in them behold,
ſempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing;
hrill Whiſtle, which doth order giue
confus'd: behold the threaden Sayles,
th'inuiſible and creeping Wind,
ige Boottomes through the furrowed Sea, loſtie Surge. O, doe but thinke pon the Riuage, and behold
th'inconſtant Billowes dauncing:
ares this Fleet Maieſticall,
e courſe to Harflew. Follow, follow:
ur minds to ſtemage of this Nauie.
your England as dead Mid-night, ſtill,
ith Grandſires, Babyes, and old Women,
ner not arm'd to pyth and puiſſence:
be, whoſe Chin is but enriche
With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
Theſe cull'd and choyſe-drawne Cauliers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein ſee a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew.
Suppoſe th'Embaſſador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie.
Some petty and vnprofitable Dukedomes.
The offer likes not: and the nimble Gunner
With Lynſtock now the diuelliſh Cannon touches,
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.
And downe goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Glouceſter
Alarum: Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more vnto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more;
Or cloſe the Wall vp with our Engliſh dead:
In Peace, there's nothing ſo becomes a man,
As modeſt ſtillneſſe, and humilitie:
But when the blaſt of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the ſinewes, commune vp the blood,
Diſguiſe faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage:
Then lend the Eye a terrible aſpect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Braſſe Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As feareſully as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and iutty his confounded Baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſtfull Ocean.
Now ſet the Teeth, and ſtretch the Noſthrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend vp euery Spirit
To his full height. On, on, you Nobliſh Engliſh,
Whoſe blood is fet from Fathers of Warre-proofe:
Fathers, that like ſo many Alexanders,
Haue in theſe parts from Morne till Euen fought,
And ſheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Diſhonour not your Mothers: now atteſt,
That thoſe whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Copy now to me of groſſer blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whoſe Lyms were made in England; ſhew vs here
The mettell of your Paſture: let vs ſweare,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you ſo meane and baſe,
That hath not Noble luſter in your eyes.
I ſee you ſtand like Grey-hounds in the ſlips,
Straying vpon the Start. The Game's afoot:
Follow your Spirit; and vpon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Piſtoll, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach.

Nim. 'Pray thee Corporall ſtay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I haue not a Caſe of Liues: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song of it.

Piſt. The plaine-Song is moſt iuſt: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vaſſals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-houſe in London, I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and ſafetie.

Piſt. And

The ſad-ey'd Iuſtice with his ſurly humme,
Deliuering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I this inferre,
That many things having full reference
To one conſent, may worke contrariouſly,
As many Arrowes looſed ſeuerall wayes
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many freſh ſtreames meet in one ſalt ſea;
As many Lynes cloſe in the Dials center:
So may a thouſand actions once a foote,
And in one purpoſe, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege.
Diuide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall ſhall make all Gallia ſhake.
If we with thrice ſuch powers left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation loſe
The name of hardineſſe and politie.

King. Call in the Meſſengers ſent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well reſolu'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble ſinewes of our power,
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l ſit,
(Ruling in large and ample Emperie,
Ore France, and all her (almoſt) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay theſe bones in an vnworthy Vrne,
Tombleſſe, with no remembrance ouer them
Either our Hiſtory ſhall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or elſe our graue
Like Turkiſh mute, ſhall haue a tongueleſſe mouth,
Not worſhipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambaſſadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleaſure
Of our faire Coſin Dolphin: for we heare,
Your greeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't pleaſe your Maieſtie to giue vs leaue
Freely to render what we haue in charge:
Or ſhall we ſparingly ſhew you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embaſſie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Chriſtian King,
Vnto whoſe grace our paſſion is as ſubiect
As is our wretches fettred in our priſons,
Therefore with franke and with vncurbed plainneſſe,
Tell vs Dolphins minde

Amb. Thus than in few:
Your Highneſſe lately ſending into France,
Did claime ſome certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predeceſſor, King Edward the third.
In anſwer of which claime, the Prince our Maſter
Sayes, that you ſauour too much of your youth,
And bids you be aduis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble Gallard wonne:
You cannot reuell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore ſends you meeter for your ſpirit
This Tun of Treaſure; and in lieu of this,
Deſires you let the dukedomes that you claime
Heare no more of you. This the Dolphin ſpeakes.

King. What Treaſure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.

King. We are glad the Dolphin is ſo pleaſant with vs,
His Preſent, and your paines we thanke you for:
When we haue matcht our Rackets to theſe Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a ſet,
Shall ſtrike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with ſuch a Wrangler,
That all the Courts of France will be diſturb'd
With Chaces. And we vnderſtand him well,
How he comes o're vs with our wilder dayes,
Not meaſuring what vſe we made of them.
We neuer valew'd this poore ſeate of England,
And therefore liuing hence, did giue our ſelfe
To barbarous licenſe: As 'tis euer common,
That men are merrieſt, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and ſhew my ſayle of Greatneſſe,
When I do rowſe me in my Throne of France.
For that I haue layd by my Maieſtie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will riſe there with ſo full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yea ſtrike the Dolphin blinde to looke on vs,
And tell the pleaſant Prince, this Mocke of his
Hath turn'd his balles to Gun-ſtones, and his ſoule
Shall ſtand ſore charged, for the waſtefull vengeance
That ſhall flye with them: for many a thouſand widowes
Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their dear husbands
Mocke mothers from their ſonnes, mock Caſtles downe;
And ſome are yet vngotten and vnborne,
That ſhal haue cauſe to curſe the Dolphins ſcorne.
But this lyes all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whoſe name
Tel you the Dolphin, I am comming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a well-hallow'd cauſe.
So get you hence in peace: And tell the Dolphin,
His Ieſt will ſauour but of ſhallow wit,
When thouſands weepe more then did laugh at it.
Conuey them with ſafe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt Ambaſſadors.

Exe. This was a merry Meſſage.

King. We hope to make the Sender bluſh at it:
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may giue furth'rance to our Expedition:
For we haue now no thought in vs but France,
Saue thoſe to God, that runne before our buſineſſe.
Therefore let our proportions for theſe Warres
Be ſoone collected, and all things thought vpon,
That may with reaſonable ſwiftneſſe adde
More Feathers to our Wings: for God before,
We'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let euery man now taſke his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt

Flouriſh. Enter Chorus.

Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And ſilken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes:
Now thriue the Armorers, and Honors thought
Reignes ſolely in the breaſt of euery man.
They ſell the Paſture now, to buy the Horſe;
Following the Mirror of all Chriſtian Kings,
With winged heeles, as Engliſh Mercuries.
For now ſits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts vnto the Point,
With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French aduis'd by good intelligence
Of this moſt dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Policy
Seeke to diuert the Engliſh purpoſes.
O England. Modell to thy inward Greatneſſe,

Piſt. Piſh for thee, Iſland dogge: thou prickeard cur of Iſland.

Hoſt. Good Corporall Nym ſhew thy valor, and put vp your ſword.

Nym. Will you ſhogge off? I would haue you ſolus.

Piſt. Solus, egregious dog? O Viper vile; The ſolus in thy moſt mervailous face, the ſolus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw perdy; and which is worſe, within thy naſtie mouth. I do retort the ſolus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Pi-

grow fowle with me Piſtoll, I will ſcoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in Gyre termes. If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good termes, as I may, and that's the humor of it.

Piſt. O Braggard vile, and damned furious wight,
The Grave doth gape, and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale.

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I ſay: Hee that ſtrikes the firſt ſtroake, Ile run him vp to the hilts, as I am a ſol-dier.

Piſt. An oath of mickle might, and fury ſhall abate.
Giue me thy fiſt, thy fore-foote to me giue: Thy ſpirites are moſt tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throate one time or other in faire termes, that is the humor of it.

Piſtoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I defie thee againe. O hound of Creet, think'ſt thou my ſpouſe to get?
No, to the ſpittle goe, and from the Powdring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Creſſida kinde, Doll Tearc-ſheete, ſhe by name, and her eſpouſe. I haue, and I will hold the Quondam Quickely for the onely ſhee: and Pauca, there's enough to go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine Hoſt Piſtoll, you muſt come to my Maſter, and your Hoſteſſe: He is very ſicke, & would to bed.
Good Bardolfe, put thy face betweene his ſheets, and do the Office of a Warming-pan: Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away you Rogue.

Hoſt. By my troth he'l yeeld the Crow a pudding one of theſe dayes: the King has kild his heart. Good Huſband come home preſently. Exit

Bar. Come, ſhall I make you two friends. Wee muſt to cut one anothers throats?

Piſt. Let floods ore-ſwell, and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'l pay me the eight ſhillings I won of you at Bettlog?

Piſt. Baſe is the Slaue that payes.

Nym. That now I will haue: that's the humor of it.

Piſt. As manhood ſhal compound: puſh home. Draw

Bard. By this ſword, hee that makes the firſt thruſt, Ile kill him: By this ſword, I will.

Pi. Sword is an Oath, & Oaths muſt haue their courſe

Bar. Coporall Nym, & thou wilt be friends be frends, and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too: pre-thee put vp.

Piſt. A Noble ſhalt thou haue, and preſent pay, and Liquor likewiſe will I giue to thee, and friendſhippe ſhall combyne, and brotherhood. Ile liue by Nymme, & Nymme ſhall liue by me, is not this iuſt? For I ſhal Sutler be vnto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Giue mee thy hand.

Nym. I shall haue my Noble?
Pist. In cash, most iustly payd.
Nym. Well, then that the humor of't.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. As euer you come of women, come in quickly to sir Iohn: A poore heart, hee is so shak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the euen of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it must bee as it may: he passes some humors, and carreeres.

Pist. Let vs condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will liue.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Westmerland.

Bed. Fore God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors
Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.
West. How smooth and euen they do beare themselues,
As if allegeance in their bosomes sate
Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.
Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,
By interception, which they dreame not of.
Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious fauours;
That he should for a forraigne purse, so sell
His Soueraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now sits the winde faire, and we will aboord.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Masham,
And you my gentle Knight, giue me your thoughts:
Thinke you not that the powres we beare with vs
Will cut their passage through the force of France?
Doing the execution, and the acte,
For which we haue in head assembled them.
Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his best.
King. I doubt not that, since we are well perswaded
We carry not a heart with vs from hence,
That growes not in a faire consent with ours:
Nor leaue not one behinde, that doth not wish
Successe and Conquest to attend on vs.
Cam. Neuer was Monarch better fear'd and lou'd,
Then is your Maiesty; there's not I thinke a subiect
That sits in heart-greefe and vneasinesse
Vnder the sweet shade of your gouernment.
Kni. True: those that were your Fathers enemies,
Haue steep'd their gauls in bony, and do serue you
With hearts create of duty, and of zeale.
King. We therefore haue great cause of thankfulnes,
And shall forget the office of our hand
Sooner then quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthinesse.
Scro. So seruice shall with steeled sinewes toyle,
And labour shall refresh it selfe with hope
To do your Grace incessant seruices.
King. We Iudge no lesse. Vnkle of Exeter,
Inlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rayl'd against our person: We consider
It was excesse of Wine that set him on,
And on his more aduice, We pardon him.
Scro. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd Soueraigne, least example
Breed (by his sufferance) more of such a kind.
King. O let vs yet be mercifull.
Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.
Grey. Sir, you shew great mercy if you giue him life,
After the taste of much correction.
King. Alas, your too much loue and care of me,
Are heauy Orisons 'gainst this poore wretch:
If little faults proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye
When capitall crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appeare before vs? Wee'l yet inlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Grey, in their deere care
And tender preseruation of our person
Would haue him punish'd. And now to our French causes,
Who are the late Commissioners?
Cam. I one my Lord,
Your Highnesse bad me aske for it to day.
Scro. So did you me my Liege.
Grey. And I my Royall Soueraigne.
King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours:
There yours Lord Scroope of Masham, and Sir Knight:
Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours:
Reade them, and know I know your worthinesse.
My Lord of Westmerland, and Vnkle Exeter,
We will aboord to night. Why how now Gentlemen?
What see you in those papers, that you loose
So much complexion? Looke ye how they change:
Their cheekes are paper. Why, what reade you there,
That haue so cowarded and chac'd your blood
Out of apparance.
Cam. I do confesse my fault,
And do submit me to your Highnesse mercy.
Grey. Scro. To which we all appeale.
King. The mercy that was quicke in vs but late,
By your owne counsaile is suppreſt and kill'd:
You must not dare (for shame) to talke of mercy.
For your owne reasons turne into your bosomes,
As dogs vpon their maisters, worrying you:
See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres,
These English monsters: My Lord of Cambridge here,
You know how apt our loue was, to accord
To furnish with all appertinents
Belonging to his Honour; and this man,
Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conspir'd
And sworne vnto the practises of France
To kill vs heere in Hampton. To the which,
This Knight no lesse for bounty bound to Vs
Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworne. But O,
What shall I say to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell,
Ingratefull, sauage, and inhumane Creature?
Thou that didst beare the key of all my counsailes,
That knew'st the very bottome of my soule,
That (almost) might'st haue coyn'd me into Golde,
Would'st thou haue practis'd on me, for thy vse?
May it be possible, that forraigne hyer
Could out of thee extract one sparke of euill
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,
That though the truth of it stands off as grosse
As blacke and white, my eye will scarsely see it.
Treason, and murther, euer kept together,
As two yoake diuels sworne to eythers purpose,
Working so grossely in an naturall cause,
That admiration did not hoope at them.
But thou (gainst all proportion) didst bring in Wonder to waite on treason, and on murther:
And whatsoeuer cunning fiend it was
That wrought vpon thee so prepostorously,
Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

And

duels that ſuggeſt by treaſons, thee of High Treaſon, by the name of Thomas

ght of Northumberland.
Our purpoſes, God iuſtly hath diſcouer'd,
en: my fault more then my death,
eſeech your Highneſſe to forgiue,
my body pay the price of it.
For me, the Gold of France did not ſeduce,
I did admit it as a motiue,
t to effect what I intended:
e thanked for preuention,
ſufferance heartily will reioyce,
God, and you, to pardon mee.
Neuer did faithfull ſubiect more reioyce
couery of moſt dangerous Treaſon,

from a damned enterprize:
but not my body, pardon Soueraigne.
God quit you in his mercy: Hear your ſentence
conſpir'd againſt Our Royall perſon,

the Golden Earneſt of Our death:
you would haue ſold your King to ſlaughter,

our perſon, ſeeke we no reuenge,

liuer you. Get you therefore hence, ſerable wretches to your death:
whereof, God of his mercy giue
You patience to indure, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence. Exe.
Now Lords for France: the enterpriſe whereof
Shall be to you as vs, like glorious.
We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,
Since God ſo graciouſly hath brought to light
This dangerous Treaſon, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now,
But euery Rubbe is ſmoothed on our way.
Then forth, deare Countreymen: Let vs deliuer
Our Puiſſance into the hand of God,
Putting it ſtraight in expedition.
Cheerely to Sea, the ſignes of Warre aduance,
No King of England, if not King of France. Flouriſh.

Enter Piſtoll, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Hoſteſſe.

Hoſteſſe. 'Prythee honey ſweet Husband let me bring thee to Staines.

Piſtoll. No: for my manly heart doth erne. Bardolph, be blythe. Nim, rowſe thy vaunting Veines: Boy, briſle thy Courage vp: for Falſtaffe hee is dead, and wee muſt erne therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, whereſomere hee is, eyther in Heauen, or in Hell.

Hoſteſſe. Nay ſure, hee's not in Hell: hee's in Arthurs Boſome, if euer man went to Arthurs Boſome: a made a finer end, and went away and it had beene any Chriſtome Child: a parted eu'n iuſt betweene Twelue and One, eu'n at the turning o'th' Tyde: for after I ſaw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and ſmile vpon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Noſe was as ſharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now Sir Iohn (quoth I?) what man? be a good cheare: ſo a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a ſhould not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himſelfe with any ſuch thoughts yet: ſo a bad me lay more Clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any ſtone: then I felt to his knees, and ſo vp-peer'd, and vpward, and all was as cold as any ſtone.

Nim. They ſay he cryed out of Sack.

Hoſteſſe. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Hoſteſſe. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and ſaid they were Deules Incarnate.

Woman. A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he neuer lik'd.

Boy. A ſaid once, the Deule would haue him about Women.

Hoſteſſe. A did in ſome ſort (indeed) handle Women: but then hee was rumetique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember, a ſaw a Flea ſticke vpon Bardolphs Noſe, and a ſaid it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire: that's all the Riches I got in his ſeruice.

Nim. Shall wee ſhogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Piſt. Come, let's away. My Loue, giue me thy Lippes: Looke to my Chattels, and my Moueables: Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: truſt none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and Hold-faſt is the only Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Caueto be thy Counſailor. Goe, cleare thy Chryſtalls. Yoke-fellowes in Armes, let vs to France, like Horſe-leeches leeches my Boyes, to ſucke, to ſucke, the very blood to ſucke.

Boy. And that's but vnwholeſome food, they ſay.

Piſt. Touch her ſoft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farwell Hoſteſſe.

Nim. I cannot kiſſe, that is the humor of it: but adieu.

Piſt. Let Huſwiferie appeare: keepe cloſe, I thee command.

Hoſteſſe. Farwell: adieu. Exeunt

Flouriſh.

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Dukes of Berry and Britaine.

King. Thus comes the Engliſh with full power vpon vs, And more then carefully it vs concernes, To anſwer Royally in our defences. Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine, Of Brabant and of Orleance, ſhall make forth, And you Prince Dolphin, with all ſwift diſpatch To lyne and new repayre our Townes of Warre With men of courage, and with meanes defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce, As Waters to the ſucking of a Gulfe. It fits vs then to be as prouident, As feare may teach vs, out of late examples Left by the fatall and neglected Engliſh, Vpon our fields.

Dolphin. My moſt redoubted Father, It is moſt meet we arme vs 'gainſt the Foe: For Peace it ſelfe ſhould not ſo dull a Kingdome, (Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in queſtion) But that Defences, Muſters, Preparations, Should be maintain'd, aſſembled, and collected, As were a Warre in expectation. Therefore I ſay, 'tis meet we all goe forth, To view the ſick and feeble parts of France: And let vs doe it with no ſhew of feare, No, with no more, then if we heard that England Were buſied with a Whitſon Morris-dance: For, my good Liege, ſhee is ſo idly King'd, Her Scepter ſo phantaſtically borne, By a vaine giddie ſhallow humorous Youth, That feare attends her not.

Conſt. O peace, Prince Dolphin, You are too much miſtaken in this King: Queſtion your Grace the late Embaſſadors, With what great State he heard their Embaſſie, How well ſupply'd with Noble Councellors, How modeſt in exception; and withall, How terrible in conſtant reſolution: And you ſhall find, his Vanities fore-ſpent, Were but the out-ſide of the Roman Brutus, Couering Diſcretion with a Coat of Folly; As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide thoſe Roots That ſhall firſt ſpring, and be moſt delicate.

Dolphin. Well, 'tis not ſo, my Lord High Conſtable. But though we thinke it ſo, it is no matter: In caſes of defence, 'tis beſt to weigh The Enemie more mightie then he ſeemes, So the proportions of defence are fill'd: Which of a weake and niggardly proiection, Doth like a Miſer ſpoyle his Coat, with ſcanting A little Cloth.

King. Thinke we King Harry ſtrong: And Princes, looke you ſtrongly arme to meet him. The Kindred of him hath beene fleſhe vpon vs: And he is bred out of that bloodie ſtraine, That haunted vs in our familiar Paths: Witneſſe our too much memorable ſhame, When Creſſy Battell fatally was ſtruckes, And all our Princes captiu'd, by the hand Of that black Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales: Whiles that his Mountaine Sire, on Mountaine ſtanding Vp in the Ayre, crow n'd with the Golden Sunne, Saw his Heroicall Seed, and ſmil'd to ſee him Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers Had twentie yeeres been made. This is a Stem Of that Victorious Stock: and let vs feare The Native mightineſſe and fate of him.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Embaſſadors from Harry King of England, Doe craue admittance to your Maieſtie.

King. Weele giue them preſent audience. Goe, and bring them. You ſee this Chaſe is hotly followed, friends.

Dolphin. Turne head, and ſtop purſuit: for coward Dogs Moſt ſpend their mouths, when what they ſeem to threaten Runs farre before them. Good my Soueraigne Take vp the Engliſh ſhort, and let them know Of what a Monarchie you are the Head: Selfe-loue, my Liege, is not ſo vile a ſinne, As ſelfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England?

Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Maieſtie: He wills you in the Name of God Almighty, That you deueſt your ſelfe, and lay apart The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heauen, By Law of Nature, and of Nations, long: To him and to his Heires, namely the Crowne, And all wide-ſtretched Honors, that pertaine By Cuſtome, and the Ordinance of Times, Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know 'Tis no ſiniſter, nor no awk-ward Clayme, Pickt from the worme-holes of long-veniſht dayes, Nor from the duſt of old Oblivion rak'd, He ſends you this moſt memorable Lyne, In euery Branch truly demonſtratiue; Willing you ouer-looke this Pedigree: And when you find him euenly deriu'd From his moſt fam'd, of famous Anceſtors, Edward the third; he bids you then reſigne Your Crowne and Kingdome, indirectly held From him, the Native and true Challenger.

King. Or elſe what followes?

Exe. Bloody conſtraint: for if you hide the Crowne Euen in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Therefore in fierce Tempeſt is he comming, In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a Ioue: That if requiring faile, he will compell. And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord, Deliuer vp the Crowne, and to take mercie On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre Opens his vaſtie Iawes: and on your head Turning the Widdowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes, The dead-mens Blood, the priuy Maidens Groanes, For Husbands, Fathers, and betrothed Louers, That ſhall be ſwallowed in this Controuerſie. This is his Clayme, his Threatning, and my Meſſage: Vnleſſe the Dolphin be in preſence here; To whom expreſſely I bring greeting to.

King. For

r vs, we will conſider of this further:
ſhall you beare our full intent
Brother of England.
or the Dolphin.
ſor him: what to him from England?
ſcorne and defiance, ſleight regard, contempt, ng that may not miſ-become
Sender, doth he prize you at.
my King: and if your Fathers Highneſſe greſſion of all demands at large,
bitter Mock you ſent his Maieſtie;
ou to ſo hot an Anſwer of it,
and Wombie Vaultages of France
your Treſpaſſe, and returne your Mock ccent of his Ordinance.
ay: if my Father render faire returne,
my will: for I deſire
Oddes with England.
,as matching to his Youth and Vanitie,
him with the Paris-Balls.
e'le make your Paris Louer ſhake for it,
Miſtreſſe Court of mightie Europe:
r'd, you'le find a diff'rence, ubiects haue in wonder found,
he promiſe of his greener dayes,
e maſters now: now he weighes Time
: vtmoſt Graine: that you ſhall reade ne Loſſes, if he ſtay in France.
o-morrow ſhall you know our mind at full.
Flourish.
ſpatch vs with all ſpeed, leaſt that our King
himſelfe to queſtion our delay;
oted in this Land already.
ſhalbe ſoone diſpatcht, with faire conditions.
but ſmall breathe, and little pawſe,
matters of this conſequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.

magin'd wing our ſwift Scene flyes,
of no leſſe celeritie then that of Thought.
ot you haue ſeene
ppointed King at Douer Peer,
s Royaltie: and his braue Fleet,
Sea-nymers, the young Phœbus fayning;
our Fancies: and in them behold, ſtempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing;
hrill Whiſtle, which doth order give
confus'd: behold the threaden Sayles,
th'inuiſible and creeping Wind,
uge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea,
e ſoftie Surge. O, doe but thinke
pon the Riuage, and behold
th'inconſtant Billowes dauncing:
nren this Fleet Maieſticall, ke courſe to Harflew. Follow, follow:
our minds to ſtemage of this Nauie,
your England as dead Mid-night, ſtill,
rith Grandſires, Babyes, and old Women,
,or not arm'd to pyth and puiſſance:
he, whoſe Chin is but enriche
With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
Theſe cull'd and choyſe-drawne Cauliers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein ſee a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew.
Suppoſe th'Embaſſador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie,
Some petty and vnprofitable Dukedomes.
The offer likes not: and the nimble Gunner
With Lyntſtock now the diuelliſh Cannon touches,
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.
And downe goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Glouceſter
Alarum: Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more vnto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more;
Or cloſe the Wall vp with our Engliſh dead.
In Peace, there's nothing ſo becomes a man,
As modeſt ſtillneſſe, and humilitie:
But when the blaſt of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the ſinewes, commune vp the blood,
Diſguiſe faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage:
Then lend the Eye a terrible aſpect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Braſſe Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and iutty his confounded Baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſteful Ocean.
Now ſet the Teeth, and ſtretch the Noſthrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend vp every Spirit
To his full height. On, on, you Nobliſh Engliſh,
Whoſe blood is fet from Fathers of Warre-proofe:
Fathers, that like ſo many Alexanders,
Haue in theſe parts from Morne till Euen fought,
And ſheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Diſhonour not your Mothers: now atteſt,
That thoſe whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Copy now to me of groſſer blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whoſe Lyms were made in England; ſhew vs here
The mettell of your Paſture: let vs ſweare,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you ſo meane and baſe,
That hath not Noble luſter in your eyes.
I ſee you ſtand like Grey-hounds in the ſlips,
Straying vpon the Start. The Game's a-foot:
Follow your Spirit; and vpon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Piſtoll, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach.

Nim. 'Pray thee Corporall ſtay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I haue not a Caſe of Liues: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song of it.

Piſt. The plaine-Song is moſt iuſt: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vaſſals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-houſe in London, I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and ſafetie.

Piſt. And

Pist. And I: If wishes would prevayle with me, my purpose should not fayle with me; but thither would I high.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Flewellen.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; avaunt you Cullions.

Pist. Be mercifull great Duke to men of Mould: abate thy Rage, abate thy manly Rage; abate thy Rage, great Duke Good Bawcock bate thy Rage: vse lenitie sweet Chuck.

Nim. These be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors. Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observ'd these three Swashers: I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serue me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three such Antiques dot not amount to a man: for Bardolph, hee is white-liuer'd, and red-fac'd; by the meanes whereof, a faces it out, but fights not: for Pistoll, hee hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breakes Words, and keepes whole Weapons: for Nim, hee hath beard, that men of few Words are the best men, and therefore hee scornes to say his Prayers, lest a should be thought a Coward: but his few bad Words are matcht with as few good Deeds; for a never broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was against a Post, when he was drunke. They will steale any thing, and call it Purchase. Bardolph stole a Lute-case, bore it twelue Leagues, and sold it for three halfepence. Nim and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in filching: and in Callice they stole a fire-shouell. I knew by that peece of Seruice, the men would carry Coales. They would haue me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their Gloues or their Hand-kerchers: which makes much against my Manhood, if I should take from anothers Pocket, to put into mine; for it is plaine pocketing vp of Wrongs. I must leaue them, and seeke some better Seruice: their Villany goes against my weake stomacke, and therefore I must cast it vp. Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Captaine Flewellen, you must come presently to the Mynes; the Duke of Gloucester would speake with you.

Flu To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not so good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes is not according to the disciplines of the Warre; the concauities of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'athuerfarie, you may discusse vnto the Duke, looke you, is dig himselfe foure yard vnder the Countermines: by Cheshu, I thinke a will plowe vp all, if there is not better directions.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the Order of the Siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irish man, a very valiant Gentleman yfaith.

Welsh. It is Captaine Makmurrice, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welsh. By Cheshu he is an Asse, as in the World, I will verifie as much in his Beard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the Warres, looke you, of the Roman disciplines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Makmurrice, and Captaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scots Captaine, Captaine Iamy, with him.

Welsh Captaine Iamy is a marvellous falorous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in th'aunchiant Warres, vpon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu he will maintaine his Argument as well as any Militarie man in the World, in the disciplines of the Pristine Warres of the Romans.

Scot. I say gudday, Captaine Fluellen.

Welsh. Godden to your Worship, good Captaine Iames.

Gower. How now Captaine Makmurrice, have you quit the Mynes: haue the Pioners giuen o're.

Irish. By Christ Law tish ill done: the Worke ish giue ouer, the Trompet sound the Retreat. By my Hand I sweare, and my fathers Soule, the Worke ish ill done: it ish giue ouer: I would haue blowed vp the Towne, so Christ saue me law, in an houre. O tish ill done, tish ill done: by my Hand tish ill done.

Welsh. Captaine Makmurrice, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, looke you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the Warre, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication: partly to satisfie my Opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, looke you, of my Mind: as touching the direction of the Militarie discipline, that is the Point.

Scot. It shall be vary gud, gud feith, gud Captens bath, and I shall quit you with gud leue, as I may pick occasion that shall I marry.

Irish. It is no time to discourse, so Christ saue me: the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukes: it is no time to discourse, the Town is beseech'd: and the Trumpet call vs to the breech, and we talke, and be Christ do nothing, tis shame for vs all: so God sa'me tis shame to stand still, it is shame by my hand: and there is Throats to be cut, and Works to be done, and there ish nothing done, so Christ sa'me law.

Scot. By the Mes, ere theise eyes of mine take themselues to slomber, ayle de gud seruice, or Ile ligge i'th' grund for it: ay, or goe to death: and Ile pay it as valorously as I may, that sal I suerly do, that is the breff and the long: mary, I wad full faine heard some question tween you tway.

Welsh. Captaine Makmurrice, I thinke, looke you, vnder your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Irish. Of my Nation? What ish my Nation? Ish a Villaine, and a Basterd, and a Knaue, and a Rascall. What ish my Nation? Who talkes of my Nation?

Welsh. Looke you, if you take the matter otherwise then is meant, Captaine Makmurrice, peraduenture I shall thinke you doe not vse me with that affabilitie, as discretion you ought to vse me looke you, being as good a man as you selfe, both in the disciplines of Warre, and in the deriuation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Irish. I do not know you so good a man as my self: so Christ saue me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Scot. A, that's a foule fault. A Parle.

Gower. The Towne sounds a Parley.

Welsh. Captaine Makmurrice, when there is more better opportunitie to be required, looke you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of Warre: and there is an end. Exit.

Enter the King and all his Traine before the Gates.

King. How yet resolues the Gouernour of the Towne? This is the latest Parle we will admit:

Therc-

o our beſt mercy giue your ſelues,
en prowd of deſtruction,

aire Virgins, and your flowring Infants.

bootleſſe ſpend our vaine Command aged Souldiers in their ſpoyle, epts to the Leviathan, to come aſhore.
you men of Harflew,
f your Towne and of your People,
my Souldiers are in my Command,
ſhe coole and temperate Wind of Grace
e the filthy and contagious Clouds Murther, Spoyle and Villany.
y in a moment locke to ſee
nd bloody Souldier, with ſoule hand Locks of your ſhrill-ſhrieking Daughters:

off reuerend Heads daſht to the Walls:
Infants ſpitted vpon Pykes,
mad Mothers, with their howles conſus'd,
the Clouds; as did the Wiues of Iewry, bloody-hunting ſlaughter-men.
ou? Will you yeeld, and this auoyd?
n defence, be thus deſtroy'd.

Enter Gouernour.

Our expectation hath this day an end:
m, whom of Succours we entreated,
, that his Powers are yet not ready,
great a Siege: Therefore great King,
ur Towne and Liues to thy ſoft Mercy:
ſters, diſpoſe of vs and ours,
onger are defenſible.
pen your Gates: Come Vnckle Exeter,
nd enter Harflew; there remaine,
e it ſtrongly 'gainſt the French:
to them all for vs, deare Vnckle.
r comming on, and Sickneſſe growing ouldiers, we will retyre to Calis.
Harflew will we be your Gueſt,
e for the March are we addreſt.

Flouriſh, and enter the Towne.

Exit.

Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Conſtable of France, and others.

King. 'Tis certaine he hath paſt the Riuer Some.
Conſt. And if he be not fought withall, my Lord,
Let vs not liue in France: let vs quit all,
And giue our Vineyards to a barbarous People.
Dolph. O Dieu viuant; Shall a few Sprayes of vs,
The emptying of our Fathers Luxurie,
Our Syens, put in wilde and ſauage Stock,
Spirt vp ſo ſuddenly into the Clouds,
And ouer looke their Grafters?
Bru. Normans, but baſtard Normans, Norman baſtards:
Mort de ma vie, if they march along
Vnfought withall, but I will ſell my Dukedome,

To

To buy a ſlobbry and a durtie Farme
In that nooke-ſhotten Ile of Albion.

Conſt. Dieu de Battailes, where haue they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggy, raw, and dull?
On whom, as in deſpight, the Sunne lookes pale,
Killing their Fruit with frownes. Can ſodden Water,
A Drench for ſur-reyn'd Iades, their Barly broth,
Decoct their cold blood to ſuch valiant heat?
And ſhall our quick blood, ſpirited with Wine,
Seeme froſtie? O, for honor of our Land,
Let vs not hang like roping Icyckles
Vpon our Houſes Thatch, whiles a more froſtie People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields:
Poore we call them, in their Native Lords.

Dolphin. By Faith and Honor,
Our Madames mock at vs, and plainely ſay,
Our Mettell is bred out, and they will giue
Their bodyes to the Luſt of Engliſh Youth,
To new-ſtore France with Baſtard Warriors.

Bri. They bid vs to the Engliſh Dancing-Schooles,
And teach Lauolta's high, and ſwift Carranto's,
Saying, our Grace is onely in our Heeles,
And that we are moſt lofte Run-awayes.

King Where is Mountioy the Herald? ſpeed him hence,
Let him greet England with our ſharpe defiance
Vp Princes, and with ſpirit of Honor edged,
More ſharper then your Swords, high to the field:
Charles Delabreth, High Conſtable of France,
You Dukes of Orleance, Burbon, and of Berry,
Alanſon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgonie,
Iaques Chattillion, Rambures, Vandemont,
Beaumont, Grand Pree, Roſſe, and Faulconbridge,
Loys, Leſtrale, Bouciquall, and Charaloyes,
High Dukes, great Princes, Barons, Lords, and Kings;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great ſhames:
Barre Harry England, that ſweepes through our Land
With Penons painted in the blood of Harflew:
Ruſh on his Hoaſt, as doth the melted Snow
Vpon the Valleyes, whoſe low Vaſſall Seat,
The Alpes doth ſpit, and void his rhewme vpon:
Goe downe vpon him, you haue Power enough,
And in a Captiue Chariot, into Roan
Bring him our Priſoner.

Conſt. This becomes the Great.
Sorry am I his numbers are ſo few,
His Souldiers ſick, and ſamiſht in their March:
For I am ſure, when he ſhall ſee our Army,
He'le drop his heart into the ſinck of feare,
And for atchieuement, offer vs his Ranſome.

King. Therefore Lord Conſtable, haſt on Montioy,
And let him ſay to England, that we ſend,
To know what willing Ranſome he will giue.
Prince Dolphin, you ſhall ſtay with vs in Roan.

Dolph. Not ſo, I doe beſeech your Maieſtie.

King Be patient, for you ſhall remaine with vs.
Now forth Lord Conſtable, and Princes all,
And quickly bring vs word of Englands fall. Exeunt.

Enter Captaines, Engliſh and Welch, Gower and Fluellen.

Gower. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?

Flu. I aſſure you, there is very excellent Seruices committed at the Bridge.

Gower. Is the Duke of Exeter ſafe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon, and a man that I loue and honour with my ſoule and my heart, and my dutie, and my loue, and my liuing, and my vttermoſt power. He is not, God be prayſed and bleſſed, any hurt in the World, but keepes the Bridge moſt valiantly, with excellent diſcipline. There is an ancient Lieutenant there at the Pridge, I thinke in my very conſcience hee is as valiant a man as Marke Antony, and hee is a man of no eſtimation in the World, but I did ſee him doe as gallant ſeruice.

Gower. What doe you call him?

Flu. Hee is call'd Aunchient Pyſtell.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pyſtell.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pyſt. Captaine, I thee beſeech to doe me fauours, the Duke of Exeter doth loue thee well.

Flu. I, I praiſe God, and I haue merited ſome loue at his hands.

Pyſt Bardolph, a Souldier firme and ſound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell Fate, and giddie Fortunes furious fickle Wheele, that Goddeſſe blind, that ſtands vpon the rolling reſtleſſe Stone.

Flu. By your patience, aunchient Pyſtell: Fortune is painted blinde, with a Muffler afore his eyes, to ſignifie to you, that Fortune is blinde; and ſhee is painted alſo with a Wheele, to ſignifie to you, which is the Morall of it, that ſhee is turning and inconſtant, and mutabilitie, and variation: and her foot, looke you, is fixed vpon a Spheriall Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles: in good truth, the Poet makes a moſt excellent diſcription of it: Fortune is an excellent Morall.

Pyſt. Fortune is Bardolphs foe, and frownes on him: for he hath ſtolne a Pax, and hanged muſt a bee: a damned death: let Gallowes gape for Dogge, let Man goe free, and let not Hempe his Wind-pipe ſuffocate: but Exeter hath giuen the doome of death, for Pax of little price. Therefore goe ſpeake, the Duke will heare thy voyce; and let not Bardolphs vitall thred bee cut with edge of Penny-Cord, and vile reproach. Speake Captaine for his Life, and I will thee requite.

Flu Aunchient Pyſtell, I doe partly vnderſtand your meaning.

Pyſt. Why then reioyce therefore.

Flu. Certainly Aunchient, it is not a thing to reioyce at: for if, looke you, he were my Brother, I would deſire the Duke to vſe his good pleaſure, and put him to execution; for diſcipline ought to be vſed.

Pyſt Dye, and be damn'd, and Fygo for thy friendſhip.

Flu. It is well.

Pyſt The Figge of Spaine. Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gower. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit Raſcall, I remember him now: a Bawd, a Cut-purſe.

Flu. Ile aſſure you, a vttered as praue words at the Pridge, as you ſhall ſee in a Summers day: but it is very well: what he ha's ſpoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is ſeruе.

Gower. Why 'tis a Gull, a Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himſelfe at his returne into London, vnder the forme of a Souldier: and ſuch fellowes are perfit in the Great Commanders Names, and they will learne you by rote where Seruices were done; at ſuch and ſuch a Sconce, at ſuch a Breach, at ſuch a Conuoy: who came off bravely, who was ſhot, who diſgrac'd, what termes the Enemy ſtood on: and this they conne perfitly in the phraſe of Warre; which they trick

d Oathes: and what a Beard of the Ge-horride Sute of the Campe, will doe a-ttles, and Ale-waſht Wits, is wonder-on: but you muſt learne to know ſuch that hee would gladly make ſhew to if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell eſarke you, the King is comming, and I him from the Pridge.

Colours. Enter the King and his poore Soldiers.

Mount. Mountioy.
King. Thou doo'ſt thy Office fairely. Turne thee back.
And tell thy King, I doe not ſeeke him now,
But could be willing to march on to Callice,
Without impeachment: for to ſay the ſooth,
Though 'tis no wiſdome to confeſſe ſo much
Vnto an enemie of Craft and Vantage,
My people are with ſickneſſe much enfeebled,
My numbers leſſen'd: and thoſe few I haue,
Almoſt no better then ſo many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald,
I thought, vpon one payre of Engliſh Legges
Did march three Frenchmen. Yet forgiue me God,
That I doe bragge thus; this your ayre of France
Hath blowne that vice in me. I muſt repent:
Goe therefore tell thy Maſter, heere I am;
My Ranſome, is this frayle and worthleſſe Trunke;
My Army, but a weake and ſickly Guard:
Yet God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himſelfe, and ſuch another Neighbor
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour Mountioy.
Goe bid thy Maſter well aduiſe himſelfe.
If we may paſſe, we will: if we be hindred,
We ſhall your tawnie ground with your red blood
Diſcolour: and ſo Mountioy, fare you well.
The ſumme of all our Anſwer is but this:
We would not ſeeke a Battaile as we are,
Nor as we are, we ſay we will not ſhun it:
So tell your Maſter.
Mount. I ſhall deliuer ſo: Thankes to your Highneſſe.
Glouc. I hope they will not come vpon vs now.
King. We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs:
March to the Bridge, it now drawes toward night,
Beyond the Riuer wee'le encampe our ſelues,
And on to morrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

Enter the Conſtable of France, the Lord Rambures, Orleance, Dolphin, with others.

Conſt. Tut, I haue the beſt Armour of the World: would it were day.
Orleance. You haue an excellent Armour: but let my Horſe haue his due.
Conſt. It is the beſt Horſe of Europe.
Orleance. Will it neuer be Morning?
Dolph. My Lord of Orleance, and my Lord High Conſtable, you talke of Horſe and Armour?
Orleance. You are as well prouided of both, as any Prince in the World.
Dolph. What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horſe with any that treades but on foure poſtures: ch'ha: he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: le Cheual volante, the Pegaſus, chez les narines de feu. When I beſtryde him, I ſoare, I am a Hawke: he trots the ayre: the Earth ſings, when he touches it: the baſeſt horne of his hooſe, is more Muſicall then the Pipe of Hermes.
Orleance. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.
Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beaſt for Perſeus: hee is pure Ayre and Fire; and the dull Elements of Earth and Water neuer appeare in him, but only in patient ſtilneſſe while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horſe, and all other Iades you may call Beaſts.

Conſt. I'm-

Conſt. Indeed my Lord, it is a moſt abſolute and excellent Horſe.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfreyes, his Neigh is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage.

Orleance. No more Couſin.

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the riſing of the Larke to the lodging of the Lambe, varie deſerued prayſe on my Palfray: it is a Theame as fluent as the Sea: Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horſe is argument for them all: 'tis a ſubiect for a Soueraigne to reaſon on, and for a Soueraignes Soueraigne to ride on: And for the World, familiar to vs, and vnknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him, I once writ a Sonnet in his prayſe, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleance. I haue heard a Sonnet begin ſo to ones Miſtreſſe.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courſer, for my Horſe is my Miſtreſſe.

Orleance. Your Miſtreſſe beares well.

Dolph. Me well, which is the preſcript prayſe and perfection of a good and particular Miſtreſſe.

Conſt. Nay, for me thought yeſterday your Miſtreſſe ſhrewdly ſhooke your back.

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Conſt. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike ſhe was old and gentle, and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Hoſe off, and in your ſtrait Stroſſers.

Conſt. You haue good iudgement in Horſemanſhip.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride ſo, and ride not warily, fall into foule Bogges: I had rather haue my Horſe to my Miſtreſſe.

Conſt. I had as liue haue my Miſtreſſe a Iade.

Dolph. I tell thee Conſtable, my Miſtreſſe weares his owne hayre.

Conſt. I could make as true a boaſt as that, if I had a Sow to my Miſtreſſe.

Dolph. Le chien eſt retourne a ſon propre vomiſſement eſt la treye lauee au bourbier: thou mak'ſt vſe of any thing.

Conſt. Yet doe I not vſe my Horſe for my Miſtreſſe, or any ſuch Prouerbe, ſo little kin to the purpoſe.

Ramb. My Lord Conſtable, the Armour that I ſaw in your Tent to night, are thoſe Starres or Sunnes vpon it?

Conſt. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope.

Conſt. And yet my Sky ſhall not want.

Dolph. That may be, for you beare a many ſuperfluouſly, and 'twere more honor ſome were away.

Conſt. Eu'n as your Horſe beares your prayſes, who would trot as well, were ſome of your braggs diſmounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his deſert. Will it neuer be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way ſhall be paued with Engliſh Faces.

Conſt. I will not ſay ſo, for feare I ſhould be fac't out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be about the eares of the Engliſh.

Ramb. Who will goe to Hazard with me for twentie Priſoners?

Conſt. You muſt firſt goe your ſelfe to hazard, ere you haue them.

Dolph. 'Tis Mid-night, Ile goe arme my ſelfe. Exit.

Orleance. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to eate the Engliſh.

Conſt. I thinke he will eate all he kills.

Orleance. By the white Hand of my Lady, he's a gallant Prince.

Conſt. Sweare by her Foot, that ſhe may tread out the Oath.

Orleance. He is ſimply the moſt actiue Gentleman of France.

Conſt. Doing is actiuitie, and he will ſtill be doing.

Orleance. He never did harme, that I heard of.

Conſt. Nor will doe none to morrow: hee will keepe that good name ſtill.

Orleance. I know him to be valiant.

Conſt. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you.

Orleance. What's hee?

Conſt. Marry hee told me ſo himſelfe, and hee ſayd he car'd not who knew it.

Orleance. Hee needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Conſt. By my faith Sir, but it is: never any body ſaw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orleance. Ill will never ſayd well.

Conſt. I will cap that Prouerbe with, There is flattery in friendſhip.

Orleance. And I will take vp that with, Giue the Deuill his due.

Conſt. Well plac't: there ſtands your friend for the Deuill: haue at the very eye of that Prouerbe with, A Pox of the Deuill.

Orleance. You are the better at Prouerbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is ſoone ſhot.

Conſt. You haue ſhot ouer.

Orleance. 'Tis not the firſt time you were ouer-ſhot.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord high Conſtable, the Engliſh lye within fifteene hundred paces of your Tents.

Conſt. Who hath meaſur'd the ground?

Meſſ. The Lord Grandpree.

Conſt. A valiant and moſt expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England: hee longs not for the Dawning, as wee doe.

Orleance What a wretched and peeuiſh fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers ſo farre out of his knowledge.

Conſt. If the Engliſh had any apprehenſion, they would runne away.

Orleance. That they lack: for if their heads had any intellectuall Armour, they could never weare ſuch heauie Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Iland of England breedes very valiant Creatures; their Maſtiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleance. Fooliſh Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Ruſſian Beare, and haue their heads crusht like rotten Apples: you may as well ſay, that's a valiant Flea, that dare eate his breakefaſt on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Conſt. Iuſt, iuſt: and the men doe ſympathize with the Maſtiffes, in robuſtious and rough comming on, leauing their Wits with their Wiues: and then giue them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele, they will eate like Wolues, and fight like Deuils.

Orleance. I,

I, but these English are shrowdly out of n shall we finde to morrow, they haue only

:ke, and none to fight. Now is it time to hall we about it?
is now two a Clock. but let me see, by ten e each a hundred English men. Exeunt.

Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
The greater therefore should our Courage be.
God morrow Brother Bedford: God Almightie,
There is some soule of goodnesse in things euill,
Would men obseruingly distill it out.
For our bad Neighbour makes vs early stirrers,
Which is both healthfull, and good husbandry
Besides, they are our outward Consciences,
And Preachers to vs all; admonishing,
That we should dresse vs fairely for our end.
Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed,
And make a Morall of the Diuell himselfe.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft Pillow for that good white Head,
Were better then a churlish turfe of France.
Erping. Not so my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lye I like a King.
King. 'Tis good for men to loue their present pillows,
Vpon example, so the Spirit is eased:
And when the Mind is quickned, out of doubt
The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake vp their drowsie Graue and newly moue
With casted slough, and fresh legeritie.
Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas: Brothers both,
Commend me to the Princes in our Campe;
Doe my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my Pauilion.
Gloster. We shall, my Liege.
Erping. Shall I attend your Grace?
King. No, my good Knight:
Goe with my Brothers to my Lords of England:
I and my Bosome must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.
Erping. The Lord in Heauen blesse thee, Noble Harry.
Exeunt.
King. God a mercy old Heart, thou speak'st cheerefully.

Enter Pistoll.

Pist. Che vous la?
King. A friend.
Pist. Discusse vnto me, art thou Officer, or art thou base, common, and popular?
King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.
Pist. Trayl'st thou the puissant Pyke?
King. Euen so. what are you?
Pist. As good a Gentleman as the Emperor.
King. Then you are a better then the King.
Pist. The King's a Bawcock, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Imp of Fame, of Parents good, of Fist most valiant: I kisse his dirtie shooe, and from heartstring I loue the louely Bully. What is thy Name?
King. Harry le Roy.
Pist. Le Roy? a Cornish Name: art thou of Cornish Crew?
King. No, I am a Welchman.
Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?
King. Yes.
Pist. Tell him Ile knock his Leeke about his Pate vpon S. Dauies day.
King. Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, least he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

King. And his Kinſman too.

Pist. The Fyge for thee then.

King. I thanke you: God be with you.

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd. Exit.

King. It ſorts well with your fierceneſſe.

Manet King.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen.

Flu. So, in the Name of Ieſu Chriſt, ſpeake fewer: it is the greateſt admiration in the vniverſall World, when the true and auncient Prerogatiues and Lawes of the Warres is not kept: if you would take the paines but to examine the Warres of Pompey the Great, you ſhall finde, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble babble in Pompeyes Campe: I warrant you, you ſhall finde the Ceremonies of the Warres, and the Cares of it, and the Formes of it, and the Sobrietie of it, and the Modeſtie of it, to be otherwiſe.

Gower. Why the Enemie is loud, you heare him all Night.

Flu. If the Enemie is an Aſſe and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe; is it meet, thinke you, that wee ſhould alſo, looke you, be an Aſſe and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe, in your owne conſcience now?

Gow. I will ſpeake lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beſeech you, that you will. Exit.

King. Though it appeare a little out of faſhion,
There is much care and valour in this Welchman.

Enter three Souldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother Iohn Bates, is not that the Morning which breakes yonder?

Bates. I thinke it be: but wee haue no great cauſe to deſire the approach of day.

Williams. Wee ſee yonder the beginning of the day, but I thinke wee ſhall neuer ſee the end of it. Who goes there?

King. A Friend.

Williams. Vnder what Captaine ſerue you?

King. Vnder Sir Iohn Erpingham.

Williams. A good old Commander, and a moſt kinde Gentleman: I pray you, what thinkes he of our eſtate?

King. Euen as men wracke vpon a Sand, that looke to be waſht off the next Tyde.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the King?

King. No: nor it is not meet he ſhould: for though I ſpeake it to you, I thinke the King is but a man, as I am: the Violet ſmells to him, as it doth to me; the Element ſhewes to him, as it doth to me; all his Senſes haue but humane Conditions: his Ceremonies layd by, in his Nakedneſſe he appeares but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted then ours, yet when they ſtoupe, they ſtoupe with the like wing: therefore, when he ſees reaſon of feares, as we doe; his feares, out of doubt, be of the ſame reliſh as ours are: yet in reaſon, no man ſhould poſſeſſe him with any appearance of feare; leſt hee, by ſhewing it, ſhould dis-hearten his Army.

Bates. He may ſhew what outward courage he will: but I beleeue, as cold a Night as 'tis, hee could wiſh himſelfe in Thames vp to the Neck; and ſo I would he were, and I by him, at all aduentures, ſo we were quit here.

King. By my troth, I will ſpeake my conſcience of the King: I thinke hee would not wiſh himſelfe any where, but where hee is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; ſo ſhould he be ſure to be ranſomed, and a many poore mens liues ſaued.

King. I dare ſay, you loue him not ſo ill, to wiſh him here alone: howſoeuer you ſpeake this to feele other mens minds, me thinks I could not dye any where ſo contented, as in the Kings company; his Cauſe being iuſt, and his Quarrell honorable.

Williams. That's more then we know.

Bates. I, or more then wee ſhould ſeeke after; for wee know enough, if wee know wee are the Kings Subiects: if his Cauſe be wrong, our obedience to the King wipes the Creame of it out of vs.

Williams. But if the Cauſe be not good, the King himſelfe hath a heauie Reckoning to make, when all thoſe Legges, and Armes, and Heads, chopt off in a Battaile, ſhall ioyne together at the latter day, and cry all, We dyed at ſuch a place, ſome ſweating, ſome crying for a Surgean; ſome vpon their Wiues, left poore behind them; ſome vpon the Debts they owe, ſome vpon their Children rawly left: I am afear'd, there are few dye well, that dye in a Battaile: for how can they charitably diſpoſe of any thing, when Blood is their argument? Now, if theſe men doe not dye well, it will be a black matter for the King, that led them to it; who to diſobey, were againſt all proportion of ſubiection.

King. So, if a Sonne that is by his Father ſent about Merchandize, doe ſinfully miſcarry vpon the Sea, the imputation of his wickedneſſe, by your rule, ſhould be impoſed vpon his Father that ſent him: or if a Seruant, vnder his Maſters command, tranſporting a ſumme of Money, be aſſayled by Robbers, and dye in many irreconciled Iniquities; you may call the buſineſſe of the Maſter the author of the Seruants damnation: but this is not ſo: The King is not bound to anſwer the particular endings of his Souldiers, the Father of his Sonne, nor the Maſter of his Seruant; for they purpoſe not their death, when they purpoſe their ſeruices. Beſides, there is no King, be his Cauſe neuer ſo ſpotleſſe, if it come to the arbitrement of Swords, can try it out with all vnſpotted Souldiers: ſome (peraduenture) haue on them the guilt of premeditated and contriued Murther; ſome, of beguiling Virgins with the broken Seales of Periurie; ſome, making the Warres their Bulwarke, that haue before gored the gentle Boſome of Peace with Pillage and Robberie. Now, if theſe men haue defeated the Law, and outrunne Natiue puniſhment; though they can outſtrip men, they haue no wings to flye from God. Warre is his Beadle, Warre is his Vengeance: ſo that here men are puniſht, for before breach of the Kings Lawes in now the Kings Quarrell: where they ſeeme the death they haue borne life away; and where they would be ſafe, they periſh. Then if they dye vnprouided, no more is the King guiltie of their damnation, then he was before guiltie of thoſe Impieties, for the which they are now viſited. Euery Subiects Duty is the Kings, but euery Subiects Soule is his owne. Therefore ſhould euery Souldier in the Warres doe as euery ſicke man in his Bed, waſh euery Moth out of his Conſcience: and dying ſo, Death is to him aduantage; or not dying, the time was bleſſedly loſt, wherein ſuch preparation was gayned: and in him that eſcapes, it were not ſinne to thinke, that making God ſo free an offer, he let him outliue that day, to ſee his Greatneſſe, and to teach others how they ſhould prepare.

And Tis

Will. 'Tis certaine, every man that dyes ill, the ill vpon his owne head, the King is not to answer it.

Bates. I doe not desire hee should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King. I my selfe heard the King say he would not be ransom'd.

Will. I, hee said so, to make vs fight chearefully: but when our throats are cut, hee may be ransom'd, and wee ne're the wiser.

King. If I liue to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous shot out of an Elder Gunne, that a poore and a priuate displeasure can doe against a Monarch: you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yce, with fanning in his face with a Peacocks feather: You'le never trust his word after; come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King. Your reproofe is something too round, I should be angry with you, if the time were conuenient.

Will. Let it bee a Quarrell betweene vs, if you liue.

King. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee againe?

King. Giue me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my Bonnet: Then if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell.

Will. Heere's my Gloue: Giue mee another of thine.

King. There.

Will. This will I also weare in my Cap: if ever thou come to me, and say, after to morrow, This is my Gloue, by this Hand I will take thee a box on the eare.

King. If ever I liue to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hang'd.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings company.

Will. Keepe thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends you English fooles, be friends, wee haue French Quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon. Exit Souldiers.

King. Indeede the French may lay twentie French Crownes to one, they will beat vs, for they beare them on their shoulders: but it is no English Treason to cut French Crownes, and to morrow the King himselfe will be a Clipper.

Vpon the King, let vs our Liues, our Soules,
Our Debts, our carefull Wiues,
Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King:
We must beare all.
O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatnesse,
Subiect to the breath of every foole, whose sence
No more can feele, but his owne wringing.
What infinite hearts-ease must Kings neglect,
That priuate men enioy?
And what haue Kings, that Priuates haue not too,
Saue Ceremonie, saue generall Ceremonie?
And what art thou, thou Idoll Ceremonie?
What kind of God art thou? that suffer'st more
Of mortall griefes, then doe thy worshippers.
What are thy Rents? what are thy Commings in?
O Ceremonie, shew me but thy worth.
What? is thy Soule of Odoration?
Art thou ought else but Place, Degree, and Forme,
Creating awe and feare in other men?
Wherein thou art lesse happy, being fear'd,
Then they in fearing.
What drink'st thou oft, in stead of Homage sweet,
But poyson'd flatterie? O, be sick, great Greatnesse,
And bid thy Ceremonie giue thee cure.
Thinks thou the fierie Feuer will goe out
With Titles blowne from Adulation?
Will it giue place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggers knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud Dreame,
That play'st so subtilly with a Kings Repose
I am a King that find thee: and I know,
'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball,
The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall,
The enter-tissued Robe of Gold and Pearle,
The farsed Title running 'fore the King,
The Throne he sits on: nor the Tyde of Pompe,
That beates vpon the high shore of this World:
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous Ceremonie;
Not all these, lay'd in Bed Maiesticall,
Can sleepe so soundly, as the wretched Slaue:
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressefull bread,
Neuer sees horrible Night, the Child of Hell:
But like a Lacquey, from the Rise to Set,
Sweates in the eye of Phebus; and all Night
Sleepes in Elizium: next day after dawne,
Doth rise and helpe Hiperio to his Horse,
And followes so the euer-running yeere
With profitable labour to his Graue:
And but for Ceremonie, such a Wretch,
Winding vp Dayes with toyle, and Nights with sleepe,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a King.
The Slaue, a Member of the Countreyes peace,
Enioyes it; but in grosse braine little wots,
What watch the King keepes, to maintaine the peace;
Whose houres, the Peasant best aduantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My Lord, your Nobles iealous of your absence,
Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together
At my Tent: Ile be before thee.

Erp. I shall doo't, my Lord. Exit.

King. O God of Battailes, steele my Souldiers hearts,
Possesse them not with feare: Take from them now
The sence of reckning of th'opposed numbers:
Pluck their hearts from them. Not to day, O Lord,
O not to day, thinke not vpon the fault
My Father made, in compassing the Crowne.
I Richards body haue interred new,
And on it haue bestowed more contrite teares,
Then from it issued forced drops of blood.
Fiue hundred poore I haue in yeerely pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold vp
Toward Heauen, to pardon blood:
And I haue built two Chauntries,
Where the sad and solemne Priests sing still
For Richards Soule. More will I doe:
Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth;
Since that my Penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glou. My Liege.

King. My Brother Gloucesters voyce? I:
I know thy errand, I will goe with thee.
The day, my friend, and all things stay for me.
Exeunt.

Enter the Dolphin, Orleance, Rambures, and Beaumont.

Orleance. The Sunne doth gild our Armour vp, my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Cheual: My Horſe, Verlot Lacquay: Ha,

Orleance. Oh braue Spirit.

Dolph. Via les eaues & terre.

Orleance. Rien puis le air & feu.

Dolph. Cein, Couſin Orleance. Enter Conſtable.

Now my Lord Conſtable?

Conſt. Hearke how our Steedes, for preſent Seruice neigh.

Dolph. Mount them, and make incision in their Hides, That their hot blood may ſpin in Engliſh eyes, And doubt them with ſuperfluous courage: ha.

Ram. What, will you haue them weep our Horſes blood? How ſhall we then behold their naturall teares?

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſeng. The Engliſh are embattail'd, you French Peeres.

Conſt. To Horſe you gallant Princes, ſtraight to Horſe. Doe but behold yond poore and ſtarued Band, And your faire ſhew ſhall ſuck away their Soules, Leauing them but the ſhales and huskes of men. There is not worke enough for all our hands, Scarce blood enough in all their ſickly Veines, To giue each naked Curtleax a ſtayne, That our French Gallants ſhall to day draw out, And ſheath for lack of ſport. Let vs but blow on them, The vapour of our Valour will o're-turne them 'Tis poſitiue againſt all exceptions, Lords, That our ſuperfluous Lacquies, and our Peſants, Who in vnneceſſarie action ſwarme About our Squares of Battaile, were enow To purge this field of ſuch a hilding Foe: Though we vpon this Mountaines Baſis by, Tooke ſtand for idle ſpeculation: But that our Honours muſt not. What's to ſay? A very little little let vs doe, And all is done: then let the Trumpets ſound The Tucket Sonuance, and the Note to mount: For our approach ſhall ſo much dare the field, That England ſhall couch downe in feare, and yeeld.

Enter Grandpree.

Grandpree. Why do you ſtay ſo long, my Lords of France? Yond Iland Carrions, deſperate of their bones, Ill-fauoredly become the Morning field: Their ragged Curtaines poorely are let looſe, And our Ayre ſhakes them paſſing ſcornefully. Bigge Mars ſeemes banqu'rout in their begger'd Hoaſt, And faintly through a ruſtie Beuer peepes. The Horſemen ſit like fixed Candleſticks, With Torch-ſtaues in their hand: and their poore Iades Lob downe their heads, dropping the hides and hips: The gummie downe roping from their pale-dead eyes, And in their pale dull mouthes the Iymold Bitt Lyes foule with chaw'd-graſſe, ſtill and motionleſſe. And their executors, the knauiſh Crowes, Flye o're them all, impatient for their howre. Deſcription cannot ſute it ſelfe in words, To demonſtrate the Life of ſuch a Battaile, In life ſo liueleſſe, as it ſhewes it ſelfe.

Conſt. They haue ſaid their prayers, And they ſtay for death.

Dolph. Shall we go ſend them Dinners, and freſh Suites, And giue their faſting Horſes Prouender And after fight with them?

Conſt. I ſtay but for my Guard: on To the field. I will the Banner from a Trumpet take. And vſe it for my haſte. Come, come away, The Sunne is high, and we out-weare the day. Exeunt.

Enter Glouceſter, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Hoaſt: Salisbury, and Weſtmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf. The King himſelfe is rode to view their Battaile.

Weſt. Of fighting men they haue full threeſcore thouſand.

Exe. There's fiue to one, beſides they all are freſh.

Salisb. Gods Arme ſtrike with vs, 'tis a fearefull oddes. God buy' you Princes all; Ile to my Charge: If we no more meet, till we meet in Heauen; Then ioyfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford, My deare Lord Glouceſter, and my good Lord Exeter. And my kind Kinſman, Warriors all, adieu.

Bedf. Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee And yet I doe thee wrong, to mind thee of it, For thou art fram'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farwell kind Lord: fight valiantly to day.

Bedf. He is as full of Valour as of Kindneſſe, Princely in both.

Enter the King.

Weſt. O that we now had here But one ten thouſand of thoſe men in England, That doe no worke to day.

King. What's he that wiſhes ſo? My Couſin Weſtmerland. No, my faire Couſin: If we are markt to dye, we are enow To doe our Countrey loſſe: and if to liue, The fewer men, the greater ſhare of honour. Gods will, I pray thee wiſh not one man more. By Ioue, I am not couetous for Gold, Nor care I who doth feed vpon my coſt; It yernes me not, if men my Garments weare; Such outward things dwell not in my deſires. But if it be a ſinne to couet Honor, I am the moſt offending Soule aliue. No 'faith, my Coze, wiſh not a man from England: Gods peace, I would not looſe ſo great an Honor, As one man more me thinkes would ſhare from me, For the beſt hope I haue. O, doe not wiſh one more: Rather proclaime it (Weſtmerland) through my Hoaſt, That he which hath no ſtomack to this Fight, Let him depart, his Paſport ſhall be made, And Crowmes for Conuoy put into his Purſe: We would not dye in that mans compaine, That feares his fellowſhip, to dye with vs This day is call'd the Feaſt of Criſpian: He that out-liues this day, and comes ſafe home, Will ſtand a tip-toe when this day is named, And rouſe him at the Name of Criſpian. He that ſhall ſee this day, and liue old age, Will yeerely on the Vigil feaſt his neighbours, And ſay, to morrow is Saint Criſpian. Then will he ſtrip his ſleeue, and ſhow his skarres: Old men forget; yet all ſhall be forgot: But he'le remember, with aduantages, What feats he did that day. Then ſhall our Names, Familiar in his mouth as houſehold words,

Harry

in England, now a bed,

Enter Salisbury.
raign Lord, bestow your selfe with speed:
beauely in their battailes set,
ll expedience charge on vs.
ogs are ready, if our minds be so.
the man, whose mind is backward now,

Constable of France.

And time hath worne vs into slouenrie.
But by the Maſſe, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night,
They'le be in freſher Robes, or they will pluck
The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads,
And turne them out of ſeruice. If they doe this,
As if God pleaſe, they ſhall; my Ranſome then
Will soone be leuyed.
Herauld, saue thou thy labour:
Come thou no more for Ranſome, gentle Herauld,
They ſhall haue none, I sweare, but those my ioynts:
Which if they haue, as I will leaue 'em them,
Shall yeeld them little, tell the Constable.
Mont. I ſhall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou neuer ſhalt heare Herauld any more. Exit.
King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ranſome.

Enter Yorke.

Yorke. My Lord, moſt humbly on my knee I begge
The leading of the Vawarde.
King. Take it, braue Yorke.
Now Souldiers march away,
And how thou pleaſeſt God, diſpoſe the day. Exeunt.

Alarum. Excurſions.
Enter Piſtoll, French Souldier, Boy.

Piſt. Yeeld Curre.
French. Ie penſe que vous eſtes le Gentilhome de bon qualite.
Piſt. Qualtitie calmie cuſture me. Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? diſcuſſe.
French. O Seigneur Dieu.
Piſt. O Signieur Dewe ſhould be a Gentleman: perpend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signieur Dewe, thou dyeſt on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe giue to me egregious Ranſome.
French. O prenez miſericordie aye pitee de moy.
Piſt. Moy ſhall not ſerue, I will haue forte Moyes: for I will fetch thy rymme out at thy Throat, in droppes of Crimſon blood.
French. Eſt il impoſſible d'eſchapper le force de ton bras.
Piſt. Braſſe, Curre: thou damned and luxurious Mountaine Goat, offer'ſt me Braſſe?
French. O perdonne moy.
Piſt. Say'ſt thou me ſo? is that a Tonne of Moyes? Come hither boy, aske me this ſlaue in French what is his Name.
Boy. Eſcoute comment eſtes vous appellé?
French. Monſieur le Fer.
Boy. He ſayes his Name is M. Fer.
Piſt. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him: diſcuſſe the ſame in French vnto him.
Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firke.
Piſt. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.
French. Que dit il Monſieur?
Boy. Il me commande a vous dire que vous faite vous preſt, car ce ſoldat icy eſt diſpoſe tout a coupper voſtre gorge.
Piſt. Ouy, cuppele gorge permaſoy peſant, vnleſſe thou giue me Crownes, braue Crowne, or mangled ſhalt thou be by this my Sword.
French. O ie vous ſupplie pour l'amour de Dieu: me pardonner, ie ſuis le Gentilhome de bon maiſon, garde ma vie, & ie vous donneray deux cent eſcus.
Piſt. What are his words?

Boy. He

Boy. He prayes you to saue his life, he is a Gentleman of a good house, and for his ransom he will giue you two hundred Crownes.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I the Crownes will take.

Fren. Petit Monsieur que dit il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son serment, de pardonner aucune prisonnier: neant-moins pour les escues que vous l'aye a promets, il est content a vous donner le liberte le franchisement.

Fre. Sur mes genoux ie vous donnes mille remercions, et ie me estime heureux que ie intombe entre les mains d'vn Chevalier ie pense le plus braue valiant et tres dissreue signieur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound vnto me boy.

Boy. He giues you vpon his knees a thousand thanks, and he esteemes himselfe happy, that he hath falne into the hands of one (as he thinkes) the most braue, valorous and thrice-worthy signeur of England.

Pist. As I sucke blood, I will some mercy shew. Follow me.

Boy. Suivez vous le grand Capitaine?

I did neuer know so full a voyce issue from so emptie a heart: but the saying is true. The empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolfe and Nym had ten time more valour, then this roaring diuell i'th olde play, that euerie one may payre his nayles with a woodden dagger, and they are both hang'd, and so would this be, if hee durst steale any thing aduenturously. I must stay with the Lackies with the luggage of our camp, the French might haue a good pray of vs, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boyes. Exit.

Enter Constable, Orleance, Burbon, Dolphin, and Rambures.

Con. O Diable.

Orl. O seigneur le iour est perdu, toute est perdue.

Dol. Mor Dieu ma vie, all is confounded all, Reproach, and euerlasting shame Sits mocking in our Plumes. A short Alarum. O mes fortune, do not runne away.

Con. Why all our rankes are broke.

Dol. O perdurable shame, let's stab our selues: Be these the wretches that we plaid at dice for?

Orl. Is this the King we sent too, for his ransome?

Bur. Shame, and eternall shame, nothing but shame, Let vs dye in once more backe againe, And he that will not follow Burbon now, Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand Like a base Pander hold the Chamber doore, Whilst a base slaue, no gender then my dogge, His faireſt daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder that hath spoyl'd vs, friend vs now, Let vs on heapes go offer vp our liues.

Orl. We are enow yet liuing in the Field, To smother vp the English in our throngs, If any order might be thought vpon.

Bur. The diuell take Order now, I'le to the throng: Let life be short, else shame will be too long. Exit.

Alarum. Enter the King and his trayne, with Prisoners.

King. Well haue we done, thrice-valiant Countrimen, But all's not done, yet keepe the French the field.

Exe. The D. of York commends him to your Maiesty

King. Liues he good Vncle? thrice within this houre I saw him downe; thrice vp againe, and fighting, From Helmet to the spurre, all blood he was.

Exe. In which array (braue Soldier) doth he lye, Larding the plaine: and by his bloody side, (Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds) The Noble Earle of Suffolke also lyes. Suffolke first dyed, and Yorke all hagled ouer Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteeped, And takes him by the Beard, kisses the gashes That bloodily did yawne vpon his face. He cryes aloud; Tarry my Cosin Suffolke, My soule shall thine keepe company to heauen: Tarry (sweet soule) for mine, then flye a-breſt: As in this glorious and well-foughten field We kept together in our Chiualrie. Vpon these words I came, and cheer'd him vp. He smil'd me in the face, raught me his hand, And with a feeble gripe, sayes: Dear my Lord, Commend my seruice to my Soueraigne. So did he turne, and ouer Suffolkes neckе He threw his wounded arme, and kist his lippes, And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd A Testament of Noble-ending-loue: The prettie and sweet manner of it forc'd Those waters from me, which I would haue stop'd, But I had not so much of man in mee, And all my mother came into mine eyes, And gaue me vp to teares.

King. I blame you not, For hearing this, I must perforce compound With mixtfull eyes, or they will issue too. Alarum. But hearke, what new alarum is this same? The French haue re-enforc'd their scatter'd men: Then euery Souldiour kill his Prisoners, Giue the word through. Exit

Actus Quartus.

Enter Flewellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expreſsely against the Law of Armes, 'tis an arrant a peece of knauery marke you now, as can bee offert in your Conſcience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certaine, there's not a boy left aliue, and the Cowardly Rascalls that ranne from the battaile ha' done this slaughter: besides they haue burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King most worthily hath caus'd euery Soldiour to cut his prisoners throat. O 'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I, hee was porne at Monmouth Captaine Gower: What call you the Townes name where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, saue the phrase is a little variations.

Gower. I thinke Alexander the Great was borne at Macedon, his Father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I thinke it is in Macedon where Alexander is porne.

ou Captaine, if you looke in the Maps of rrant you shall finde in the comparisons be-don & Monmouth, that the situations looke
ike. There is a Riuer in Macedon, & there ice a Riuer at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at ut it is out of my prames. what is the name uer: but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers rs, and there is Salmons in both. If you ders life well. Harry of Monmouthes life is ndifferent well, for there is figures in all under God knowes, and you know, in his furies, and his wraths, and his cholliers, and nd his displeasures, and his indignations, a little incensecates in his prames, did in is angers (looke you) kill his best friend

King is not like him in that, he neuer kill'd nds.

ot well done (marke you now) to take the y mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak ves, and comparisons of it: as Alexander
Great, being in his Ales and his Cuppes; so Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his ents, turn'd away the fat Knight with the ubles: he was full of iests, and gybes, and d mockes, I haue forgot his name.

don Falstaffe.

e comes his Maiestie

ow. Enter King Harry and Burbon

as not angry since I came to France, hant. Take a Trumpet Herald,
o the Horsemen on yond hill:
the wish vs, bid them come downe,
field: they do offend our sight,
ither, we will come to them,
m sker away, as swift as stones
n the old Assyrian slings.
I cut the throats of those we haue,
n of them that we shall take,
mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montioy.

comes the Herald of the French, my Liege eyes are bombler then they vs'd to be.
w now, what meanes this Herald? Knowst ou not,
d these bones of mine for ransome?
gaine for ransome?
great King,
e for charitable Licenſe,
wander ore this bloody field,
dead, and then to bury them,
obles from our common men.
ur Princes (woe the while) and soak'd in mercenary blood:
gar drench their peasant limbes rincer, and with wounded steeds deepe in gore, and with wilder rage
he armed heeles at their dead masters, wice. O giue vs leaue great King, field in safety, and dispose bodies,

King. I tell thee truly Herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no,
For yet a many of your horsemen peere,
And gallop ore the field.

Her. The day is yours.

King. Praised be God, and not our strength for it.
What is this Castle call'd that stands hard by.

Her. They call it Agincourt.

King. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't please your Maiesty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke Prince of Wales, as I haue read in the Chronicles, fought a most prane pattle here in France.

King. They did Fluellen.

Flu. Your Maiesty sayes very true: If your Maiesties is remembred of it, the Welchmen did good seruice in a Garden where Leekes did grow, wearing Leekes in their Monmouth caps, which your Maiesty know to this houre is an honourable badge of the seruice: And I do beleeue your Maiesty takes no scorne to weare the Leeke vpon
S. Tauies day.

King. I weare it for a memorable honor:
For I am Welch you know good Countriman.

Flu. All the water in Wye, cannot wash your Maiesties Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that:
God pleſſe it, and preſerue it, as long as it pleases his Grace, and his Maiesty too.

King. Thankes good my Countrymen.

Flu. By Ieshu, I am your Maiesties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confesse it to all the Orld, I need not to be ashamed of your Maiesty, praised be God so long as your Maiesty is an honest man.

King. Good keepe me so.

Enter Williams.

Our Heralds go with him,
Bring me iust notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

Exe. Souldier, you must come to the King.

King Souldier, why wear'ſt thou that Gloue in thy Cappe?

Will. And't please your Maiesty, tis the gage of one that I should fight withall, if he be aliue.

King. An Englishman?

Wil. And't please your Maiesty, a Rascall that swag-ger'd with me last night: who if aliue, and euer dare to challenge this Gloue, I haue sworne to take him a boxe a'th ere: or if I can see my Gloue in his cappe, which he swore as he was a Souldier he would weare (if aliue) I will strike it out soundly.

King. What thinke you Captaine Fluellen, is it fit this souldier keepe his oath.

Flu. Hee is a Crauen and a Villaine else, and's pesse your Maiesty in my conscience.

King. It may be, his enemy is a Gentleman of great sort quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a Gentleman as the diuel is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himselfe, it is necessary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If hee bee periur'd (see you now), his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a Iacke sawce, as euer his blacke shoo trodd vpon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conscience law

King. Then keepe thy vow sirrah, when thou meet'ſt the fellow.

Wil. So, I will my Liege, as I liue.

King. Who serue'ſt thou vnder?

Wil.

Will. Vnder Captaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Captaine, and is good knowledge and literatured in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me, Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege. Exit.

King. Here Fluellen, weare thou this fauour for me, and sticke it in thy Cappe: when Alanson and my selfe were downe together, I pluckt this Gloue from his Helme: If any man challenge this, hee is a friend to Alanson, and an enemy to our Person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou do'st me loue.

Flu. Your Grace doo's me as great Honors as can be desir'd in the hearts of his Subiects: I would faine see the man, that ha's but two legges, that shall find himselfe agreeu'd at this Gloue; that is all: but I would faine see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see.

King. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and please you.

King. Pray thee goe seeke him, and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. Exit.

King. My Lord of Warwick, and my Brother Gloster, Follow Fluellen closely at the heeles.
The Gloue which I haue giuen him for a fauour,
May haply purchase him a box a'th'eare.
It is the Souldiers: I by bargaine should Weare it my selfe. Follow good Cousin Warwick:
If that the Souldier strike him, as I iudge
By his blunt bearing, he will keepe his word;
Some sodaine mischiefe may arise of it:
For I doe know Fluellen valiant,
And touch't with Choler, hot as Gunpowder,
And quickly will returne an injurie.
Follow, and see there be no harme betweene them.
Goe you with me, Vncle of Exeter. Exeunt.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to Knight you, Captaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gods will, and his pleasure, Captaine, I beseech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peraduenture, then is in your knowledge to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Gloue?

Flu. Know the Gloue? I know the Gloue is a Gloue.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant Traytor as anyes in the Vniuersall World, or in France, or in England.

Gower. How now Sir? you Villaine.

Will. Doe you thinke Ile be forsworne?

Flu. Stand away Captaine Gower, I will giue Treason his payment into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a Lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Maiesties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alansons.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

Warw. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, heere is, prayse-d be God for it, a most contagious Treason come to light, looke you, as you shall desire in a Summers day. Heere is his Maiestie.

Enter King and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that looke your Grace, ha's strooke the Gloue which your Maiestie is take out of the Helmet of Alanson.

Will. My Liege, this was my Gloue, heere is the fellow of it: and he that I gaue it to in change, promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my Gloue in his Cappe, and I haue beene as good as my word.

Flu. Your Maiestie heare now, sauing your Maiesties Manhood, what an arrant rascally, beggerly, lowsie Knaue it is: I hope your Maiestie is peare me testimonie and witnesse, and will auouchment, that this is the Gloue of Alanson, that your Maiestie is giue me, in your Conscience now.

King. Giue me thy Gloue Souldier:
Looke, heere is the fellow of it:
'Twas I indeed thou promised'st to strike,
And thou hast giuen me most bitter termes.

Flu. And please your Maiestie, let his Neck answere for it, if there is any Marshall Law in the World.

King. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: neuer came any from mine, that might offend your Maiestie.

King. It was our selfe thou didst abuse.

Will. Your Maiestie came not like your selfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man; witnesse the Night, your Garments, your Lowlinesse: and what your Highnesse suffer'd vnder that shape, I beseech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine: for had you beene as I tooke you for, I made no offence; therefore I beseech your Highnesse pardon me.

King. Here Vncle Exeter, fill this Gloue with Crownes,
And giue it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow,
And weare it for an Honor in thy Cappe,
Till I doe challenge it. Giue him the Crowaes:
And Captaine, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this Day and this Light, the fellow ha's mettell enough in his belly: Hold, there is twelue-pence for you, and I pray you to serue God, and keepe you out of prawles and prabbles, and quarrels and dissentions, and I warrant you it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you it will serue you to mend your shooes: come, wherefore should you be so pashfull, your shooes is not so good: 'tis a good filling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herauld.

King. Now Herauld, are the dead numbred?

Herald. Heere is the number of the slaughter'd French.

King. What Prisoners of good sort are taken, Vncle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King:
John Duke of Burbon, and Lord Bouchiqualt:
Of other Lords and Barons, Knights and Squires,
Full fifteene hundred, besides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lye slaine: of Princes in this number,
And Nobles bearing Banners, there lye dead
One hundred twentie six: added to these,
Of Knights, Esquires, and gallant Gentlemen,
Eight thousand and foure hundred: of the which,
Fiue hundred were but yesterday dubb'd Knights.
So that in these ten thousand they haue lost,
There are but fifteene hundred Mercenaries:
The rest are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires,

And

And Gentlemen of blood and qualitie.
The Names of thoſe their Nobles that lye dead:
Charles Delabreth, High Conſtable of France,
Iaques of Chatillion, Admirall of France,
The Maſter of the Croſſe-bowes, Lord Rambures,
Great Maſter of France, the braue Sir Guichard Dolphin,
Iohn Duke of Alanſon, Anthonie Duke of Brabant,
The Brother to the Duke of Burgundie,
And Edward Duke of Barr: of luſtie Earles,
Grandpree and Roſſe, Fauconbridge and Foyes,
Beaumont and Marle, Vandemont and Leſtrale.
Here was a Royall fellowſhip of death.
Where is the number of our Engliſh dead?
Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,
Sir Richard Ketly, Dauy Gam Eſquire:
None elſe of name: and of all other men,
But fiue and twentie.
O God, thy Arme was heere:
And not to vs, but to thy Arme alone,
Aſcribe we all: when, without ſtratagem,
But in plaine ſhock, and euen play of Battaile,
Was euer knowne ſo great and little loſſe?
On one part and on th'other, take it God,
For it is none but thine.
Exet. 'Tis wonderfull.
King. Come, go we in proceſſion to the Village:
And be it death proclaymed through our Hoaſt,
To boaſt of this, or take that praiſe from God,
Which is his onely.
Flu. Is it not lawfull and pleaſe your Maieſtie, to tell how many is kill'd?
King. Yes Captaine: but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for vs.
Flu. Yes, my conſcience, he did vs great good.
King. Doe we all holy Rites:
Let there be ſung Non nobis, and Te Deum,
The dead with charitie enclos'd in Clay:
And then to Callice, and to England then,
Where ne're from France arriu'd more happy men.
Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus.

Vouchſafe to thoſe that haue not read the Story,
That I may prompt them: and of ſuch as haue,
I humbly pray them to admit th'excuſe
Of time, of numbers, and due courſe of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life,
Be here preſented. Now we beare the King
Toward Callice: Graunt him there, there ſeene,
Heaue him away vpon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the Sea: Behold the Engliſh beach
Pales in the flood; with Men, Wiues, and Boyes,
Whoſe ſhouts & claps out-voyce the deep-mouth'd Sea,
Which like a mightie Whiffler 'fore the King,
Seemes to prepare his way: So let him land,
And ſolemnly ſee him ſet on to London.
So ſwift a pace hath Thought, that euen now
You may imagine him vpon Blacke-Heath:
Where, that his Lords deſire him, to haue borne
His bruiſed Helmet, and his bended Sword
Before him, through the Citie: he forbids it,
Being free from vain-neſſe, and ſelfe-glorious pride;
Giuing full Trophee, Signall, and Oſtent,
Quite from himſelfe, to God. But now behold,
In the quick Forge and working-houſe of Thought,
How London doth powre out her Citizens,
The Maior and all his Brethren in beſt ſort,
Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,
With the Plebeians ſwarming at their heeles,
Goe forth and fetch their Conqu'ring Caeſar in:
As by a lower, but by louing likelyhood,
Were now the Generall of our gracious Empreſſe,
As in good time he may, from Ireland comming,
Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword;
How many would the peacefull Citie quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cauſe,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him.
As yet the lamentation of the French
Inuites the King of Englands ſtay at home:
The Emperour's comming in behalfe of France,
To order peace betweene them: and omit
All the occurrences, what euer chanc't,
Till Harryes backe returne againe to France:
There muſt we bring him; and my ſelfe haue play'd
The interim, by remembring you 'tis paſt
Then brooke abridgement, and your eyes aduance,
After your thoughts, ſtraight backe againe to France.
Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Nay, that's right: but why weare you your Leeke to day? S. Dauies day is paſt.
Flu. There is occaſions and cauſes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you aſſe my friend, Captaine Gower; the raſcally, ſcauld, beggerly, lowſie, pragging Knaue Piſtoll, which you and your ſelfe, and all the World, know to be no petter then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits: hee is come to me, and prings me pread and ſault yeſterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Leeke: it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be ſo bold as to weare it in my Cap till I ſee him once againe, and then I will tell him a little piece of my deſires.

Enter Piſtoll.

Gower. Why heere hee comes, ſwelling like a Turky-cock.
Flu. 'Tis no matter for his ſwellings, nor his Turky-cocks. God pleſſe you aunchient Piſtoll: you ſcuruie lowſie Knaue, God pleſſe you.
Piſt. Ha, art thou bedlam? doeſt thou thirſt, baſe Troian, to haue me fold vp Parcas fatall Web? Hence; I am qualmiſh at the ſmell of Leeke.
Flu. I peſeech you heartily, ſcuruie lowſie Knaue, at my deſires, and my requeſts, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Leeke; becauſe, looke you, you doe not loue it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your digeſtions doo's not agree with it, I would deſire you to eate it.
Piſt. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats.
Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him. Will you be ſo good, ſcauld Knaue, as eate it?
Piſt. Baſe Troian, thou ſhalt dye.
Flu. You ſay very true, ſcauld Knaue, when Gods will is: I will deſire you to liue in the meane time, and eate your Victuals: come, there is ſawce for it. You call'd me yeſterday Mountaine-Squier, but I will make you

you to day a ſquire of low degree. I pray you fall too, if you can mocke a Leeke, you can eate a Leeke.

Gower. Enough Captaine, you haue aſtoniſht him.

Flu. I ſay, I will make him eate ſome part of my leeke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: bite I pray you, it is good for your greene wound, and your ploodie Coxecombe.

Piſt. Muſt I bite.

Flu. Yes certainly, and out of doubt and out of queſtion too and ambiguities.

Piſt. By this Leeke, I will moſt horribly reuenge I eate and eate I ſweare.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you haue ſome more ſauce to your Leeke: there is not enough Leeke to ſweare by.

Piſt. Quiet thy Cudgell, thou doſt ſee I eate.

Flu. Much good do you ſcald knaue, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxcombe; when you take occaſions to ſee Leekes hereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Piſt. Good.

Flu. I, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Piſt. Me a groat?

Flu Yes verily, and in truth ye u ſhall take it, or I haue another Leeke in my pocket, which you ſhall eate.

Piſt. I take thy groat in earneſt of reuenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in Cudgels, you ſhall be a Woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels: God bu'y you, and keepe you, & heale your pate. Exit

Piſt. All hell ſhall ſtirre for this.

Gow. Go, go, you are a counterfeit cowardly Knaue, will you mocke at an ancient Tradition began vpon an honourable reſpect, and worne as a memorable Trophee of predeceaſed valor, and dare not auouch in your deeds any of your words. I haue ſeene you gleeking & galling at this Gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, becauſe he could not ſpeake Engliſh in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an Engliſh Cudgell: you finde it otherwiſe, and henceforth let a Welſh correction, teach you a good Engliſh condition, fare ye well. Exit

Pyſt. Doeth fortune play the huſwife with me now? Newes haue I that my Doll is dead i'th Spittle of a malady of France, and there my rendeuous is quite cut off: Old I do waxe, and from my wearie limbes honour is Cudgeld. Well, Baud Ile turne, and ſomething leane to Cut-purſe of quicke hand: To England will I ſteale, and there Ile ſteale:
And patches will I get vnto theſe cudgeld ſcarres,
And ſwore I got them in the Gallia warres. Exit.

Enter at one doore, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwicke, and other Lords. At another, Queene Iſabel, the King, the Duke of Bourgoyne, and other French.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met;
Vnto our brother France, and to our Siſter
Health and faire time of day: Ioy and good wiſhes
To our moſt faire and Princely Coſine Katherine;
And as a branch and member of this Royalty,
By whom this great aſſembly is contriu'd,
We do ſalute you Duke of Burgoyne,
And Princes French and Peeres health to you all.

Fra. Right ioyous are we to behold your face,
Moſt worthy brother England, fairely met,
So are you Princes (Engliſh) every one.

Quee. So happy be the Iſſue brother Ireland
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes,
Your eyes which hitherto haue borne
In them againſt the French that met them in their bent,
The fatall Balls of murthering Baſiliskes:
The venome of ſuch Lookes we fairely hope
Haue loſt their qualitie, and that this day
Shall change all griefes and quarrels into loue.

Eng. To cry Amen to that, thus we appeare.

Quee. You Engliſh Princes all, I doe ſalute you.

Burg. My dutie to you both, on equall loue,
Great Kings of France and England: that I haue labour'd
With all my wits, my paines, and ſtrong endeuors,
To bring your moſt Imperiall Maieſties
Vnto this Barre, and Royall enterview;
Your Mightineſſe on both parts beſt can witneſſe.
Since then my Office hath ſo farre preuayl'd,
That Face to Face, and Royall Eye to Eye,
You haue congreeted: let it not diſgrace me,
If I demand before this Royall view,
What Rub, or what Impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace,
Deare Nourſe of Arts, Plenteyes, and ioyfull Births,
Should not in this beſt Garden of the World,
Our fertile France, put vp her louely Viſage?
Alas, ſhee hath from France too long been chas'd,
And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes,
Corrupting in it owne fertilitie.
Her Vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Vnpruned, dyes: her Hedges euen pleach'd,
Like Priſoners wildly ouer-growne with hayre,
Put forth diſorder'd Twigs: her fallow Leas,
The Darnell, Hemlock, and ranke Fennetary,
Doth root vpon; while that the Culter ruſts,
That ſhould deracinate ſuch Sauagery:
The euen Meade, that erſt brought ſweetly forth
The freckled Cowſlip, Burnet and greene Clouer,
Wanting the Sythe, withall vncorrected, ranke;
Conceiues by idleneſſe, and nothing teemes,
But hatefull Docks, rough Thiſtles, Kekſyes, Burres,
Looſing both beautie and vtilitie;
And all our Vineyards, Fallowes, Meades, and Hedges,
Defectiue in their natures, grow to wildneſſe.
Euen ſo our Houſes, and our Peeces, and Children,
Haue loſt, or doe not learne, for want of time,
The Sciences that ſhould become our Country;
But grow like Sauages, as Souldiers will,
That nothing doe, but meditate on Blood,
To Swearing, and ſterne Lookes, defus'd Attyre,
And euery thing that ſeemes vnnaturall.
Which to reduce into our former fauour,
You are aſſembled: and my ſpeech entreats,
That I may know the Let, why gentle Peace
Should not expell theſe inconueniences,
And bleſſe vs with her former qualities.

Eng. If Duke of Burgonie, you would the Peace,
Whoſe want giues growth to th'imperfections
Which you haue cited; you muſt buy that Peace
With full accord to all our iuſt demands,
Whoſe Tenures and particular effects
You haue enſcheduld briefely in your hands.

Burg. The King hath heard them: to the which, as yet
There is no Anſwer made.

Eng. Well then: the Peace which you before ſo vrg'd, words nor meaſure; and for the other, I ould winne a Lady at Leape-frogge, or by nto a Wife: Oh if I might buffet for my Loue, or bound my Horſe for her ſauours, I could lay on like a Butcher, and ſit like a Jack an Apes, neuer off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaſpe out my eloquence, nor I haue no cunning in proteſtation; onely downe-right Oathes, which I neuer vſe till vrg'd, nor neuer breake for vrging. If thou canſt loue a fellow of this temper, Kate, whoſe face is not worth Sunne-burning? that neuer lookes in his Glaſſe, for loue of any thing he ſees there? let thine Eye be thy Cooke. I ſpeake to thee plaine Souldier: If thou canſt loue me for this, take me? if not? to ſay to thee that I ſhall dye, is true; but for thy loue, by the L. No: yet I loue thee too. And while thou liu'ſt, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and vncoyned Conſtancie, for he perforce muſt do thee right, becauſe he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for theſe fellowes of infinite tongue, that can rime themſelues into Ladyes fauours, they do alwayes reaſon themſelues out againe. What? a ſpeaker is but a prater, a Ryme is but a Ballad: a good Legge will fall, a ſtraight Backe will ſtoope, a blacke Beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will waxe hollow: but a good Heart, Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it ſhines bright, and neuer changes, but keepes his courſe truly. If thou would haue ſuch a one, take me? and take me; take a Souldier: take a Souldier; take a King. And what ſay'ſt thou then to my Loue? ſpeake my faire, and fairely, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it poſſible dat I ſould loue de ennemie of Fraunce?

King. No, it is not poſſible you ſhould loue the Enemie of France, Kate; but in louing me, you ſhould loue the Friend of France: for I loue France ſo well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will haue it all mine: and Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours; then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell wat is dat.

King. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am ſure will hang vpon my tongue, like a new-married Wife about her Husbands Neck, hardly to be ſhooke off; Ie quand ſur le poſſeſſion de Fraunce, & quand vous auez le poſſeſſion de moy, (Let mee ſee, what then? Saint Denis bee my ſpeede) Donc voſtre eſt Fraunce, & vous eſtes mienne. It is as eaſie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to ſpeake ſo much more French: I ſhall neuer moue thee in French, vnleſſe it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf voſtre honeur, le Francois que vous parlez, il eſt meilleur que l'Anglois le quel Ie parle.

King. No faith is't not, Kate: but thy ſpeaking of my Tongue, and I thine, moſt truely falſely, muſt needes be graunted to be much at one. But Kate, doo'ſt thou vnderſtand thus much Engliſh? Canſt thou loue mee?

Kath. I cannot tell.

King. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? Ile aske them. Come, I know thou loueſt me: and at night when you come into your Cloſet, you'le queſtion this Gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her diſpraiſe thoſe parts in me, that you loue with your heart: but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princeſſe, becauſe I loue thee cruelly. If euer thou beeſt mine, Kate, as I haue a ſauing Faith within me tells me thou ſhalt; I get thee with ſkambling, and thou muſt therefore needes proue a good Souldier-breeder: Shall not thou and I, betweene Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French halfe Engliſh, that shall goe to Constantinople, and take the Turke by th Beard. Shall wee not? what say'st thou, my faire Flower-de-Luce.

Kate. I doe not know dat.

King. No: 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: doe but now promise Kate, you will endeauour for your French part of such a Boy; and for my English moytie, take the Word of a King, and a Batchelor. How answer you, La plus belle Katherine du monde mon treschere & devine deesse.

Kath. Your Maiestee ave fause Frenche enough to deceiue de most sage Damoiseil dat is en Fraunce.

King. Now fye vpon my false French: by mine Honor in true English, I loue thee Kate; by which Honor, I dare not sweare thou loues't me, yet my blood begins to flatter me, that thou doo'st; notwithstanding the poore and vntempering effect of my Visage. Now beshrew my Fathers Ambition, hee was thinking of Ciuill Warres when hee got me, therefore was I created with a stubborne out-side, with an aspect of Iron, that when I come to woo Ladyes, I fright them: but in faith Kate, the elder I waxe, the better I shall appeare. My comfort is, that Old Age, that ill layer vp of Beautie, can doe no more spoyle vpon my Face. Thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most faire Katherine, will you haue me? Put off your Maiden Blushes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Lookes of an Empresse, take me by the Hand, and say, Harry of England, I am thine: which Word thou shals no sooner bleste mine Eare withall, but I will tell thee aloud, England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speake it before his Face, if he be not Fellow with the best King, thou shalt finde the best King of Good-fellowes. Come, your Answer in broken Musick; for thy Voyce is Musick, and thy English broken: Therefore Queene of all, Katherine, breake thy minde to me in broken English; wilt thou haue me?

Kath. Dat is as it shall please de Roy mon pere.

King. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it fall also content me.

King. Vpon that I kisse your Hand, and I call you my Queene.

Kath. Laisse mon Seigneur, laisse, laisse, mon foy: Ie ne veux point que vous abbaisse vostre grandeur, en baisant le main d'une vostre Seigneur indegnie seruiteur excuse moy. Ie vous supplie mon tres-puissant Seigneur.

King. Then I will kisse your Lippes, Kate.

Kath. Les Dames & Damoiselz pour estre baisie deuant leur nopcesse il nest pas le costume de Fraunce.

King. Madame, my Interpreter, what sayes shee?

Lady. Dat it is not be de fashion pour le Ladies of France; I cannot tell wat is buisse en English.

King. To kisse.

Lady. Your Maiestee entendre bettre que moy.

King. It is not a fashion for the Maids in Fraunce to kisse before they are marryed, would she say?

Lady. Ony verayment.

King. O Kate, nice Customes curtse to great Kings. Deare Kate, you and I cannot bee confin'd within the weake Lyst of a Countreyes fashion: wee are the makers of Manners, Kate; and the libertie that followes our Places, stoppes the mouth of all finde-faults, as I will doe yours, for vpholding the nice fashion of your Countrey, in denying me a Kisse: therefore patiently, and yeelding. You haue Witch-craft in your Lippes, Kate: there is more eloquence in a Sugar touch of them, then in the Tongues of the French Councell; and they should sooner perswade Harry of England, then a generall Petition of Monsrchs. Heere comes your Father.

Enter the French Power, and the English Lords.

Burg. God saue your Maiestie, my Royall Cosin, teach you our Princesse English?

King. I would haue her learne, my faire Cousin, how perfectly I loue her, and that is good English.

Burg. Is shee not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough, Coze, and my Condition is not smooth: so that having neyther the Voyce nor the Heart of Flatterie about me, I cannot so coniure vp the Spirit of Loue in her, that hee will appeare in his true likenesse.

Burg. Pardon the frankneſſe of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a Circle: if conjure vp Loue in her in his true likenesse, hee must appeare naked, and blinde. Can you blame her then, being a Maid, yet rosed ouer with the Virgin Crimson of Modestie, if shee deny the appearance of a naked blinde Boy in her naked seeing selfe? It were (my Lord) a hard Condition for a Maid to consigne to.

King. Yet they doe winke and yeeld, as Loue is blind and enforces.

Burg. They are then excus'd, my Lord when they see not what they doe.

King. Then good my Lord teach your Cousin to consent winking.

Burg. I will winke on her to consent, my Lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for Maides well Summer'd, and warme kept, are like Flyes at Bartholomew-tyde, blinde, though they haue their eyes, and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

King. This Morall tyes me ouer to Time, and a hot Summer; and so I shall catch the Flye, your Cousin, in the latter end, and shee must be blinde too.

Burg. As Loue is my Lord, before it loues.

King. It is so: and you may, some of you, thanke Loue for my blindnesse, who cannot see many a faire French Citie for one faire French Maid that stands in my way.

French King. Yes my Lord, you see them perspectiuely: the Cities turn'd into a Maid; for they are all girdled with Maiden Walls, that Warre hath entred.

England. Shall Kate be my Wife?

France. So please you.

England. I am content, so the Maiden Cities you talke of, may wait on her: so the Maid that stood in the way for my Wish, shall shew me the way to my Will.

France. Wee haue consented to all termes of reason.

England. It's so, my Lords of England?

The first Part of Henry the Sixt.

Actus Primus Scœna Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the Fift, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloster, Protector; the Duke of Exeter Warwicke, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset.

Bedford.

Hung be y heauens with black, yield day to night;
Comets importing change of Times and States,
Brandish your crystall Tresses in the Skie,
And with them scourge the bad reuolting Stars,
That haue consented vnto Henries death:
King Henry the Fift, too famous to liue long,
England ne're lost a King of so much worth.

Glost. England ne're had a King vntill his time:
Vertue he had, deseruing to command,
His brandisht Sword did blinde men with his beames:
His Armes spred wider then a Dragons Wings:
His sparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazled and drouue back his Enemies,
Then mid-day Sunne, fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his Deeds exceed all speech:
He ne're lift vp his Hand, but conquered.

Exe. We mourne in black, why mourn we not in blood?
Henry is dead, and neuer shall reuiue:
Vpon a Woodden Coffin we attend;
And Death's dishonourable Victorie,
We with our stately presence glorifie,
Like Captiues bound to a Triumphant Carre.
What? shall we curse the Planets of Mishap,
That plotted thus our Glories ouerthrow?
Or shall we thinke the subtile-witted French,
Coniurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magick Verses haue contriu'd his end.

Winch. He was a King, blest of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French, the dreadfull Iudgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his sight.
The Battailes of the Lord of Hosts he fought:
The Churches Prayers made him so prosperous.

Glost. The Church? where is it?
Had not Church-men pray'd,
His thred of Life had not so soone decay'd.
None doe you like, but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoole-boy you may ouer-awe.

Winch. Gloster, what ere we like, thou art Protector,
And look'st to command the Prince and Realme.
Thy Wife is proud, she holdeth thee in awe,
More then God or Religious Church-men may.

Glost. Name not Religion, for thou lou'st the Flesh,
And ne're throughout the yeare to Church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these Iarres, and rest your minds in peace:
Let's to the Altar: Heralds wayt on vs;
In stead of Gold, we'le offer vp our Armes,
Since Armes auayle not, now that Henry's dead.
Posterity await for wretched yeares,
When at their Mothers moistned eyes, Babes shall suck.
Our Ile be made a Nourish of salt Teares,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead.
Henry the Fift, thy Ghost I inuocate:
Prosper this Realme, keepe it from Ciuill Broyles,
Combat with aduerse Planets in the Heauens:
A farre more glorious Starre thy Soule will make,
Then Iulius Cæsar, or bright---

Mess. My honourable Lords, health to you all.
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of losse, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guyen, Champaigne, Rheimes, Orleance,
Paris, Guysors, Poictiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou man, before dead Henry's Corse?
Speake softly, or the losse of those great Townes
Will make him burst his Lead, and rise from death.

Glost. Is Paris lost? is Roan yeelded vp?
If Henry were recall'd to life againe,
These news would cause him once more yeeld the Ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what treacherie was vs'd?

Mess. No treacherie, but want of Men and Money.
Amongst the Souldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine seuerall Factions:
And whil'st a Field should be dispatcht and fought,
You are disputing of your Generals.
One would haue lingring Warres, with little cost;
Another would flye swift, but wanteth Wings:
A third thinkes, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtayn'd.
Awake, awake, English Nobilitie,
Let not slouth dimme your Honors, new begot;
Crope are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of Englands Coat, one halfe is cut away.

Exe. Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
These Tidings would call forth her flowing Tides.

Bedf. Me they concerne, Regent I am of France:
Giue me my fleeced Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with these disgracefull wayling Robes;
Wounds will I lend the French, in stead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermissiue Miseries.

3. Mess. So you had need, for Orleance is besieg'd,
The English Army is growne weake and faint:
The Earle of Salisbury craueth supply,
And hardly keepes his men from mutinie,
Since they so few, watch such a multitude.
Exe. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry sworne:
Either to quell the Dolphin vtterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoake.
Bedf. I doe remember it, and here take my leaue,
To goe about my preparation. Exit Bedford.
Glost. Ile to the Tower with all the hast I can,
To view th' Artillerie and Munition,
And then I will proclayme young Henry King.
Exit Glocster.
Exe. To Eltam will I, where the young King is,
Being ordayn'd his speciall Gouernor,
And for his safetie there Ile best deuise Exit.
Winch. Each hath his Place and Function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remaines:
But long I will not be Jack out of Office.
The King from Eltam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest Sterne of publique Weale.
Exit.

Sound a Flourish.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reignier, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charles. Mars his true moning, euen as in the Heauens,
So in the Earth, to this day is not knowne.
Late did he shine vpon the English side:
Now we are Victors, vpon vs he smiles.
What Townes of any moment, but we haue?
At pleasure here we lye, neere Orleance:
Otherwhiles, the famisht English, like pale Ghosts,
Faintly besiege vs one houre in a moneth.
Alan. They want their Porredge, & their fat Bul Beeues:
Either they must be dyeted like Mules,
And haue their Prouender ty'd to their mouthes,
Or pitteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.
Reignier. Let's rayse the Siege: why liue we idly here?
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to feare:
Remayneth none but mad-brayn'd Salisbury,
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men nor Money hath he to make Warre.
Charles. Sound, sound Alarum, we will rush on them.
Now for the honour of the forlorne French:
Him I forgiue my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me goe back one foot, or flye. Exeunt.
Here Alarum, they are beaten back, by the English, with great losse.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reignier.
Charles. Who euer saw the like? what men haue I?
Dogges, Cowards, Dastards: I would ne're haue fled,
But that they left me 'midst my Enemies.
Reignier. Salisbury is a desperate Homicide,
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,
Doe rush vpon vs as their hungry prey.

Alanson. Proysard, a Countreyman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands breed,
During the time Edward the third did raigne:
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons and Goliasses
It sendeth forth to skirmish: one to tenne?
Leane raw-bon'd Rascals, who would e're suppose,
They had such courage and audacitie?
Charles. Let's leaue this Towne,
For they are hayre-brayn'd Slaues,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager.
Of old I know them; rather with their Teeth
The Walls they'le teare downe, then forsake the Siege.
Reignier. I thinke by some odde Gimmors or Deuice
Their Armes are set, like Clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne're could they hold out so as they doe:
By my consent, wee'le euen let them alone.
Alanson. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleance.

Bastard. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I haue newes for him.
Dolph. Bastard of Orleance, thrice welcome to vs.
Bast. Me thinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd.
Hath the late ouerthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:
A holy Maid hither with me I bring,
Which by a Vision sent to her from Heauen,
Ordayned is to rayse this tedious Siege,
And driue the English forth the bounds of France:
The spirit of deepe Prophecie she hath,
Exceeding the nine Sibyls of old Rome:
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speake, shall I call her in? beleeue my words,
For they are certaine, and vnfallible.
Dolph. Goe call her in: but first, to try her skill,
Reignier stand thou as Dolphin in my place:
Question her prowdly, let thy Looks be sterne,
By this meanes shall we sound what skill she hath.

Enter Ioane Pucel.

Reignier. Faire Maid, is't thou wilt doe these wondrous feats?
Pucel. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behinde,
I know thee well, though neuer seene before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;
In priuate will I talke with thee apart:
Stand back you Lords, and giue vs leaue a while.
Reignier. She takes vpon her bravely at first dash.
Pucel. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepheards Daughter,
My wit vntrayn'd in any kind of Art:
Heauen and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate.
Loe, whilest I waited on my tender Lambes,
And to Sunnes parching heat display'd my cheekes,
Gods Mother deigned to appeare to me,
And in a Vision full of Maiestie,
Will'd me to leaue my base Vocation,
And free my Country from Calamitie:
Her ayde she promis'd, and assur'd successe.
In complexe Glory shee reueal'd her selfe:
And whereas I was black and swart before,
With those cleare Rayes, which shee infus'd on me,
That beautie am I blest with, which you may see.
Aske me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer vnpremeditated:
My Courage try by Combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt finde that I exceed my Sex.
Resolue on this, thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receiue me for thy Warlike Mate.
Dolph. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high termes.
Only this proofe Ile of thy Valour make.
In single Combat thou shalt buckle with me;
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true,
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.
Pucel. I am prepar'd: here is my keene-edg'd Sword,
Deckt with fine Flower-de-Luces on each side,
The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church-yard,
Out of a great deale of old Iron, I chose forth.
Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman.
Pucel. And while I liue, Ile ne're flye from a man.
Here they fight, and Ioane de Pucel ouercomes.
Dolph. Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the Sword of Debora.
Pucel. Christs Mother helpes me, else I were too weake.
Dolph. Who e're helps thee, 'tis thou that must helpe me:
Impatiently I burne with thy desire,
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd.
Excellent Pucel, if thy name be so,
Let me thy seruant, and not Soueraigne be,
'Tis the French Dolphin sueth to thee thus.
Pucel. I must not yeeld to any rights of Loue,
For my Profession's sacred from aboue:
When I haue chased all thy Foes from hence,
Then will I thinke vpon a recompence.
Dolph. Meane time looke gracious on thy prostrate Thrall.
Reignier. My Lord me thinkes is very long in talke.
Alanson. Doubtlesse he shriues this woman to her smock,
Else ne're could he so long protract his speech.
Reignier. Shall wee disturbe him, since hee keepes no meane?
Alan. He may meane more then we poore men do know.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.
Reignier. My Lord, where are you? what deuise you on?
Shall we giue o're Orleance, or no?
Pucel. Why no, I say: distrustfull Recreants,
Fight till the last gaspe: Ile be your guard.
Dolph. What shee sayes, Ile confirme: wee'le fight it out.
Pucel. Assign'd am I to be the English Scourge.
This night the Siege assuredly Ile rayse:
Expect Saint Martins Summer, Halcyons dayes,
Since I haue entred into these Warres.
Glory is like a Circle in the Water,
Which neuer ceaseth to enlarge it selfe,
Till by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.
With Henries death, the English Circle ends,
Dispersed are the glories it included:
Now am I like that prowd insulting Ship,
Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.
Dolph. Was Mahomet inspired with a Done?
Thou with an Eagle art inspired then.
Helen, the Mother of Great Constantine,
Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.
Bright Starre of Venus, falne downe on the Earth,
How may I reuerently worship thee enough?
Alanson. Leaue off delayes, and let vs raise the Siege.

Reignier. Wo-

…r. Woman, do what thou canſt to ſaue our honors,
…them from Orleance, and be immortaliz'd.
…. Preſently wee'le try: come, let's away about it,
…ophet will I truſt, if thee proue falſe. Exeunt.

Enter Gloſter, with his Seruing-men.

…I am come to ſuruey the Tower this day;
…Henries death, I feare there is Conueyance:
…be theſe Warders, that they waite not here?
…the Gates, 'tis Gloſter that calls.
Warder. Who's there, that knocks ſo imperiouſly?
1. Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloſter.
Warder. Who ere he be, you may not be let in.
1. Man. Villaines, anſwer you ſo the Lord Protector?
Warder. The Lord protect him, ſo we anſwer him,
…e no otherwiſe then wee are will'd.
…Who willed you? or whoſe will ſtands but mine?
…is none Protector of the Realme, but I:
…up the Gates, Ile be your warrantize;
…be ſhowted thus by dunghill Groomes?
Gloſters men rush at the Tower Gates, and Woodvile the Lieutenant ſpeakes within.
…do it. What noyſe is this? what Traytors haue …ere?
…Lieutenant, is it you whoſe voyce I heare?
…the Gates, here's Gloſter that would enter.
…ile. Haue patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
…ardinall of Winchester forbids:
…him I haue expreſſe commandement,
…hou nor none of thine ſhall be let in.
…Faint-hearted Woodvile, prizeſt him 'fore me?
…nt Winchester, that haughtie Prelate,
…n Henry our late Soueraigne ne're could brooke?
…are no friend to God, or to the King:
…the Gates, or Ile ſhut thee out ſhortly.
…gmen. Open the Gates vnto the Lord Protector,
…e're buſſi them open, if that you come not quickly.

…ter to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchester and his men in Tawny Coates.

…heſt. How now ambitious Vmphrey, what meanes

…ſt. Piel'd Prieſt, doo'ſt thou command me to be
…ut?
…ch. I doe, thou moſt vſurping Proditor,
…ot Protector of the King or Realme.
…ſt. Stand back thou manifeſt Conſpirator,
…that contriued'ſt to murther our dread Lord,
…that giu'ſt Whores Indulgences to ſinne,
…wax thee in thy broad Cardinalls Hat,
…u proceed in this thy inſolence.
…ch. Nay, ſtand thou back, I will not budge a foot:
…e Damaſcus, be thou curſed Cain,
…y thy Brother Abel, if thou wilt.
…ſt. I will not ſlay thee, but Ile driue thee back:
…catlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,
…to carry thee out of this place.
…ch. Doe what thou dar'ſt, I beard thee to thy

…ſt What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
…men, for all this priuiledged place,
…Coates to Tawny Coats. Prieſt, beware your Beard,
…me to tugge it, and to cuffe you ſoundly.
…my feet I ſtampe thy Cardinalls Hat:
In ſpight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes Ile drag thee vp and downe.
Winch. Gloſter, thou wilt anſwere this before the Pope.
Gloſt. Winchester Goose, I cry, a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why doe you let them ſtay?
Thee Ile chaſe hence, thou Wolfe in Sheepes array.
Out Tawney-Coates, out Scarlet Hypocrite.

Here Gloſters men beat out the Cardinalls men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Maior of London, and his Officers.

Maior. Fye Lords that you being ſupreme Magiſtrates,
Thus contumeliouſly ſhould breake the Peace.
Gloſt. Peace Maior, thou know'ſt little of my wrongs.
Here's Beauford, that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here diſtrayn'd the Tower to his vſe.
Winch. Here's Gloſter, a Foe to Citizens,
One that ſtill motions Warre, and neuer Peace,
O're-charging your free Purſes with large Fines;
That ſeekes to ouerthrow Religion,
Becauſe he is Protector of the Realme;
And would haue Armour here out of the Tower,
To Crowne himſelfe King, and ſuppreſſe the Prince.
Gloſt. I will not anſwer thee with words, but blowes.
Here they skirmiſh againe.
Maior. Naught reſts for me, in this tumultuous ſtrife,
But to make open Proclamation.
Come Officer, as lowd as e're thou canſt, cry:
All manner of men, aſſembled here in Armes this day, againſt Gods Peace and the Kings, we charge and command you, in his Highneſſe Name, to repayre to your ſeuerall dwelling places, and not to weare, handle, or vſe any Sword, Weapon, or Dagger henceforward, vpon paine of death.
Gloſt. Cardinall, Ile be no breaker of the Law:
But we ſhall meet, and breake our minds at large.
Winch. Gloſter, wee'le meet to thy coſt, be ſure:
Thy heart-blood I will haue for this dayes worke.
Maior. Ile call for Clubs, if you will not away:
This Cardinall's more haughtie then the Deuill.
Gloſt. Maior farewell: thou doo'ſt but what thou may'ſt.
Winch. Abhominable Gloſter, guard thy Head,
For I intend to haue it ere long. Exeunt.
Maior. See the Coaſt clear'd, and then we will depart
Good God, theſe Nobles ſhould ſuch ſtomacks beare,
I my ſelfe fight not once in fortie yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Maſter Gunner of Orleance, and his Boy.

M. Gunner. Sirha, thou know'ſt how Orleance is beſieg'd,
And how the Engliſh haue the Suburbs wonne.
Boy. Father I know, and oft haue ſhot at them,
How e're vnfortunate, I miſs'd my ayme.
M. Gunner. But now thou ſhalt not. Be thou rul'd by me.
Chiefe Maſter Gunner am I of this Towne,
Something I muſt doe to procure me grace:
The Princes eſpyals haue informed me,
How the Engliſh, in the Suburbs cloſe entrenche,
Went through a ſecret Grate of Iron Barres,
In yonder Tower, to ouer-peere the Citie,
And thence diſcouer, how with moſt aduantage
They may vex vs with Shot or with Aſſault.
To intercept this inconuenience,
A Peece of Ordnance 'gainſt it I haue plac'd,

And

And euen theſe three dayes haue I watcht,
If I could ſee them. Now doe thou watch,
For I can ſtay no longer.
If thou ſpy'ſt any, runne and bring me word,
And thou ſhalt finde me at the Gouernors. Exit.

Boy. Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
Ile neuer trouble you, if I may ſpye them. Exit.

Enter Salisbury and Talbot on the Turrets, with others.

Salisb. Talbot, my life, my ioy, againe return'd?
How wert thou handled, being Priſoner?
Or by what meanes got'ſt thou to be releas'd?
Diſcourſe I prethee on this Turrets top.

Talbot. The Earle of Bedford had a Priſoner,
Call'd the braue Lord Ponton de Santrayle,
For him was I exchang'd, and ranſom'd,
But with a baſer man of Armes by farre,
Once in contempt they would haue barter'd me:
Which I diſdaining, ſcorn'd, and craued death,
Rather then I would be ſo pil'd eſteem'd:
In fine, redeem'd I was as I deſir'd.
But O, the treacherous Falſtaffe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fiſts I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Salisb. Yet tell'ſt thou not, how thou were entertain'd.

Tal. With ſcoffes and ſcornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market-place produc'd they me,
To be a publique ſpectacle to all:
Here, ſay'd they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scare-Crow that affrights our Children ſo.
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd ſtones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my ſhame.
My griſly countenance made others flye,
None durſt come neere, for feare of ſuddaine death.
In Iron Walls they deem'd me not ſecure:
So great feare of my Name 'mongſt them were ſpread,
That they ſuppos'd I could rend Barres of Steele,
And ſpurne in pieces Poſts of Adamant.
Wherefore a guard of choſen Shot I had,
That walkt about me euery Minute while:
And if I did but ſtirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to ſhoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a Linſtock.

Salisb. I grieue to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reueng'd ſufficiently.
Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Grate, I count each one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let vs looke in, the ſight will much delight thee:
Sir Thomas Gargrane, and Sir William Glanſdale,
Let me haue your expreſſe opinions,
Where is beſt place to make our Batt'ry next?

Gargrane. I thinke at the North Gate, for there ſtands Lords.

Glanſdale. And I heere, at the Bulwarke of the Bridge.

Talb. For ought I ſee, this Citie muſt be famiſht,
Or with light Skirmiſhes enfeebled. Here they ſhoot, and Salisbury falls downe.

Salisb. O Lord haue mercy on vs, wretched ſinners.

Garg. O Lord haue mercy on me, woefull man.

Talb. What chance is this, that ſuddenly hath croſt vs?
Speake Salisbury; at leaſt, if thou canſt, ſpeake:
How far'ſt thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?
One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheeke ſide ſtruck off?
Accurſed Tower, accurſed fatall Hand,
That hath contriu'd this woefull Tragedie.
In thirteene Battailes, Salisbury o'recome:
Henry the Fift he firſt trayn'd to the Warres,
Whil'ſt any Trumpe did ſound, or Drum ſtruck vp,
His Sword did ne're leaue ſtriking in the field.
Yet liu'ſt thou Salisbury? though thy ſpeech doth fayle,
One Eye thou haſt to looke to Heauen for grace.
The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World.
Heauen be thou gracious to none alike,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands.
Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrane, haſt thou any life?
Speake vnto Talbot, nay, looke vp to him.
Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou ſhalt not dye whiles——
He beckens with his hand, and ſmiles on me:
As who ſhould ſay, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to auenge me on the French.
Plantagenet I will, and like thee,
Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:
Wretched ſhall France be onely in my Name.

Here an Alarum, and it Thunders and Lightens.

What ſtirre is this? what tumult's in the Heauens?
Whence commeth this Alarum, and the noyſe?

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord my Lord, the French haue gather'd head:
The Dolphin, with one Ioane de Puzel ioyn'd,
A holy Prophetteſſe, new riſen vp,
Is come with a great Power, to raiſe the Siege.

Here Salisbury lifteth himſelfe vp, and groanes.

Talb. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth groane!
It irkes his heart he cannot be reueng'd.
Frenchmen, Ile be a Salisbury to you.
Puzel or Puſſel, Dolphin or Dog-fiſh,
Your hearts Ile ſtampe out with my Horſes heeles,
And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines.
Conuey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then wee'le try what theſe daſtard Frenchmen dare.

Alarum. Exeunt.

Here an Alarum againe, and Talbot purſueth the Dolphin, and driues him: Then enter Ioane de Puzel, driuing Engliſhmen before her. Then enter Talbot.

Talb. Where is my ſtrength, my valour, and my force?
Our Engliſh Troupes retyre, I cannot ſtay them,
A Woman clad in Armour chaſteth them.

Enter Puzel.

Here, here ſhee comes. Ile haue a bowt with thee:
Deuill, or Deuils Dam, Ile coniure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch,
And ſtraightway giue thy Soule to him thou ſeru'ſt.

Puzel. Come, come, 'tis onely I that muſt diſgrace thee. Here they fight.

Talb. Heauens, can you ſuffer Hell ſo to preuayle?
My breſt Ile burſt with ſtraining of my courage,
And from my ſhoulders crack my Armes aſunder,
But I will chaſtiſe this high-minded Strumpet.

They fight againe.

Puzel. Talbot farwell, thy houre is not yet come,
I muſt goe Victuall Orleance forthwith:

A ſhort Alarum: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

O're-

ſ thou canſt, I ſcorne thy ſtrength.
ire vp thy hungry-ſtarued men,
y to make his Teſtament,
rs, as many more ſhall be. Exit.
oughts are whirled like a Potters Wheele,
were I am, nor what I doe:
are, not force, like Hannibal,
r troupes, and conquers as ſhe liſts:
moake, and Doues with noyſome ſtench,
Hyues and Houſes driuen away.
for our fierceneſſe, Engliſh Dogges, helpes, we crying runne away.
A ſhort Alarum.
reymen, eyther renew the fight,
yons out of Englands Coat;
Soyle, giue Sheepe in Lyons ſtead:
halfe ſo treacherous from the Wolfe,
men from the Leopard,
m your oft-ſubdued ſlaues.
larum. Here another Skirmiſh.
reyne into your Trenches:
eed vnto Salisburies death,
d ſtrike a ſtroake in his reuenge.
d into Orleance,
, or ought that we could doe
re to dye with Salisbury, roof, will make me hide my head.
Exit Talbot.
Alarum, Retreat, Flouriſh.

the Walls, Pucell, Dolphin, Reignier, Alanſon, and Souldiers.

rance out waxing Colours on the Walls,
ſence from the Engliſh.
Pucell hath perform'd her word.
ueſt Creature, Aſtrea's Daughter,
nour thee for this ſucceſſe?
are like Adams Garden,
bloom'd, and fruitfull were the next.
h in thy glorious Propheteſſe,
he Towne of Orleance,
hap did ne're befall our State.
ry ring not out the Bells alowd,
the Towne?
mand the Citizens make Bonfires,
banquet in the open ſtreets,
the ioy that God hath giuen vs.
France will be replete with mirth and ioy,
all heare how we haue play'd the men.
Charue, not we, by whom the day is wonne:
will diuide my Crowne with her,
peſts and Fryers in my Realme, ſion ſing her endleſſe praiſe.
ramis to her lle reare,
s or Memphis euer was.
I hate, when ſhe is dead,
an Vrne more precious ſewel'd Coffer of Darius, ſhall be at high Feſtiuals
ngs and Queenes of France.
Saint Denis will we cry,
ucell ſhall be France's Saint.
ſes vs Banquet Royally,
dden Day of Victorie.
Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Sentinels.

Ser. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noyſe or Souldier you perceiue
Neere to the walles, by ſome apparant ſigne
Let vs haue knowledge at the Court of Guard.
Sent. Sergeant you ſhall. Thus are poore Seruitors
(When others ſleepe vpon their quiet beds)
Conſtrain'd to watch in darkneſſe, raine, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with ſcaling Ladders: Their Drummes beating a Dead March.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whoſe approach, the Regions of Artoys,
Walon, and Picardy, are friends to vs:
This happy night, the Frenchmen are ſecure,
Hauing all day carows'd and banquetted,
Embrace we then this opportunitie,
As fitting beſt to quittance their deceite,
Contriu'd by Art, and balefull Sorcerie.
Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
Diſpairing of his owne armes fortitude,
To ioyne with Witches, and the helpe of Hell.
Bur. Traitors haue neuer other company.
But what's that Pucell whom they tearme ſo pure?
Tal. A Maid, they ſay.
Bed. A Maid? And be ſo martiall?
Bur. Pray God ſhe proue not maſculine ere long:
If vnderneath the Standard of the French
She carry Armour, as ſhe hath begun.
Tal. Well, let them practiſe and conuerſe with ſpirits.
God is our Fortreſſe, in whoſe conquering name
Let vs reſolue to ſcale their flinty bulwarkes.
Bed. Aſcend braue Talbot, we will follow thee.
Tal. Not altogether: Better farre I gueſſe,
That we do make our entrance ſeuerall wayes:
That if it chance the one of vs do faile,
The other yet may riſe againſt their force.
Bed. Agreed; Ile to yond corner.
Bur. And I to this.
Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his graue
Now Salisbury, for thee and for the right
Of Engliſh Henry, ſhall this night appeare
How much in duty, I am bound to both.
Sent. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make aſſault.
Cry, S. George, A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walles in their ſhirts. Enter ſeuerall wayes, Baſtard, Alanſon, Reignier, halfe ready, and halfe vnready.

Alan. How now my Lords? what all vnreadie ſo?
Baſt. Vnready? I and glad we ſcap'd ſo well.
Reig. 'Twas time (I trow) to wake and leaue our beds,
Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores.
Alan. Of all exploits ſince firſt I follow'd Armes,
Ne're heard I of a warlike enterprize

More

More venturous, or desperate then this.
Bast. I thinke this Talbot be a Fiend of Hell.
Reig. If not of Hell, the Heauens sure fauour him.
Alanſ. Here commeth Charles, I marueil how he ſped?

Enter Charles and Ioane.

Bast. Tut, holy Ioane was his defenſiue Guard.
Charl. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitfull Dame?
Didſt thou at firſt, to flatter vs withall,
Make vs partakers of a little gayne,
That now our loſſe might be ten times ſo much?
Ioane. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?
At all times will you haue my Power alike?
Sleeping or waking, muſt I ſtill preuayle,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improuident Souldiors, had your Watch been good,
This ſudden Miſchiefe neuer could haue ſalne.
Charl. Duke of Alanſon, this was your default,
That being Captaine of the Watch to Night,
Did looke no better to that weighty Charge.
Alanſ. Had all your Quarters been as ſafely kept,
As that whereof I had the gouernment,
We had not beene thus ſhamefully ſurpriz'd.
Bast. Mine was ſecure.
Reig. And ſo was mine, my Lord.
Charl. And for my ſelfe, moſt part of all this Night
Within her Quarter, and mine owne Precinct,
I was imploy'd in paſſing to and fro,
About relieuing of the Centinels.
Then how, or which way, ſhould they firſt breake in?
Ioane. Queſtion (my Lords) no further of the caſe,
How or which way; 'tis ſure they found ſome place,
But weakely guarded, where the breach was made:
And now there reſts no other ſhift but this,
To gather our Souldiors, ſcatter'd and diſperſt,
And lay new Plat-formes to endammage them.
Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter a Souldier crying, a Talbot, a Talbot: they flye, leauing their Clothes behind.

Sould. Ile be ſo bold to take what they haue left:
The Cry of Talbot ſerues me for a Sword,
For I haue loaden me with many Spoyles,
Vſing no other Weapon but his Name. Exit.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundie.

Bedf. The Day begins to breake, and Night is fled,
Whoſe pitchy Mantle ouer-wayl'd the Earth.
Here ſound Retreat, and ceaſe our hot purſuit. Retreat.
Talb. Bring forth the Body of old Salsbury,
And here aduance it in the Market-Place,
The middle Centure of this curſed Towne.
Now haue I pay'd my Vow vnto his Soule:
For euery drop of blood was drawne from him,
There hath at leaſt fiue Frenchmen dyed to night,
And that hereafter Ages may behold
What ruine happened in reuenge of him,
Within their cheifeſt Temple Ile erect
A Tombe, wherein his Corps ſhall be interr'd:
Vpon the which, that euery one may reade,
Shall be engraue'd the ſacke of Orleance,
The treacherous manner of his mourneſull death,
And what a terror he had beene to France.
But Lords, in all our bloudy Maſſacre,
I muſe we met not with the Dolphins Grace,
His new-come Champion, vertuous Ioane of Acre,
Nor any of his falſe Confederates.
Bedf. 'Tis thought Lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Rows'd on the ſudden from their drowſie Beds,
They did amongſt the troupes of armed men
Leappe ore the Walls for refuge in the field.
Burg. My ſelfe, as farre as I could well diſcerne,
For ſmoake and duskie vapours of the night,
Am ſure I ſcar'd the Dolphin and his Trull,
When Arme in Arme they both came ſwiftly running,
Like to a payre of louing Turtle-Doues,
That could not liue aſunder day or night.
After that things are ſet in order here,
We'le follow them with all the power we haue.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. All hayle, my Lords: which of this Princely traine
Call ye the Warlike Talbot, for his Acts
So much applauded through the Realme of France?
Talb. Here is the Talbot, who would ſpeak with him?
Meſſ. The vertuous Lady Countеſſe of Auuergne,
With modeſtie admiring thy Renowme,
By me entreats (great Lord) thou would'ſt vouchſafe
To viſit her poore Caſtle where ſhe lyes,
That ſhe may boaſt ſhe hath beheld the man,
Whoſe glory fills the World with loud report.
Burg. Is it euen ſo? Nay, then I ſee our Warres
Will turne vnto a peacefull Comick ſport,
When Ladyes craue to be encountred with.
You may not (my Lord) deſpiſe her gentle ſuit.
Talb. Ne're truſt me then: for when a World of men
Could not preuayle with all their Oratorie,
Yet hath a Womans kindneſſe ouer-rul'd:
And therefore tell her, I returne great thankes,
And in ſubmiſſion will attend on her.
Will not your Honors beare me company?
Bedf. No, truly, 'tis more then manners will:
And I haue heard it ſayd, Vnbidden Gueſts
Are often welcom'ſt when they are gone.
Talb. Well then, alone (ſince there's no remedie)
I meane to proue this Ladyes courteſie.
Come hither Captaine, you perceiue my mind.
whiſpers
Capt. I doe my Lord, and meane accordingly.
Exeunt.

Enter Countеſſe.

Count. Porter, remember what I giue in charge,
And when you haue done ſo, bring the Keyes to me.
Port. Madame, I will. Exit.
Count. The Plot is layd, if all things fall out right,
I ſhall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadfull Knight,
And his atchieuements of no leſſe account:
Faine would mine eyes be witneſſe with mine eares,
To giue their cenſure of theſe rare reports.

Enter Meſſenger and Talbot.

Meſſ. Madame, according as your Ladyſhip deſir'd,
By Meſſage crau'd, ſo is Lord Talbot come.
Count. And he is welcome: what is this the man?
Meſſ. Madame, it is.
Count. Is this the Scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, ſo much fear'd abroad?
That with his Name the Mothers ſtill their Babes?
I ſee Report is fabulous and falſe.

I ſhould haue ſeene ſome Hercules,
Teller, for his grim aſpect,
proportion of his ſtrong knit Limbes.
is a Child, a ſilly Dwarfe:
be, this weake and writhled ſhrimpe
nke ſuch terror to his Enemies.
Madame, I haue beene bold to trouble your your Ladyſhip is not at leyſure, ome other time to viſit you.
What meanes he now?
him, whither he goes?
Stay my Lord Talbot, for my Lady craues,
the cauſe of your abrupt departure?
Marry, for that ſhee's in a wrong beleefe, ertifie her Talbot's here.

Enter Porter with Keyes.

If thou be he, then art thou Priſoner.
Priſoner? to whom?
To me, blood-thirſtie Lord:
hat cauſe I trayn'd thee to my Houſe.
e thy ſhadow hath been thrall to me,
Gallery thy Picture hangs:
he ſubſtance ſhall endure the like,
l chayne theſe Legges and Armes of thine,
by Tyrannie theſe many yeeres
our Countrey, ſlaine our Citizens, our Sonnes and Husbands captiuate.
Ha, ha, ha.
Laugheſt thou Wretch?
h ſhall turne to mone,
I laugh to ſee your Ladyſhip ſo fond,
, that you haue ought but Talbots ſhadow,
to practiſe your ſeuerities.
Why? are not thou the man?
I am indeede.
Then haue I ſubſtance too.
No, no, I am but ſhadow of my ſelfe:
deceiu'd, my ſubſtance is not here;
you ſee, is but the ſmalleſt part,
proportion of Humanitie:
Madame, were the whole Frame here,
ch a ſpacious loftie pitch,
oſe were not ſufficient to contayn't.
This is a Riddling Merchant for the nonce,
e here, and yet he is not here:
theſe contrarieties agree?
That will I ſhew you preſently.
Winds his Horne, Drummes ſtrike vp, a Peale of Ordenance: Enter Souldiers.
you Madame? are you now perſwaded,
Talbot is but ſhadow of himſelfe?
his ſubſtance, ſinewes, armes, and ſtrength,
ich he yoaketh your rebellious Neckes,
our Cities, and ſubuerts your Townes,
moment makes them deſolate.
Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuſe,
ou art no leſſe then Fame hath bruited,
e then may be gathered by thy ſhape.
reſumption not prouoke thy wrath,
ſorry, that with reuerence
treatſine thee as thou art.
Be not diſmay'd, faire Lady, nor miſconſter
de of Talbot, as you did miſtake ard compoſition of his body.
u haue done, hath not offended me:
n ſatisfaction doe I craue,
But onely with your patience, that we may
Taſte of your Wine, and ſee what Cates you haue,
For Souldiers ſtomacks alwayes ſerue them well.
Countes. With all my heart, and thinke me honored,
To feaſt ſo great a Warriot in my Houſe. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerſet, Poole, and others.

Yorke. Great Lords and Gentlemen,
What meanes this ſilence?
Dare no man anſwer in a Caſe of Truth?
Suff. Within the Temple Hall we were too lowd,
The Garden here is more conuenient.
York. Then ſay at once, if I maintain'd the Truth:
Or elſe was wrangling Somerſet in th'error?
Suff. Faith I haue beene a Truant in the Law,
And neuer yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the Law vnto my will.
Som. Iudge you, my Lord of Warwicke, then betweene vs.
War. Between two Hawks, which flyes the higher pitch,
Between two Dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two Blades, which beares the better temper,
Between two Horſes, which doth beare him beſt,
Between two Girles, which hath the merryeſt eye,
I haue perhaps ſome ſhallow ſpirit of Iudgement:
But in theſe nice ſharpe Quillets of the Law,
Good faith I am no wiſer then a Daw.
York. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appeares ſo naked on my ſide,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
Som. And on my ſide it is ſo well apparell'd,
So cleare, ſo ſhining, and ſo euident,
That it will glimmer through a blind-mans eye.
York. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and ſo loth to ſpeake,
In dumbe ſignificants proclayme your thoughts:
Let him that is a true-borne Gentleman,
And ſtands vpon the honor of his birth,
If he ſuppoſe that I haue pleaded truth,
From off this Bryer pluck a white Roſe with me.
Som. Let him that is no Coward, nor no Flatterer,
But dare maintaine the partie of the truth,
Pluck a red Roſe from off this Thorne with me.
War. I loue no Colours: and without all colour
Of baſe inſinuating flatterie,
I pluck this white Roſe with Plantagenet.
Suff. I pluck this red Roſe, with young Somerſet,
And ſay withall, I thinke he held the right.
Vernon. Stay Lords and Gentlemen, and pluck no more
Till you conclude, that he vpon whoſe ſide
The feweſt Roſes are croptt from the Tree,
Shall yeeld the other in the right opinion.
Som. Good Maſter Vernon, it is well obiected:
If I haue feweſt, I ſubſcribe in ſilence.
York. And I.
Vernon. Then for the truth, and plainneſſe of the Caſe,
I pluck this pale and Maiden Bloſſome here,
Giuing my Verdict on the white Roſe ſide.
Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Leſt bleeding, you doe paint the white Roſe red,
And fall on my ſide ſo againſt your will.
Vernon. If I, my Lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion ſhall be Surgeon to my hurt,
And keepe me on the ſide where ſtill I am.
Som. Well, well, come on, who elſe?

Lawyer. Vn-

Lawyer. Vnlesse my Studie and my Bookes be falſe,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;
In ſigne whereof, I pluck a white Roſe too.
Yorke. Now Somerſet, where is your argument?
Som. Here in my Scabbard, meditating, that Shall dye your white Roſe in a bloody red.
York. Meane time your cheeks do counterfeit our Roſes:
For pale they looke with feare, as witneſſing
The truth on our ſide.
Som. No Plantagenet:
'Tis not for feare, but anger, that thy cheekes
Bluſh for pure ſhame, to counterfeit our Roſes,
And yet thy tongue will not confeſſe thy error.
Yorke. Hath not thy Roſe a Canker, Somerſet?
Som. Hath not thy Roſe a Thorne, Plantagenet?
Yorke. I, ſharpe and piercing to maintaine his truth,
Whiles thy conſuming Canker eates his falſehood.
Som. Well, Ile find friends to weare my bleeding Roſes,
That ſhall maintaine what I haue ſaid is true,
Where falſe Plantagenet dare not be ſeene.
Yorke. Now by this Maiden Bloſſome in my hand,
I ſcorne thee and thy faſhion, peeviſh Boy.
Suff. Turne not thy ſcornes this way, Plantagenet.
Yorke. Prowd Poole, I will, and ſcorne both him and thee.
Suff. Ile turne my part thereof into thy throat.
Som. Away, away, good William de la Poole,
We grace the Yeoman, by conuerſing with him.
Warw. Now by Gods will thou wrong'ſt him, Somerſet:
His Grandfather was Lyonel Duke of Clarence,
Third Sonne to the third Edward King of England:
Spring Creſtleſſe Yeomen from ſo deepe a Root?
Yorke. He beares him on the place's Priuiledge,
Or durſt not for his crauen heart ſay thus.
Som. By him that made me, Ile maintaine my words
On any Plot of Ground in Chriſtendome.
Was not thy Father, Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
For Treaſon executed in our late Kings dayes?
And by his Treaſon, ſtand'ſt not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient Gentry?
His Treſpas yet liues guiltie in thy blood,
And till thou be reſtor'd, thou art a Yeoman.
Yorke. My Father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to dye for Treaſon, but no Traytor;
And that Ile proue on better men then Somerſet,
Were growing time once ripened to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you your ſelfe,
Ile note you in my Booke of Memorie,
To ſcourge you for this apprehenſion:
Looke to it well, and ſay you are well warn'd.
Som. Ah, thou ſhalt finde vs ready for thee ſtill:
And know vs by theſe Colours for thy Foes,
For theſe, my friends in ſpight of thee ſhall weare.
Yorke. And by my Soule, this pale and angry Roſe,
As Cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for euer, and my Faction weare,
Vntill it wither with me to my Graue,
Or flouriſh to the height of my Degree.
Suff. Goe forward, and be choak'd with thy ambition:
And ſo farwell, vntill I meet thee next. Exit.
Som. Haue with thee Poole: Farwell ambitious Richard. Exit.
Yorke. How I am brau'd, and muſt perforce endure it?
Warw. This blot that they obiect againſt your Houſe,
Shall be whipt out in the next Parliament,
Call'd for the Truce of Wincheſter and Glouceſter:
And if thou be not then created Yorke,
I will not liue to be accounted Warwicke.
Meane time, in ſignall of my loue to thee,
Againſt proud Somerſet, and William Poole,
Will I vpon thy partie weare this Roſe.
And here I prophecie: this braule to day,
Growne to this faction in the Temple Garden,
Shall ſend betweene the Red-Roſe and the White,
A thouſand Soules to Death and deadly Night.
Yorke. Good Maſter Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalfe would plucke a Flower.
Ver. In your behalfe ſtill will I weare the ſame.
Lawyer. And ſo will I.
Yorke. Thankes gentle.
Come, let vs foure to Dinner: I dare ſay,
This Quarrell will drinke Blood another day.
Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chayre, and Iailors.

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here reſt himſelfe.
Euen like a man new haled from the Wrack,
So fare my Limbes with long Impriſonment:
And theſe gray Locks, the Purſuiuants of death,
Neſtor-like aged, in an Age of Care,
Argue the end of Edmond Mortimer.
Theſe Eyes, like Lampes, whoſe waſting Oyle is ſpent,
Waxe dimme, as drawing to their Exigent.
Weake Shoulders, ouer-borne with burthening Griefe,
And pyth-leſſe Armes, like to a withered Vine,
That droupes his ſappe-leſſe Branches to the ground.
Yet are theſe Feet, whoſe ſtrength-leſſe ſtay is numme,
(Vnable to ſupport this Lumpe of Clay)
Swift-winged with deſire to get a Graue,
As witting I no other comfort haue.
But tell me, Keeper, will my Nephew come?
Keeper. Richard Plantagenet, my Lord, will come:
We ſent vnto the Temple, vnto his Chamber,
And anſwer was return'd, that he will come.
Mort. Enough: my Soule ſhall then be ſatisfied.
Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine.
Since Henry Monmouth firſt began to reigne,
Before whoſe Glory I was great in Armes,
This loathſome ſequeſtration haue I had;
And euen ſince then, hath Richard beene obſcur'd,
Depriu'd of Honor and Inheritance.
But now, the Arbitrator of deſpaires,
Iuſt Death, kinde Vmpire of mens miſeries,
With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſſe me hence:
I would his troubles likewiſe were expir'd,
That ſo he might recouer what was loſt.

Enter Richard.

Keeper. My Lord, your louing Nephew now is come.
Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?
Rich. I, Noble Vncle, thus ignobly vs'd,
Your Nephew, late deſpiſed Richard, comes.
Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Neck,
And in his Boſom ſpend my latter gaſpe.
Oh tell me when my Lippes doe touch his Cheekes,
That I may kindly giue one fainting Kiſſe.
And now declare ſweet Stem from Yorkes great Stock,
Why didſt thou ſay of late thou were deſpis'd?

Rich. Firſt

rſt,Jeſus thine aged Back againſt mine Arme, aſt eaſe,Ile tell thee my Diſeaſe.
in argument vpon a Caſe.
rds there grew twixt Somerſet and me:
which tearmes,he vs'd his lauiſh tongue,
vpbrayd me with my Fathers death;
ibloquie ſet barres before my tongue,
the like I had requited him
e good Vncle, for my Fathers ſake,
of a true Plantagenet,
Alliance ſake, declare the cauſe
er,Earle of Cambridge,loſt his Head.
That cauſe(faire Nephew)that impriſon'd me,
deſtryn'd me all my flowring Youth,
fouleſome Dungeon, there to pyne,
ſed Inſtrument of his deceaſe.
Diſcouer more at large what cauſe that was,
ignorant, and cannot gueſſe
I will,if that my fading breath permit,
th approach not,ere my Tale be done.
e Fourth,Grandfather to this King,
his Nephew Richard Edwards Sonne, begotten, and the lawfull Heire
nd King,the Third of that Deſcent:
whoſe Reigne, the Percies of the North,
his Vſurpation moſt vniuſt,
r'd my aduancement to the Throne.
am mou'd thoſe Warlike Lords to this,
that (young Richard thus remou'd;
no Heire begotten of his Body)
next by Birth and Parentage:
y Mother,I derriued am mel Duke of Clarence,third Sonne
Edward the Third; whereas her, e of Gaunt doth bring his Pedigree,
e fourth of that Heroick Lyne.
e: as in this haughtie great attempt,
oured,to plant the rightfull Heire,
Libertie, and they their Liues.
es this,when Henry the Fift ſing his Father Bullingbrooke) did reigne;
ter,Earle of Cambridge,then deriu'd
nous Edmond Langley,Duke of Yorke, g my Siſters,that thy Mother was;
n pitty of my hard diſtreſſe,
e Army,weaning to redreame,
t inſtall'd me in the Diademe:
e reſt,ſo fell that Noble Earle, beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
the Title reſted,were ſuppreſt.
Of which,my Lord,your Honor is the laſt.
True; and thou ſeeſt,that I no Iſſue haue,
my fainting words doe warrant death:
my Heires;the reſt,I wiſh thee gather:
e wary in thy ſtudious care.
Thy graue admoniſhments preuayle with me:
e thinkes,my Fathers execution
hing leſſe then bloody Tyranny.
With ſilence,Nephew,be thou politick, eed in the Houſe of Lancaſter:
a Mountaine not to be remou'd.
thy Vncle is removing hence,
es doe their Courts. when they are cloy'd ng continuance in a ſetled place.
Vncle,would ſome part of my young yeeres
ht redreame the paſſage of your Age.

Mort. Thou do'ſt then wrong me,as a ſlaughterer doth,
Which giueth many Wounds,when one will kill.
Mourne not,except thou ſorrow for my good,
Onely giue order for my Funerall.
And ſo farewell, and faire be all thy hopes,
And proſperous be thy Life in Peace and Warre. Dyes.

Rich. And Peace,no Warre,befall thy parting Soule.
In Priſon haſt thou ſpent a Pilgrimage,
And like a Hermite ouer-paſt thy dayes.
Well,I will locke his Counſell in my Breſt,
And what I doe imagine, let that reſt.
Keepers conuey him hence,and I my ſelfe
Will ſee his Buryall better then his Life. Exit.
Here dyes the duskie Torch of Mortimer,
Choakt with Ambition of the meaner ſort.
And for thoſe Wrongs,thoſe bitter Iniuries,
Which Somerſet hath offer'd to my Houſe,
I doubt not,but with Honor to redreſſe.
And therefore haſte I to the Parliament,
Either to be reſtored to my Blood,
Or make my will th'aduantage of my good. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Flouriſh. Enter King, Exeter, Gloſter, Wincheſter, Warwick, Somerſet, Suffolk, Richard Plantagenet, Gloſter offers to put vp a Bill; Wincheſter ſnatches it, tears it.

Winch. Com'ſt thou with deepe premeditated Lines?
With written Pamphlets,ſtudiouſly deuis'd?
Humfrey of Gloſter,if thou canſt accuſe,
Or ought intend'ſt to lay vnto my charge,
Doe it without inuention,ſuddenly,
As I with ſudden,and extemporall ſpeech,
Purpoſe to anſwer what thou canſt obiect.

Glo. Preſumptuous Prieſt,this place cõmands my patiẽce,
Or thou ſhould'ſt finde thou haſt diſ-honor'd me.
Thinke not, although in Writing I preferr'd
The manner of thy vile outragious Crymes,
That therefore I haue forg'd,or am not able Verbatim to rehearſe the Methode of my Penne
No Prelate,ſuch is thy audacious wickednеſſe,
Thy lewd, peſtiferous, and diſſentious prancks,
As very Infants prattle of thy pride.
Thou art a moſt pernitious Vſurer,
Froward by nature,Enemie to Peace,
Laſcinious,wanton, more then well beſeemes
A man of thy Profeſſion,and Degree.
And for thy Treacherie,what's more manifeſt?
In that thou layd'ſt a Trap to ſtaine my Life,
As well at London Bridge,as at the Tower.
Beſide,I feare me,if thy thoughts were ſifted,
The King,thy Soueraigne,is not quite exempt
From enuious mallice of thy ſwelling heart.

Winch. Gloſter. I doe defie thee. Lords vouchſafe
To giue me hearing what I ſhall reply.
If I were couetous,ambitious,or peruerſe,
As he will haue me: how am I ſo poore?
Or how haps it,I ſeeke not to aduance
Or raiſe my ſelfe? but keepe my wonted Calling.
And for Diſſention,who preferreth Peace
More then I doe? except I be prouok'd.
No,my good Lords,it is not that offendſ,
It is not that,that hath incens'd the Duke:
It is becauſe no one ſhould ſway but hee,
No one,but hee, ſhould be about the King;
And that engenders Thunder in his breaſt,

And makes him rore these Accusations forth.
But he shall know I am as good.
Glost. As good?
Thou Bastard of my Grandfather.
Winch. I, Lordly Sir: for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in anothers Throne?
Glost. Am I not Protector, saucie Priest?
Winch. And am not I a Prelate of the Church?
Glost. Yes, as an Out-law in a Castle keepes,
And vseth it, to patronage his Theft.
Winch. Vnreuerent Gloucester.
Glost. Thou art reuerent,
Touching thy Spirituall Function, not thy Life.
Winch. Rome shall remedie this.
Warw. Roame thither then.
My Lord, it were your durie to forbeare.
Sem. I, see the Bishop be not ouer-borne:
Me thinkes my Lord should be Religious,
And know the Office that belongs to such.
Warw. Me thinkes his Lordship should be humbler,
It fitteth not a Prelate so to plead.
Sem. Yes, when his holy State is toucht so neere.
Warw. State holy, or vnhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his Grace Protector to the King?
Rich. Plantagenet I see must hold his tongue,
Least it be said, Speake Sirrha when you should:
Must your bold Verdict enter talke with Lords?
Else would I haue a fling at Winchester.
King. Vnckles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The speciall Watch-men of our English Weale,
I would prouayle, if Prayers might prouayle,
To ioyne your hearts in loue and amitie.
Oh, what a Scandall is it to our Crowne,
That two such Noble Peeres as ye should iarre?
Beleeue me, Lords, my tender yeeres can tell,
Ciuill dissention is a viperous Worme,
That gnawes the Bowels of the Common-wealth.
A noyse within, Downe with the Tawny-Coats.
King. What tumult's this?
Warw. An Vprore, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the Bishops men.
A noyse againe, Stones, Stones.

Enter Maior.

Maior. Oh my good Lords, and vertuous Henry,
Pitty the Citie of London, pitty vs:
The Bishop, and the Duke of Glosters men,
Forbidden late to carry any Weapon,
Haue fill'd their Pockets full of peeble stones;
And banding themselues in contrary parts,
Doe pelt so fast at one anothers Pate,
That many haue their giddy braynes knockt out:
Our Windowes are broke downe in euery Street,
And we, for feare, compell'd to shut our Shops.

Enter in skirmish with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on allegeance to our selfe,
To hold your slaughtring hands, and keepe the Peace:
Pray' Vnckle Gloster mitigate this strife.
1. Seruing. Nay, if we be forbidden Stones, we'le fall to it with our Teeth.
2. Seruing. Doe what ye dare, we are as resolute.
Skirmish againe.
Glost. You of my household, leaue this peeuish broyle,
And set this vnaccustom'd fight aside.
3. Serv. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iust, and vpright; and for your Royall Birth,
Inferior to none, but to his Maiestie:
And ere that we will suffer such a Prince,
So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,
To be disgraced by an Inke-horne Mate,
Wee and our Wiues and Children all will fight,
And haue our bodyes slaughtred by thy foot.
1 Serv. I, and the very parings of our Nayles
Shall pitch a Field when we are dead.
Begin againe.
Glost. Stay, stay, I say:
And if you loue me, as you say you doe,
Let me perswade you to forbeare a while.
King. Oh, how this discord doth afflict my Soule.
Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold
My sighes and teares, and will not once relent?
Who should be pittifull, if you be not?
Or who should study to prefer a Peace,
If holy Church-men take delight in broyles?
Warw. Yeeld my Lord Protector, yeeld Winchester,
Except you meane with obstinate repulse
To slay your Soueraigne, and destroy the Realme.
You see what Mischiefe, and what Murther too,
Hath beene enacted through your enmitie:
Then be at peace except ye thirst for blood.
Winch. He shall submit, or I will neuer yeeld.
Glost. Compassion on the King commands me stoope.
Or I would see his heart out, ere the Priest
Should euer get that priuiledge of me.
Warw. Behold my Lord of Winchester, the Duke
Hath banisht moodie discontented fury,
As by his smoothed Browes it doth appeare:
Why looke you still so sterne, and tragicall?
Glost. Here Winchester, I offer thee my Hand.
King. Fie Vnckle Beauford, I haue heard you preach
That Malice was a great and grieuous sinne:
And will not you maintaine the thing you teach?
But proue a chiefe offendor in the same.
Warw. Sweet King: the Bishop hath a kindly gird.
For shame my Lord of Winchester relent;
What, shall a Child instruct you what to doe?
Winch. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yeeld to thee
Loue for thy Loue, and Hand for Hand I giue.
Glost. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.
See here my Friends and louing Countreymen,
This token serueth for a Flagge of Truce,
Betwixt our selues, and all our followers:
So helpe me God, as I dissemble not.
Winch. So helpe me God, as I intend it not.
King. Oh louing Vnckle, kinde Duke of Gloster,
How ioyfull am I made by this Contract.
Away my Masters, trouble vs no more,
But ioyne in friendship, as your Lords haue done.
1. Serv. Content, Ile to the Surgeons.
2. Serv. And so will I.
3. Serv. And I will see what Physick the Tauerne affords.
Exeunt.
Warw. Accept this Scrowle, most gracious Soueraigne,
Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,
We doe exhibite to your Maiestie.
Glo. Well vrg'd, my Lord of Warwick: for sweet Prince,
And if your Grace marke euery circumstance,
You haue great reason to doe Richard right,
Especially for those occasions
At Eltam Place I told your Maiestie.
King. And

And those occasions, Vncle, were of force:
my loving Lords, our pleasure is,
rd be restored to his Blood.
Let Richard be restored to his Blood,
Fathers wrongs be recompenc't.
As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.
Richard will be true, not that alone,
whole Inheritance I giue, belong vnto the House of Yorke, ee you spring, by Lineall Descent.
hy humble seruant vowes obedience,
le seruice, till the point of death.
oope then, and set your Knee against my Foot,
erdon of that dutie done,
with the valiant Sword of Yorke.
d like a true Plantagenet, ated Princely Duke of Yorke.
nd so thriue Richard, as thy foes may fall,
dutie springs, so perish they,
e one thought against your Maiesty.
coone high Prince, the mighty Duke of Yorke.
ish base Prince, ignoble Duke of Yorke.
ow will it best auaile your Maiestie,
he Seas, and to be Crown'd in France:
re of a King engenders loue is Subiects, and his loyall Friends, imates his Enemies.
When Glosser sayes the word, King Henry goes,
y counsaile cuts off many Foes.
Your Ships alreadie are in readinesse.
Sonet Florish. Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

we may march in England, or in France,
what is likely to ensue:
ssention growne betwixt the Peeres,
ot fained ashes of forg'd loue,
t last breake out into a flame,
members rot but by degree,
and flesh and sinewes fall away,
base and enuious discord breed.
Iarre that fatall Prophecie,
he sonne of Henry, nam'd the Fift,
mouth of every sucking Babe,
y borne at Monmouth should winne all,
borne at Windsor, loose all:
o plaine, that Exeter doth wish,
may finish, ere that hapleſſe time. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Pucell disguis'd, with foure Souldiers with Sacks vpon their backs.

These are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan, Vnto our Pollicy must make a breach.
Be wary how you place your words,
the vulgar sort of Market men,
to gather Money for their Corne.
entrance, as I hope we shall,
e finde the slouthfull Watch but weake,
e giue notice to our friends,
e the Dolphin may encounter them.

Souldier. Our Sacks shall be a meane to sack the City.
And we be Lords and Rulers ouer Roan,
Therefore wee'le knock. Knock,
Watch. Che la.
Pucell. Pouures commes la pouure gens de Frauncez,
Poore Market folkes that come to sell their Corne.
Watch. Enter, goe in, the Market Bell is rung.
Pucell. Now Roan, Ile shake thy Bulwarkes to the ground. Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson.

Charles. Saint Dennis blesse this happy Stratageme,
And once againe wee'le sleepe secure in Roan.
Bastard. Here entred Pucell, and her Practisants:
Now she is there, how will she specifie?
Here is the best and safest passage in.
Reig. By thrusting out a Torch from yonder Tower,
Which once discern'd, shewes that her meaning is,
No way to that (for weaknesse) which she entred.

Enter Pucell on the top, thrusting out a Torch burning.

Pucell. Behold, this is the happy Wedding Torch,
That ioyneth Roan vnto her Countreymen,
But burning fatall to the Talbonites
Bastard. See Noble Charles the Beacon of our friend,
The burning Torch in yonder Turret stands.
Charles. Now shine it like a Comment of Reuenge,
A Prophet to the fall of all our Foes.
Reig. Deferre no time, delayes haue dangerous ends,
Enter and cry, the Dolphin, presently,
And then doe execution on the Watch. Alarum.

An Alarum. Talbot in an Excursion.

Talb. France, thou shalt rue this Treason with thy teares,
If Talbot but suruiue thy Treachery.
Pucell that Witch, that damned Sorceresse,
Hath wrought this hellish Mischiefe vnawares,
That hardly we escap't the Pride of France. Exit.

An Alarum: Excursions. Bedford brought in sicke in a Chayre.

Enter Talbot and Burgonie without: within, Pucell, Charles, Bastard, and Reignier on the Walls.

Pucell. God morrow Gallants, want ye Corn for Bread?
I thinke the Duke of Burgonie will fast,
Before hee'le buy againe at such a rate.
'Twas full of Darnell: doe you like the taste?
Burg. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and shamelesse Curtizan,
I trust ere long to choake thee with thine owne,
And make thee curse the Harueſt of that Corne.
Charles. Your Grace may starue (perhaps) before that time.
Bedf. Oh let no words, but deedes, reuenge this Treason.
Pucell. What will you doe, good grey-beard?
Breake a Launce, and runne a-Tilt at Death,
Within a Chayre.
Talb. Foule Fiend of France, and Hag of all despight, Incompass'd with thy lustfull Paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,
And twit with Cowardise a man halfe dead?
Damsell, Ile haue a bowt with you againe,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.
Pucell. Are ye so hot, Sir: yet Pucell hold thy peace,
If Talbot doe but Thunder, Raine will follow.

They whisper together in counsell.

God speed the Parliament: who shall be the Speaker?
Talb. Dare

Talb. Dare yee come forth, and meet vs in the field?
Pucell. Belike your Lordſhip takes vs then for fooles,
To try if that our owne be ours, or no.
Talb. I ſpeake not to that rayling Hecate,
But vnto thee Alanſon, and the reſt.
Will ye, like Souldiors, come and fight it out?
Alanſ. Seignior no.
Talb. Seignior hang: baſe Muleteers of France,
Like Peſant foot-Boyes doe they keepe the Walls,
And dare not take vp Armes, like Gentlemen.
Pucell. Away Captaines, let's get vs from the Walls,
For Talbot meanes no goodneſſe by his Lookes.
God b'uy my Lord, we came but to tell you
That wee are here. Exeunt from the Walls.
Talb. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or elſe reproach be Talbots greateſt ſame.
Vow Burgonie, by honor of thy Houſe,
Prickt on by publike Wrongs ſuſtain'd in France,
Either to get the Towne againe, or dye.
And I, as ſure as English Henry liues,
And as his Father here was Conqueror;
As ſure as in this late betrayed Towne,
Great Cordelions Heart was buryed;
So ſure I ſweare, to get the Towne, or dye.
Burg. My Vowes are equall partners with thy Vowes.
Talb. But ere we goe, regard this dying Prince,
The valiant Duke of Bedford: Come my Lord,
We will beſtow you in ſome better place,
Fitter for ſickneſſe, and for crazie age.
Bedf. Lord Talbot, doe not ſo diſhonour me:
Here will I ſit, before the Walls of Roan,
And will be partner of your weale or woe.
Burg. Couragious Bedford, let vs now perſwade you
Bedf. Not to be gone from hence: for once I read,
That ſtout Pendragon, in his Litter ſick,
Came to the field, and vanquiſhed his foes.
Me thinkes I ſhould reuiue the Souldiors hearts,
Becauſe I euer found them as my ſelfe.
Talb. Vndaunted ſpirit in a dying breaſt,
Then be it ſo: Heauens keepe old Bedford ſafe.
And now no more adoe, braue Burgonie,
But gather we our Forces out of hand,
And ſet vpon our boaſting Enemie Exit.

An Alarum. Excurſions. Enter Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, and a Captaine.

Capt. Whither away Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, in ſuch haſte
Falſt Whither away? to ſaue my ſelfe by flight,
We are like to haue the ouerthrow againe.
Capt. What? will you flye, and leaue Lord Talbot?
Falſt I, all the Talbots in the World, to ſaue my life. Exit.
Capt. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee. Exit.

Retreat. Excurſions. Pucell, Alanſon, and Charles flye.

Bedf. Now quiet Soule, depart when Heauen pleaſe,
For I haue ſeene our Enemies ouerthrow.
What is the truſt or ſtrength of fooliſh men?
They that of late were daring with their ſcoffes,
Are glad and faine by flight to ſaue themſelues.
Bedford dyes, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire.

An Alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgoyne, and the reſt.

Talb. Loſt, and recouered in a day againe,
This is a double Honor, Burgonie:
Yet Heauens haue glory for this Victorie.
Burg. Warlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
Inſhrines thee in his heart, and there erects
Thy noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.
Talb. Thanks gentle Duke: but where is Pucell now?
I thinke her old Familiar is aſleepe.
Now where's the Baſtards braues, and Charles his gliſts?
What all amort? Roan hangs her head for griefe,
That ſuch a valiant Company are fled.
Now will we take ſome order in the Towne,
Placing therein ſome expert Officers,
And then depart to Paris, to the King,
For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.
Burg. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaſeth Burgun.
Talb. But yet before we goe, let's not forget
The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But ſee his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
A brauer Souldier neuer couched Lance,
A gentler Heart did neuer ſway in Court.
But Kings and mightieſt Potentates muſt die,
For that's the end of humane miſerie. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Baſſard, Alanſon, Pucell.

Pucell. Diſmay not (Princes) at this accident,
Nor grieue that Roan is ſo recouered:
Care is no cure, but rather corroſiue,
For things that are not to be remedy'd.
Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a Peacock ſweepe along his trayle,
We'le pull his Plumes, and take away his Troyne,
If Dolphin and the reſt will be but rul'd.
Charles. We haue been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy Cunning had no diffidence,
One ſudden Foyle ſhall neuer breed diſtruſt.
Baſſard. Search out thy wit for ſecret pollicies,
And we will make thee famous through the World.
Alanſ. We'le ſet thy Statue in ſome holy place,
And haue thee reuerenc't like a bleſſed Saint.
Employ thee then, ſweet Virgin, for our good.
Pucell. Then thus it muſt be, this doth Ioane deuiſe:
By faire perſwaſions, mixt with ſugred words,
We will entice the Duke of Burgonie
To leaue the Talbot, and to follow vs.
Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
France were no place for Henryes Warriors,
Nor ſhould that Nation boaſt it ſo with vs,
But be extirped from our Prouinces.
Alanſ. For euer ſhould they be expulſ'd from France,
And not haue Title of an Earledome here.
Pucell. Your Honors ſhall perceiue how I will worke,
To bring this matter to the wiſhed end.
Drumme ſounds a farre off.
Heark'e, by the ſound of Drumme you may perceiue
Their Powers are marching vnto Paris-ward.
Here ſound an Engliſh March.
There goes the Talbot, with his Colours ſpread,
And all the Troopes of Engliſh after him.
French

French March.

the Rereward comes the Duke and his:
e in fauor makes him lagge behinde.
n a Parley, we will talke with him.
Trumpets ſound a Parley.

rles. A Parley with the Duke of Burgonie.

g. Who craues a Parley with the Burgonie?

nl. The Princely Charles of France, thy Countrey-

g. What ſay'ſt thou Charles? for I am marching rles. Speake Pucell, and enchaunt him with thy

L. Braue Burgonie, vndoubted hope of France,

g. Speake on, but be not ouer-tedious.

el. Looke on thy Country, look on fertile France, the Cities and the Townes defac'd, ſting Ruine of the cruell Foe,
kes the Mother on her lowly Babe,
Death doth cloſe his tender-dying Eyes.
the pining Maladie of France:
the Wounds, the moſt vnnaturall Wounds,
thou thy ſelfe haſt giuen her woefull Breſt.
ne thy edged Sword another way,

op of Blood drawne from thy Countries Boſome,
I greeue thee more then ſtreames of forraine gore.
e thee therefore with a flood of Teares,
uſh away thy Countries ſtayned Spots.

g. Either ſhe hath bewitcht me with her words,
rure makes me ſuddenly relent.

L. Beſides, all French and France exclaimes on thee
ing thy Birth and lawfull Progenie.
oyn'ſt thou with, but with a Lordly Nation,
will not truſt thee, but for profits ſake?
Talbot hath ſet footing once in France,
ſhion'd thee that Inſtrument of Ill,
then, but Engliſh Henry will be Lord,
hou be thruſt out, like a Fugitiue?
e to minde, and marke but this for proofe:
or the Duke of Orleance thy Foe?
es he not in England Priſoner?
hen they heard he was thine Enemie,
ſet him free, without his Ranſome pay'd,
the of Burgonie and all his friends,
en, thou fight'ſt againſt thy Countreymen,
oyn'ſt with them: will be thy ſlaughter-men.
, come, returne; returne thou wandering Lord,
y and the reſt will take thee in their armes.

rg. I am vanquiſhed:
naughtie wordes of hers
ntz'red me like roaring Cannon-ſhot, nade me almoſt yeeld vpon my knees.
e me Countrey, and ſweet Countreymen:
ards accept this heartie kind embrace,
rces and my Power of Men are yours
well Talbot, Ile no longer truſt thee.

rl. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne aaſtard. And doth beget new Courage in our te.

nſ. Pucell hath bravely play'd her part in this,
ſhe deſerue a Coronet of Gold.

Charles. Now let vs on, my Lords,
And ioyne our Powers,
And ſeeke how we may prejudice the Foe. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerſet, Warwicke, Exeter: To them, with his Souldiers, Talbot.

Talb. My gracious Prince, and honorable Peeres,
Hearing of your arriuall in this Realme,
I haue a while giuen Truce vnto my Warres,
To doe my dutie to my Soueraigne.
In ſigne whereof, this Arme, that hath reclaym'd
To your obedience, fifteene Forreſſes,
Twelue Cities, and ſeuen walled Townes of ſtrength,
Beſide fiue hundred Priſoners of eſteeme;
Lets fall his Sword before your Highneſſe feet:
And with ſubmiſſiue loyaltie of heart
Aſcribes the Glory of his Conqueſt got,
Firſt to my God, and next vnto your Grace.

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, Vncle Gloucester,
That hath ſo long beene reſident in France?

Glou. Yes, if it pleaſe your Maieſtie, my Liege.

King. Welcome braue Captaine, and victorious Lord.
When I was young (as yet I am not old)
I doe remember how my Father ſaid,
A ſtouter Champion neuer handled Sword.
Long ſince we were reſolued of your truth,
Your faithfull ſeruice, and your toyle in Warre:
Yet neuer haue you taſted our Reward,
Or beene regarded with ſo much as Thanks,
Becauſe till now, we neuer ſaw your face.
Therefore ſtand vp, and for theſe good deſerts,
We here create you Earle of Shrewsbury,
And in our Coronation take your place.
Sennet. Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Manet Vernon and Baſſet.

Vern. Now Sir, to you that were ſo hot at Sea,
Diſgracing of theſe Colours that I weare,
In honor of my Noble Lord of Yorke
Dar'ſt thou maintaine the former words thou ſpak'ſt?

Baſſ. Yes Sir, as well as you dare patronage
The enuious barking of your ſawcie Tongue,
Againſt my Lord the Duke of Somerſet.

Vern. Sirrha, thy Lord I honour as he is.

Baſſ. Why, what is he? as good a man as Yorke.

Vern. Hearke ye: not ſo: in witneſſe take ye that.
Strikes him.

Baſſ. Villaine, thou knoweſt
The Law of Armes is ſuch,
That who ſo draweth a Sword, 'tis preſent death,
Or elſe this Blow ſhould broach thy deareſt Bloud.
But Ile vnto his Maieſtie, and craue,
I may haue libertie to venge this Wrong,
When thou ſhalt ſee, Ile meet thee to thy coſt.

Vern. Well miſcreant, Ile be there as ſoone as you,
And after meete you, ſooner then you would.
Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Glocester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset, Warwicke, Talbot, and Governour Exeter.

Glo. Lord Bishop set the Crowne vpon his head.

Win. God saue King Henry of that name the first.

Glo. Now Governour of Paris take your oath,
That you elect no other King but him;
Esteeme none Friends, but such as are his Friends,
And none your Foes, but such as shall pretend Malicious practises against his State:
This shall ye do, so helpe you righteous God.

Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. My gracious Soueraigne, as I rode from Calice,
To haste vnto your Coronation:
A Letter was deliuer'd to my hands,
Writ to your Grace, from th'Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy, and thee:
I vow'd (base Knight) when I did meete thee next,
To teare the Garter from thy Crauens legge,
Which I haue done, because (vnworthily)
Thou was't installed in that High Degree.
Pardon me Princely Henry, and the rest:
This Dastard, at the battell of Poictiers,
When (but in all) I was fiue thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a stroke was giuen,
Like to a trustie Squire, did run away.
In which assault, we lost twelue hundred men
My selfe, and diuers Gentlemen beside,
Were there surpris'd, and taken prisoners.
Then iudge (great Lords) if I haue done amisse:
Or whether that such Cowards ought to weare
This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill beseeming any common man;
Much more a Knight, a Captaine, and a Leader.

Tal. When first this Order was ordain'd my Lords,
Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth;
Valiant, and Vertuous, full of haughtie Courage,
Such as were growne to credit by the warres:
Not fearing Death, nor shrinking for Distresse,
But alwayes resolute, in most extremes.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but vsurpe the Sacred name of Knight,
Profaning this most Honourable Order,
And should (if I were worthy to be Iudge)
Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-borne Swaine,
That doth presume to boast of Gentle blood.

K. Staine to thy Countrymen, thou hear'st thy doome:
Be packing therefore, thou that was't a knight:
Henceforth we banish thee on paine of death.
And now Lord Protector, view the Letter
Sent from our Vncle Duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What meanes his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Stile?
No more but plaine and blunt? (To the King.)
Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?
Or doth this churlish Superscription
Pretend some alteration in good will?
What's heere? I haue vpon especiall cause,
Mou'd with compassion of my Countries wracke,
Together with the pittifull complaints
Of such as your oppression feedes vpon,
Forsaken your pernicious Faction,
And ioyn'd with Charles, the rightfull King of France.
O monstrous Treachery! Can this be so?
That in alliance, amity, and oathes,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

King. What? doth my Vncle Burgundy reuolt?

Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become your foe.

King. Is that the worst this Letter doth containe?

Glo. It is the worst, and all (my Lord) he writes.

King. Why then Lord Talbot there shall talke with him,
And giue him chastisement for this abuse.
How say you (my Lord) are you not content?

Tal. Content, my Liege? Yes. But I am prisoner,
I should haue begg'd I might haue been employd.

King. Then gather strength, and march vnto him straight:
Let him perceiue how ill we brooke his Treason,
And what offence it is to flout his Friends.

Tal. I go my Lord, in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes.

Enter Vernon and Basse.

Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Soueraigne.

Bas. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too.

Yorke. This is my Seruant, heare him Noble Prince.

Som. And this is mine (sweet Henry) fauour him.

King. Be patient Lords, and giue them leaue to speak.
Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime,
And wherefore craue you Combate? Or with whom?

Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.

King. What is that wrong, whereof you both complain?
First let me know, and then Ile answer you.

Bas. Crossing the Sea, from England into France,
This Fellow heere with enuious carping tongue,
Vpbraided me about the Rose I weare,
Saying, the sanguine colour of the Leaues
Did represent my Masters blushing cheekes:
When stubbornly he did repugne the truth,
About a certaine question in the Law,
Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke, and him:
With other vile and ignominious tearmes.
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my Lords worthinesse,
I craue the benefit of Law of Armes.

Ver. And that is my petition (Noble Lord:)
For though he seeme with forged quaint conceite
To set a glosse vpon his bold intent,
Yet know (my Lord) I was prouok'd by him,
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleneſſe of this Flower,
Bewray'd the faintnesse of my Masters heart.

Yorke. Will not this malice Somerset be left?

Som. Your priuate grudge my Lord of York, will out,
Though ne're so cunningly you smother it.

King. Good Lord, what madnesse rules in braine-sicke men,
When for so slight and friuolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise?
Good Cosins both of Yorke and Somerset,
Quiet your selues (I pray) and be at peace.

Yorke. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,
And then your Highnesse shall command a Peace.

Som. The quarrell toucheth none but vs alone,
Betwixt our selues let vs decide it then.

Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas.

Baſ. Confirme it ſo, mine honourable Lord.

Glo. Confirme it ſo? Confounded be your ſtrife,
And perish ye with your audacious prate,
Presumptuous vassals, are you not asham'd
With this immodest clamorous outrage,
To trouble and disturbe the King, and Vs?
And you my Lords, me thinkes you do not well
To beare with their perverse Objections:
Much lesse to take occasion from their mouthes,
To raise a mutiny betwixt your selues,
Let me perswade you take a better course.

Exe. It greeues his Highnesse,
Good my Lords, be Friends.

King. Come hither you that would be Combatants:
Henceforth I charge you, as you loue our fauour,
Quite to forget this Quarrell, and the cause.
And you my Lords: Remember where we are,
In France, amongst a fickle wauering Nation:
If they perceiue dissention in our lookes,
And that within our selues we disagree;
How will their grudging stomackes be prouok'd
To wilfull Disobedience, and Rebell?
Beside, What infamy will there arise,
When Forraigne Princes shall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henries Peeres, and cheefe Nobility,
Destroy'd themselues, and lost the Realme of France?
Oh thinke vpon the Conquest of my Father,
My tender yeares, and let vs not forgoe
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.
Let me be Vmpire in this doubtfull strife:
I see no reason if I weare this Rose,
That any one should therefore be suspitious
I more incline to Somerset, than Yorke:
Both are my kinsmen, and I loue them both.
As well they may vpbray'd me with my Crowne,
Because (forsooth) the King of Scots is Crown'd.
But your discretions better can perswade,
Then I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let vs still continue peace, and loue.
Cosin of Yorke, we institute your Grace
To be our Regent in these parts of France:
And good my Lord of Somerset, vnite
Your Troopes of horsemen, with his Bands of foote,
And like true Subiects, sonnes of your Progenitors,
Go cheerefully together, and digest
Your angry Choller on your Enemies.
Our Selfe, my Lord Protector, and the rest,
After some respit, will returne to Calice;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be presented by your Victories,
With Charles, Alanson, and that Traiterous rout

Exeunt [Manet Yorke, Warwick, Exeter, Vernon.

War. My Lord of Yorke, I promise you the King
Prettily (me thought) did play the Orator.

Yorke. And so he did, but yet I like it not,
In that he weares the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush, that was but his fancie, blame him not,
I dare presume (sweet Prince) he thought no harme.

Yorke. And if I wish he did. But let it rest,
Other affayres must now be managed. Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. Well didst thou Richard to suppresse thy voice:
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I feare we should haue seene decipher'd there
More rancorous spight, more furious raging broyles,
Then yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd:
But howsoere, no simple man that sees
This iarring discord of Nobilitie,
This shouldering of each other in the Court,
This factious bandying of their Fauourites,
But that it doth presage some ill euent.
'Tis much, when Sceptors are in Childrens hands:
But more, when Enuy breeds vnkinde deuision,
There comes the ruine, there begins confusion. Exit

Enter Talbot with Trumpe and Drummer, before Bordeaux.

Tal. Go to the Gates of Burdeaux Trumpeter, Summon their Generall vnto the Wall. Sounds.

Enter Generall aloft.

English Iohn Talbot (Captaines) call you forth,
Seruant in Armes to Harry King of England,
And thus he would. Open your Citie Gates,
Be humble to vs, call my Soueraigne yours,
And do him homage as obedient Subiects,
And Ile withdraw me, and my bloody power.
But if you frowne vpon this proffer'd Peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,
Who in a moment, euen with the earth,
Shall lay your stately, and ayre-brauing Towers,
If you forsake the offer of their loue.

Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,
Our Nations terror, and their bloody scourge,
The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,
On vs thou canst not enter but by death:
For I protest we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight.
If thou retire, the Dolphin well appointed,
Stands with the snares of Warre to tangle thee.
On either hand thee, there are squadrons pitcht,
To wall thee from the liberty of Flight;
And no way canst thou turne thee for redresse,
But death doth front thee with apparant spoyle,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face:
Ten thousand French haue ta'ne the Sacrament,
To rytue their dangerous Artillerie
Vpon no Christian soule but English Talbot.
Lo, there thou standst a breathing valiant man
Of an inuincible vnconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest Glorie of thy praise,
That I thy enemy dew thee withall:
For ere the Glasse that now begins to runne,
Finish the processe of his sandy hourse,
These eyes that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee withered, bloody, pale, and dead.
Drum a farre off.
Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,
Sings heauy Musicke to thy timorous soule,
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out. Exit

Tal. He Fables not, I heare the enemie:
Out some light Horsemen, and peruse their Wings.
O negligent and heedlesse Discipline,
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale?
A little Heard of Englands timorous Deere,
Maz'd with a yelping kennell of French Curres.
If we be English Deere, be then in blood,
Not Rascall-like to fall downe with a pinch,
But rather moodie mad: And desperate Stagges,

Turne

Turne on the bloody Hounds with heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards stand aloofe at bay:
Sell every man his life as deere as mine,
And they shall finde deere Deere of vs my Friends.
God, and S. George, Talbot and Englands right,
Prosper our Colours in this dangerous fight.

Enter a Messenger that meets Yorke. Enter Yorke with Trumpet, and many Soldiers.

Yorke. Are not the speedy scouts return'd againe,
That dog'd the mighty Army of the Dolphin?

Mess. They are return'd my Lord, and give it out,
That he is march'd to Burdeaux with his power
To fight with Talbot as he march'd along.
By your espyals were discouered
Two mightier Troopes then that the Dolphin led,
Which ioyn'd with him, and made their march for (Burdeaux

Yorke. A plague vpon that Villaine Somerset,
That thus delayes my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were leuied for this siege.
Renowned Talbot doth expect my ayde,
And I am lowred by a Traitor Villaine,
And cannot helpe the noble Cheualier:
God comfort him in this necessity:
If he miscarry, farewell Warres in France.

Enter another Messenger.

2. Mes. Thou Princely Leader of our English strength,
Neuer so needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the rescue of the Noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waste of Iron,
And hem'd about with grim destruction:
To Burdeaux warlike Duke, to Burdeaux Yorke,
Else farwell Talbot, France, and Englands honor.

Yorke. O God, that Somerset who in proud heart
Doth stop my Corneta, were in Talbots place,
So should we saue a valiant Gentleman,
By forfeyting a Traitor, and a Coward:
Mad ire, and wrathfull fury makes me weepe,
That thus we dye, while remisse Traitors sleepe.

Mes. O send some succour to the distrest Lord.

Yorke. He dies, we loose: I breake my warlike word:
We mourne, France smiles: We loose, they daily get,
All long of this vile Traitor Somerset.

Mes. Then God take mercy on braue Talbots soule,
And on his Sonne yong Iohn, who two houres since,
I met in trauaile towards his warlike Father;
This seuen yeeres did not Talbot see his sonne,
And now they meete where both their liues are done.

Yorke. Alas, what ioy shall noble Talbot haue,
To bid his yong sonne welcome to his Graue:
Away, vexation almost stoppes my breath,
That sundred friends greete in the houre of death.
Lucie farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot ayde the man.
Maine, Blois, Poytiers, and Tourez, are wonne away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Exit

Mes. Thus while the Vulture of sedition,
Feedes in the bosome of such great Commanders,
Sleeping neglection doth betray to losse:
The Conquest of our scarse-cold Conqueror,
That euer-liuing man of Memorie,
Henrie the fift: Whiles they each other crosse,
Liues, Honours, Lands, and all, hurrie to losse.

Enter Somerset with his Armie.

Som. It is too late, I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted. All our generall force,
Might with a sally of the very Towne
Be buckled with: the ouer-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloster of former Honor
By this vnheedfull, desperate, wilde aduenture:
Yorke set him on to fight, and dye in shame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.

Cap. Here is Sir William Lucie, who with me
Set from our ore-matcht forces forth for ayde.

Som. How now Sir William, whether were you sent?

Lu. Whether my Lord, from bought & sold L. Talbot,
Who ring'd about with bold aduersitie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerset,
To beate assayling death from his weake Regions:
And whiles the honourable Captaine there
Drops bloody sweat from his warre-wearied limbes,
And in aduantage lingring looker for rescue,
You his false hopes, the trust of Englands honor,
Keepe off aloofe with worthlesse emulation:
Let not your priuate discord keepe away
The leuied succours that should lend him ayde,
While he renowned Noble Gentleman
Yeeld vp his life vnto a world of oddes.
Orleance the Bastard, Charles, Burgundie,
Alanson, Reignard, compasse him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. Yorke set him on, Yorke should haue sent him ayde.

Lu. And Yorke as fast vpon your Grace exclaimes,
Swearing that you with-hold his leuied hoast,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lyes: He might haue sent, & had the Horse
I owe him little Duetie, and lesse Loue,
And take fowle scorne to fawne on him by sending.

Lu. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now intrapt the Noble-minded Talbot:
Neuer to England shall he beare his life,
But dies betrai'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come go, I will dispatch the Horsemen strait:
Within fiue houres, they will be at his ayde.

Lu. Too late comes rescue, he is tane or slaine,
For flye he could not, if he would haue fled:
And flye would Talbot neuer though he might.

Som. If he be dead, braue Talbot then adieu.

Lu. His Fame liues in the world. His Shame in you
Exeunt

Enter Talbot and his Sonne.

Tal. O yong Iohn Talbot, I did send for thee
To tutor thee in stratagems of Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reuiu'd,
When sapleste Age, and weake vnable limbes
Should bring thy Father to his drooping Chaire.
But O malignant and ill-boading Starres!
Now thou art come vnto a Feast of death,
A terrible and vnauoyded danger:
Therefore deare Boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And I'le direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sodaine flight. Come, dally not, be gone.

Iohn. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne?
And

Shall

e? O, if you loue my Mother,
ther Honorable Name,
ftard, and a Slaue of me:
ll ſay, he is not Talbots blood,
d, when Noble Talbot ſtood.
,to reuenge my death, if I be ſlaine.
ast flyes ſo, will ne're returne againe.
e both ſtay, we both are ſure to dye.
let me ſtay, and Father doe you flye:
reat, ſo your regard ſhould be;
knowne, no loſſe is knowne in me.
h, the French can little boaſt;
will, in you all hopes are loſt.
ſtayne the Honor you haue wonne,
ll, that no Exploit haue done
'antage, euery one will ſweare:
they'le ſay it was for feare.
ope that euer I will ſtay, ree I ſhrinke and run away:
nee I begge Mortalitie,
life, preſerue'd with Infamie.
I all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?
ther then Ile ſhame my Mothers Wombe, on my Bleſſing I command thee goe.
ight I will, but not to flye the Foe.
t of thy Father may be ſau'd in thee.
part of him, but will be ſhame in mee.
e never hadſt Renowne, nor canſt not loſe it.
your renowned Name: ſhall flight abuſe it?
others charge that cleare thee from ſtaine.
cannot witneſſe for me, being ſlaine.
o apparant, then both flye.
leaue my followers here to fight and dye?
neuer tainted with ſuch ſhame.
ſhall my Youth be guiltie of ſuch blame?
I be ſeuered from your ſide,
r ſelfe, you ſelfe in ſwaine diuide:
what you will, the like doe I;
not, if my Father dye.
n here I take my leaue of thee, faire Soonne,
ſe thy Life this afternoone:
ſide, together liue and dye,
ch Soule from France to Heauen flye. Exit.

m: Excurſions, wherein Talbots Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot reſcues him.

t George, and Victory; fight Souldiers, fight:
ath with Talbot broke his word,
the rage of France his Sword.
Talbot? pauſe, and take thy breath,
ſe, and reſcu'd thee from Death.
nce my Father, twice am I thy Sonne:
t gau'ſt me firſt, was loſt and done,
Warlike Sword, deſpight of Fate,
nu'd time thou gau'ſt new date.
ſtrooke the Delphins Creſt thy Sword ſtruck fire,
Fathers heart with prowd deſire
Victorie. Then Leaden Age,
ch Youthfull Spleene, and Warlike Rage,
Alanſon, Orleance, Burgundie,
Pride of Gallia reſcued thee.
ſtard Orleance, that drew blood
Boy, and had the Maidenhood ght, I ſoone encountred,
oging blowes, I quickly ſhed
Some of his Baſtard blood, and in diſgrace
Beſpoke him thus: Contaminated, baſe,
And mis-begotten blood, I ſpill of thine,
Meane and right poore, for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didſt force from Talbot, my braue Boy.
Here purpoſing the Baſtard to deſtroy,
Came in ſtrong reſcue. Speake thy Fathers care:
Art thou not wearie, John? How doſt thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leaue the Battaile, Boy, and flie,
Now thou art ſeal'd the Sonne of Chiualrie?
Flye, to reuenge my death when I am dead,
The helpe of one ſtands me in little ſtead.
Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lines in one ſmall Boat.
If I to day dye not with Frenchmens Rage,
To morrow I ſhall dye with mickle Age.
By me they nothing gaine, and if I ſtay,
'Tis but the ſhortning of my Life one day.
In thee thy Mother dyes, our Houſeholds Name,
My Deaths Reuenge, thy Youth, and Englands Fame:
All theſe, and more, we hazard by thy ſtay;
All theſe are ſau'd, if thou wilt flye away.

John. The Sword of Orleance hath not made me ſmart, Theſe words of yours draw Life-blood from my Heart.
On that aduantage, bought with ſuch a ſhame,
To ſaue a paltry Life, and ſlay bright Fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot flye,
The Coward Horſe that beares me, fall and dye:
And like me to the peſant Boyes of France,
To be Shames ſcorne, and ſubiect of Miſchance.
Surely, by all the Glorie you haue wonne,
And if I flye, I am not Talbots Sonne.
Then talke no more of flight, it is no boot,
If Sonne to Talbot, dye at Talbots foot.

Talb. Then follow thou thy deſp'rate Syre of Creet,
Thou Icarus, thy Life to me is ſweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy Fathers ſide,
And commendable prou'd, let's dye in pride. Exit.

Alarum. Excurſions. Enter old Talbot led.

Talb. Where is my other Life? mine owne is gone.
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant Iohn?
Triumphant Death, ſmear'd with Captiuitie,
Young Talbots Valour makes me ſmile at thee.
When he perceiu'd me ſhrinke, and on my Knee,
His bloodie Sword he brandiſht ouer mee,
And like a hungry Lyon did commence
Rough deeds of Rage, and ſterne Impatience:
But when my angry Guardant ſtood alone,
Tendring my ruine, and aſſayl'd of none,
Dizzie-ey'd Furie, and great rage of Heart,
Suddenly made him from my ſide to ſtart
Into the cluſtring Battaile of the French:
And in that Sea of Blood, my Boy did drench
His ouer-mounting Spirit; and there di'de
My Icarus, my Bloſſome, in his pride.

Enter with Iohn Talbot, borne.

Serv. O my deare Lord, loe where your Sonne is borne.
Tal. Thou antique Death, which laugh'ſt vs here to ſcorn,
Anon from thy inſulting Tyrannie,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuitie,
Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,
In thy deſpight ſhall eſcape Mortalitie.

O thou whose wounds become hard fauoured death,
Speake to thy father, ere thou yeeld thy breath,
Braue death by speaking, whither he will or no:
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy Foe.
Poore Boy, he smiles, me thinkes, as who should say,
Had Death bene French, then Death had dyed to day.
Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
My spirit can no longer beare these harmes.
Souldiers adieu: I haue what I would haue,
Now my old armes are yong Iohn Talbots graue. Dyes

Enter Charles, Alanson, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should haue found a bloody day of this.
Bast. How the yong whelpe of Talbots raging wood,
Did flesh his puny-sword in Frenchmens blood.
Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I said:
Thou Maiden youth, be vanquisht by a Maide.
But with a proud Maiesticall high scorne
He answer'd thus: Yong Talbot was not borne
To be the pillage of a Giglot Wench:
So rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as vnworthy fight.
Bur. Doubtlesse he would haue made a noble Knight:
See where he lyes inhearsed in the armes
Of the most bloody Nurser of his harmes.
Bast. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones assunder,
Whose life was Englands glory, Gallia's wonder.
Char. Oh no forbeare: For that which we haue fled
During the life, let vs not wrong it dead.

Enter Lucie,

Lu. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.
Char. On what submissiue message art thou sent?
Lucy Submission Dolphin? 'Tis a meere French word.
We English Warriours wot not what it meanes.
I come to know what Prisoners thou hast tane,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
Char For prisoners askst thou? Hell our prison is
But tell me whom thou seek'st?
Luc. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
Created for his rare successe in Armes,
Great Earle of Wexford, Waterford, and Valence,
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Vrchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdon of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnivall of Sheffield,
The thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
Worthy S. Michael and the Golden Fleece,
Great Marshall to Henry the sixt,
Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.
Puc. Heere's a silly stately stile indeede:
The Turke that two and fifty Kingdomes hath,
Writes not so tedious a Stile as this.
Him that thou magnifi'st with all these Titles,
Stinking and fly-blowne lyes heere at our feete.
Lucy. Is Talbot slaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge,
Your Kingdomes terror, and blacke Nemesis?
Oh were mine eye-balles into Bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.
Oh, that I could but call these dead to life.
It were enough to fright the Realme of France.
Were but his Picture left amongst you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Giue me their Bodyes, that I may beare them hence,
And giue them Buriall, as beseemes their worth.
Pucel. I thinke this vpstart is old Talbots Ghost,
He speakes with such a proud commanding spirit:
For Gods sake let him haue him, to keepe them here,
They would but stinke, and putrifie the ayre.
Char. Go take their bodies hence.
Lucy. Ile beare them hence: but from their ashes shall be reard
A Phœnix that shall make all France affear'd.
Char So we be rid of them, do with him what y will.
And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
All will be ours, now bloody Talbots slaine. Exit

Scena secunda.

SENNET.

Enter King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Haue you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
The Emperor, and the Earle of Armynack?
Glo. I haue my Lord, and their intent is this,
They humbly sue vnto your Excellence,
To haue a godly peace concluded of,
Betweene the Realmes of England, and of France.
King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?
Glo. Well (my good Lord) and as the only meanes
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietnesse on every side.
King. I marry Vncke, for I alwayes thought
It was both impious and vnnaturall,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reigne among Professors of one Faith.
Glo. Beside my Lord, the sooner to effect,
And surer bind this knot of amitie,
The Earle of Armynacke neere knit to Charles,
A man of great Authoritie in France,
Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous Dowrie.
King Marriage Vncke? Alas my yeares are yong:
And fitter is my studie, and my Bookes,
Than wanton dallyance with a Paramour.
Yet call th Embassadors, and as you please,
So let them haue their answeres euery one:
I shall be well content with any choyce
Tends to Gods glory, and my Countries weale.

Enter Winchester, and three Ambassadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Winchester installd,
And call'd vnto a Cardinalls degree?
Then I perceiue, that will be verified
Henry the fift did sometime prophesie.
If once he come to be a Cardinall,
Hee'l make his cap coequall with the Crowne.
King My Lords Ambassadors, your seuerall suites
Haue bin consider'd and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable
And therefore are we certainly resolu'd,
To draw conditions of a friendly peace.

Scæna Tertia.

Charles, Burgundy, Alanſon, Baſtard, Reignier, and Ioane.

eſe newes (my Lords) may cheere our droo-ſtout Pariſians do reunit, gaine vnto the warlike French.

en march to Paris Royall Charles of France, ot backe your powers in diſtance.

Enter Scout.
ccurſe vnto our valiant Generall,

Enter Ione de Pucell.

helpers, that are ſubſtitutes

Vnder the Lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.
Enter Fiends.
This ſpeedy and quicke appearance argues proofe
Of your accuſtom'd diligence to me.
Now ye Familiar Spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerfull Regions vnder earth,
Helpe me this once, that France may get the field.
They walke, and ſpeake not.
Oh hold me not with ſilence ouer-long:
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
Ile lop a member off, and giue it you,
In earneſt of a further benefit:
So you do condiſcend to helpe me now.
They hang their heads.
No hope to haue redreſſe? My body ſhall
Pay recompence, if you will graunt my ſuite.
They ſhake their heads.
Cannot my body, nor blood-ſacrifice,
Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my ſoule; my body, ſoule, and all,
Before that England giue the French the foyle.
They depart.
See, they forſake me. Now the time is come,
That France muſt vale her lofty plumed Creſt,
And let her head fall into Englands lappe.
My ancient Incantations are too weake.
And hell too ſtrong for me to buckle with:
Now France, thy glory droopeth to the duſt. Exit.

Excurſions. Burgundie and Yorke fight hand to hand. French flye.

Yorke. Damſell of France, I thinke I haue you faſt,
Vnchaine your ſpirits now with ſpelling Charmes,
And try if they can gaine your liberty.
A goodly prize, fit for the diuels grace.
See how the vgly Witch doth bend her browes,
As if with Circe, ſhe would change my ſhape.
Pu. Chang'd to a worſer ſhape thou canſt not be.
Yor. Oh, Charles the Dolphin is a proper man,
No ſhape but his can pleaſe your dainty eye.
Puc. A plaguing miſchiefe light on Charles, and thee.
And may ye both be ſodainly ſurpriz'd
By bloudy hands, in ſleeping on your beds.
Yorke. Fell banning Hagge, Inchantreſſe hold thy tongue.
Puc. I prethee giue me leaue to curſe awhile.
Yorke. Curſe Miſcreant, when thou comſt to the ſtake
Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in his hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my priſoner.
Gazes on her.
Oh Faireſt Beautie, do not feare, nor flye:
For I will touch thee but with reuerend hands.
I kiſſe theſe fingers for eternall peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender ſide.
Who art thou, ſay? that I may honor thee.
Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,
The King of Naples, who ſo ere thou art.
Suff. An Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd
Be not offended Natures myracle,
Thou art thorted to be tane by me:
So doth the Swan her downie Signets ſaue,

Oh thy

Keeping them priſoner vnderneath his wings:
Yet if this ſeruile vſage once offend,
Go, and be free againe, as Suffolkes friend. She is going
Oh ſtay: I haue no power to let her paſſe,
My hand would free her, but my heart ſayes no.
As playes the Sunne vpon the glaſſie ſtreames,
Twinkling another counterfeited beame,
So ſeemes this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Faine would I woe her, yet I dare not ſpeake:
Ile call for Pen and Inke, and write my minde:
Fye De la Pole, diſable not thy ſelfe:
Haſt not a Tongue? Is ſhe not heere?
Wilt thou be daunted at a Womans ſight?
I: Beauties Princely Maieſty is ſuch,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the ſenſes rough.
Mar. Say Earle of Suffolke, if thy name be ſo,
What ranſome muſt I pay before I paſſe?
For I perceiue I am thy priſoner.
Suf. How canſt thou tell ſhe will deny thy ſuite,
Before thou make a triall of her loue?
Mar. Why ſpeak'ſt thou not? What ranſom muſt I pay?
Suf. She's beautifull; and therefore to be Woo'd:
She is a Woman; therefore to be Woone.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ranſome, yea or no?
Suf. Fond man, remember that thou haſt a wife,
Then how can Margaret be thy Paramour?
Mar. I were beſt to leaue him, for he will not heare.
Suf. There all is marr'd: there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talkes at random: ſure the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a diſpenſation may bee had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would anſwer me.
Suf. Ile win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why for my King: Tuſh, that's a woodden thing.
Mar. He talkes of wood: It is ſome Carpenter.
Suf. Yet ſo my fancy may be ſatisfied,
And peace eſtabliſhed betweene theſe Realmes.
But there remaines a ſcruple in that too
For though her Father be the King of Naples,
Duke of Anion and Maine, yet is he poore,
And our Nobility will ſcorne the match.
Mar. Heare ye Captaine? Are you not at leyſure?
Suf. It ſhall be ſo, diſdaine they ne're ſo much:
Henry is youthfull, and will quickly yeeld.
Madam, I haue a ſecret to reueale.
Mar. What though I be inthral'd, he ſeems a knight
And will not any way diſhonor me.
Suf. Lady, vouchſafe to liſten what I ſay.
Mar. Perhaps I ſhall be reſcu'd by the French,
And then I need not crauie his curteſie.
Suf. Sweet Madam, giue me hearing in a cauſe.
Mar. Tuſh, women haue beene captiuate ere now.
Suf. Lady, wherefore talke you ſo?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid for Quo.
Suf. Say gentle Princeſſe, would you not ſuppoſe
Your bondage happy, to be made a Queene?
Mar. To be a Queene in bondage, is more vile,
Than is a ſlaue, in baſe ſeruility:
For Princes ſhould be free.
Suf. And ſo ſhall you,
If happy Englands Royall King be free.
Mar. Why what concernes his freedome vnto mee?
Suf. Ile vndertake to make thee Henries Queene,
To put a Golden Scepter in thy hand,
And ſet a precious Crowne vpon thy head,
If thou wilt condiſcend to be my———
Mar. What?
Suf. His loue.
Mar. I am vnworthy to be Henries wife.
Suf. No gentle Madam, I vnworthy am
To woe ſo faire a Dame to be his wife,
And haue no portion in the choice my ſelfe.
How ſay you Madam, are ye ſo content?
Mar. And if my Father pleaſe, I am content.
Suf. Then call our Captaines and our Colours forth,
And Madam, at your Fathers Caſtle walles,
We'l craue a parley, to conferre with him.
Sound. Enter Reignier on the walles.
See Reignier ſee, thy daughter priſoner.
Reig. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reig. Suffolke, what remedy?
I am a Souldier, and vnapt to weepe,
Or to exclaime on Fortunes fickleneſſe.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,
Conſent, and for thy Honor giue conſent,
Thy daughter ſhall be wedded to my King,
Whom I with paine haue wooed and woone thereto:
And this her eaſie held impriſonment,
Hath gain'd thy daughter Princely libertie.
Reig. Speakes Suffolke as he thinkes?
Suf. Faire Margaret knowes,
That Suffolke doth not flatter, face, or faine.
Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant, I deſcend,
To giue thee anſwer of thy iuſt demand.
Suf. And heere I will expect thy comming.

Trumpets ſounded. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome braue Earle into our Territories,
Command in Anion what your Honor pleaſes.
Suf. Thankes Reignier, happy for ſo ſweet a Childe,
Fit to be made companion with a King:
What anſwer makes your Grace vnto my ſuite?
Reig. Since thou doſt deigne to woe her baſe worth,
To be the Princely Bride of ſuch a Lord:
Vpon condition I may quietly
Enioy mine owne, the Country Maine and Anion,
Free from oppreſſion, or the ſtroke of Warre,
My daughter ſhall be Henries, if he pleaſe.
Suf. That is her ranſome, I deliuer her,
And thoſe two Counties I will vndertake
Your Grace ſhall well and quietly enioy.
Reig. And I againe in Henries Royall name,
As Deputy vnto that gracious King,
Giue thee her hand for ſigne of plighted faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I giue thee Kingly thankes, Becauſe this is in Trafficke of a King.
And yet me thinkes I could be well content
To be mine owne Attorney in this caſe.
Ile ouer then to England with this newes,
And make this marriage to be ſolemniz'd:
So farewell Reignier, ſet this Diamond ſafe
In Golden Pallaces as it becomes.
Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Chriſtian Prince King Henrie were he heere.
Mar. Farewell my Lord, good wiſhes, praiſe, & prayers,
Shall Suffolke euer haue of Margaret. She is going
Suf. Farwell ſweet Madam: but hearke you Margaret,
No Princely commendations to my King.
Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,
A Virgin, and his Seruant, ſay to him.
Suf. Words ſweetly plac'd, and modeſtie directed.

Be

But Madame, I muſt trouble you againe,
No louing Tóken to his Maieſtie?
Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure vnſpotted heart,
Neuer yet taint with loue, I ſend the King.
Suf. And this withall. Kiſſes her.
Mar. That for thy ſelfe, I will not ſo preſume,
To ſend ſuch peeuiſh tokens to a King.
Suf. Oh wert thou for my ſelfe: but Suffolke ſtay,
Thou maiſt not wander in that Labyrinth,
There Minotaurs and vgly Treaſons lurke,
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praiſe
Bethinke thee on her Vertues that ſurmount,
Mad naturall Graces that extinguiſh Art,
Repeate their ſemblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'ſt to kneele at Henries feete,
Thou maieſt bereaue him of his wits with wonder. Exit

Enter Yorke, Warwicke, Shepheard, Pucell.

Yor. Bring forth that Sorcereſſe condemn'd to burne.
Shep. Ah Ione, this kils thy Fathers heart out-right,
Haue I ſought euery Country farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Muſt I behold thy timeleſſe cruell death:
Ah Ione, ſweet daughter Ione, Ile die with thee.
Pucel. Decrepit Miſer, baſe ignoble Wretch,
I am deſcended of a gentler blood.
Thou art no Father, nor no Friend of mine.
Shep. Out, out: My Lords, and pleaſe you, 'tis not ſo
I did beget her, all the Pariſh knowes:
Her Mother liueth yet, can teſtifie
She was the firſt fruite of my Bach'ler-ſhip.
War. Graceleſſe, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?
Yorke. This argues what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and ſo her death concludes.
Shep. Fye Ione, that thou wilt be ſo obſtacle.
God knowes, thou art a collop of my fleſh,
And for thy ſake haue I ſhed many a teare:
Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Ione.
Pucell. Peaſant auaunt. You haue ſuborn'd this man
Of purpoſe, to obſcure my Noble birth.
Shep. 'Tis true, I gaue a Noble to the Prieſt.
The morne that I was wedded to her mother.
Kneele downe and take my bleſſing, good my Gyrle.
Wilt thou not ſtoope? Now curſed be the time
Of thy natiuitie: I would the Milke
Thy mother gaue thee when thou ſuck'ſt her breſt,
Had bin a little Rats-bane for thy ſake.
Or elſe, when thou didſt keepe my Lambes a-field,
I wiſh ſome rauenous Wolfe had eaten thee.
Doeſt thou deny thy Father, curſed Drab?
O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good. Exit.
Yorke. Take her away, for ſhe hath liu'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Pucell. Firſt let me tell you whom you haue condemn'd;
Not me, begotten of a Shepheard Swaine,
But iſſued from the Progeny of Kings.
Vertuous and Holy, choſen from aboue,
By inſpiration of Celeſtiall Grace,
To worke exceeding myracles on earth.
I neuer had to do with wicked Spirits.
But you that are polluted with your luſtes.
Staind with the guiltleſſe blood of Innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thouſand Vices:
Becauſe you want the grace that others haue,
You iudge it ſtraight a thing impoſſible
To compaſſe Wonders, but by helpe of diuels.
No miſconceyued, Ione of Arc hath beene
A Virgin from her tender infancie,
Chaſte, and immaculate in very thoughts,
Whoſe Maiden-blood thus rigorouſly effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heauen.
Yorke. I, I: away with her to execution.
War. And heark'ye firſt: becauſe ſhe's a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be enow:
Place barrelles of pitch vpon the fatall ſtake,
That ſo her torture may be ſhortned.
Pucel. Will nothing turne your vnrelenting hearts?
Then Ione diſcouer thine infirmity,
That warranteth by Law, to be thy priuiledge.
I am with childe ye bloody Homicides:
Murther not then the Fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.
Yor. Now heauen forfend, the holy Maid with child?
War. The greateſt miracle that ere ye wrought,
Is all your ſtrict preciſeneſſe come to this?
Yorke. She and the Dolphin haue bin iuggling,
I did imagine what would be her refuge.
War. Well go too, we'll haue no Baſtards liue.
Eſpecially ſince Charles muſt Father it.
Pucel. You are deceyu'd, my childe is none of his,
It was Alanſon that inioy'd my loue.
Yorke. Alanſon that notorious Macheuile?
It dyes, and if it had a thouſand liues.
Pucel. You are deluded you,
'Twas neyther Charles, nor yet the Duke I nam'd,
But Reignier King of Naples that preuayl'd
War. A married man, that's moſt intollerable.
Yor. Why here's a Gyrle: I think ſhe knowes not well
(There were ſo many) whom ſhe may accuſe.
War. It's ſigne ſhe hath beene liberall and free.
Yor. And yet forſooth ſhe is a Virgin pure.
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee.
Vſe no intreaty, for it is in vaine.
Pu. Then lead me hence: with whom I leaue my curſe.
May neuer glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Countrey where you make abode:
But darkneſſe, and the gloomy ſhade of death
Inuiron you, till Miſcheefe and Deſpaire, Driue you to breake your necks, or hang your ſelues. Exit

Enter Cardinall.

Yorke. Breake thou in peeces, and conſume to aſhes,
Thou ſowle accurſed miniſter of Hell.
Car. Lord Regent, I do greete your Excellence
With Letters of Commiſſion from the King.
For know my Lords, the States of Chriſtendome,
Mou'd with remorſe of theſe outragious broyles,
Haue earneſtly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and the aſpyring French;
And heere at hand, the Dolphin and his Traine
Approacheth, to conferre about ſome matter.
Yorke. Is all our trauell turn'd to this effect,
After the ſlaughter of ſo many Peeres,
So many Captaines, Gentlemen, and Soldiers,
That in this quarrell haue beene ouerthrowne,
And ſold their bodyes for their Countryes benefit,
Shall we at laſt conclude effeminate peace?
Haue we not loſt moſt part of all the Townes,
By Treaſon, Falſhood, and by Treacherie,
Our great Progenitors had conquered.
Oh Warwicke, Warwicke, I foreſee with greefe
The vtter loſſe of all the Realme of France.
War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

It shall be with such strict and seuere Couenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gaine thereby.

Enter Charles, Alanson, Bastard, Reignier.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your selues,
What the conditions of that league must be.
Yorke. Speake Winchester, for boyling choller chokes
The hollow passage of my poyson'd voyce,
By sight of these our balefull enemies.
Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That in regard King Henry giues consent,
Of meere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your Country of distressefull Warre,
And suffer you to breath in fruitfull peace,
You shall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, vpon condition thou wilt sweare
To pay him tribute, and submit thy selfe,
Thou shalt be plac'd as Viceroy vnder him,
And still enioy thy Regall dignity.
Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himselfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in substance and authority,
Retaine but priuiledge of a priuate man?
This proffer is absurd, and reasonlesse.
Char. 'Tis knowne already that I am possest
With more then halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reuerenc'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the rest vn-vanquisht,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambassador, Ile rather keepe
That which I haue, than coueting for more
Be cast from possibility of all.
Yorke. Insulting Charles, hast thou by secret meanes
Vs'd intercession to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compliments,
Stand'st thou aloofe vpon Comparison
Either accept the Title thou vsurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our King,
And not of any challenge of Desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant Warres
Reig. My Lord, you do not well in obstinacy,
To cauill in the course of this Contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not finde like opportunity.
Alan. To say the truth, it is your policie,
To saue your Subiects from such massacre
And ruthlesse slaughters as are dayly seene
By our proceeding in Hostility,
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it, when your pleasure serues.
War. How sayst thou Charles?
Shall our Condition stand?
Char. It Shall:
Onely reseru'd, you claime no interest
In any of our Townes of Garrison.
Yor. Then sweare Allegeance to his Maiesty,
As thou art Knight, neuer to disobey,
Nor be Rebellious to the Crowne of England.
Thou nor thy Nobles, to the Crowne of England.
So, now dismisse your Army when ye please:
Hang vp your Ensignes, let your Drummes be still,
For heere we entertaine a solemne peace. Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her vertues grac'd with externall gifts,
Do breed Loues setled passions in my heart,
And like as rigour of tempestuous gustes
Prouokes the mightiest Hulke against the tide,
So am I driuen by breath of her Renowne,
Either to suffer Shipwracke, or arriue
Where I may haue fruition of her Loue.
Suf. Tush my good Lord, this superfluall talke,
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chiefe perfections of that louely Dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to vtter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to rauish any dull conceit.
And which is more, she is not so Diuine,
So full replenish with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowlinesse of minde,
She is content to be at your command:
Command I meane, of Vertuous chaste intents,
To Loue, and Honor Henry as her Lord.
King. And otherwise, will Henry ne're presume:
Therefore my Lord Protector, giue consent,
That Margaret may be Englands Royall Queene.
Glo. So should I giue consent to flatter sinne.
You know (my Lord) your Highnesse is betrouth'd
Vnto another Lady of esteeme,
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your Honor with reproach?
Suf. As doth a Ruler with vnlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at a Triumph, hauing vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the Listes
By reason of his Aduersaries oddes.
A poore Earles daughter is vnequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.
Glocester. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more then that?
Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.
Suf. Yes my Lord, her Father is a King,
The King of Naples, and Ierusalem,
And of such great Authoritie in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegeance.
Glo. And so the Earle of Armenacke may doe.
Because he is neere Kinsman vnto Charles.
Exet. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower,
Where Reignier sooner will receyue, than giue.
Suf. A Dowre my Lords? Disgrace not so your King,
That he should be so abiect, base, and poore,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect Loue.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to seeke a Queene to make him rich,
So worthlesse Peazants bargaine for their Wiues,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Attorney-ship:
Not whom we will, but whom his Grace affects,

Must

Muſt be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
And therefore Lords, ſince he affects her moſt,
Moſt of all theſe reaſons bindeth vs,
In our opinions ſhe ſhould be preferr'd.
For what is wedlocke forced but a Hell,
An Age of diſcord and continuall ſtriſe,
Whereas the contrarie bringeth bliſſe,
And is a patterne of Celeſtiall peace.
Whom ſhould we match with Henry being a King,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a King:
Her peereleſſe ſeature, ioyned with her birth,
Approues her fit for none, but for a King.
Her valiant courage, and vndaunted ſpirit,
(More then in women commonly is ſeene)
Will anſwer our hope in iſſue of a King.
For Henry, ſonne vnto a Conqueror,
Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
If with a Lady of ſo high reſolue,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in loue.
Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
That Margaret ſhall be Queene, and none but ſhee.

King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
My tender youth was neuer yet attaint
With any paſſion of inflaming loue,
I cannot tell: but this I am aſſur'd,
I feele ſuch ſharpe diſſention in my breaſt,
Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
As I am ſicke with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore ſhipping, poſte my Lord to France,
Agree to any couenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchſafe to come
To croſſe the Seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henries faithfull and annointed Queene.
For your expences and ſufficient charge,
Among the people gather vp a tenth.
Be gone I ſay, for till you do returne,
I reſt perplexed with a thouſand Cares.
And you (good Vncle) baniſh all offence:
If you do cenſure me, by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuſe
This ſodaine execution of my will.
And ſo conduct me, where from company,
I may reuolue and ruminate my greefe. Exit.

Glo. I greeſe I feare me, both at firſt and laſt.
Exit Gloceſter.

Suf. Thus Suffolke hath preuail'd, and thus he goes
As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
With hope to finde the like euent in loue,
But proſper better than the Troian did:
Margaret ſhall now be Queene, and rule the King:
But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme. Exit

FINIS.

The ſecond Part of Henry the Sixt, with the death of the Good Duke HVMFREY.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Flouriſh of Trumpets: Then Hoboyes.

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Saliſbury, Warwicke, and Beauford on the one ſide.
The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerſet, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.

AS by your high Imperiall Maieſty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Toures,
In preſence of the Kings of France, and Sicill,
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, and Alanſon,
Seuen Earles, twelue Barons, & twenty reuerend Bithops
I haue perform'd my Taſke, and was eſpous'd,
And humbly now vpon my bended knee,
In ſight of England, and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliuer vp my Title in the Queene
To your moſt gracious hands, that are the Subſtance
Of that great Shadow I did repreſent:
The happieſt Gift, that euer Marqueſſe gaue,
The Faireſt Queene, that euer King receiu'd.

King. Suffolke ariſe. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expreſſe no kinder ſigne of Loue
Then this kinde kiſſe: O Lord, that lenu. me life,
Lend me a heart repleate with thankfulneſſe:
For thou haſt giuen me in this beauteous Face
A world of earthly bleſſings to my ſoule,
If Simpathy of Loue vnite our thoughts.

Queen. Great King of England, & my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my minde hath had,
By day, by night; waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alder liefeſt Soueraigne,
Makes me the bolder to ſalute my King,
With ruder termes, ſuch as my wit affoords,
And ouer ioy of heart doth miniſter.

King. Her ſight did rauiſh, but her grace in Speech,
Her words yclad with wiſedomes Maieſty,
Makes me from Wondring, fall to Weeping ioyes,
Such is the Fulneſſe of my hearts content.
Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Loue.

All Lord. Long liue Qu. Margaret, Englands happines.

Queen. We thanke you all. Flouriſh

Suf. My Lord Protector, ſo it pleaſe your Grace,
Heere are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betweene our Soueraigne, and the French King Ch-
For eighteene moneths concluded by conſent.

Glo. Reads. Inprimis, It is agreed betweene the French K. Charles, and William de la Pole Marqueſſe of Suffolke, Ambaſſador for Henry King of England, That the ſaid Henry ſhall eſpouſe the Lady Margaret, daughter vnto Reignier King of Naples, Sicilia, and Ieruſalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirteenth of May next enſuing.

Item, That the Dutchy of Anion, and the County of Maine, ſhall be releaſed and deliuered to the King her father.

King. Vnkle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some ſodaine qualme hath ſtrucke me at the heart,
And dim'd mine eyes, that I can reade no further.

King. Vnckle of Winchester, I pray read on.

Win. Item, It is further agreed betweene them, That the Dutcheſſe of Anion and Maine, ſhall be releaſed and diſcharged ouer to the King her Father, and ſixe ſcore ouer of the King of Englands owne proper Coſt and Charges, without hauing any Dowry.

King. They pleaſe vs well. Lord Marques kneel downe.
We heere create thee the firſt Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Coſin of Yorke,
We heere diſcharge your Grace from being Regent
I'th parts of France, till terme of eighteene Moneths
Be full expyr'd. Thankes Vncle Winchester, Gloſter, Yorke, Buckingham, Somerſet,
Salisburie, and Warwicke.
We thanke you all for this great fauour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene.
Come, let vs in, and with all ſpeede prouide
To ſee her Coronation be perform'd.

Exit King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manet the reſt.

Glo. Braue Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey muſt vnlood his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land.
What? did my brother Henry ſpend his youth,
His valour, coine, and people in the warres?
Did he ſo often lodge in open field:
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To

To keepe by policy what Henrie got:
Haue you your ſelues, Somerſet, Buckingham,
Braue Yorke, Salisbury, and victorious Warwicke,
Receiued deepe ſcarres in France and Normandie:
Or hath mine Vncle Beauford, and my ſelfe,
With all the Learned Counſell of the Realme,
Studied ſo long, ſat in the Councell houſe,
Early and late, debating too and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And hath his Highneſſe in his infancie,
Crowned in Paris in deſpight of foes,
And ſhall theſe Labours, and theſe Honours dye?
Shall Henries Conqueſt, Bedfords vigilance,
Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counſell dye?
O Peeres of England, ſhamefull is this League,
Fatall this Marriage, cancelling your Fame,
Blotting your names from Bookes of memory,
Raſing the Characters of your Renowne,
Defacing Monuments of Conquer'd France,
Vndoing all as all had neuer bin.

Car. Nephew, what meanes this paſſionate diſcourſe?
This preioration with ſuch circumſtance:
For France, 'tis ours; and we will keepe it ſtill.

Glo. Vncle, we will keepe it, if we can:
But now it is impoſſible we ſhould.
Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roſt,
Hath giuen the Dutchy of Anion and Mayne,
Vnto the poore King Reignier, whoſe large ſtyle
Agrees not with the leanneſſe of his purſe.

Sal. Now by the death of him that dyed for all,
Theſe Counties were the Keyes of Normandie:
But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant ſonne?

War. For greefe that they are paſt recouerie.
For were there hope to conquer them againe,
My ſword ſhould ſhed hot blood, mine eyes no teares.
Anion and Maine? My ſelfe did win them both:
Thoſe Prouinces, theſe Armes of mine did conquer,
And are the Cities that I got with wounds,
Deliuer'd vp againe with peacefull words?
Mort Dieu.

Yorke. For Suffolkes Duke, may he be ſuffocate,
That dims the Honor of this Warlike Iſle:
France ſhould haue torne and rent my very hart,
Before I would haue yeelded to this League.
I neuer read but Englands Kings haue had Large ſummes of Gold, and Dowries with their wiues,
And our King Henry giues away his owne,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Hum. A proper ieſt, and neuer heard before,
That Suffolke ſhould demand a whole Fifteenth,
For Coſts and Charges in tranſporting her:
She ſhould haue ſtaid in France, and ſtaru'd in France
Before——

Car. My Lord of Gloſter, now ye grow too hot,
It was the pleaſure of my Lord the King.

Hum. My Lord of Wincheſter I know your minde.
'Tis not my ſpeeches that you do miſlike:
But 'tis my preſence that doth trouble ye,
Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face
I ſee thy furie: If I longer ſtay,
We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings:
Lordings farewell, and ſay when I am gone,
I propheſied, France will be loſt ere long. Exit Humfrey.

Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage:
'Tis knowne to you he is mine enemy:
Nay more, an enemy vnto you all,
And no great friend, I feare me to the King:
Conſider Lords, he is the next of blood,
And heyre apparant to the Engliſh Crowne
Had Henrie got an Empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the Weſt,
There's reaſon he ſhould be diſpleas'd at it:
Looke to it Lords, let not his ſmoothing words
Bewitch your hearts, be wiſe and circumſpect.
What though the common people fauour him,
Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloſter,
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voyce,
Ieſu maintaine your Royall Excellence,
With God preſerue the good Duke Humfrey.
I feare me Lords, for all this flattering gloſſe,
He will be found a dangerous Protector.

Buc. Why ſhould he then protect our Soueraigne?
He being of age to gouerne of himſelfe.
Coſin of Somerſet, ioyne you with me,
And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,
We'l quickly hoyſe Duke Humfrey from his ſeat.

Car. This weighty buſineſſe will not brooke delay,
Ile to the Duke of Suffolke preſently. Exit Cardinall.

Som Coſin of Buckingham, though Humfries pride
And greatneſſe of his place be greefe to vs,
Yet let vs watch the haughtie Cardinall,
His inſolence is more intollerable
Then all the Princes in the Land beſide,
If Gloſter be diſplac'd, hee'l be Protector.

Buc. Or thou, or I Somerſet will be Protectors, Deſpite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinall.
Exit Buckingham, and Somerſet.

Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.
While theſe do labour for their owne preferment,
Behooues it vs to labor for the Realme.
I neuer ſaw but Humfrey Duke of Gloſter,
Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:
Oft haue I ſeene the haughty Cardinall,
More like a Souldier then a man o'th'Church,
As ſtout and proud as he were Lord of all,
Sweare like a Ruffian, and demeane himſelfe
Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.
Warwicke my ſonne, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainneſſe, and thy houſe-keeping,
Hath wonne the greateſt fauour of the Commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.
And Brother Yorke, thy Acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to ciuill Diſcipline:
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert Regent for our Soueraigne,
Haue made thee fear'd and honor'd of the people,
Ioyne we together for the publike good,
In what we can, to bridle and ſuppreſſe
The pride of Suffolke, and the Cardinall,
With Somerſets and Buckinghams Ambition,
And as we may, cheriſh Duke Humfries deeds,
While they do tend the profit of the Land.

War. So God helpe Warwicke, as he loues the Land,
And common profit of his Country.

Yor. And ſo ſayes Yorke,
For he hath greateſt cauſe.

Sal. Then lets make haſt away,
And looke vnto the maine.

Warwicke. Vnto the maine?
Oh Father, Maine is loſt,
That Maine, which by maine force Warwicke did winne,
And would haue kept, ſo long as breath did laſt

Main-chance father you meant, but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or elſe be ſlaine.
Exit Warwicke and Salisbury. Manet Yorke.
Yorke. Anion and Maine are giuen to the French,
Paris is loſt, the ſtate of Normandie
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolke concluded on the Articles,
The Peeres agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two Dukedomes for a Dukes faire daughter.
I cannot blame them all, what is't to them?
'Tis thine they giue away, and not their owne.
Pirates may make cheape penyworths of their pillage,
And purchaſe Friends, and giue to Courtezans,
Still reuelling like Lords till all be gone,
While as the ſilly Owner of the goods
Weepes ouer them, and wrings his hapleſſe hands,
And ſhakes his head, and trembling ſtands aloofe,
While all is ſhar'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to ſtarue, and dare not touch his owne.
So Yorke muſt ſit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his owne Lands are bargain'd for, and ſold:
Me thinkes the Realmes of England, France, & Ireland,
Beare that proportion to my fleſh and blood,
As did the fatall brand Althæa burnt,
Vnto the Princes heart of Calidon:
Anion and Maine both giuen vnto the French?
Cold newes for me: for I had hope of France,
Euen as I haue of fertile Englands ſoile.
A day will come, when Yorke ſhall claime his owne,
And therefore I will take the Nouils parts,
And make a ſhew of loue to proud Duke Humfrey,
And when I ſpy aduantage, claime the Crowne,
For that's the Golden marke I ſeeke to hit:
Nor ſhall proud Lancaſter vſurpe my right,
Nor hold the Scepter in his childiſh Fiſt,
Nor weare the Diadem vpon his head,
Whoſe Church-like humors fits not for a Crowne.
Then Yorke be ſtill a-while, till time do ſerue:
Watch thou, and wake when others be aſleepe,
To prie into the ſecrets of the State,
Till Henrie ſurfetting in ioyes of loue,
With his new Bride, & Englands deere bought Queen,
And Humfrey with the Peeres be falne at iarres:
Then will I raiſe aloft the Milke-white-Roſe,
With whoſe ſweet ſmell the Ayre ſhall be perfum'd,
And in in my Standard beare the Armes of Yorke,
To grapple with the houſe of Lancaſter,
And force perforce Ile make him yeeld the Crowne,
Whoſe bookiſh Rule, hath pull'd faire England downe.
Exit Yorke.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his wife Elianor.

Elia. Why droopes my Lord like ouer-ripen'd Corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres plenteous load?
Why doth the Great Duke Humfrey knit his browes,
As frowning at the Fauours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fixt to the ſullen earth,
Gazing on that which ſeemes to dimme thy ſight?
What ſeeſt thou there? King Henries Diadem,
Inchac'd with all the Honors of the world?
If ſo, Gaze on, and grouell on thy face,
Vntill thy head be circled with the ſame.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious Gold.
What, is't too ſhort? Ile lengthen it with mine,
And hauing both together heau'd it vp,
We'l both together lift our heads to heauen,
And neuer more abaſe our ſight ſo low,
As to vouchſafe one glance vnto the ground.
Hum. O Nell, ſweet Nell, if thou doſt loue thy Lord,
Baniſh the Canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Againſt my King and Nephew, vertuous Henry,
Be my laſt breathing in this mortall world.
My troublous dreames this night, doth make me ſad.
Eli. What dream'd my Lord, tell me, and Ile requite it
With ſweet rehearſall of my mornings dreame?
Hum. Me thought this ſtaffe mine Office-badge in Court
Was broke in twaine: by whom, I haue forgot,
But as I thinke, it was by'th Cardinall,
And on the pieces of the broken Wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond Duke of Somerſet,
And William de la Pole firſt Duke of Suffolke.
This was my dreame, what it doth bode God knowes.
Eli. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breakes a ſticke of Gloſters groue,
Shall looſe his head for his preſumption.
But liſt to me my Humfrey, my ſweete Duke:
Me thought I ſate in Seate of Maieſty,
In the Cathedrall Church of Weſtminſter,
And in that Chaire where Kings & Queenes were crowned,
Where Henrie and Dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
And on my head did ſet the Diadem.
Hum. Nay Elianor, then muſt I chide outright:
Preſumptuous Dame, ill-nurtur'd Elianor,
Art thou not ſecond Woman in the Realme?
And the Protectors wife belou'd of him?
Haſt thou not worldly pleaſure at command,
Aboue the reach or compaſſe of thy thought?
And wilt thou ſtill be hammering Treachery,
To tumble downe thy husband, and thy ſelfe,
From top of Honor, to Diſgraces feete?
Away from me, and let me heare no more.
Eli. What, what, my Lord? Are you ſo choliricke
With Elianor, for telling but her dreame?
Next time Ile keepe my dreames vnto my ſelfe,
And not be check'd.
Hum. Nay be not angry, I am pleas'd againe.

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord Protector, 'tis his Highnes pleaſure,
You do prepare to ride vnto S. Albons,
Where as the King and Queene do meane to Hawke.
Hu. I go. Come Nel thou wilt ride with vs? Exit Hum.
Eli. Yes my good Lord, Ile follow preſently.
Follow I muſt, I cannot go before,
While Gloſter beares this baſe and humble minde.
Were I a Man, a Duke, and next of blood,
I would remoue theſe tedious ſtumbling blockes,
And ſmooth my way vpon their headleſſe neckes.
And being a woman, I will not be ſlacke
To play my part in Fortunes Pageant.
Where are you there? Sir John, nay feare not man,
We are alone, here's none but thee, & I. Enter Hume.
Hume. Ieſus preſerue your Royall Maieſty.
Elia. What ſaiſt thou? Maieſty? I am but Grace.
Hume. But by the grace of God, and Humes meanes,
Your Graces Title ſhall be multiplied.
Elia. What ſaiſt thou man? Haſt thou as yet conferr'd
With Margerie Iordane the cunning Witch,
With Roger Bullingbrooke the Conieurer?
And will they vndertake to do me good?
Hume. This they haue promiſed to ſhew your Highnes
A Spirit rais'd from depth of vnder ground,

That ſhall make anſwere to ſuch Queſtions,
As by your Grace ſhall be propounded him.
Elianor. It is enough, Ile thinke vpon the Queſtions:
When from Saint Albones we doe make returne,
We'le ſee theſe things effected to the full.
Here Hume, take this reward, make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weightie cauſe.
Exit Elianor.
Hume. Hume muſt make merry with the Ducheſſe Gold:
Marry and ſhall: but how now, Sir Iohn Hume?
Seale vp your Lips, and giue no words but Mum,
The buſineſſe aſketh ſilent ſecrecie.
Dame Elianor giues Gold, to bring the Witch:
Gold cannot come amiſſe, were ſhe a Deuill.
Yea have I Gold flyes from another Coaſt:
I dare not ſay, from the rich Cardinall,
And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolke;
Yet I doe finde it ſo: for to be plaine,
They (knowing Dame Elianors aſpiring humor)
Haue hyred me to vnder-mine the Ducheſſe,
And buzze theſe Conjurations in her braine.
They ſay, A craftie Knaue do's need no Broker,
Yet am I Suffolke and the Cardinalls Broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you ſhall goe neere
To call them both a payre of craftie Knaues.
Well, ſo it ſtands: and thus I feare at laſt,
Humes Knauerie will be the Ducheſſe Wracke,
And her Attainture will be Humphreyes fall:
Sort how it will, I ſhall haue Gold for all. Exit.

Enter three or foure Petitioners, the Armourer Man being one.

1. Pet. My Maſters, let's ſtand cloſe, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliuer our Supplications in the Quill.

2. Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for he's a good man, Ieſu bleſſe him.

Enter Suffolke and Queene.

Peter. Here a comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him: Ile be the firſt ſure.

2. Pet. Come backe foole, this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my Lord Protector.

Suff. How now fellow; would'ſt any thing with me?

1. Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector.

Queene. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordſhip? Let me ſee them: what is thine?

1. Pet. Mine is, and't pleaſe your Grace, againſt Iohn Goodman, my Lord Cardinals Man, for keeping my Houſe, and Lands, and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that's ſome Wrong indeede. Vnſ's yours? What's heere? Againſt the Duke of Suffolke, for enclozing the Commons of Melforde. How now, Sir Knaue?

2. Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Townelhip.

Peter. Againſt my Maſter Thomas Horner, for ſaying, That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Queene. What ſay'ſt thou? Did the Duke of Yorke ſay, hee was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Peter. That my Miſtreſſe was? No forſooth: my Maſter ſaid, That he was, and that the King was an Vſurper.

Suff. Who is there?
Enter Seruant.
Take this fellow in, and ſend for his Maſter with a Purſeuant preſently: we'le heare more of your maſter before the King. Exit.

Queene. And as for you that loue to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and ſue to him.
Teares the Supplication.
Away, baſe Cullions! Suffolke let them goe.
All. Come, let's be gone. Exit.

Queene. My Lord of Suffolke, ſay, is this the guiſe?
Is this the Faſhions in the Court of England?
Is this the Gouernment of Britaines Ile?
And this the Royaltie of Albions King?
What, ſhall King Henry be a Pupill ſtill,
Vnder the ſurly Gloſters Gouernance?
Am I a Queene in Title and in Stile,
And muſt be made a Subiect to a Duke?
I tell thee Poole, when in the Citie Tours
Thou ran'ſt a-tilt in honor of my Loue,
And ſtol'ſt away the Ladies hearts of France;
I thought King Henry had reſembled thee,
In Courage, Courtſhip, and Proportion:
But all his minde is bent to Holineſſe,
To number Ave-Maries on his Beades:
His Champions, are the Prophets and Apoſtles
His Weapons, holy Sawes of ſacred Writ,
His Studie is his Tilt-yard, and his Loues
Are braſen Images of Canonized Saints.
I would the Colledge of the Cardinalls
Would chuſe him Pope, and carry him to Rome,
And ſet the Triple Crowne vpon his Head;
That were a State fit for his Holineſſe.

Suff. Madame be patient: as I was cauſe
Your Highneſſe came to England, ſo will I
In England worke your Graces full content.

Queene. Beſide the haughtie Protector, haue we Beauford
The imperious Churchman; Somerſet, Buckingham,
And grumbling Yorke: and not the leaſt of theſe,
But can doe more in England then the King.

Suff. And he of theſe, that can doe moſt of all,
Cannot doe more in England then the Neuils:
Salsbury and Warwicke are no ſimple Peeres.

Queene. Not all theſe Lords do vex me halfe ſo much,
As that proud Dame, the Lord Protectors Wife:
She ſweepes it through the Court with troops of Ladies,
More like an Empreſſe, then Duke Humphreyes Wife:
Strangers in Court, doe take her for the Queene:
She beares a Dukes Reuenewes on her backe,
And in her heart ſhe ſcornes our Pouertie:
Shall I not liue to be aueng'd on her?
Contemptuous baſe-borne Callot as ſhe is,
She vaunted 'mongſt her Minions t'other day,
The very traine of her worſt wearing Gowne,
Was better worth then all my Fathers Lands,
Till Suffolke gaue two Dukedomes for his Daughter.

Suff. Madame, my ſelfe haue lym'd a Buſh for her,
And plac't a Quier of ſuch enticing Birds,
That ſhe will light to liſten to the Layes,
And neuer mount to trouble you againe.
So let her reſt: and Madame liſt to me,
For I am bold to counſaile you in this;
Although we fancie not the Cardinall,
Yet muſt we ioyne with him and with the Lords,
Till we haue brought Duke Humphrey in diſgrace.

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So one by one we'le weed them all at last,
And you your selfe shall steere the happy Helme. Exit.

Sound a Sonnet.

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall, Buckingham, Yorke, Salsbury, Warwicke, and the Duchesse.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerset, or Yorke, all's one to me.
Yorke. If Yorke have ill demean'd himselfe in France,
Then let him be denay'd the Regent-ship.
Som. If Somerset be vnworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.
Warw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Dispute not that, Yorke is the worthyer.
Card. Ambitious Warwicke, let thy betters speake.
Warw. The Cardinall's not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwicke.
Warw. Warwicke may liue to be the best of all.
Salsb. Peace Sonne, and shew some reason Buckingham
Why Somerset (hould be preferr'd in this?
Queene. Because the King forsooth will haue it so.
Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himselfe
To giue his Censure: These are no Womens matters.
Queene. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?
Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleasure will resigne my Place.
Suff. Resigne it then, and leaue thine insolence.
Since thou wert King; as who is King, but thou?
The Common-wealth hath dayly run to wreck,
The Dolphin hath preuayl'd beyond the Seas,
And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme
Haue beene as Bond-men to thy Soueraignetie.
Card. The Commons hast thou rackt, the Clergies Bags
Are lanke and leane with thy Extortions.
Som. Thy sumptuous Buildings, and thy Wiues Attyre
Haue cost a masse of publique Treasurie.
Buck. Thy Cruelties in execution
Vpon Offendors, hath exceeded Law,
And left thee to the mercy of the Law.
Queene. Thy sale of Offices and Townes in France,
If they were know'ne, as the suspect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.
Exit Humfrey.
Giue me my Fanne: what, Minion, can ye not?
She gives the Duchesse a box on the ear.
I cry you mercy, Madame: was it you?
Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was, proud French-woman:
Could I come neere your Beautie with my Nayles,
I could set my ten Commandements in your face.
King. Sweet Aunt be quiet, 'twas against her will.
Duch. Against her will, good King? looke to't in time
She'le hamper thee, and dandle thee like a Baby:
Though in this place most Master weare no Breeches,
She shall not strike Dame Eleanor vnreueng'd.
Exit Eleanor.
Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Eleanor,
And listen after Humfrey, how he proceedes:
Shee's tickled now, her Fume needs no spurres,
Shee'le gallop farre enough to her destruction.
Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being ouer-blowne,
With walking once about the Quadrangle,
I come to talke of Common-wealth Affayres.
As for your spightfull false Obiections,
Proue them, and I lye open to the Law:
But God in mercie so deale with my Soule,
As I in duetie loue my King and Country.
But to the matter that we haue in hand:
I say, my Soueraigne, Yorke is meetest man
To be your Regent in the Realme of France.
Suff. Before we make election, giue me leaue
To shew some reason, of no little force,
That Yorke is most meetest of any man.
Yorke. Ile tell thee, Suffolke, why I am meetest.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in Pride:
Next, if I be appointed for the Place,
My Lord of Somerset will keepe me here,
Without Discharge, Money, or Furniture,
Till France be wonne into the Dolphins hands:
Last time I danc't attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg'd, famisht, and lost.
Warw. That can I witnesse, and a fouler fact
Did neuer Traytor in the Land commit.
Suff. Peace head-strong Warwicke.
Warw. Image of Pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Because here is a man accused of Treason,
Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuse himselfe.
Yorke. Doth any one accuse Yorke for a Traytor?
King. What mean'st thou, Suffolke? tell me, what are these?
Suff. Please it your Maiestie, this is the man
That doth accuse his Master of High Treason:
His words were these: That Richard, Duke of Yorke,
Was rightfull Heire vnto the English Crowne,
And that your Maiestie was an Vsurper.
King. Say man, were these thy words?
Armorer. And't shall please your Maiestie, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witnesse, I am falsely accus'd by the Villaine.
Peter. By these ten times bones, my Lords, he did speake them to me in the Garret one Night, as we were scowring my Lord of Yorkes Armor.
Yorke. Base Dunghill Villaine, and Mechanicall,
Ile haue thy Head for this thy Traytors speech:
I doe beseech your Royall Maiestie,
Let him haue all the rigor of the Law.
Armorer. Alas, my Lord, hang me if euer I spake the words: my accuser is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow vpon his knees he would be euen with me: I haue good witnesse of this; therefore I beseech your Maiestie, doe not cast away an honest man for a Villaines accusation.
King. Vnckle, what shall we say to this in law?
Humf. This doome, my Lord, if I may iudge:
Let Somerset be Regent o're the French,
Because in Yorke this breedes suspition;
And let these haue a day appointed them
For single Combat, in conuenient place,
For he hath witnesse of his seruants malice:
This is the Law, and this Duke Humfreyes doome.

Som. I

. I humbly thanke your Royall Maieſtie.
mmer. And I accept the Combat willingly.
er. Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods ſake
y caſe: the ſpight of man prevayleth againſt me.
d haue mercy vpon me, I ſhall neuer be able to s blow. O Lord my heart.
mſ. Sirrha, or you muſt fight, or elſe be hang'd.
g. Away with them to Priſon: and the day of ot, ſhall be the laſt of the next moneth. Come ſir, wee'le ſee their ſent away.
Flouriſh. Exeunt.

ter the Witch, the two Prieſts, and Bullingbroke.

mer. Come my Maſters, the Ducheſſe I tell you ex-performance of your promiſes.
ing. Maſter Hume, we are therefore prouided: will ip behold and heare our Exorciſmes?
me. I, what elſe? feare you not her courage.
ling. I haue heard her reported to be a Woman of *inc*ible ſpirit: but it ſhall be conuenient, Maſter
, that you be by her aloft, while wee be buſie be-and ſo I pray you go in Gods Name, and leaue vs.
Exit Hume.
er London, be you proſtrate, and grouell on the
; Iohn Southwell reade you, and let vs to our worke.

Enter Eleanor aloft

mor Well ſaid my Maſters, and welcome all: To ere, the ſooner the better
n Patience, good Lady, Wizards know their times:
Night, darke Night, the ſilent of the Night,
me of Night when Troy was ſet on fire,
me when Screech-owles cry, and Bandogs howle,
pirits walke, and Ghoſts breake vp their Graues;
ime beſt fits the worke we haue in hand.
me, ſit you, and feare not: whom wee raiſe,
will make faſt within a hallow'd Verge.

y doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle, Bullingbroke or Southwell reades, Coniuro te, &c. It Thunders and Lightens terribly: then the Spirit ariſeth.
rit. Adſum.
ich. Aſmoth, by the eternall God, le name and power thou tremblеſt at,
ere that I ſhall aske: for tell thou thou ſpeake,
ſhalt not paſſe from hence.
rit. Aske what thou wilt; that I had ſayd, and done.
ling. Firſt of the King: What ſhall of him be-
rit. The Duke yet liues, that Henry ſhall depoſe:
but out-liue, and dye a violent death.
ling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolke?
rit By Waters ſhall he dye, and take his end.
ling. What ſhall befall the Duke of Somerſet?
rit. Let him ſhun Caſtles, ſhall he be vpon the ſandie Plaines,
where Caſtles mounted ſtand.
diuine for more I hardly can endure.
ling. Deſcend to Darkneſſe, and the burning Lake:
Fiend auoide.
Thunder and Lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Yorke and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Yorke. Lay hands vpon theſe Traytors, and their traſh:
Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an inch.
What Madame, are you there? the King & Commonweale
Are deepely indebted for this peece of paines;
My Lord Protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guerdon'd for theſe good deſerts.
Eleanor. Not halfe ſo bad as thine to England's King,
Iniurious Duke, that threateſt where's no cauſe.
Buck. True Madame, none at all: what call you this?
Away with them, let them be clapt vp cloſe,
And kept aſunder: you Madame ſhall with vs.
Stafford take her to thee.
We'le ſee your Trinkets here all forth-comming.
All away. Exit
Yorke. Lord Buckingham, me thinke you watcht her well:
A pretty Plot, well choſen to build vpon.
Now pray my Lord, let's ſee the Deuils Writ.
What haue we here? Reades.
The Duke yet liues, that Henry ſhall depoſe:
But him out-liue, and dye a violent death.
Why this is iuſt Aio te Æacida Romanos vincere poſſe.
Well, to the reſt:
Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolke?
By Water ſhall he dye, and take his end.
What ſhall betide the Duke of Somerſet?
Let him ſhunne Caſtles,
Safer ſhall he be vpon the ſandie Plaines,
Then where Caſtles mounted ſtand.
Come, come, my Lords,
Theſe Oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly vnderſtood.
The King is now in progreſſe towards Saint Albones,
With him, the Husband of this lowly Lady:
Thither goes theſe Newes,
As faſt as Horſe can carry them:
A ſorry Breakfaſt for my Lord Protector.
Buck. Your Grace ſhal giue me leaue, my Lord of York,
To be the Poſte, in hope of his reward.
Yorke. At your pleaſure, my good Lord.
Who's within there, hoe?
Enter a Seruingman.
Inuite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick
To ſuppe with me to morrow Night. Away.
Exeunt.

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinall, and Suffolke, with Faulconers hallowing.

Queene. Beleeue me Lords, for flying at the Brooke,
I ſaw not better ſport theſe ſeuen yeeres day:
Yet by your leaue, the Winde was very high,
And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.
King. But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made,
And what a pytch ſhe flew aboue the reſt:
To ſee how God in all his Creatures works,
Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.
Suff. No marueil, and it like your Maieſtie,
My Lord Protectors Hawkes doe towre ſo well,
They know their Maſter loues to be aloft,
And beares his thoughts aboue his Faulcons Pitch.
Glo. My Lord, 'tis but a baſe ignoble minde,
That mounts no higher then a Bird can ſoare.

Card. I

Card. I thought as much, hee would be abouc the Clouds.

Glo. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heauen?

King. The Treaſurie of euerlaſting Ioy.

Card. Thy Heauen is on Earth, thine Eyes & Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treaſure of thy Heart, Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere, That ſmooth'ſt it ſo with King and Common-weale.

Glo. What, Cardinall? Is your Prieſt-hood growne peremptorie? Tantæne animis Cœleſtibus iræ, Church-men ſo hot? Good Vnckle hide ſuch malice: With ſuch Holyneſſe can you doe it?

Suff. No malice Sir, no more then well becomes So good a Quarrell, and ſo bad a Peere.

Glo. As who, my Lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my Lord, An't like your Lordly Lords Protectorſhip.

Glo. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine inſolence.

Queene. And thy Ambition, Gloſter.

King. I prythee peace, good Queene, And whet not on theſe furious Peeres, For bleſſed are the Peace-makers on Earth.

Card. Let me be bleſſed for the Peace I make Againſt this proud Protector with my Sword.

Glo. Faith holy Vnckle, would't were come to that.

Card. Marry, when thou dar'ſt.

Glo. Make vp no factious numbers for the matter, In thine owne perſon anſwere thy abuſe.

Card. I, where thou dar'ſt not peepe: And if thou dar'ſt, this Euening, On the Eaſt ſide of the Groue.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeue me, Couſin Gloſter, Had not your man put vp the Fowle ſo ſuddenly, We had had more ſport. Come with thy two-hand Sword.

Glo. True Vnckle, are ye aduis'd? The Eaſt ſide of the Groue: Cardinall, I am with you.

King. Why how now, Vnckle Gloſter?

Glo. Talking of Hawking; nothing elſe, my Lord. Now by Gods Mother, Prieſt, Ile ſhaue your Crowne for this, Or all my Fence ſhall fayle.

Card. Medice teipſum, Protector ſee to't well, protect your ſelfe.

King. The Windes grow high, So doe your Stomacks, Lords: How irkeſome is this Muſick to my hearc? When ſuch Strings iarre, what hope of Harmony? I pray my Lords let me compound this ſtrife.

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Glo. What meanes this noyſe? Fellow, what Miracle do'ſt thou proclayme?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forſooth, a blinde man at Saint Albones Shrine, Within this halfe houre hath receiu'd his ſight, A man that ne're ſaw in his life before.

King. Now God be prays'd, that to beleeuing Soules Giues Light in Darkneſſe, Comfort in Deſpaire.

Enter the Maior of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Towne-men, on Proceſſion, To preſent your Highneſſe with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale, Although by his ſight his ſinne be multiplyed.

Glo. Stand by, my Maſters, bring him neere the King, His Highneſſe pleaſure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell vs here the circumſtance, That we for thee may glorifie the Lord. What, haſt thou beene long blinde, and now reſtor'd?

Simp. Borne blinde, and't pleaſe your Grace.

Wife. I indeede was he.

Suff. What Woman is this?

Wife. His Wife, and't like your Worſhip.

Glo. Hadſt thou been his Mother, thou couldſt haue better told.

King. Where wert thou borne

Simp. At Barwick in the North, and't like your Grace.

King. Poore Soule, Gods goodneſſe hath beene great to thee: Let neuer Day nor Night vnhallowed paſſe, But ſtill remember what the Lord hath done.

Queene. Tell me, good-fellow, Cam'ſt thou here by Chance, or of Deuotion, To this holy Shrine?

Simp. God knowes of pure Deuotion, Being cal'd a hundred times, and oftner, In my ſleepe, by good Saint Albon; Who ſaid; Symon, come; come offer at my Shrine, And I will helpe thee.

Wife. Moſt true, forſooth: And many time and oft my ſelfe haue heard a Voyce, To call him ſo.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simp. I, God Almighties helpe me.

Suff. How cam'ſt thou ſo?

Simp. A fall off of a Tree.

Wife. A Plum-tree, Maſter.

Glo. How long haſt thou beene blinde?

Simp. O borne ſo, Maſter.

Glo. What, and would'ſt climbe a Tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare.

Glo. Maſſe, thou lou'dſt Plummes well, that would'ſt venture ſo.

Simp. Alas, good Maſter, my Wife deſired ſome Damſons, and made me climbe, with danger of my Life.

Glo. A ſubtill Knaue, but yet it ſhall not ſerue: Let me ſee thine Eyes: winck now, now open them, In my opinion, yet thou ſeeſt not well.

Simp. Yes Maſter, clearer as day, I thanke God and Saint Albones.

Glo. Say'ſt thou me ſo: what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simp. Red Maſter, Red as Blood.

Glo. Why that's well ſaid: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simp. Black forſooth, Coale-Black, as Jet.

King. Why then, thou know'ſt what Colour Jet is of?

Suff. And yet I thinke, Jet did he never ſee.

Glo. But

Glost. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wife. Neuer before this day, in all his life.

Glost. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simpc. Alas Master, I know not.

Glost. What's his Name?

Simpc. I know not.

Glost. Nor his?

Simpc. No indeede, Master.

Glost. What's thine owne Name?

Simpc. Saunder Simpcox, and if it please you, Master

Glost. Then Saunder, sit there,
The lying'st Knaue in Christendome.
If thou hadst beene borne blinde,
Thou mightst as well haue knowne all our Names,
As thus to name the seuerall Colours we doe weare.
Sight may distinguish of Colours:
But suddenly to nominate them all,
It is impossible.
My Lords, Saint Albons here hath done a Miracle:
And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,
That could restore this Cripple to his Legges againe.

Simpc. O Master, that you could!

Glost. My Masters of Saint Albones,
Haue you not Beadles in your Towne,
And Things call'd Whippes?

Maior. Yes, my Lord, if it please your Grace.

Glost. Then send for one presently.

Maior. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither straight.
Exit.

Glost. Now fetch me a Stoole hither by and by.
Now Sirrha, if you meane to saue your selfe from Whipping, leape me ouer this Stoole, and runne away.

Simpc. Alas Master, I am not able to stand alone:
You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with Whippes.

Glost. Well Sir, we must haue you finde your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape ouer that same Stoole.

Beadle. I will, my Lord.
Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet, quickly.

Simpc. Alas Master, what shall I doe? I am not able to stand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes ouer the Stoole, and runnes away: and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, seest thou this, and bearest so long?

Queene. It made me laugh, to see the Villaine runne.

Glost. Follow the Knaue, and take this Drab away.

Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Glost. Let thē be whipt through euery Market Towne,
Till they come to Barwick, from whence they came.
Exit.

Card. Duke Humfrey has done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True: made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Glost. But you haue done more Miracles then I:
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to vnfold:
A sort of naughtie persons, lewdly bent,
Vnder the Countenance and Confederacie
Of Lady Eleanor, the Protectors Wife,
The Ring-leader and Head of all this Rout,
Haue practis'd dangerously against your State,
Dealing with Witches and with Coniurers,
Whom we haue apprehended in the Fact,
Raysing vp wicked Spirits from vnder ground,
Demanding of King Henries Life and Death,
And other of your Highnesse Priuie Councell,
As more at large your Grace shall vnderstand.

Card. And so my Lord Protector, by this meanes
Your Lady is forth-comming, yet at London.
This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge;
'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre.

Glost. Ambitious Church-man, leaue to afflict my heart:
Sorrow and griefe haue vanquisht all my powers;
And vanquisht as I am, I yeeld to thee,
Or to the meanest Groome.

King. O God, what mischiefes work the wicked ones?
Heaping confusion on their owne heads thereby.

Queene. Glouster, see here the Tainture of thy Nest,
And looke thy selfe be faultlesse, thou wert best.

Glost. Madame, for my selfe, to Heauen I doe appeale,
How I haue lou'd my King, and Common-weale:
And for my Wife, I know not how it stands,
Sorry I am to heare what I haue heard.
Noble shee is: but if shee haue forgot
Honor and Vertue, and conuers't with such,
As like to Pytch, defile Nobilitie;
I banish her my Bed, and Companie,
And giue her as a Prey to Law and Shame,
That hath dis-honored Glosters honest Name.

King. Well, for this Night we will repose vs here:
To morrow toward London, back againe,
To looke into this Businesse thoroughly,
And call these foule Offendors to their Answeres;
And poyse the Cause in Iustice equall Scales,
Whose Beame stands sure, whose rightful cause preuailes.
Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury & Warwick,
Our simple Supper ended, giue me leaue,
In this close Walke, to satisfie my selfe,
In crauing your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Salisb. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.

Warw. Sweet Yorke begin: and if thy clayme be good,
The Neuills are thy Subiects to command.

Yorke. Then thus:
Edward the third, my Lords, had seuen Sonnes:
The first, Edward the Black-Prince, Prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, Duke of Clarence; next to whom,
Was Iohn of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;
The fift, was Edmond Langley, Duke of Yorke;
The sixt, was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Glouster;
William of Windsor was the seuenth, and last.
Edward the Black-Prince dyed before his Father,
And left behinde him Richard, his onely Sonne,
Who after Edward the third's death, raign'd as King,
Till Henry Bullingbrooke, Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest Sonne and Heire of Iohn of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence she came,

And

Card. I thought as much, hee would be aboue the Clouds.

Glo. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heauen?

King. The Treaſurie of euerlaſting Ioy.

Card. Thy Heauen is on Earth, thine Eyes & Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treaſure of thy Heart, Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere, That ſmooth'ſt it ſo with King and Common-weale.

Glo. What, Cardinall? Is your Prieſt-hood growne peremptorie? Tantæne animis Cœleſtibus iræ, Church-men ſo hot? Good Vncle hide ſuch malice: With ſuch Holyneſſe can you doe it?

Suf. No malice Sir, no more then well becomes So good a Quarrell, and ſo bad a Peere.

Glo. As who, my Lord?

Suf. Why, as you, my Lord, An't like your Lordly Lords Protectorſhip.

Glo. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine inſolence.

Queene. And thy Ambition, Gloſter.

King. I prythee peace, good Queene, And whet not on theſe furious Peeres, For bleſſed are the Peace-makers on Earth.

Card. Let me be bleſſed for the Peace I make Againſt this proud Protector with my Sword.

Glo. Faith holy Vncle, would't were come to that.

Card. Marry, when thou dar'ſt.

Glo. Make vp no factious numbers for the matter, In thine owne perſon anſwere thy abuſe.

Card. I, where thou dar'ſt not peepe: And if thou dar'ſt, this Euening, On the Eaſt ſide of the Groue.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeue me, Couſin Gloſter, Had not your man put vp the Fowle ſo ſuddenly, We had had more ſport. Come with thy two-hand Sword.

Glo. True Vncle, are ye aduis'd? The Eaſt ſide of the Groue: Cardinall, I am with you.

King. Why how now, Vncle Gloſter?

Glo. Talking of Hawking; nothing elſe, my Lord. Now by Gods Mother, Prieſt, Ile ſhaue your Crowne for this, Or all my Fence ſhall fayle.

Card. Medice teipſum, Protector ſee to't well, protect your ſelfe.

King. The Windes grow high, So doe your Stomacks, Lords: How irkeſome is this Muſick to my hearts? When ſuch Strings iarre, what hope of Harmony? I pray my Lords let me compound this ſtrife.

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Glo. What meanes this noyſe? Fellow, what Miracle do'ſt thou proclayme?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forſooth, a blinde man at Saint Albones Shrine, Within this halfe houre hath receiu'd his ſight, A man that ne're ſaw in his life before.

King. Now God be prays'd, that to beleeuing Soules Giues Light in Darkneſſe, Comfort in Deſpaire.

Enter the Maior of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Townſ-men, on Proceſſion, To preſent your Highneſſe with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale, Although by his ſight his ſinne be multiplyed.

Glo. Stand by, my Maſters, bring him neere the King, His Highneſſe pleaſure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell vs here the circumſtance, That we for thee may glorifie the Lord. What, haſt thou beene long blinde, and now reſtor'd?

Simp. Borne blinde, and't pleaſe your Grace.

Wife. I indeede was he.

Suf. What Woman is this?

Wife. His Wife, and't like your Worſhip.

Glo. Haſt thou been his Mother, thou could'ſt haue better told.

King. Where wert thou borne

Simp. At Barwick in the North, and't like your Grace.

King. Poore Soule, Gods goodneſſe hath beene great to thee: Let neuer Day nor Night vnhallowed paſſe, But ſtill remember what the Lord hath done.

Queene. Tell me, good-fellow, Cam'ſt thou here by Chance, or of Deuotion, To this holy Shrine?

Simp. God knowes of pure Deuotion, Being call'd a hundred times, and aboue, In my ſleepe, by good Saint Albon: Who ſaid; Symon, come; come offer at my Shrine, And I will helpe thee.

Wife. Moſt true, forſooth: And many time and oft my ſelfe haue heard a Voyce, To call him ſo.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simp. I, God Almightie helpe me.

Suf. How cam'ſt thou ſo?

Simp. A fall off of a Tree.

Wife. A Plum-tree, Maſter.

Glo. How long haſt thou beene blinde?

Simp. O borne ſo, Maſter.

Glo. What, and would'ſt climbe a Tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare.

Glo. Maſſe, thou lou'dſt Plummes well, that would'ſt venture ſo.

Simp. Alas, good Maſter, my Wife deſired ſome Damſons, and made me climbe, with danger of my Life.

Glo. A ſubtill Knaue, but yet it ſhall not ſerue: Let me ſee thine Eyes: winck now, now open them, In my opinion, yet thou ſeeſt not well.

Simp. Yes Maſter, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albones.

Glo. Say'ſt thou me ſo: what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simp. Red Maſter, Red as Blood.

Glo. Why that's well ſaid: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simp. Black forſooth, Coale-Black, as Iet.

King. Why then, thou know'ſt what Colour Iet is of?

Suf. And yet I thinke, Iet did he neuer ſee.

Glo. But

Glo. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wife. Never before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simp. Alas Maſter, I know not.

Glo. What's his Name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No indeede, Maſter.

Glo. What a thing owne Name?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, and if it pleaſe you, Maſter

Glo. Then Saunder, ſit there,
The lying'ſt Knaue in Chriſtendome.
If thou hadſt beene borne blinde,
Thou mighſt as well haue knowne all our Names,

Maior. Yes, my Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace.

Glo. Then ſend for one preſently.

Maior. Sirrha, goe ſeeke the Beadle hither ſtraight.
Exit.

Glo. Now ſetch me a Stoole hither by and by.
Now Sirrha, if you meane to ſaue your ſelfe from Whipping, leape me ouer this Stoole, and runne away.

Simp. Alas Maſter, I am not able to ſtand alone:
You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with Whippes.

Glo. Well Sir, we muſt haue you finde your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape ouer that ſame Stoole.

Beadle. I will, my Lord.
Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet, quickly.

Simp. Alas Maſter, what ſhall I doe? I am not able to ſtand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes ouer the Stoole, and runnes away: and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, ſeeſt thou this, and beareſt ſo long?

Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Card. Duke Humfrey has done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True: made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Glo. But you haue done more Miracles then I:
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Couſin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to vnfold:

Or to the meaneſt Groome.

King. O God, what miſchiefes work the wicked ones?
Heaping confuſion on their owne heads thereby.

Queene. Glouſter, ſee here the Tainture of thy Neſt,
And looke thy ſelfe be faultleſſe, thou wert beſt.

Glo. Madame, for my ſelfe, to Heauen I doe appeale,
How I haue lou'd my King, and Common-weale:

And call theſe foule Offendors to their Anſweres;
And poyſe the Cauſe in Iuſtice equall Scales,
Whoſe Beame ſtands ſure, whoſe rightful cauſe preuailes.
Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbory & Warwick.
Our ſimple Supper ended, giue me leaue,
In this cloſe Walke, to ſatisfie my ſelfe,
In craueing your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Salish. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.

Warw. Sweet Yorke begin: and if thy clayme be good,
The Neuils are thy Subiects to command.

Yorke. Then thus:
Edward the third, my Lords, had ſeuen Sonnes:
The firſt, Edward the Black-Prince, Prince of Wales;
The ſecond, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, Duke of Clarence; next to whom,
Was Iohn of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaſter;
The fift, was Edmond Langley, Duke of Yorke;
The ſixt, was Thomas of Woodſtock, Duke of Gloſter;
William of Windſor was the ſeuenth, & laſt.
Edward the Black-Prince dyed before his Father,
And left behinde him Richard, his onely Sonne,
Who after Edward the third's death, raign'd as King,
Till Henry Bullingbrooke, Duke of Lancaſter,
The eldeſt Sonne and Heire of Iohn of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence ſhe came,

And

And him to Pumfret; where, as all you know,
Harmeleſſe Richard was murthered traiterouſly.
Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the Houſe of Lancaſter the Crowne.
Yorke. Which now they hold by force, and not by right:
For Richard, the firſt Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The Iſſue of the next Sonne ſhould haue reign'd.
Salish. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.
Yorke. The third Sonne, Duke of Clarence,
From whoſe Line I clayme the Crowne.
Had Iſſue Phillip, a Daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, Earle of March:
Edmond had Iſſue, Roger Earle of March;
Roger had Iſſue, Edmond, Anne, and Elianor.
Salish. This Edmond, in the Reigne of Bullingbrooke,
As I haue read, layd clayme vnto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had beene King;
Who kept him in Captiuitie, till he dyed.
But, to the reſt.
Yorke. His eldeſt Siſter, Anne,
My Mother, being Heire vnto the Crowne,
Marryed Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmond Langley,
Edward the thirds fift Sonnes Sonne;
By her I clayme the Kingdome:
She was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmond Mortimer,
Who marryed Phillip, ſole Daughter
Vnto Lionel, Duke of Clarence.
So, if the Iſſue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King.
Warw. What plaine proceedings is more plain then this?
Henry doth clayme the Crowne from Iohn of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, Yorke claymes it from the third:
Till Lionels Iſſue fayles, his ſhould not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flouriſhes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire ſlippes of ſuch a Stock.
Then Father Salisbury, kneele we together,
And in this priuate Plot be we the firſt,
That ſhall ſalute our rightfull Soueraigne
With honor of his Birth-right to the Crowne.
Both. Long liue our Soueraigne Richard, Englands King.
Yorke. We thanke you Lords:
But I am not your King, till I be Crown'd,
And that my Sword be ſtayn'd
With heart-blood of the Houſe of Lancaſter:
And that's not ſuddenly to be perform'd,
But with aduice and ſilent ſecrecie.
Doe you as I doe in theſe dangerous dayes,
Winke at the Duke of Suffolkes inſolence,
At Beauforts Pride, at Somerſets Ambition,
At Buckyngham, and all the Crew of them,
Till they haue ſnar'd the Shepheard of the Flock,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey:
'Tis that they ſeeke; and they, in ſeeking that,
Shall finde their deaths, if Yorke can prophecie.
Salish. My Lord, breake we off; we know your minde at full.
Warw. My heart aſſures me, that the Earle of Warwick
Shall one day make the Duke of Yorke a King.
Yorke. And Neuill, this I doe aſſure my ſelfe,
Richard ſhall liue to make the Earle of Warwick
The greateſt man in England, but the King.
Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to hanish the Ducheſſe.

King. Stand forth Dame Elianor Cobham, Gloſters Wife:
In ſight of God, and vs, your guilt is great,
Receiue the Sentence of the Law for ſinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adiudg'd to death.
You foure from hence to Priſon, back againe;
From thence, vnto the place of Execution:
The Witch in Smithfield ſhall be burnt to aſhes,
And you three ſhall be ſtrangled on the Gallowes.
You Madame, for you are more Nobly borne,
Depoyled of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Liue in your Countrey here, in Baniſhment,
With Sir Iohn Stanly, in the Ile of Man.
Elianor. Welcome is Baniſhment, welcome were my Death.
Glost. Elianor, the Law thou ſeeſt hath iudged thee,
I cannot iuſtifie whom the Law condemnes:
Mine eyes are full of teares, my heart of greefe.
Ah Humfrey, this diſhonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with ſorrow to the ground.
I beſeech your Maieſtie giue me leaue to go;
Sorrow would ſolace, and mine Age would eaſe.
King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloſter,
Ere thou goe, giue vp thy Staffe,
Henry will to himſelfe Protector be,
And God ſhall be my hope, my ſtay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my feete:
And goe in peace, Humfrey, no leſſe belou'd,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.
Queene. I ſee no reaſon, why a King of yeeres
Should be to be protected like a Child,
God and King Henry gouerne Englands Realme:
Giue vp your Staffe, Sir, and the King his Realme.
Glost. My Staffe? Here, Noble Henry, is my Staffe:
As willingly doe I the ſame reſigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine;
And euen as willingly at thy feete I leaue it,
As others would ambitiouſly receiue it.
Farewell good King: when I am dead and gone,
May honorable Peace attend thy Throne.
Exit Glo'ſter.
Queene. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queene,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloſter, ſcarce himſelfe,
That beares ſo ſhrewd a maime: two Pulls at once;
His Lady baniſht, and a Limbe lopt off.
This Staffe of Honor raught, there let it ſtand,
Where it beſt fits to be, in Henries hand.
Suff. Thus droupes this lofty Pyne, & hangs his ſprayes,
Thus Elianors Pride dyes in her youngeſt dayes.
Yorke. Lords, let him goe. Pleaſe it your Maieſtie,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Liſts,
So pleaſe your Highneſſe to behold the fight.
Queene. I, good my Lord: for purpoſely therefore Left I the Court, to ſee this Quarrell try'de.
King. A Gods Name ſee the Lyſts and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.
Yorke. I neuer ſaw a fellow worſe beſtead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The ſeruant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter

one Doore the Armourer and his Neighbours drinking to ſo much, that he is drunke; and he comes with a ome before him, and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge ed to it: and at the other Doore his Man, with a ome and Sand-bagge, and Prentices drinking to him.

ighbor. Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you of Sack: and feare not Neighbor, you ſhall doe urer. Let it come yfaith, and Ile pledge you all, rot ſo much ſence already.

h. Come, leaue your drinking, and fall to blowes.
what's thy Name?

h. Peter? what more?
. Thumpe.
h. Thumpe? Then ſee thou thumpe thy Maſter urer. Maſters, I am come hither as is were vpon

Queene: and therefore Peter haue at thee with a right blow.
. Diſpatch, this Knaues tongue begins to double.
Trumpets, Alarum to the Combattants.
They fight, and Peter ſtrikes him downe.
urer. Hold Peter, hold, I confeſſe, I confeſſe Treagood Wine in thy Maſters way.

r. O God, haue I ouercome mine Enemies in this

. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our ſight, his death we doe perceiue his guilt,
od in Iuſtice hath reueal'd to vs
th and innocence of this poore fellow,
he had thought to haue murther'd wrongfully.
fellow, follow vs for thy Reward.
Sound a flouriſh. Exeunt.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

. Thus ſometimes hath the braſteſt day a Cloud:
ter Summer, euermore ſucceedes
Winter, with his wreathfull nipping Cold;
s and ſeaſons abound, as Seaſons fleet.
ne's a Clock?
. Tenne, my Lord.

Gloſt. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me,
To watch the comming of my puniſht Ducheſſe:
Vnneath may ſhee endure the flintie Streets,
To treade them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Minde abrooke
The abiect People, gazing on thy face,
With enuious Lookes laughing at thy ſhame,
That erſt did follow thy prowd Chariot-Wheeles,
When thou didſt ride in triumph through the ſtreets.
But ſoft, I thinke ſhe comes, and Ile prepare
My teare-ſtayn'd eyes, to ſee her Miſeries.

Enter the Ducheſſe in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sheriffe and Officers.

Serv. So pleaſe your Grace, wee'le take her from the Sheriffe.
Gloſter. No, ſtirre not for your liues, let her paſſe by.
Elianor. Come you, my Lord, to ſee my open ſhame?
Now thou do'ſt Penance too. Looke how they gaze,
See how the giddy multitude doe point,
And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah Gloſter, hide thee from their hatefull lookes,
And in thy Cloſet pent vp, rue my ſhame,
And banne thine Enemies, both mine and thine.
Gloſt. Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.
Elianor. Ah Gloſter, teach me to forget my ſelfe:
For whileſt I thinke I am thy married Wife,
And thou a Prince Protector of this Land;
Me thinkes I ſhould not thus be led along,
Mayl'd vp in ſhame, with Papers on my back,
And follow'd with a Rabble, that reioyce
To ſee my teares, and heare my deepe-fet groanes.
The ruthleſſe Flint doth cut my tender feet,
And when I ſtart, the enuious people laugh,
And bid me be aduiſed how I treade
Ah Humfrey, can I beare this ſhamefull yoake?
Troweſt thou, that ere Ile looke vpon the World,
Or count them happy, that enioyes the Sunne?
No: Darke ſhall be my Light, and Night my Day.
To thinke vpon my Pompe, ſhall be my Hell.
Sometime Ile ſay, I am Duke Humfreyes Wife,
And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land:
Yet ſo he rul'd, and ſuch a Prince he was,
As he ſtood by, whileſt I, his forlorne Ducheſſe,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing ſtock
To euery idle Raſcall follower.
But be thou milde, and bluſh not at my ſhame,
Nor ſtirre at nothing, till the Axe of Death
Hang ouer thee, as ſure it ſhortly will.
For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all
With her, that hateth thee and hates vs all,
And Yorke, and impious Beaufford, that falſe Prieſt,
Haue all lym'd Buſhes to betray thy Wings,
And flye thou how thou canſt, they'le tangle thee.
But feare not thou, vntill thy foot be ſnar'd,
Nor never ſeeke preuention of thy foes.
Gloſt. Ah Nell, forbeare: thou aymeſt all awry.
I muſt offend, before I be attainted:
And had I twentie times ſo many foes,
And each of them had twentie times their power,
All theſe could not procure me any ſcathe,
So long as I am loyall, true, and crimeleſſe.
Would'ſt haue me reſcue thee from this reproach?

Why yet thy scandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law.
Thy greatest helpe is quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee sort thy heart to patience,
These few dayes wonder will be quickly worne.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your Grace to his Maiesties Parliament,
Holden at Bury, the first of this next Moneth.

Glost. And my consent ne're ask'd herein before?
This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.
My Nell, I take my leaue: and Master Sherlfe,
Let not her Penance exceede the Kings Commission.

Sh. And't please your Grace, here my Commission stayes:
And Sir John Stanly is appointed now,
To take her with him to the Ile of Man.

Glost. Must you, Sir John, protect my Lady here?

Stanly. So am I giuen in charge, may't please your Grace.

Glost. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You vse her well: the World may laugh againe,
And I may liue to doe you kindnesse, if you doe it her.
And so Sir John, farewell.

Elianor What, gone my Lord, and bid me not farewell?

Glost. Witnesse my teares, I cannot stay to speake.

Exit Glostet.

Elianor. Art thou gone to? all comfort goe with thee,
For none abides with me: my Ioy, is Death;
Death, at whose Name I oft haue beene afear'd,
Because I wish'd this Worlds eternitie.
Stanley, I prethee goe, and take me hence,
I care not whither, for I begge no fauor;
Onely conuey me where thou art commanded.

Stanley. Why, Madame, that is to the Ile of Man,
There to be vs'd according to your State.

Elianor. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I then be vs'd reproachfully?

Stanley. Like to a Duchesse, and Duke Humfreyes Lady,
According to that State you shall be vs'd.

Elianor. Sheriffe farewell, and better then I fare,
Although thou hast beene Conduct of my shame.

Sheriffe. It is my Office, and Madame pardon me.

Elianor. I, I, farewell, thy Office is discharg'd:
Come Stanley, shall we goe?

Stanley. Madame, your Penance done,
Throw off this Sheet,
And goe we to attyre you for our Iourney.

Elianor. My shame will not be shifted with my Sheet:
No, it will hang vpon my richest Robes,
And shew it selfe, attyre me how I can.
Goe, leade the way, I long to see my Prison. Exeunt

Sound a Sonet. Enter King, Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Yorke, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Glosters is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
What e're occasion keepes him from vs now.

Queene. Can you not see? or will ye not obserue
The strangenesse of his alter'd Countenance?
With what a Maiestie he beares himselfe,
How insolent of late he is become,
How prowd, how peremptorie, and vnlike himselfe.
We know the time since he was milde and affable,
And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,
Immediately he was vpon his Knee,
That all the Court admir'd him for submission.
But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,
When every one will giue the time of day,
He knits his Brow, and shewes an angry Eye,
And passeth by with stiffe vnbowed Knee,
Disdaining dutie that to vs belongs.
Small Corres are not regarded when they grynne,
But great men tremble when the Lyon roares,
And Humfrey is no little Man in England.
First note, that he is neere you in discent,
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me seemeth then, it is no Policie,
Respecting what a rancorous minde he bewes,
And his aduantage following your decease,
That he should come about your Royall Person,
Or be admitted to your Highnesse Councell.
By flatterie hath he wonne the Commons hearts:
And when he please to make Commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the Spring, and Weeds are shallow-rooted,
Suffer them now, and they'le o're-grow the Garden,
And choake the Herbes for want of Husbandry.
The reuerent care I beare vnto my Lord,
Made me collect these dangers in the Duke.
If it be fond, call it a Womans feare:
Which feare, if better Reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the Duke.
My Lord of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Yorke,
Reproue my allegation, if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectuall.

Suff. Well hath your Highnesse seene into this Duke:
And had I first beene put to speake my minde,
I thinke I should haue told your Graces Tale.
The Duchesse, by his subornation,
Vpon my Life began her diuelish practises:
Or if he were not priuie to those Faults,
Yet by reputing of his high discent,
As next the King, he was successiue Heire,
And such high vaunts of his Nobilitie,
Did instigate the Bedlam braine-sick Duchesse,
By wicked meanes to frame our Soueraignes fall.
Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,
And in his simple shew he harbours Treason.
The Fox barkes not, when he would steale the Lambe.
No, no, my Soueraigne, Glouster is a man
Vnsounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.

Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,
Deuise strange deaths, for small offences done?

Yorke. And did he not, in his Protectorship,
Leuie great summes of Money through the Realme,
For Souldiers pay in France, and neuer sent it?
By meanes whereof, the Townes each day reuolted.

Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults vnknowne,
Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humfrey.

King. My Lords at once: the care you haue of vs,
To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,
Is worthy prayse: but shall I speake my conscience,
Our Kinsman Glouster is as innocent,
From meaning Treason to our Royall Person,
As is the sucking Lambe, or harmelesse Dooue:
The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well given,
To dreame on euill, or to worke my downefall.

Qu. Ah what's more dangerous, then this fond affiance?
Seemes he a Doue? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hatefull Rauen.
Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is surely lent him,

For

For bee's melin'd as is the rauenous Wolues.
Who cannot ſteale a ſhape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of vs all,
Hangs on the cutting ſhort that fraudfull man.

Enter Somerſet.

Som. All health vnto my gracious Soueraigne.
King. Welcome Lord Somerſet: What Newes from France?
Som. That all your Intereſt in thoſe Territories,
Is vtterly bereft you: all is loſt.
King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerſet: but Gods will be done.
Yorke. Cold Newes for me: for I had hope of France,
As firmely as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my Bloſſomes blaſted in the Bud,
And Caterpillers eate my Leaues away:
But I will remedie this geare ere long,
Or ſell my Title for a glorious Graue.

Enter Glouceſter.

Glo. All happineſſe vnto my Lord the King:
Pardon, my Liege, that I haue ſtay'd ſo long.
Suff. Nay Glouceſter, know that thou art come too ſoone,
Vnleſſe thou were more loyall then thou art:
I doe arreſt thee of High Treaſon here.
Glo. Well Suffolke, thou ſhalt not ſee me bluſh,
Nor change my Countenance for this Arreſt:
A Heart vnſpotted, is not eaſily daunted.
The pureſt Spring is not ſo free from mudde,
As I am cleare from Treaſon to my Soueraigne.
Who can accuſe me? wherein am I guiltie?
Yorke. 'Tis thought, my Lord,
That you tooke Bribes of France,
And being Protector, ſtay'd the Souldiers pay,
By meanes whereof, his Highneſſe hath loſt France.
Glo. Is it but thought ſo?
What are they that thinke it?
I never rob'd the Souldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny Bribe from France.
So helpe me God, as I haue watcht the Night,
I, Night by Night, in ſtudying good for England.
That Doyt that ere I wreſted from the King,
Or any Groat I hoorded to my vſe,
Be brought againſt me at my Tryall day.
No: many a Pound of mine owne proper ſtore,
Becauſe I would not taxe the needie Commons,
Haue I diſ-perſed to the Garriſons,
And neuer aſk'd for reſtitution.
Card. It ſerues you well, my Lord, to ſay ſo much.
Glo. I ſay no more then truth, ſo helpe me God.
Yorke. In your Protectorſhip, you did deuiſe
Strange Tortures for Offendors, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by Tyrannie.
Glo. Why 'tis well known, that whiles I was Protector,
Pitie was all the fault that was in me:
For I ſhould melt at an Offendors teares,
And lowly words were Ranſome for their fault:
Vnleſſe it were a bloody Murtherer,
Or foule felonious Theefe, that fleec'd poore paſſengers,
I never gaue them condigne puniſhment.
Murther indeede, that bloodie ſinne, I tortur'd
Aboue the Felon, or what Treſpas elſe.
Suff. My Lord, theſe faults are eaſie, quickly anſwer'd
But mightier Crimes are lay'd vnto your charge,
Whereof you cannot eaſily purge your ſelfe.
I doe arreſt you in his Highneſſe Name,
And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall
To keepe, vntill your further time of Tryall.
King. My Lord of Glouſter, 'tis my ſpeciall hope,
That you will cleare your ſelfe from all ſuſpence,
My Conſcience tells me you are innocent.
Glo. Ah gracious Lord, theſe dayes are dangerous:
Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,
And Charitie chas'd hence by Rancours hand;
Foule Subornation is predominant,
And Equitie exil'd your Highneſſe Land.
I know, their Complot is to haue my Life:
And if my death might make this Iland happy,
And proue the Period of their Tyrannie,
I would expend it with all willingneſſe.
But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:
For thouſands more, that yet ſuſpect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted Tragedie.
Beauford's red ſparkling eyes blab his hearts malice,
And Suffolke's cloudie Brow his ſtormie hate;
Sharpe Buckingham vnburthens with his tongue,
The enuious Load that lyes vpon his heart:
And dogged Yorke, that reaches at the Moone,
Whoſe ouer-weening Arme I haue pluckt back,
By falſe accuſe doth leuell at my Life.
And you, my Soueraigne Lady, with the reſt,
Cauſeleſſe haue laid diſgraces on my head,
And with your beſt endeauour haue ſtirr'd vp
My tieſeſt Liege to be mine Enemie:
I, all of you haue lay'd your heads together,
My ſelfe had notice of your Conuenticles,
And all to make away my guiltleſſe Life.
I ſhall not want falſe Witneſſe, to condemne me,
Nor ſtore of Treaſons, to augment my guilt:
The ancient Prouerbe will be well effected,
A Staffe is quickly found to beat a Dogge.
Card. My Liege, his raylings are intollerable.
If thoſe that care to keepe your Royall Perſon
From Treaſons ſecret Knife, and Traytors Rage,
Be thus vpbrayded, chid, and rated at,
And the Offendor graunted ſcope of ſpeech,
'Twill make them coole in zeale vnto your Grace.
Suff. Hath he not twit our Soueraigne Lady here
With ignominious words, though Clarkely couch'd?
As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſweare
Falſe allegations, to o'rethrow his ſtate.
Qu. But I can giue the loſer leaue to chide.
Glo. Farre truer ſpoke then meant: I loſe indeede,
Beſhrew the winners, for they play'd me falſe,
And well ſuch loſers may haue leaue to ſpeake.
Buck. Hee'le wreſt the ſence, and hold vs here all day.
Lord Cardinall, he is your Priſoner.
Card. Sirs, take away the Duke, and guard him ſure.
Glo. Ah, thus King Henry throwes away his Crutch,
Before his Legges be firme to beare his Body.
Thus is the Shepheard beaten from thy ſide,
And Wolues are gnarling, who ſhall gnaw thee firſt.
Ah that my feare were falſe, ah that it were!
For good King Henry, thy decay I feare. Exit Glouſter.
King. My Lords, what to your wiſdomes ſeemeth beſt,
Doe, or vndoe, as if our ſelfe were here.
Queene. What, will your Highneſſe leaue the Parliament?
King. I Margaret: my heart is drown'd with griefe,
Whoſe flood begins to flowe within mine eyes;
My Body round engyrt with miſerie:

For what's more miſerable then Diſcontent?
Ah Vncle Humfrey, in thy face I ſee
The Map of Honor, Truth, and Loyaltie
And yet, good Humfrey, is the houre to come,
That ere I prou'd thee falſe, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowring Starre now enuies thy eſtate?
That theſe great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
Doe ſeeke ſubuerſion of thy harmeleſſe Life.
Thou neuer didſt them wrong, nor no man wrong:
And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it ſtrayes,
Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-houſe;
Euen ſo remorſeleſſe haue they borne him hence:
And as the Damme runnes lowing vp and downe,
Looking the way her harmeleſſe young one went,
And can doe naught but wayle her Darlings loſſe,
Euen ſo my ſelfe bewayles good Gloſters caſe
With ſad vnhelpefull teares, and with dimm'd eyes
Looke after him, and cannot doe him good:
So mightie are his vowed Enemies.
His fortunes I will weepe, and 'twixt each groane,
Say, who's a Traytor? Gloſter he is none. Exit.

Queene. Free Lords:
Cold Snow melts with the Sunnes hot Beames:
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
Too full of fooliſh pittie: and Gloſters ſhew
Beguiles him, as the mournefull Crocodile
With ſorrow ſnares relenting paſſengers:
Or as the Snake, roll'd in a flowring Banke,
With ſhining checker'd ſlough doth ſting a Child,
That for the beautie thinkes it excellent.
Beleeue me Lords, were none more wiſe then I,
And yet herein I iudge mine owne Wit good;
This Gloſter ſhould be quickly rid the World,
To rid vs from the feare we haue of him.

Card. That he ſhould dye, is worthie pollicie,
But yet we want a Colour for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by courſe of Law.

Suff. But in my minde, that were no pollicie:
The King will labour ſtill to ſaue his Life,
The Commons haply riſe, to ſaue his Life;
And yet we haue but triuiall argument,
More then miſtruſt, that ſhewes him worthy death.

Yorke. So that by this, you would not haue him dye.

Suff. Ah Yorke, no man aliue, ſo faine as I.

Yorke. 'Tis Yorke that hath more reaſon for his death.
But my Lord Cardinall, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
Say as you thinke, and ſpeake it from your Soules:
Were't not all one, an emptie Eagle were ſet,
To guard the Chicken from a hungry Kyte,
As place Duke Humfrey for the Kings Protector?

Queene. So the poore Chicken ſhould be ſure of death.

Suff. Madame 'tis true: and were't not madneſſe then,
To make the Fox ſurueyor of the Fold?
Who being accus'd a craftie Murtherer,
His guilt ſhould be but idly poſted ouer,
Becauſe his purpoſe is not executed.
No: let him dye, in that he is a Fox,
By nature prou'd an Enemie to the Flock.
Before his Chaps be ſtayn'd with Crimſon blood,
As Humfrey prou'd by Reaſons to my Liege.
And doe not ſtand on Quillets how to ſlay him:
Be it by Gynnes, by Snares, by Subtilties,
Sleeping, or Waking, 'tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit,
Which mates him firſt, that firſt intends deceit.

Queene. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis reſolutely ſpoke.

Suff. Not reſolute, except ſo much were done,
For things are often ſpoke, and ſeldome meant,
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preſerue my Soueraigne from his Foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his Prieſt.

Card. But I would haue him dead, my Lord of Suffolke,
Ere you can take due Orders for a Prieſt:
Say you conſent, and cenſure well the deed,
And I'le prouide his Executioner,
I tender ſo the ſafetie of my Liege.

Suff. Here is my Hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Queene. And ſo ſay I.

Yorke. And I: and now we three haue ſpoke it,
It ſkills not greatly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Poſte.

Poſt. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come amaine,
To ſignifie, that Rebels there are vp,
And put the Engliſhmen vnto the Sword.
Send Succours (Lords) and ſtop the Rage betime,
Before the Wound doe grow vncurable;
For being greene, there is great hope of helpe.

Card. A Breach that craues a quick expedient ſtoppe.
What counſaile giue you in this weightie cauſe?

Yorke. That Somerſet be ſent as Regent thither:
'Tis meet that lucklie Ruler be employ'd,
Witneſſe the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If Yorke, with all his farre-fet pollicie,
Had beene the Regent there, in ſtead of me,
He neuer would haue ſtay'd in France ſo long.

Yorke. No, not to loſe it all, as thou haſt done.
I rather would haue loſt my Life beſides,
Then bring a burthen of diſhonour home,
By ſtaying there ſo long, till all were loſt.
Shew me one ſcarre, character'd on thy Skinne,
Mens fleſh preſerv'd ſo whole, doe ſeldome winne.

Qu. Nay then, this ſparke will proue a raging fire,
If Wind and Fuell be brought, to feed it with:
No more, good Yorke; ſweet Somerſet be ſtill.
Thy fortune, Yorke, hadſt thou beene Regent there,
Might happily haue prou'd farre worſe then his.

Yorke. What, worſe then naught? nay, then a ſhame take all.

Somerſet. And in the number, thee, that wiſheſt ſhame.

Card. My Lord of Yorke, tris whas your fortune is Th'vnciuill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
And temper Clay with blood of Engliſhmen.
To Ireland will you leade a Band of men,
Collected choycely, from each Countie ſome,
And trie your hap againſt the Iriſhmen?

Yorke. I will, my Lord, ſo pleaſe his Maieſtie.

Suff. Why, our Authoritie is his conſent,
And what we doe eſtabliſh, he confirmes:
Then, Noble Yorke, take thou this Taske in hand.

Yorke. I am content: Prouide me Souldiers, Lords,
Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.

Suff. A charge, Lord Yorke, that I will ſee perform'd.
But now returne we to the falſe Duke Humfrey.

Card. No more of him; for I will deale with him,
That henceforth he ſhall trouble vs no more:
And ſo breake off, the day is almoſt ſpent,
Lord Suffolke, you and I muſt talke of that matter.

Yorke. My

My Lord of Suffolke, within fourteene dayes
ow I expect my Souldiers,
Ile shippe them all for Ireland.
lie see it truly done, my Lord of Yorke. Exeunt.

Manet Yorke.

Now Yorke, or neuer, steele thy fearfull thoughts
ge mildoubt to resolution;
ou hop'st to be, or what thou art;
o death, it is not worth th'enioying:
fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man,
e no harbor in a Royall heart.
e Spring-time showres, comes thoght on thoght,
a thought, but thinkes on Dignitie.
ne, more busie then the laboring Spider,
redious Snares to trap mine Enemies.
bles, well: 'tis politikely done,
me packing with an Hoast of men:
e, you but warme the starued Snake,
rsht in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
n Hacke, and you will giue them me;
kindly: yet be well assur'd,
sharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands.
in Ireland nourish a mightie Band,

fell Tempest shall not cease to rage,

e Title of Iohn Mortimer.
d haue I seene this stubborne Cade
himselfe against a Troupe of Kernes, ght so long, till that his thighes with Darts
sood like a sharpe-quill'd Porpentine:
e end being releeued, I haue seene
e vpright, like a wilde Morisco, the bloody Darts, as he his Bells.
, like a shag-hayr'd crafte Kerne,
ommersed with the Enemie,
scourr'd, come to me againe,
o me noriet of their Villanies.
till here shall be my substitute;
John Mortimer, which now is dead,

shall perceiue the Commons minde,

y put apart: the next for me. Exit.

two or three running ouer the Stage, from the Murther of Duke Humfrey.

me to my Lord of Suffolke: let him know dispatch the Duke, as he commanded.
that is were to doe: what haue we done?
e heare a man so penitent? Enter Suffolke.
re comes my Lord.

Suff. Now Sirs, haue you dispatcht this thing?

1. I, my good Lord, hee's dead.

Suff. Why that's well said. Goe, get you to my House,
I will reward you for this venturous deed:
The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.
Haue you layd faire the Bed? Is all things well,
According as I gaue directions?

1. 'Tis, my good Lord.

Suff. Away, be gone. Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King, the Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vncle to our presence straight:
Say, we intend to try his Grace to day,
If he be guiltie, as 'tis published.

Suff. Ile call him presently, my Noble Lord. Exit.

King. Lords take your places: and I pray you all Proceed no straiter 'gainst our Vnkle Gloster,
Then from true euidence, of good esteeme,
He be approu'd in practise culpable.

Queene God forbid any Malice should preuayle,
That faultlesse may condemne a Noble man:
Pray God he may acquit him of suspition.

King. I thanke thee Nell, these words content mee much.

Enter Suffolke.

How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our Vnckle? what's the matter, Suffolke?

Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord: Gloster is dead.

Queene. Marry God forfend.

Card. Gods secret Iudgement: I did dreame to Night,
The Duke was dumbe, and could not speake a word.

King sounds.

Qu. How fares my Lord? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.

Som. Rere vp his Body, wring him by the Nose.

Qu. Runne, goe, helpe, helpe: Oh Henry ope thine eyes.

Suff. He doth reuiue againe, Madame be patient.

King. Oh Heauenly God.

Qu. How fares my gracious Lord?

Suff. Comfort my Soueraigne, gracious Henry comfort.

King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a Rauens Note,
Whose dismall tune bereft my Vitall powres:
And thinkes he, that the chirping of a Wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceiued sound?
Hide not thy poyson with such sugred words,
Lay not thy hands on me: forbeare I say,
Their touch affrights me as a Serpents sting.
Thou balefull Messenger, out of my sight:
Vpon thy eye-balls, murderous Tyrannie
Sits in grim Maiestie, to fright the World.
Looke not vpon me, for thine eyes are wounding:
Yet doe not goe away: come Basiliske,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:
For in the shade of death, I shall finde ioy;
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.

Queene. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolke thus?
Although the Duke was enemie to him,
Yet he most Christian-like laments his death:
And for my selfe, Foe as he was to me,
Might liquid teares, or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-consuming sighes recall his Life;

I would be blinde with weeping, ſicke with grones,
Looke pale as Prim-roſe with blood-drinking ſighes,
And all to haue the Noble Duke alriue.
What know I how the world may deeme of me?
For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends:
It may be judg'd I made the Duke away,
So ſhall my name with Slanders tongue be wounded,
And Princes Courts be fill'd with my reproach:
This get I by his death: Aye me vnhappie,
To be a Queene, and Crown'd with infamie.

King. Ah woe is me for Gloſter, wretched man.

Queen. Be woe for me, more wretched then he is.
What, Doſt thou turne away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathſome Leaper, looke on me.
What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
Be poyſonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.
Is all thy comfort ſhut in Gloſters Tombe?
Why then Dame Elianor was neere thy joy.
Erect his Statue, and worſhip it,
And make my Image but an Ale-houſe ſigne.
Was I for this nye wrack'd vpon the Sea,
And twice by awkward winde from Englands banke
Droue backe againe vnto my Native Clime.
What boaded this? but well fore-warning winde
Did ſeeme to ſay, ſeeke not a Scorpions Neſt,
Nor ſet no footing on this vnkinde Shore.
What did I then? But curſt the gentle guſts,
And he that loos'd them forth their Brazen Caues,
And bid them blow towards Englands bleſſed ſhore,
Or turne our Sterne vpon a dreadfull Rocke:
Yet Æolus would not be a murtherer,
But left that hatefull office vnto thee.
The prettie vaulting Sea refus'd to drowne me,
Knowing that thou wouldſt haue me drown'd on ſhore
With teares as ſalt as Sea, through thy vnkindneſſe.
The ſplitting Rockes cowr'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides,
Becauſe thy flinty heart more hard then they,
Might in thy Paſſage, periſh Eleanor.
As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
When from thy Shore, the Tempeſt beate vs backe,
I ſtood vpon the Hatches in the ſtorme:
And when the duskie ſky, began to rob
My earneſt-gaping-ſight of thy Lands view,
I tooke a coſtly Iewell from my neck,
A Heart it was bound in with Diamonds,
And threw it towards thy Land: The Sea receiu'd it,
And ſo I wiſh'd thy body might my Heart:
And euen with this, I loſt faire Englands view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my Heart,
And call'd them blinde and duskie Spectacles,
For looſing ken of Albions wiſhed Coaſt.
How often haue I tempted Suffolkes tongue
(The agent of thy foule inconſtancie)
To ſit and watch me as Aſcanius did,
When he to madding Dido would vnfold
His Fathers Acts, commenc'd in burning Troy.
Am I not witcht like her? Or thou not falſe like him?
Aye me, I can no more: Dye Elinor,
For Henry weepes, that thou doſt liue ſo long.

Noyſe within. Enter Warwicke, and many Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty Soueraigne,
That good Duke Humfrey Traiterouſly is murdred
By Suffolke, and the Cardinall Beaufords meanes:
The Commons like an angry Hiue of Bees
That want their Leader, ſcatter vp and downe,
And care not who they ſting in his reuenge.
My ſelfe haue calm'd their ſpleenfull mutinie,
Vntill they heare the order of his death.

King. That he is dead good Warwicke, 'tis too true,
But how he dyed, God knowes, not Henry:
Enter his Chamber, view his breathleſſe Corpes,
And comment then vpon his ſodaine death.

War. That ſhall I do my Liege: Stay Salsbury
With the rude multitude, till I returne.

King. O thou that iudgeſt all things, ſtay my thoughts:
My thoughts, that labour to perſwade my ſoule,
Some violent hands were laid on Humfries life:
If my ſuſpect be falſe, forgiue me God,
For iudgement onely doth belong to thee:
Faine would I go to chaſe his paſie lips,
With twenty thouſand kiſſes, and to draine
Vpon his face an Ocean of ſalt teares,
To tell my loue vnto his dumbe deafe trunke,
And with my fingers feele his hand, vnfeeling.
But all in vaine are theſe meane Obſequies,
Bed put forth.
And to ſuruey his dead and earthly Image:
What were it but to make my ſorrow greater

Warw. Come hither gracious Soueraigne, view this body.

King. That is to ſee how deepe my graue is made,
For with his ſoule fled all my worldly ſolace:
For ſeeing him, I ſee my life in death.

War. As ſurely as my ſoule intends to liue
With that dread King that tooke our ſtate vpon him,
To free vs from his Fathers wrathfull curſe,
I do beleeue that violent hands were laid
Vpon the life of this thrice-famed Duke.

Suf. A dreadfull Oath, ſworne with a ſolemne tongue!
What inſtance giues Lord Warwicke for his vow.

War. See how the blood is ſetled in his face.
Oft haue I ſeene a timely-parted Ghoſt,
Of aſhy ſemblance, meager, pale, and bloodleſſe,
Being all deſcended to the labouring heart,
Who in the Conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame for aydance 'gainſt the enemy,
Which with the heart there cooles, and nere returneth
To bluſh and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
But ſee, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
His eye-balles further out, than when he liued,
Staring full gaſtly, like a ſtrangled man:
His hayre vprear'd, his noſtrils ſtretcht with ſtruggling:
His hands abroad diſplay'd, as one that graſpt
And tugg'd for Life, and was by ſtrength ſubdude.
Looke on the ſheets his haire (you ſee) is ſticking,
His well proportion'd Beard, made ruſſe and rugged,
Like to the Summers Corne by Tempeſt lodged:
It cannot be but he was murdred heere.
The leaſt of all theſe ſigues were probable.

Suf. Why Warwicke, who ſhould do the Duke death?
My ſelfe and Beaufords had him in protection,
And we I hope ſir, are no murtherers.

War. But both of you were vowed D. Humfries foes,
And you (forſooth) had the good Duke to keepe:
'Tis like you would not feaſt him like a friend,
And 'tis well ſeene, he found an enemy.

Queen. Then you beſike ſuſpect theſe Noblemen,
As guilty of Duke Humfries timeleſſe death.

War.

ſtand apart, the King ſhall know your

Dread Lord, the Commons ſend you word by me,
Vnleſſe Lord Suffolke ſtraight be done to death,
Or banniſhed faire Englands Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grieuous lingring death.
They ſay, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'de:
They ſay, in him they feare your Highneſſe death:
And meere inſtinct of Loue and Loyaltie,
Free from a ſtubborne oppoſite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Baniſhment.
They ſay, in care of your moſt Royall Perſon,
That if your Highneſſe ſhould intend to ſleepe,
And charge, that no man ſhould diſturbe your reſt,
In paine of your diſlike, or paine of death;
Yet notwithſtanding ſuch a ſtrait Edict,
Were there a Serpent ſeene, with forked Tongue,
That ſlyly glyded towards your Maieſties,
It were but neceſſarie you were wak'd,
Leaſt being ſuffer'd in that harmefull ſlumber,
The mortall Worme might make the ſleepe eternall.
And therefore doe they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whether you will, or no,
From ſuch fell Serpents as falſe Suffolke is;
With whoſe inuenomed and fatall ſting,
Your louing Vnckle, twentie times his worth,
They ſay is ſhamefully bereft of life.

Commons within. An anſwer from the King, my Lord of Salisbury.

Suff. 'Tis like the Commons, rude vnpoliſht Hindes,
Could ſend ſuch Meſſage to their Soueraigne:
But you, my Lord, were glad to be imploy'd,
To ſhew how quaint an Orator you are.
But all the Honor Salisbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Embaſſador,
Sent from a ſort of Tinkers to the King.

Within. An anſwer from the King, or wee will all breake in.

King. Goe Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender louing care;
And had I not beene cited ſo by them,
Yet did I purpoſe as they doe entreat:
For ſure, my thoughts doe hourely prophecie,
Miſchance vnto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Maieſtie I ſweare,
Whoſe farre-vnworthie Deputie I am,
He ſhall not breathe infection in this ayre,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.

Qu. Oh Henry, let me pleade for gentle Suffolke.

King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.
No more I ſay: if thou do'ſt pleade for him,
Thou wilt but adde encreaſe vnto my Wrath.
Had I but ſayd, I would haue kept my Word;
But when I ſweare, it is irreuocable:
If after three dayes ſpace thou here bee'ſt found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World ſhall not be Ranſome for thy Life.
Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with me,
I haue great matters to impart to thee.

Exeunt.

Qu. Miſchance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Hearts Diſcontent, and ſowre Affliction,
Be play-fellowes to keepe you companie:
There's two of you, the Deuill make a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend vpon your ſteps.

Suff. Ceaſe, gentle Queene, theſe Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heauie leaue.

Queene. Fye

Quee. Fye Coward woman, and soft harted wretch,
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy.
Suf. A plague vpon them: wherefore should I curse them?
Would curses kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would inuent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliuer'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd enuy in her loathsome caue.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words,
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine haire be fixt an end, as one distract:
I, euery ioynt should seeme to curse and ban,
And euen now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curse them. Poyson be their drinke.
Gall, worse then Gall, the daintiest that they taste:
Their sweetest shade, a groue of Cypresse Trees:
Their chearefest Prospect, murd'ring Basiliskes:
Their softest Touch, as smart as Lyzards stings:
Their Musicke, frightfull as the Serpents hisse,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Consort full.
All the foule terrors in darke seated hell——
Qu. Enough sweet Suffolke, thou torment'st thy selfe,
And these dread curses like the Sunne 'gainst glasse,
Or like an ouer-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them vpon thy selfe.
Suf. You bad me ban, and will you bid me leaue?
Now by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a Winters night,
Though standing naked on a Mountaine top,
Where bytting cold would neuer let grasse grow,
And thinke it but a minute spent in sport.
Qu. Oh, let me intreat thee cease, giue me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares:
Nor let the raine of heauen wet this place,
To wash away my wofull Monuments.
Oh, could this kisse be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st thinke vpon these by the Seale,
Through whom a thousand sighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my greefe,
'Tis but surmiz'd, whiles thou art standing by,
As one that surfets, thinking on a want:
I will repeale thee, or be well assur'd,
Aduenture to be banished my selfe:
And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go, speake not to me; euen now be gone.
Oh go not yet. Euen thus, two Friends condemn'd,
Embrace, and kisse, and take ten thousand leaues,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye;
Yet now farewell, and farewell Life with thee.
Suf. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times banished,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the Land I care for, wer't thou thence,
A Wilderneſſe is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heauenly company:
For where thou art, there is the World it selfe,
With euery seuerall pleasure in the World:
And where thou art not, Desolation.
I can no more: Liue thou to ioy thy life;
My selfe no ioy in nought, but that thou liu'st.

Enter Vaux.

Quee. Whether goes Vaux so fast? What newes I prethee?
Vaux. To signifie vnto his Maiesty,
That Cardinall Beauford is at point of death:
For sodainly a greeuous sickneſſe tooke him.
That makes him gaspe, and stare, and catch the ayre,
Blaspheming God, and curbing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Humfries Ghost
Were by his side: Sometime, he calles the King,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his ouer-charged soule,
And I am sent to tell his Maiestie,
That euen now he cries alowd for him.
Qu. Go tell this heauy Message to the King. Exit
Aye me! What is this World? What newes are these?
But wherefore greeue I at an houres poore loſſe,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my soules Treasure?
Why only Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encreaſe, mine for my sorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'ſt is comming,
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.
Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot liue,
And in thy sight to dye, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breath my soule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugge betweene it's lips.
Where from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to cloſe vp mine eyes:
To haue thee with thy lippes to stop my mouth:
So should'ſt thou either turne my flying soule,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liu'd in sweete Elizium.
To dye by thee, were but to dye in iest,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death:
Oh let me stay, befall what may befall.
Quee. Away! Though parting be a fretfull corsiue,
It is applyed to a deathfull wound.
To France sweet Suffolke: Let me heare from thee:
For wheresoere thou art in this worlds Globe,
Ile haue an Iris that shall finde thee out.
Suf. I go.
Qu. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A iewell lockt into the wofull'ſt Caske,
That euer did containe a thing of worth.
Euen as a ſplitted Barke, ſo ſunder we:
This way fall I to death.
Qu. This way for me. Exeunt

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Cardinall in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord? Speake Beauford to thy Soueraigne.
Ca If thou beest death, Ile giue thee Englands Treaſure,
Enough to purchaſe ſuch another Iſland.
So thou wilt let me liue, and feele no paine.
King. Ah, what a ſigne it is of euill life,
Where death's approach is ſeene ſo terrible.
War. Beauford it is thy Soueraigne ſpeakes to thee.
Beau. Bring me vnto my Triall when you will.
Dy'de he not in his bed? Where ſhould he dye?
Can I make men liue where they will or no?
Oh torture me no more, I will confeſſe.
Alriue againe? Then ſhew me where he is,
Ile giue a thouſand pound to looke vpon him.
He hath no eyes, the duſt hath blinded them.

Comb

owne his haire: looke, looke, it ſtands vpright,
e-twigs ſet to catch my winged ſoule.
ome drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
ſtrong poyſon that I bought of him.
Oh thou eternall mouer of the heauens,
th a gentle eye vpon this Wretch,
rwey the buſie meddling Fiend,
ſtrong ſiege vnto this wretches ſoule,
his boſome pun ge this blacke diſpaire.
See how the pangs of death do make him grin.
iſturbe him not, let him paſſe peaceably.
Peace to his ſoule, if Gods good pleaſure be ſtuall, if thou think'ſt on heauens bliſſe, by hand, make ſignall of thy hope.
id makes no ſigne: Oh God forgiue him.
o bad a death, argues a monſtrous life.
Emboure to iudge, for we are ſinners all.
ſe eyes, and draw the Curtaine cloſe,
all to Meditation. Exeunt.

Alarum. Fight at Sea. Ordnance goes off.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, and others.

The gaudy blabbing and remorſefull day,
into the boſome of the Sea:
loud howling Wolues arouſe the Iades
ge the Tragicke melancholy night:
h their drowſie, ſlow, and flagging wings
ad-mens graues, and from their miſty Iawes.
ale contagious darkneſſe in the ayre:
bring forth the Souldiers of our prize,
our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes,
ll they make their ranſome on the ſand,
their blood ſtaine this diſcoloured ſhore.
his Priſoners freely giue I thee,
that are his Mate, make boote of this:
Walter Whitmore is thy ſhare.
1. What is my ranſome Maſter, let me know.
thouſand Crowners, or elſe lay down your head
And ſo much ſhall you giue, or off goes yours.
What thinke you much to pay 2000. Crowners, the name and port of Gentlemen?
the Villaines throats, for dy you ſhall:
of thoſe which we haue loſt in fight,
re-pays'd with ſuch a petty ſumme.
Ile giue it ſir, and therefore ſpare my life.
And ſo will I, and write home for it ſtraight.
I loſt mine eye in laying the prize aboord,
ſhore to reuenge it, ſhalt thou dye,
ould theſe, if I might haue my will.
Be not ſo raſh, take ranſome, let him liue.
ooke on my George, I am a Gentleman,
what thou wilt, thou ſhalt be payed.
And ſo am I: my name is Walter Whitmore.
Why ſtarts thou? What doth death affright?
by name affrights me, in whoſe ſound is deaths man did calculate my birth,
me that by Water I ſhould dye:
this make thee be bloody-minded,
in Gualtar, being rightly ſounded.
Gualtar or Walter, which it is I care not,
thee baſe diſhonour blurre our name,
our ſword we wip'd away the blot.
when Merchant-like I ſell reuenge,
my ſword, my Armes torne and defac'd,
chain'd a Coward through the world.

Suf. Stay Whitmore, for thy Priſoner is a Prince,
The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.
Whit. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled vp in ragges?
Suf. I, but theſe ragges are no part of the Duke.
Lieu. But Ioue was neuer ſlaine as thou ſhalt be.
Obſcure and lowſie Swaine, King Henries blood.
Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaſter
Muſt not be ſhed by ſuch a iaded Groome:
Haſt thou not kiſt thy hand, and held my ſtirrop?
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth Mule,
And thought thee happy when I ſhooke my head.
How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,
When I haue feaſted with Queene Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee Creſt-falne,
I, and abay this thy abortiue Pride:
How in our voyding Lobby haſt thou ſtood,
And duly waited for my comming forth?
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalfe,
And therefore ſhall it charme thy riotous tongue.
Whit. Speak Captaine, ſhall I ſtab the forlorn Swain.
Lieu. Firſt let my words ſtab him, as he hath me.
Suf. Baſe ſtaue, thy words are blunt, and ſo art thou.
Lieu. Conuey him hence, and on our long boats ſide,
Strike off his head. Suf. Thou dar'ſt not for thy owne
Lieu. Poole, Sir Poole? Lord,
I kennell, puddle, ſinke, whoſe filth and dirt
Troubles the ſiluer Spring, where England drinkes:
Now will I dam vp this thy yawning mouth,
For ſwallowing the Treaſure of the Realme.
Thy lips that kiſt the Queene, ſhall ſweepe the ground:
And thou that ſmil'dſt at good Duke Humfries death,
Againſt the ſenſeleſſe windes ſhall grin in vaine,
Who in contempt ſhall hiſſe at thee againe.
And wedded be thou to the Hagges of hell,
For daring to affye a mighty Lord
Vnto the daughter of a worthleſſe King,
Hauing neyther Subiect, Wealth, nor Diadem:
By diuelliſh policy art thou growne great,
And like ambitious Sylla ouer-gorg'd,
With gobbets of thy Mother-bleeding heart.
By thee Anioy and Maine were ſold to France,
The falſe reuolting Normans thorough thee,
Diſdaine to call vs Lord, and Picardie
Hath ſlaine their Gouernors, ſurpriz'd our Forts,
And ſent the ragged Souldiers wounded home.
The Princely Warwicke, and the Neuils all,
Whoſe dreadfull ſwords were neuer drawne in vaine,
As hating thee, and riſing vp in armes:
And now the Houſe of Yorke thruſt from the Crowne,
By ſhamefull murther of a guiltleſſe King,
And lofty proud incroaching tyranny,
Burnes with reuenging fire, whoſe hopefull colours
Aduance our halfe-fac'd Sunne, ſtriuing to ſhine;
Vnder the which is writ, Inuitis nubibus.
The Commons heere in Kent are vp in armes,
And to conclude, Reproach and Beggerie,
Is crept into the Pallace of our King,
And all by thee: away, conuey him hence.
Suf. O that I were a God, to ſhoot forth Thunder
Vpon theſe paltry, ſeruile, abiect Drudges:
Small things make baſe men proud. This Villaine heere,
Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threatens more
Then Bargulus the ſtrong Illyrian Pyrate.
Drones ſucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hiues.
It is impoſſible that I ſhould dye

By

By such a lowly Vassall as thy selfe.
Thy words moue Rage, and not remorse in me:
I go of Message from the Queene to France:
I charge thee waft me safely crosse the Channell.

Lieu. Water: W. Come Suffolke, I must waft thee to thy death.

Suf. Pene gelidus timor occupat artus, it is thee I feare.

Wal. Thou shalt haue cause to feare before I leaue thee. What, are ye daunted now? Now will ye stoope.

1. Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, speak him fair

Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is sterne and rough:
Vs'd to command, vntaught to pleade for fauour.
Farre be it, we should honor such as these
With humble suites: no, rather let my head
Stoope to the blocke, then these knees bow to any,
Saue to the God of heauen, and to my King:
And sooner dance vpon a bloody pole,
Then stand vncouer'd to the Vulgar Groome.
True Nobility, is exempt from feare:
More can I beare, then you dare execute.

Lieu. Hale him away, and let him talke no more:
Come Souldiers, shew what cruelty ye can.

Suf. That this my death may neuer be forgot.
Great men oft dye by vilde Bezonians.
A Romane Sworder, and Bandetto slaue
Murder'd sweet Tully. Brutus Bastard hand
Stab'd Iulius Cæsar. Sauage Islanders
Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.

Exit Water with Suffolke.

Lieu. And as for these whose ransome we haue set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore come you with vs, and let him go.

Exit Lieutenant, and the rest.

Manet the first Gent. Enter Walter with the body.

Wal. There let his head, and liuelesse bodie lye, Vntill the Queene his Mistris bury it. Exit Walter.

1. Gent. O barbarous and bloudy spectacle,
His body will I beare vnto the King:
If he reuenge it not, yet will his Friends,
So will the Queene, that liuing, held him deere.

Enter Braue, and Iohn Holland.

Braue. Come and get thee a sword, though made of a Lath, they haue bene vp these two dayes.

Hol. They haue the more needs to sleepe now then.

Braue. I tell thee, Iacky Cade the Cloathier, meanes to dresse the Common-wealth and turne it, and set a new nap vpon it.

Hol. So he had need, for 'tis thred-bare. Well, I say, it was neuer merrie world in England, since Gentlemen came vp.

Braue. O miserable Age: Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts men.

Hol. The Nobilitie thinke scorne to goe in Leather Aprons.

Braue. Nay more, the Kings Councell are no good Workemen.

Hol. True: and yet it is said, Labour in thy Vocation: which is as much to say, as let the Magistrates be labouring men, and therefore should we be Magistrates.

Braue. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better signe of a braue minde, then a hard hand.

Hol. I see them, I see them: There's Best's Sonne, the Tanner of Wingham.

Braue. Hee shall haue the skinnes of our enemies, to make Dogges Leather of.

Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.

Braue. Then is sin strucke downe like an Ox, and iniquities throate cut like a Calfe.

Hol. And Smith the Weauer.

Braue. Argo, their thred of life is spun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weauer, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. Wee Iohn Cade, so tearm'd of our supposed Father.

But. Or rather of stealing a Cade of Herrings.

Cade. For our enemies shall fade before vs, inspired with the spirit of putting downe Kings and Princes. Command silence.

But. Silence.

Cade. My Father was a Mortimer.

But. He was an honest man, and a good Bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Butch. I knew her well, she was a Midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.

But. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, & sold many Laces.

Weauer. But now of late, not able to trauell with her furr'd Packe, she washes bucks here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.

But. I by my faith, the field is honorable, and there was he borne, vnder a hedge: for his Father had neuer a house but the Cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Weauer. A most needs, for beggery is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

But. No question of that: for I haue seene him whipt three Market dayes together.

Cade. I feare neither sword, nor fire.

Wea. He needs not feare the sword, for his Coate is of proofe.

But. But me thinks he should stand in feare of fire, being burnt i'th hand for stealing of Sheepe.

Cade. Be braue then, for your Captaine is braue, and Vowes Reformation. There shall be in England, seuen halfe penny Loaues sold for a penny: the three hoop'd pot shall haue ten hoopes, and I will make it Felonie to drink small Beere. All the Realme shall be in Common, and in Cheapside shall my Palfrey go to grasse: and when I am King, as King I will be.

All. God saue your Maiesty.

Cade. I thanke you good people. There shall be no money, all shall eate and drinke on my score, and I will apparrell them all in one Liuery, that they may agree like Brothers, and worship me their Lord.

But. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe should be made Parchment; that Parchmente being scribled on, should vndoe a man. Some say the Bee stings, but I say, 'tis the Bees waxe: for I did but seale once to a thing, and I was neuer mine owne man since. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clearke.

Weauer. The Clerke of Chartam: hee can write and reade, and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous.

Wea. We tooke him setting of boyes Copies.

Cade.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wat. He's a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't

Cade. Nay then he is a Conjurer.

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am ſorry for't: The man is a proper man of mine Honour: vnleſſe I finde him guilty, he ſhall not die. Come hither ſirrah, I muſt examine thee: What is thy name?

Clearke. Emmanuell.

But. They vſe to writ it on the top of Letters: 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone: Doſt thou vſe to write thy name? Or haſt thou a marke to thy ſelfe, like a honeſt plain dealing man?

Clearke. Sir I thanke God, I haue bin ſo well brought vp, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confeſt: away with him: he's a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I ſay: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his necke.

Exit one with the Clearke

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our Generall?

Cade. Here I am thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly, Sir Humfrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand villaine, ſtand, or Ile fell thee downe: he ſhall be encountred with a man as good as himſelfe. He is but a Knight, is a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall him I will make my ſelfe a knight preſently; Riſe vp Sir Iohn Mortimer. Now haue at him.

Enter Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staf. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and ſcum of Kent, Mark'd for the Gallowes: Lay your Weapons downe, Home to your Cottages: forſake this Groome. The King is mercifull, if you reuolt.

Bro. But angry, wrathfull, and inclin'd to blood, If you go forward: therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for theſe ſilken-coated ſlaues I paſſe not, It is to you good people, that I ſpeake, Ouer whom (in time to come) I hope to raigne: For I am rightfull heyre vnto the Crowne.

Staf. Villaine, thy Father was a Playſterer, And thou thy ſelfe a Shearman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staf. I ſir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

Bro. That's falſe.

Cade. I there's the queſtion; But I ſay, 'tis true: The elder of them being put to nurſe, Was by a beggar-woman ſtolne away, And ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age. His ſonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he ſhall be King.

Wat. Sir, he made a Chimney in my Fathers houſe, & the bricks are liue at this day to teſtifie it: therefore deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this baſe Drudges Words, that ſpeakes he knowes not what.

All. I marry will we: therefore get ye gone.

Bro. Iacke Cade, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I inuented it my ſelfe. Go too Sirrah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers ſake Henry the fift, (in whoſe time, boyes went to Spin-counter for French Crownes) I am content he ſhall raigne, but Ile be Protector ouer him.

Butcher. And furthermore, wee'l haue the Lord Say beheaded, for ſelling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade And good reaſon: for thereby is England main'd And faine to go with a ſtaffe, but that my puiſſance holds it vp. Fellow-Kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded the Commonwealth, and made it an Eunuch: & more then that, he can ſpeake French, and therefore hee is a Traitor.

Staf. O groſſe and miſerable ignorance.

Cade. Nay anſwer if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go too then, I aſk but this: Can he that ſpeaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good Councellour, or no?

All. No, no, and therefore wee'l haue his head.

Bro. Well, ſeeing gentle words will not preuayle, Aſſaile them with the Army of the King.

Staf. Herald away, and throughout euery Towne, Proclaime them Traitors that are vp with Cade, That thoſe which flye before the battell ends, May euen in their Wiues and Childrens ſight, Be hang'd vp for example at their doores: And you that be the Kings Friends follow me. Exit.

Cade. And you that loue the Commons, follow me: Now ſhew your ſelues men, 'tis for Liberty. We will not leaue one Lord, one Gentleman: Spare none, but ſuch as go in clouted ſhooes, For they are thrifty honeſt men, and ſuch As would (but that they dare not) take our parte.

But. They are all in order, and march toward vs.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are moſt out of order. Come, march forward.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are ſlaine. Enter Cade and the reſt.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Aſhford?

Dut. Heere ſir.

Cade. They fell before thee like Sheepe and Oxen, & thou behaued'ſt thy ſelfe, as if thou hadſt beene in thine owne Slaughter-houſe: Therfore thus will I reward thee, the Lent ſhall bee as long againe as it is, and thou ſhalt haue a License to kill for a hundred lacking one.

But. I deſire no more.

Cade. And to ſpeake truth, thou deſeru'ſt no leſſe. This Monument of the victory will I beare, and the bodies ſhall be dragg'd at my horſe heeles, till I do come to London, where we will haue the Maiors ſword borne before vs.

But. If we meane to thriue, and do good, breake open the Gaoles, and let out the Priſoners.

Cade. Feare not that I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. Exeunt.

Enter the King with a Supplication, and the Queene with Suffolkes head, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say.

Queene. Oft haue I heard that groſſe ſoftens the mind, And

And makes it fearefull and degenerate,
Thinke therefore on reuenge, and ceafe to weepe.
But who can ceafe to weepe, and looke on this.
Heere may his head lye on my throbbing breft:
But where's the body that I ſhould imbrace?

Buc. What anſwer makes your Grace to the Rebells Supplication?

King. Ile ſend ſome holy Biſhop to intreat:
For God forbid, ſo many ſimple ſoules
Should periſh by the Sword. And I my ſelfe,
Rather then bloody Warre ſhall cut them ſhort,
Will parley with Iacke Cade their Generall,
But ſtay, Ile read it ouer once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this lovely face,
Ruſ'd like a wandering Plannet ouer me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were vnworthy to behold the ſame.

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath ſworne to haue thy head.

Say. I, but I hope your Highneſſe ſhall haue his.

King. How now Madam?
Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Loue) if that I had beene dead,
Thou would'ſt not haue mourn'd ſo much for me.

Qu. No my Loue, I ſhould not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Meſſenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'ſt thou in ſuch haſte?

Meſ. The Rebels are in Southwarke: Fly my Lord:
Iacke Cade proclaimes himſelfe Lord Mortimer,
Deſcended from the Duke of Clarence houſe,
And calles your Grace Vſurper, openly.
And vowes to Crowne himſelfe in Weſtminſter.
His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hindes and Peaſants, rude and mercileſſe:
Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath giuen them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawyers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call falſe Caterpillers, and intend their death.

King. Oh graceleſſe men: they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be raiſ'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now aliue,
Theſe Kentiſh Rebels would be ſoone appeas'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hateth thee,
Therefore away with vs to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces perſon be in danger:
The ſight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this Citty will I ſtay,
And liue alone as ſecret as I may.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge.
The Citizens flye and forſake their houſes:
The raſcall people, thirſting after prey,
Ioyne with the Traitor, and they iovntly ſweare
To ſpoyle the City, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horſe.

King. Come Margaret, God our hope will ſuccor vs.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceaſt.

King. Farewell my Lord, truſt not the Kentiſh Rebels

Buc. Truſt no body for feare you betraid.

Say. The truſt I haue, is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and reſolute. Exeunt.

Enter Lord Scales vpon the Tower walking. Then enter two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade ſlaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be ſlaine
For they haue wonne the Bridge,
Killing all thoſe that withſtand them:
The L. Maior craues ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels.

Scales. Such ayd as I can ſpare you ſhall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my ſelfe,
The Rebels haue aſſay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will ſend you Matthew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Country, and your Liues,
And ſo farwell, for I muſt hence againe. Exeunt

Enter Iacke Cade and the reſt, and ſtrikes his ſtaffe on London ſtone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere ſitting vpon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities coſt
The pyſſing Conduit run nothing but Claret Wine
This firſt yeare of our raigne.
And now henceforward it ſhall be Treaſon for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running.

Sold. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade,

Cade. Knocke him downe there. They kill him.

Buc. If this Fellow be wiſe, he'l neuer call ye Iacke Cade more, I thinke he hath a very ſoare warning.

Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then let's go fight with them:
But firſt, go and ſet London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away. Exeunt omnes.

Alarums. Matthew Goffe is ſlaine, and all the reſt. Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company.

Cade. So ſirs: now go ſome and pull downe the Sauoy:
Others to'th Innes of Court, downe with them all.

Hen. I haue a ſuite vnto your Lordſhip.

Cade. Bee it a Lordſhippe, thou ſhalt haue it for the word.

Hen. Only that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth.

Iohn. Maſſe 'twill be ſore Law then, for he was thrift in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay Iohn, it will be ſtinking Law, for his breath ſtinkes with eating toaſted cheeſe.

Cade. I haue thought vpon it, it ſhall bee ſo. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth ſhall be the Parliament of England.

Iohn. Then we are like to haue biting Statutes vnleſſe his teeth be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things ſhall be in Common. Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Lord, a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which ſold the Townes in France. He that made vs pay one and twenty Fifteenes, and one ſhilling to the pound, the laſt Subſidie.

Exit.

Enter George, with the Lord Say.

Well, hee ſhall be beheaded for it ten times:
ſay, thou Surge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now

d a Verbe, and ſuch abhominable words, as an eare can endure to heare. Thou haſt appoines of Peace, to call poore men before them, aters they were not able to anſwer. Moreouer, put them in priſon, and becauſe they could not u haſt hang'd them, when (indeede) onely for e they haue beene moſt worthy to liue. Thou in a ſoot-cloth, doſt thou not?
What of that?
Marry, thou ought'ſt not to let thy horſe weare
, when honeſter men then thou go in their Hoſe bleta.
And worke in their ſhirt too, as my ſelfe for ex-ut am a butcher.
ſou men of Kent.
What ſay you of Kent.
Nothing but this: 'Tis bene terre, malo gens.
Away with him, away with him, he ſpeaks La-

Tut, when ſtruck'ſt thou one blow in the field?
Great men haue reaching hands: oft haue I ſtruck

O monſtrous Coward! What, to come behinde

Giue him a box o'th' eare, and that will make 'em re.

Say. Long ſitting to determine poore mens cauſes,
Hath made me full of ſickneſſe and diſeaſes.
Cade. Ye ſhall haue a hempen Candle then, & the help of hatchet.
Dicke. Why doſt thou quiuer man?
Say. The Palſie, and not feare prouokes me.
Cade. Nay, he nodds at vs, as who ſhould ſay, Ile be euen with you. Ile ſee if his head will ſtand ſteddier on a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.
Say. Tell me: wherein haue I offended moſt?
Haue I affected wealth, or honor? Speake.
Are my Cheſts fill'd vp with extorted Gold?
Is my Apparrell ſumptuous to behold?
Whom haue I iniur'd, that ye ſeeke my death?
Theſe hands are free from guiltleſſe bloodſhedding,
This breaſt from harbouring foule deceitfull thoughts.
O let me liue.
Cade. I feele remorſe in my ſelfe with his words: but Ile bridle it: he ſhall dye, and it bee but for pleading ſo well for his life. Away with him, he ha's a Familiar vnder his Tongue, he ſpeakes not a Gods name. Goe, take him away I ſay, and ſtrike off his head preſently, and then breake into his Sonne in Lawes houſe, Sir Iames Cromer, and ſtrike off his head, and bring them both vppon two poles hither.
All. It ſhall be done.
Say. Ah Countrimen: If when you make your prair's,
God ſhould be ſo obdurate as your ſelues:
How would it fare with your departed ſoules.
And therefore yet relent, and ſaue my life.
Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye: the proudeſt Peere in the Realme, ſhall not weare a head on his ſhoulders, vnleſſe he pay me tribute: there ſhall not a maid be married, but ſhe ſhall pay to me her Maydenhead ere they haue it: Men ſhall hold of mee in Capite. And we charge and command, that their wiues be as free as heart can wiſh, or tongue can tell.
Dicke. My Lord,
When ſhall we go to Cheapſide, and take vp commodities vpon our billes?
Cade. Marry preſently.
All. O braue.

Enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braue?
Let them kiſſe one another: For they lou'd well
When they were aliue. Now part them againe,
Leaſt they conſult about the giuing vp
Of ſome more Townes in France. Soldiers,
Deferre the ſpoile of the Citie vntill night:
For with theſe borne before vs, in ſtead of Maces,
Will we ride through the ſtreets, & at euery Corner
Haue them kiſſe. Away. Exit

Alarmes, and Retreat. Enter againe Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fiſh-ſtreete, downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames:

Sound a parley

What noiſe is this I heare?
Dare any be ſo bold to ſound Retreat or Parley
When I command them kill?

Enter

Enter Buckingham and old Clifford.

Buc. I heere they be, that dare and will disturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambassadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou hast misled,
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye Countrimen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whil'st 'tis offered you,
Or let a rabble leade you to your deaths.
Who loues the King, and will imbrace his pardon,
Fling vp his cap, and say, God saue his Maiesty.
Who hateth him, and honors not his Father,
Henry the fift, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at vs, and passe by.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Cade. What Buckingham and Clifford are ye so braue?
And you base Pezants, do ye beleeue him, will you needs be hang'd with your Pardons about your neckes? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leaue me at the White-heart in Southwarke.
I thought ye would never haue giuen out these Armes til you had recouered your ancient Freedome. But you are all Recreants and Dastards, and delight to liue in slauerie to the Nobility. Let them breake your backes with burthens, take your houses ouer your heads, rauish your Wiues and Daughters before your faces. For me, I will make shift for one, and so Gods Curse light vppon you all.

All. Wee'l follow Cade,
Wee'l follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the sonne of Henry the fift,
That thus you do exclaime you'l go with him.
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meanest of you Earles and Dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to flye too
Nor knowes he how to liue, but by the spoile,
Vnlesse by robbing of your Friends, and vs.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you liue at iarre,
The fearfull French, whom you late vanquished
Should make a start ore-seas, and vanquish you?
Me thinkes alreadie in this ciuill broyle,
I see them Lording it in London streets,
Crying Villages vnto all they meete.
Better ten thousand base-borne Cades miserry,
Then you should stoope vnto a Frenchmans mercy.
To France, and get what you haue lost:
Spare England, for it is your Natiue Coast:
Henry hath money, you are strong and manly.
God on our side, doubt not of Victorie.

All. A Clifford, a Clifford,
Wee'l follow the King, and Clifford.

Cade. Was euer Feather so lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fift, hales them to an hundred mischiefes, and makes them leaue mee desolate. I see them lay their heades together to surprize me. My sword make way for me, for heere is no staying:
in despight of the diuels and hell, haue through the verie middest of you, and heauens and honor be witnesse, that no want of resolution in mee, but onely my Followers base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake mee to my heeles. Exit.

Dick. What, is he fled? Go some and follow him,
And he that brings his head vnto the King,
Shall haue a thousand Crownes for his reward.

Exeunt some of them.

Follow me Souldiers, wee'l deuise a meane,
To reconcile you all vnto the King. Exeunt omnes.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerset on the Terrace.

King. Was euer King that ioy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No sooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine moneths olde.
Was neuer Subiect long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wish to be a Subiect.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Maiesty.

King. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter Multitudes with Halters about their Neckes.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halters on their neckes,
Expect your Highnesse doome of life, or death.

King. Then heauen set ope thy euerlasting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thankes and praise.
Souldiers, this day haue you redeem'd your liues,
And shew'd how well you loue your Prince & Country.
Continue still in this so good a minde,
And Henry though he be infortunate,
Assure your selues will neuer be vnkinde:
And so with thankes, and pardon to you all,
I do dismisse you to your seuerall Countries.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Please it your Grace to be aduertised,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallow-glasses and stout Kernes,
Is marching hither ward in proud array,
And still proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armes are onely to remoue from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he tearmes a Traitor.

King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Yorke distrest,
Like to a Ship, that hauing scap'd a Tempest,
Is straight way calme, and boorded with a Pyrate.
But now is Cade driuen backe, his men dispers'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to second him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meete him,
And aske him what's the reason of these Armes.
Tell him, Ile send Duke Edmund to the Tower.
And Somerset we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be dismist from him.

Somerset. My Lord,
Ile yeelde my selfe to prison willingly,
Or vnto death, to do my Country good.

King. In any case, be not too rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.

Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not so to deale,
As all things shall redound vnto your good.

King. Come wife, let's in, and learne to gouerne better,
For yet may England curse my wretched raigne.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fye on Ambition: fie on my ſelfe, that haue a ſword, and yet am ready to famiſh. Theſe fiue daies haue I hid me in theſe Woods, and durſt not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me: but now am I ſo hungry, that if I might haue a Leaſe of my life for a thouſand yeares, I could ſtay no longer. Wherefore on a Bricke wall haue I climb'd into this Garden, to ſee if I can eate Graſſe, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not amiſſe to coole a mans ſtomacke this hot weather: and I think this word Sallet was borne to do me good. for many a time but for a Sallet, my braine-pan had bene cleft with a brown Bill; and many a time when I haue beene dry, & bravely marching, it hath ſerv'd me inſteede of a quart pot to drinke in: and now the word Sallet muſt ſerue me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord, who would liue turmoyled in the Court,
And may enioy ſuch quiet walkes as theſe?
This ſmall inheritance my Father left me,
Contenteth me, and worth a Monarchy.
I ſeeke not to wexe great by others waning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what enuy:
Sufficeth, that I haue maintaines my ſtate,
And ſends the poore well pleaſed from my gate.

Cade. Heere's the Lord of the ſoile come to ſeize me for a ſtray, for entering his Fee-ſimple without leaue. A Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a 1000. Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but Ile make thee eate Iron like an Oſtridge, and ſwallow my Sword like a great pin ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why rude Companion, whatſoere thou be,
I know thee not, why then ſhould I betray thee?
Is't not enough to breake into my Garden,
And like a Theefe to come to rob my grounds:
Climbing my walles inſpight of me the Owner,
But thou wilt braue me with theſe ſawcie termes?

Cade. Braue thee? I by the beſt blood that euer was broach'd, and beard thee to. Looke on mee well, I haue eate no meate theſe fiue dayes, yet come thou and thy fiue men, and if I doe not leaue you all as dead as a doore nayle, I pray God I may neuer eate graſſe more.

Iden. Nay, it ſhall nere be ſaid, while England ſtands,
That Alexander Iden an Eſquire of Kent,
Tooke odds to combate a poore famiſht man.
Oppoſe thy ſtedfaſt gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canſt out-face me with thy lookes:
Set limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the leſſer:
Thy hand is but a finger to my fiſt,
Thy legge a ſticke compared with this Truncheon,
My foote ſhall fight with all the ſtrength thou haſt,
And if mine armе be heaued in the Ayre,
Thy graue is digg'd already in the earth:
As for words, whoſe greatneſſe anſwer's words,
Let this my ſword report what ſpeech forbeares.

Cade. By my Valour: the moſt complete Champion that euer I heard. Steele, if thou turne the edge, or cut not out the burly bon'd Clowne in chines of Beefe, ere thou ſleepe in thy Sheath, I beſeech Ioue on my knees thou mayſt be turn'd to Hobnailes.

Heere they Fight.

O I am ſlaine: Famine and no other hath ſlaine me, let ten thouſand dieuelles come againſt me, and giue me but the ten meales I haue loſt, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this houſe, becauſe the vnconquered ſoule of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I haue ſlain, that monſtrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deede,
And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead.
Ne're ſhall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou ſhalt weare it as a Heralds coate,
To embleze the Honor that thy Maſter got.

Cade. Iden farewell, and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, ſhe hath loſt her beſt man, and exhort all the World to be Cowards: For I that neuer feared any, am vanquiſhed by Famine, not by Valour. Dyes.

Id. How much thou wrong'ſt me, heauen be my iudge;
Die damned Wretch, the curſe of her that bare thee:
And as I thruſt thy body in with my ſword,
So wiſh I, I might thruſt thy ſoule to hell.
Hence will I drague thee headlong by the heeles
Vnto a dunghill, which ſhall be thy graue,
And there cut off thy moſt vngracious head,
Which I will beare in triumph to the King,
Leauing thy trunke for Crowes to feed vpon. Exit.

Enter Yorke, and his Army of Iriſh, with Drum and Colours.

Yor. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right,
And pluckе the Crowne from feeble Henries head.
Ring Belles aloud, burne Bonfires cleare and bright
To entertaine great Englands lawfull King.
Ah Sancta Maieſtas! who would not buy thee deere?
Let them obey, that knowes not how to Rule.
This hand was made to handle nought but Gold.
I cannot giue due action to my words,
Except a Sword or Scepter ballance it.
A Scepter ſhall it haue, haue I a ſoule,
On which Ile toſſe the Fleure-de-Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom haue we heere? Buckingham to diſturbe me?
The king hath ſent him ſure: I muſt diſſemble.

Buc. Yorke, if thou meaneſt well, I greet thee well.

Yor. Humfrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
Art thou a Meſſenger, or come of pleaſure.

Buc. A Meſſenger from Henry, our dread Liege,
To know the reaſon of theſe Armes in peace.
Or why, thou being a Subiect, as I am,
Againſt thy Oath, and true Allegeance ſworne,
Should raiſe ſo great a power without his leaue?
Or dare to bring thy Force ſo neere the Court?

Yor. Scarſe can I ſpeake, my Choller is ſo great.
Oh I could hew vp Rockes, and fight with Flint,
I am ſo angry at theſe abiect rearmes.
And now like Aiax Telamonius,
On Sheepe or Oxen could I ſpend my furie.
I am farre better borne then is the king:
More like a King, more Kingly in my thoughts.
But I muſt make faire weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weake, and I more ſtrong.
Buckingham, I prethee pardon me,
That I haue giuen no anſwer all this while:
My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly.
The cauſe why I haue brought this Armie hither.

Is to remoue proud Somerset from the King,
Seditious to his Grace, and to the State.
Buc. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yeelded vnto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.
Yorke. Vpon thine Honor is he Prisoner?
Buck. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner.
Yorke. Then Buckingham I do dismisse my Powres.
Souldiers, I thanke you all: disperse your selues:
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Field,
You shall haue pay, and euery thing you wish.
And let my Soueraigne, vertuous Henry,
Command my eldest sonne, nay all my sonnes,
As pledges of my Fealtie and Loue,
Ile send them all as willing as I liue:
Lands, Goods, Horse, Armor, any thing I haue
Is his to vse, so Somerset may die.
Buc. Yorke, I commend this kinde submission,
We twaine will go into his Highnesse Tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham, doth Yorke intend no harme to vs
That thus he marcheth with thee arme in arme?
Yorke. In all submission and humility,
Yorke doth present himselfe vnto your Highnesse.
K. Then what intends these Forces thou dost bring?
Yor. To heaue the Traitor Somerset from hence,
And fight against that monstrous Rebell Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden with Cades head

Iden. If one so rude, and of so meane condition
May passe into the presence of a King:
Lo, I present your Grace a Traitors head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
King. The head of Cade? Great God, how iust art thou?
Oh let me view his Visage being dead,
That liuing wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your Maiesty.
King. How art thou call'd? And what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,
A poore Esquire of Kent, that loues his King.
Buc. So please it you my Lord, 'twere not amisse
He were created Knight for his good seruice.
King. Iden, kneele downe, rise vp a Knight:
We giue thee for reward a thousand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on vs.
Iden. May Iden liue to merit such a bountie,
And neuer liue but true vnto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerset.

K. See Buckingham, Somerset comes with th'Queene
Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.
Qu. For thousand Yorkes he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
Yor. How now? is Somerset at libertie?
Then Yorke vnloose thy long imprisoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equall with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?
False King, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuse?
King did I call thee? No thou art not King:
Not fit to gouerne and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no nor canst not rule a Traitor.
That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne:
Thy Hand is made to grasp a Palmers staffe,
And not to grace an awefull Princely Sceptor.
That Gold, must round engirt these browes of mine,
Whose Smile and Frowne, like to Achilles Speare
Is able with the change, to kill and cure.
Heere is a hand to hold a Sceptre vp,
And with the same to acte controlling Lawes:
Giue place: by heauen thou shalt rule no more
O're him, whom heauen created for thy Ruler.
Som. O monstrous Traitor! I arrest thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treason 'gainst the King and Crowne:
Obey audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.
York. Would'st haue me kneele? First let me ask of these,
If they can brooke I bow a knee to man:
Sirrah, call in my sonne to be my bale:
I know ere they will haue me go to Ward,
They'l pawne their swords of my infranchisement.
Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To say, if that the Bastard boyes of Yorke
Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.
Yorke. O blood-bespotted Neopolitan,
Out-cast of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge,
The sonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to those
That for my Surety will refuse the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See where they come, Ile warrant they'l make it good.

Enter Clifford.

Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile Clif. Health, and all happinesse to my Lord the King.
Yor. I thanke thee Clifford: Say, what newes with thee?
Nay, do not fright vs with an angry looke:
We are thy Soueraigne Clifford, kneele againe;
For thy mistaking so, We pardon thee.
Clif. This is my King Yorke, I do not mistake,
But thou mistakes me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad.
King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himselfe against his King.
Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.
Qu. He is attested, but will not obey:
His sonnes (he sayes) shall giue their words for him.
Yor. Will you not Sonnes?
Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will serue.
Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons shall.
Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors haue we here?
Yorke. Looke in a Glasse, and call thy Image so.
I am thy King, and thou a false-heart Traitor:
Call hither to the stake my two brane Beares,
That with the very shaking of their Chaines,
They may astonish these fell-lurking Curres,
Bid Salisbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salisbury.

Clif. Are these thy Beares? We'l bate thy Beares to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,
If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting place.
Rich. Oft haue I seene a hot ore-weening Curre,
Run backe and bite, because he was with-held,
Who being suffer'd with the Beares fell paw,
Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And such a peece of seruice will you do,

If

oppoſe your ſelues to march Lord Warwicke.
Hence heape of wrath, foule indigeſted lumpe,
oked in thy manners, as thy ſhape.
Nay we ſhall heare you thotrowly anon.
Take heede leaſt by your heate you burne your owes vnto the graue with mickle age.

My Lord, I haue conſidered with my ſelfe

my conſcience, do repute his grace full heyre to Englands Royall ſeate.
. Haſt thou not ſworne Allegeance vnto me?
I haue.
Canſt thou diſpenſe with heauen for ſuch an oath?
It is great ſinne, to ſweare vnto a ſinne:
reater ſinne to keepe a ſinfull oath:
an be bound by any ſolemne Vow
a murd'rous deede, to rob a man,
e a ſpotleſſe Virgins Chaſtitie,
e the Orphan of his Patrimonie,
ng the Widdow from her cuſtom'd right,
are no other reaſon for this wrong,
t he was bound by a ſolemne Oath?
A ſubtle Traitor needs no Sophiſter.
. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himſelfe.
. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou haſt, ſalu'd for death and dignitie.
Clif. The firſt I warrant thee, if dreames proue true
. You were beſt to go to bed, and dreame againe, pe thee from the Tempeſt of the field.
Clif. I am reſolu'd to beare a greater ſtorme, my thou canſt conioure vp to day:
at Ile write vpon thy Burgonet,
I but know thee by thy houſed Badge.
. Now by my Fathers badge, old Neuils Creſt, mpant Beare chain'd to the ragged ſtaffe,
ay ſhe weare aloft my Burgonet,
a Mountaine top, the Cedar ſhewes, keepes his leaues inſpight of any ſtorme,
affright thee with the view thereof.
Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare, read it vnder foot with all contempt,
ght the Beauard, that protects the Beare.
Clif. And ſo to Armes victorious Father, ll the Rebels, and their Complices.
. Fie, Charitie for ſhame, ſpeake not in ſpight, ſhall ſup with Ieſu Chriſt to night.
Clif. Foule ſtygmaticke that's more then thou

. If not in heauen, you'l ſurely ſup in hell. Exeunt

Enter Warwicke.

. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles:
thou doſt not hide thee from the Beare,
Now when the angrie Trumpet ſounds alarum,
And dead mens cries do fill the emptie ayre,
Clifford I ſay, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwicke is hoarſe with calling thee to armes.

Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot.
Yor. The deadly handed Clifford ſlew my Steed:
But match to match I haue encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crowes
Euen of the bonnie beaſt he loued ſo well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of vs the time is come.
Yor. Hold Warwick ſeek thee out ſome other chace
For I my ſelfe muſt hunt this Deere to death.
War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fight'ſt:
As I intend Clifford to thriue to day,
It greeues my ſoule to leaue thee vnaſſail'd. Exit War.
Clif. What ſeeſt thou in me Yorke?
Why doſt thou pauſe?
Yorke. With thy braue bearing ſhould I be in loue,
But that thou art ſo faſt mine enemie.
Clif. Nor ſhould thy proweſſe want praiſe & eſteeme,
But that 'tis ſhewne ignobly, and in Treaſon.
Yorke. So let it helpe me now againſt thy ſword,
As I in iuſtice, and true right expreſſe it.
Clif. My ſoule and bodie on the action both.
Yor. A dreadfull lay, addreſſe thee inſtantly.
Clif. La fin Corrone les oeuures.
Yor. Thus Warre hath giuen thee peace, for y' art ſtill,
Peace with his ſoule, heauen if it be thy will.

Enter young Clifford.

Clif. Shame and Confuſion all is on the rout,
Feare frames diſorder, and diſorder wounds
Where it ſhould guard. O Warre, thou ſonne of hell,
Whom angry heauens do make their miniſter,
Throw in the frozen boſomes of our part,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldier flye.
He that is truly dedicate to Warre,
Hath no ſelfe-loue: nor he that loues himſelfe,
Hath not eſſentially, but by circumſtance
The name of Valour. O let the vile world end,
And the premiſed Flames of the Laſt day,
Knit earth and heauen together.
Now let the generall Trumpet blow his blaſt,
Particularities, and pettie ſounds
To ceaſe. Wa't thou ordain'd (deere Father)
To looſe thy youth in peace, and to atchecue
The Siluer Liuery of aduiſed Age,
And in thy Reuerence, and thy Chaire-dayes, thus
To die in Ruffian battell? Euen at this ſight,
My heart is turn'd to ſtone: and while 'tis mine,
It ſhall be ſtony. Yorke, not our old men ſpares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginall,
Shall be to me, euen as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax:
Henceforth, I will not haue to do with pitty.
Meet I an infant of the houſe of Yorke,
Into as many gobbits will I cut it
As wilde Medea yong Abſirtis did.
In cruelty, will I ſeeke out my Fame.
Come thou new ruine of olde Cliffords houſe:
As did Aeneas old Anchiſes beare,
So beare I thee vpon my manly ſhoulders:
But then, Aeneas bare a liuing loade;

Nothing so heauy as these woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerset to fight.

Rich. So lye thou there:
For vnderneath an Ale-house paltry signe,
The Castle in S. Albons, Somerset
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death:
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathfull still:
Priests pray for enemies, but Princes kill.
Fight. Excursions.

Enter King, Queene, and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are slow, for shame away.
King. Can we outrun the Heauens? Good Margaret stay.
Qu. What are you made of? You'l nor fight nor fly:
Now is it manhood, wisedome, and defence,
To giue the enemy way, and to secure vs
By what we can, which can no more but flye.
Alarum a farre off.
If you be ta'ne, we then should see the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get, where you are lou'd,
And where this breach now in our Fortunes made
May readily be stopt.

Enter Clifford.

Cli. But that my hearts on future mischeefe set,
I would speake blasphemy ere bid you flye:
But flye you must: Vncurable discomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away for your releefe, and we will liue
To see their day, and them our Fortune giue.
Away my Lord, away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Yorke, Richard, Warwicke, and Soldiers, with Drum & Colours.

Yorke. Of Salsbury, who can report of him,
That Winter Lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all brush of Time:
And like a Gallant, in the brow of youth,
Repaires him with Occasion. This happy day
Is not it selfe, nor haue we wonne one foot,
If Salsbury be lost.
Rich. My Noble Father:
Three times to day I holpe him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him: Thrice I led him off,
Perswaded him from any further act:
But still where danger was, still there I met him,
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his Will, in his old feeble body,
But Noble as he is, looke where he comes.
Enter Salsbury.
Sal. Now by my Sword, well hast thou fought to day
By th'Masse so did we all. I thanke you Richard
God knowes how long it is I haue to liue:
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to day
You haue defended me from imminent death.
Well Lords, we haue not got that which we haue,
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repayring Nature.
York. I know our safety is to follow them,
For (as I heare) the King is fled to London,
To call a present Court of Parliament:
Let vs pursue him ere the Writs go forth.
What saies Lord Warwicke, shall we after them?
War. After them: nay before them if we can.
Now by my hand (Lords) 'twas a glorious day.
Saint Albons battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eternis'd in all Age to come.
Sound Drumme and Trumpets, and to London all,
And more such dayes as these, to vs befall. Exeunt

FINIS.

The third Part of Henry the Sixt, with the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Alarum.

Warwicke.
...Wonder how the King escap'd our hands?

...h. Thus do I hope to shake King Henries head.

...rf. Wee'le all assist you: he that flyes, shall dye.
...ur. Thankes gentle Norfolke, stay by me my Lords,
...ouldiers stay and lodge by me this Night.
They goe vp.
...r. And when the King comes, offer him no violence,

...r. The Queene this day here holds her Parliament,

...rb. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this House.
...rw. The bloody Parliament shall this be call'd,
...le Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,
And bashfull Henry depos'd, whose Cowardize
Hath made vs by-words to our enemies.
Plan. Then leaue me not, my Lords be resolute,
I meane to take possession of my Right.
Warw. Neither the King, nor he that loues him best,
The prowdest hee that holds vp Lancaster,
Dares stirre a Wing, if Warwicke shake his Bells.
Ile plant Plantagenet, root him vp who dares:
Resolue thee Richard, clayme the English Crowne.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmerland, Exeter, and the reſt.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the sturdie Rebell sits,
Euen in the Chayre of State: belike he meanes,
Backt by the power of Warwicke, that false Peere,
To aspire vnto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he slew thy Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, & you both haue vow'd reuenge
On him, his sonnes, his fauorites, and his friends.
Northumb. If I be not, Heauens be reueng'd on me.
Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.
Westm. What, shall we suffer this? lets pluck him down,
My heart for anger burnes, I cannot brooke it.
Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Westmerland.
Clifford. Patience is for Poultroones, such as he:
He durst not sit there, had your Father liu'd.
My gracious Lord, here in the Parliament
Let vs assayle the Family of Yorke.
North. Well hast thou spoken, Cousin be it so.
Henry. Ah, know you not the Citie fauours them,
And they haue troupes of Souldiers at their beck?
Westm. But when the Duke is slaine, they'le quickly flye.
Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,
To make a Shambles of the Parliament House.
Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,
Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to vse.
Thou factious Duke of Yorke descend my Throne,
And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,
I am thy Soueraigne.
Yorke. I am thine.
Exet. For shame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.
Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earledome was.
Exet. Thy

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne.
Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne,
In following this vſurping Henry.
Clifford. Whom ſhould hee follow, but his naturall King?
Warw. True Clifford, that's Richard Duke of Yorke.
Henry. And ſhall I ſtand, and thou ſit in my Throne?
Yorke. It muſt and ſhall be ſo, content thy ſelfe.
Warw. Be Duke of Lancaſter, let him be King.
Weſtm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaſter,
And that the Lord of Weſtmerland ſhall maintaine.
Warw. And Warwick ſhall diſproue it. You forget,
That we are thoſe which chas'd you from the field,
And ſlew your Fathers, and with Colours ſpread
Marcht through the Citie to the Pallace Gates.
Northumb. Yes Warwicke, I remember it to my griefe,
And by his Soule, thou and thy Houſe ſhall rue it.
Weſtm. Plantagenet, of thee and theſe thy Sonnes,
Thy Kinſmen, and thy Friends, Ile haue more liues
Then drops of bloud were in my Fathers Veines.
Clif. Vrge it no more, leſt that inſtead of words,
I ſend thee, Warwicke, ſuch a Meſſenger,
As ſhall reuenge his death, before I ſtirre.
Warw. Poore Clifford, how I ſcorne his worthleſſe Threats.
Plant. Will you we ſhew our Title to the Crowne?
If not, our Swords ſhall pleade it in the field.
Henry. What Title haſt thou Traytor to the Crowne?
My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
I am the Sonne of Henry the Fift,
Who made the Dolphin and the French to ſtoupe,
And ſeiz'd vpon their Townes and Prouinces.
Warw. Talke not of France, ſith thou haſt loſt it all.
Henry. The Lord Protector loſt it, and not I:
When I was crown'd, I was but nine moneths old.
Rich. You are old enough now,
And yet me thinkes you looſe:
Father teare the Crowne from the Vſurpers Head.
Edward. Sweet Father doe ſo, ſet it on your Head.
Mount. Good Brother,
As thou louſt and honoreſt Armes,
Let's fight it out, and not ſtand cauilling thus.
Richard. Sound Drummes and Trumpets, and the King will flye.
Plant. Sonnes peace.
Henry. Peace thou, and giue King Henry leaue to ſpeake.
Warw. Plantagenet ſhall ſpeake firſt: Heare him Lords,
And be you ſilent and attentiue too,
For he that interrupts him, ſhall not liue.
Hen. Think'ſt thou, that I will leaue my Kingly Throne,
Wherein my Grandfire and my Father ſat?
No: firſt ſhall Warre vnpeople this my Realme;
I, and their Colours often borne in France,
And now in England, to our hearts great ſorrow,
Shall be my Winding-ſheet. Why faint you Lords?
My Title's good, and better farre then his.
Warw. Proue it Henry, and thou ſhalt be King.
Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conqueſt got the Crowne.
Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion againſt his King.
Henry. I know not what to ſay, my Titles weake:
Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?
Plant. What then?
Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:
For Richard, in the view of many Lords,
Reſign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
Whoſe Heire my Father was, and I am his.
Plant. He rose againſt him, being his Soueraigne,
And made him to reſigne his Crowne perforce.
Warw. Suppoſe, my Lords, he did it vnconſtrain'd,
Thinke you 'twere preiudiciall to his Crowne?
Exet. No: for he could not ſo reſigne his Crowne,
But that the next Heire ſhould ſucceed and reigne.
Henry. Art thou againſt vs, Duke of Exeter?
Exet. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
Plant. Why whiſper you, my Lords, and anſwer not?
Exet. My Conſcience tells me he is lawfull King.
Henry. All will reuolt from me, and turne to him.
Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'ſt,
Thinke not, that Henry ſhall be ſo depos'd.
Warw. Depos'd he ſhall be, in deſpight of all.
Northumb. Thou art deceiu'd:
'Tis not thy Southerne power
Of Eſſex, Norfolke, Suffolke, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus preſumptuous and proud,
Can ſet the Duke vp in deſpight of me.
Clifford. King Henry, be thy Title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and ſwallow me aliue,
Where I ſhall kneele to him that ſlew my Father.
Henry. Oh Clifford, how thy words reuiue my heart.
Plant. Henry of Lancaſter, reſigne thy Crowne:
What mutter you, or what conſpire you Lords?
Warw. Doe right vnto this Princely Duke of Yorke,
Or I will fill the Houſe with armed men,
And ouer the Chayre of State, where now he ſits,
Write vp his Title with vſurping blood.
He ſtampes with his foot, and the Souldiers ſhew themſelues.
Henry. My Lord of Warwick, heare but one word,
Let me for this my life time reigne as King.
Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,
And thou ſhalt reigne in quiet while thou liu'ſt.
Henry. I am content: Richard Plantagenet
Enioy the Kingdome after my deceaſe.
Clifford. What wrong is this vnto the Prince, your Sonne?
Warw. What good is this to England, and himſelfe?
Weſtm. Baſe, fearefull, and deſpayring Henry.
Clifford. How haſt thou iniur'd both thy ſelfe and vs?
Weſtm. I cannot ſtay to heare theſe Articles.
Northumb. Nor I.
Clifford. Come Coſin, let vs tell the Queene this Newes.
Weſtm. Farewell faint-hearted and degenerate King.
In whoſe cold bloud no ſparke of Honour bides.
Northumb. Be thou a prey vnto the Houſe of Yorke,
And dye in Bands, for this vnmanly deed.
Clif. In dreadfull Warre may'ſt thou be ouercome.
Or liue in peace abandon'd and deſpis'd.
Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.
Exeter. They ſeeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeeld.
Henry. Ah Exeter.
Warw. Why ſhould you ſigh, my Lord?
Henry. Not for my ſelfe Lord Warwick, but my Sonne,
Whom I vnnaturally ſhall diſ-inherite.
But be it as it may: I here entayle
The Crowne to thee and to thine Heires for euer,
Conditionally, that here thou take an Oath,
To ceaſe this Ciuill Warre: and whil'ſt I liue,

To

…or me as thy King, and Soueraigne:
…gther by Treason nor Hostilitie,
…e to put me downe, and reigne thy selfe.
…e. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.
…w. Long liue King Henry: Plantagenet embrace
…ry. And long liue thou, and these thy forward
…s.
…w. Now Yorke and Lancaster are reconcil'd.
…e. Accurst be he that seekes to make them foes.
Sonet. Here they come downe.
…w. Farewell my gracious Lord, I'le to my Castle.
…rw. And I'le keepe London with my Souldiers.
…f. And I to Norfolke with my followers.
…mt. And I vnto the Sea, from whence I came.
…ry. And I with griefe and sorrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene.

…er. Heere comes the Queene.
…e Lookes be wray her anger:
…le away.
…ry. Exeter so will I.
…ne. Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.
…ry. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will stay.
…ne. Who can be patient in such extreames?
…retched man, would I had dy'de a Maid?
…euer seene thee, neuer borne thee Sonne,
…thou hast prou'd so vnnaturall a Father,
…he deserv'd to loose his Birth-right thus?
…thou but lou'd him halfe so well as I,
…t that paine which I did for him once,
…urish him, as I did with my blood;
…would'st haue left thy dearest heart-blood there,
…r then haue made that sauage Duke thine Heire,
…is-inherited thine onely Sonne.
…ne. Father, you cannot dis-inherite me:
…be King, why should not I succeede?
…ry. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me sweet Sonne,
…arle of Warwick and the Duke enforc't me.
…ne. Enforc't thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc't?
…e to heare thee speake: sh timorous Wretch,
…hast vndone thy selfe, thy Sonne, and me,
…giu'n vaze the House of Yorke such head,
…ou shalt reigne but by their sufferance.
…nayle him and his Heires vnto the Crowne,
…is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,
…reepe into it farre before thy time?
…ck is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,
…e Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,
…Duke is made Protector of the Realme,
…et shalt thou be safe? Such safetie findes
…rembling Lambe, inuironned with Wolues.
…beene there, which am a silly Woman,
…ouldiers should haue tost'd me on their Pikes,
…e I would haue granted to that Act.
…on preferr'ft thy Life, before thine Honor.
…eing thou do'ft, I here divorce my selfe,
…from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,
…that Act of Parliament be repeal'd,
…reby my Sonne is dis-inherited.
…forthcome Lords, that haue forsworne thy Colours,
…follow mine, if once they see them spread:
…pread they shall be, to thy foule disgrace,
…ster ruine of the House of Yorke.
…doe I leaue thee: Come Sonne, let's away,
…rmy is ready; come, wee'le after them.

Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me speake.
Queene. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.
Henry. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt stay me?
Queene. I, to be murther'd by his Enemies.
Prince. When I returne with victorie to the field,
Ile see your Grace: till then, Ile follow her.
Queene. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus.
Henry. Poore Queene,
How loue to me, and to her Sonne,
Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.
Reueng'd may she be on that hatefull Duke,
Whose haughtie spirit, wingd with desire,
Will cost my Crowne, and like an emptie Eagle,
Tyre on the flesh of me, and of my Sonne.
The losse of those three Lords torments my heart:
Ile write vnto them, and entreat them faire;
Come Cousin, you shall be the Messenger.
Exet. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. Exit.

Flourish. Enter Richard, Edward, and Mountague.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngest, giue mee leaue.
Edward. No, I can better play the Orator.
Mount. But I haue reasons strong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. Why how now Sonnes, and Brother, at a strife?
What is your Quarrell? how began it first?
Edward. No Quarrell, but a slight Contention.
Yorke. About what?
Rich. About that which concernes your Grace and vs,
The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.
Yorke. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.
Richard. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.
Edward. Now you are Heire, therefore enioy it now.
By giuing the House of Lancaster leaue to breathe,
It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.
Yorke. I tooke an Oath, that hee should quietly reigne.
Edward. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken:
I would breake a thousand Oathes, to reigne one yeare.
Richard. No: God forbid your Grace should be forsworne.
Yorke. I shall be, if I claime by open Warre.
Richard. Ile proue the contrary, if you'le heare me speake.
Yorke. Thou canst not, Sonne: it is impossible.
Richard. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
Before a true and lawfull Magistrate,
That hath authoritie ouer him that sweares.
Henry had none, but did vsurpe the place.
Then seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,
Your Oath, my Lord, is vaine and friuolous.
Therefore to Armes: and Father doe but thinke,
How sweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,
Within whose Circuit is Elizium,
And all that Poets faine of Blisse and Ioy.
Why doe we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Vntill the White Rose that I weare, be dy'de
Euen in the luke-warm blood of Henries heart.
Yorke. Richard enough. I will be King, or dye.
Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And whet on Warwick to this Enterprise.

Thou

Thou Richard shalt to the Duke of Norfolke,
And tell him priuily of our intent.
You Edward shall vnto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise.
In them I trust: for they are Souldiors,
Witty, courteous, liberall, full of spirit.
While you are thus imployd, what resteth more?
But that I seeke occasion how to rise,
And yet the King not priuie to my Drift,
Nor any of the House of Lancaster.

Enter Gabriel.

But stay, what Newes? Why comm'st thou in such poste?

Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords,
Intend here to besiege you in your Castle.
She is hard by, with twentie thousand men:
And therefore fortifie your Hold, my Lord.

Yorke. I, with my Sword.
What? think'st thou, that we feare them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me,
My Brother Mountague shall poste to London.
Let Noble Warwicke, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we haue left Protectors of the King,
With powrefull Policie strengthen themselues,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his Oathes.

Mount. Brother, I goe: Ile winne them, feare it not
And thus most humbly I doe take my leaue.

Exit Mountague.

Enter Mortimer, and his Brother.

York. Sir Iohn, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vncles
You are come to Sandall in a happie houre.
The Armie of the Queene meane to besiege vs.

Iohn. Shee shall not needs, wee'le meete her in the field.

Yorke. What, with fiue thousand men?

Richard. I, with fiue hundred, Father, for a needs.
A Woman's generall: what should we feare?

A March afarre off.

Edward. I heare their Drummes:
Let's see our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them Battaile straight.

Yorke. Fiue men to twenties: though the oddes be great,
I doubt not, Vnckle, of our Victorie.
Many a Battaile haue I wonne in France,
When as the Enemie hath beene tenne to one:
Why should I not now haue the like successe?

Alarum. Exit.

Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rutland. Ah, whither shall I flye, to scape their hands?
Ah Tutor, looke where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Chaplaine away, thy Priesthood saues thy life:
As for the Brat of this accursed Duke,
Whose Father slew my Father, he shall dye.

Tutor. And I, my Lord, will beare him company.

Clifford. Souldiers, away with him.

Tutor. Ah Clifford, murther not this innocent Child, Least thou be hated both of God and Man. Exit.

Clifford. How now? is he dead already?
Or is it feare, that makes him close his eyes?
Ile open them.

Rutland. So looks the pent-vp Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trembles vnder his deuouring Pawes.
And so he walkes, insulting o're his Prey,
And so he comes, to rend his Limbes asunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with such a cruell threatning Looke.
Sweet Clifford heare me speake, before I dye.
I am too meane a subiect for thy Wrath,
Be thou reueng'd on men, and let me liue.

Clifford. In vaine thou speak'st, poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath stopt the passage
Where thy words should enter.

Rutland. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe.
He is a man, and Clifford coape with him.

Clifford. Had I thy Brethren here, their liues and thine
Were not reuenge sufficient for me:
No, if I digg'd vp thy fore-fathers Graues,
And hung their rotten Coffins vp in Chaynes,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the House of Yorke,
Is as a furie to torment my Soule:
And till I root out their accursed Line,
And leaue not one aliue, I liue in Hell.
Therefore—

Rutland. Oh let me pray, before I take my death:
To thee I pray; (sweet Clifford pitty me.

Clifford. Such pitty as my Rapiers point affords.

Rutland. I neuer did thee harme: why wilt thou slay me?

Clifford. Thy Father hath.

Rutland. But 'twas ere I was borne.
Thou hast one Sonne, for his sake pitty me,
Least in reuenge thereof, sith God is iust,
He be as miserably slaine as I.
Ah, let me liue in Prison all my dayes,
And when I giue occasion of offence,
Then let me dye, for now thou hast no cause.

Clifford. No cause? thy Father slew my Father: therefore dye.

Rutland. Dij faciant laudis summa sit ista tuæ.

Clifford. Plantagenet, I come Plantagenet:
And this thy Sonnes blood cleauing to my Blade,
Shall rust vpon my Weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, doe make me wipe off both. Exit.

Alarum. Enter Richard, Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. The Army of the Queene hath got the field:
My Vncles both are slaine, in rescuing me;
And all my followers, to the eager foe
Turne back, and flye, like Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes pursu'd by hunger-starued Wolues.
My Sonnes, God knowes what hath bechanced them:
But this I know, they haue demean'd themselues
Like men borne to Renowne, by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thrice cry'de, Courage Father, fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With Purple Faulchion, painted to the Hilt,
In blood of those that had encountred him:
And when the hardyest Warriors did recoyle,
Richard cry'de, Charge, and giue no foot of ground,
And cry'de, A Crowne, or else a glorious Tombe,

…ner, or an Earthy Sepulcher.
…his we charg'd againe: but out alas,
…dg'd againe, as I haue feene a Swan
…boote leſſe labour ſwimme againſt the Tyde,
…end her ſtrength with ouer-matching Waues.
A ſhort Alarum within.
…yke, the fatall followers doe purſue,
…m faint, and cannot flye their furie:
…ere I ſtrong, I would not ſhunne their furie.
…nds are cumbred, that makes vp my Life,
…uſt I ſtay, and here my Life muſt end.

Enter the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Souldiers.

…bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
…your quenchleſſe furie to more rage.
…ur Butt, and I abide your Shot.
…thumb. Yeeld to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.
…ford. I ſo ſuch mercy, as his ruthleſſe Arme
…lowne-right payment, ſhew'd vnto my Father.
…Warwick hath tumbled from his Carre,
…ade an Euening at the Noone-tide Prick
…My aſhes, as the Phœnix, may bring forth
…that will reuenge vpon you all:
…that hope, I throw mine eyes to Heauen,
…ng what ere you can afflict me with.
…ome you not? what, multitudes, and feare?
…So Cowards fight, when they can flye no further,
…es doe peck the Faulcons piercing Tallons,
…erate Theeues, all hopeleſſe of their Liues,
…e out Inuectiues gainſt the Officers.
…e. Oh Clifford, but bethinke thee once againe,
…thy thoughts ere-run my former time:
…thou canſt, for blushing, view this face,
…e thy tongue, that ſlanders him with Cowardice,
…frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.
…ford. I will not bandie with thee word for word,
…chler with thee blowes twice two for one.
…ene. Hold valiant Clifford, for a thouſand cauſes
…d prolong a while the Traytors Life:
…makes him deafe; ſpeake thou Northumberland.
…thumb. Hold Clifford, doe not honor him ſo much,
…th thy finger, though to wound his heart.
…valour were it, when a Curre doth grinne,
…to thruſt his Hand betweene his Teeth,
…he might ſpurne him with his Foot away?
…Warres prize, to take all Vantages,
…one to one, is no impeach of Valour.
…ford. I, I, ſo ſtriues the Woodcocke with the …thumb. So doth the Connie ſtruggle in the

…So triumph Theeues vpon their conquer'd Booty,
…e men yeeld with Robbers, ſo o're-matcht.
…thumb. What would your Grace haue done vnto
…m?
…ene. Braue Warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
…make him ſtand vpon this Mole-hill here,
…ught at Mountaines with out-ſtretched Armes,
…rted but the ſhadow with his Hand.
…was it you that would be Englands King?
…you that reuell'd in our Parliament,
…ade a Preachment of your high Deſcent?
…ere your Meſſe of Sonnes, to back you now
…mous Edward and the luſtie George?
And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigie,
Dickie, your Boy, that with his grumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the reſt, where is your Darling, Rutland?
Looke Yorke, I ſtain'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his Rapiers point,
Made iſſue from the Boſome of the Boy:
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I giue thee this to drie thy Cheekes withall:
Alas poore Yorke, but that I hate thee deadly,
I ſhould lament thy miſerable ſtate
I prythee grieue, to make me merry, Yorke.
What, hath thy fierie heart ſo parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Teare can fall, for Rutlands death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou ſhould'ſt be mad:
And I, to make thee mad, doe mock thee thus.
Stampe, raue, and fret, that I may ſing and dance.
Thou would'ſt be fee'd, I ſee, to make me ſport:
Yorke cannot ſpeake, vnleſſe he weare a Crowne.
A Crowne for Yorke: and Lords, bow lowe to him:
Hold you his hands, whileſt I doe ſet it on.
I marry Sir, now lookes he like a King.
I, this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,
And this is he was his adopted Heire.
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd ſo ſoone, and broke his ſolemne Oath?
As I bethinke me you ſhould not be King.
Till our King Henry had ſhooke hands with Death.
And will you pale your head in Henries Glory,
And rob his Temples of the Diademe,
Now in his Life, againſt your holy Oath?
Oh 'tis a fault too too vnpardonable.
Off with the Crowne; and with the Crowne, his Head,
And whileſt we breathe, take time to doe him dead.
Clifford. That is my Office, for my Fathers ſake.
Queene. Nay ſtay, let's heare the Orizons he makes.
Yorke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worſe then Wolues of France.
Whoſe Tongue more poyſons then the Adders Tooth:
How ill-beſeeming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woes, whom Fortune captiuates?
But that thy Face is Vizard-like, vnchanging,
Made impudent with vſe of euill deedes,
I would aſſay, proud Queene, to make thee bluſh.
To tell thee whence thou cam'ſt, of whom deriu'd,
Were ſhame enough, to ſhame thee,
Were thou not ſhameleſſe.
Thy Father beares the type of King of Napies,
Of both the Sicils, and Ieruſalem,
Yet not ſo wealthie as an Engliſh Yeoman.
Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to inſult?
It needes not, nor it bootes thee not, proud Queene,
Vnleſſe the Adage muſt be verify'd,
That Beggers mounted, runne their Horſe to death.
'Tis Beautie that doth oft make Women proud,
But God he knowes, thy ſhare thereof is ſmall:
'Tis Vertue, that doth make them moſt admir'd,
The contrary, doth make thee wounded at.
'Tis Gouernment that makes them ſeeme Diuine,
The want thereof, makes thee abhominable.
Thou art as oppoſite to every good,
As the Antipodes are vnto vs,
Or as the South to the Septentrion.
Oh Tygres Heart, wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How

How could'ſt thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be ſeene to beare a Womans face?
Women are ſoft, milde, pittifull, and flexible;
Thou ſterne, obdurate, flintie, rough, remorſeleſſe.
Bidſt thou me rage? why now thou haſt thy wiſh.
Would'ſt haue me weepe? why now thou haſt thy will.
For raging Wind blowes vp inceſſant ſhowers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Raine begins.
Theſe Teares are my ſweet Rutlands Obſequies,
And every drop cryes vengeance for his death,
'Gainſt thee fell Clifford, and thee falſe French-woman.
Northumb. Beſhrew me, but his paſſions moues me ſo,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.
Yorke. That Face of his,
The hungry Caniballs would not haue toucht,
Would not haue ſtayn'd with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more inexorable,
Oh, tenne times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthleſſe Queene, a hapleſſe Fathers Teares:
This Cloth thou dipd'ſt in blood of my ſweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe waſh the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and goe boaſt of this,
And if thou tell'ſt the heauie ſtorie right,
Vpon my Soule, the hearers will ſhed Teares:
Yea, euen my Foes will ſhed faſt-falling Teares,
And ſay, Alas, it was a pittious deed.
There, take the Crowne, and with the Crowne, my Curſe,
And in thy need, ſuch comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the World,
My Soule to Heauen, my Blood vpon your Heads.
Northumb. Had he been ſlaughter-man to all my Kinne,
I ſhould not for my Life but weepe with him,
To ſee how inly Sorrow gripes his Soule.
Queen. What, weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Thinke but vpon the wrong he did vs all,
And that will quickly drie thy melting Teares.
Clifford. Heere's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers Death.
Queene. And heere's to right our gentle-hearted King.
Yorke. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God,
My Soule flyes through theſe wounds, to ſeeke out thee.
Queene. Off with his Head, and ſet it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may ouer-looke the Towne of Yorke.
Flourish. Exit.

A March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edward. I wonder how our Princely Father ſcap't:
Or whether he be ſcap't away, or no,
From Cliffords and Northumberlands purſuit?
Had he been ta'ne, we ſhould haue heard the newes;
Had he beene ſlaine, we ſhould haue heard the newes:
Or had he ſcap't, me thinkes we ſhould haue heard
The happy tidings of his good eſcape.
How fares my Brother? why is he ſo ſad?
Richard. I cannot ioy, vntill I be reſolu'd
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I ſaw him in the Battaile range about,
And watcht him how he ſingled Clifford forth.
Me thought he bore him in the thickeſt troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neat,
Or as a Beare encompaſs'd round with Dogges:
Who hauing pincht a few, and made them cry,
The reſt ſtand all aloofe, and barke at him.
So far'd our Father with his Enemies,
So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:
Me thinkes 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.
See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,
And takes her farwell of the glorious Sunne,
How well reſembles it the prime of Youth,
Trimm'd like a Yonker, prauncing to his Loue?
Ed. Dazle mine eyes, or doe I ſee three Sonnes?
Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne,
Not ſeperated with the racking Clouds,
But ſeuer'd in a pale cleare-ſhining Skye.
See, ſee, they ioyne, embrace, and ſeeme to kiſſe,
As if they vow'd ſome League inuiolable.
Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne:
In this, the Heauen figures ſome event.
Edward. 'Tis wondrous ſtrange,
The like yet neuer heard of.
I thinke it cites vs (Brother) to the field,
That wee, the Sonnes of braue Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meedes,
Should not withſtanding ioyne our Lights together
And ouer-ſhine the Earth, as this the World.
What ere it bodes, hence-forward will I beare
Vpon my Target three faire ſhining Sunnes.
Richard. Nay, beare three Daughters:
By your leaue, I ſpeake it,
You loue the Breeder better then the Male.

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whoſe heauie Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull ſtory hanging on thy Tongue?
Meſſ. Ah, one that was a wofull looker on,
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was ſlaine,
Your Princely Father, and my louing Lord.
Edward. Oh ſpeake no more, for I haue heard too much.
Richard. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.
Meſſ. Enuironed he was with many foes,
And ſtood againſt them, as the hope of Troy
Againſt the Greekes, that would haue entred Troy.
But Hercules himſelfe muſt yeeld to oddes:
And many ſtroakes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes downe and fells the hardeſt-tymber'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was ſubdu'd,
But only ſlaughter'red by the irefull Arme
Of vn-relenting Clifford, and the Queene:
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high deſpight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with griefe he wept,
The ruthleſſe Queene gaue him, to dry his Cheekes,
A Napkin, ſteeped in the harmleſſe blood
Of ſweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford ſlaine:
And after many ſcornes, many foule taunts,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They ſet the ſame, and there it doth remaine,
The ſaddeſt ſpectacle that eye I view'd.
Edward. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane vpon,
Now thou art gone, wee haue no Staffe, no Stay.
Oh Clifford, boyſt'rous Clifford thou haſt ſlaine
The flowre of Europe, for his Chiualrie,
And treacherouſly haſt thou vanquiſht him,
For hand to hand he would haue vanquiſht thee.
Now my Soules Pallace is become a Priſon:
Ah, would ſhe breake from hence, that this my body

Muſt

…euer henceforth ſhall I ioy againe:
…r, oh never ſhall I ſee more ioy.
…b. I cannot weepe: for all my bodies moyſture

…arch. Enter Warwicke, Marqueſſe Mountacute, and their Army.

…rwick. How now faire Lords? What faire? What newes abroad?
…b. Great Lord of Warwicke, if we ſhould recomp
…leſefull newes, and at each words deliuerance
…poniards in our fleſh, till all were told,
…words would adde more anguiſh then the wounds.
…ant Lord, the Duke of Yorke is ſlaine.
…r. O Warwicke, Warwicke, that Plantagenet
…h held thee deerely, as his Soules Redemption,
…the fierce Lord Clifford done to death.
…r. Ten dayes ago, drown'd theſe newes in teares
…ow to adde more meaſure to your woes,

George, your Brother, Norfolke, and my Selfe,
In haſte, poſt haſte, are come to ioyne with you:
For in the Marches heere we heard you were,
Making another Head, to fight againe.
Ed. Where is the Duke of Norfolke, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?
War. Some ſix miles off the Duke is with the Soldiers,
And for your Brother he was lately ſent
From your kinde Aunt Dutcheſſe of Burgundie,
With ayde of Souldiers to this needfull Warre.
Rich. 'Twas odde belike, when valiant Warwick fled;
Oft haue I heard his praiſes in Purſuite,
But ne're till now, his Scandall of Retire.
War. Nor now my Scandall Richard, doſt thou heare:
For thou ſhalt know this ſtrong right hand of mine,
Can plucke the Diadem from faint Henries head,
And wring the awefull Scepter from his Fiſt,
Were he as famous, and as bold in Warre,
As he is fam'd for Mildneſſe, Peace, and Prayer.
Rich. I know it well Lord Warwick, blame me not,
'Tis loue I beare thy glories make me ſpeake:
But in this troubleous time, what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our Coates of Steele,
And wrap our bodies in blacke mourning Gownes,
Numb'ring our Aue-Maries with our Beads?
Or ſhall we on the Helmets of our Foes
Tell our Deuotion with reuengefull Armes?
If for the laſt, ſay I, and to it Lords.
War. Why therefore Warwick came to ſeek you out,
And therefore comes my Brother Mountague:
Attend me Lords, the proud inſulting Queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their Feather, many moe proud Birds,
Haue wrought the eaſie-melting King, like Wax.
He ſwore conſent to your Succeſſion,
His Oath enrolled in the Parliament.
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To fruſtrate both his Oath, and what beſide
May make againſt the houſe of Lancaſter.
Their power (I thinke) is thirty thouſand ſtrong:
Now, if the helpe of Norfolke, and my ſelfe,
With all the Friends that thou braue Earle of March,
Among'ſt the louing Welſhmen can'ſt procure,
Will but amount to fiue and twenty thouſand,
Why Via, to London will we march,
And once againe, beſtride our foaming Steeds,
And once againe cry Charge vpon our Foes,
But neuer once againe turne backe and flye.
Rich. I, now me thinks I heare great Warwick ſpeak:
Ne're may he liue to ſee a Sun-ſhine day,
That cries Retire, if Warwicke bid him ſtay.
Ed. Lord Warwicke, on thy ſhoulder will I leane,
And when thou faiſ't (as God forbid the houre)
Muſt Edward fall, which peril heauen forefend.
War. No longer Earle of March, but Duke of Yorke:
The next degree, is Englands Royall Throne:
For King of England ſhalt thou be proclaim'd
In euery Burrough as we paſſe along,
And he that throwes not vp his cap for ioy,
Shall for the Fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward, valiant Richard Mountague:
Stay we no longer, dreaming of Renowne,
But ſound the Trumpets, and about our Taske.
Rich. Then Clifford, were thy heart as hard as Steele,
As thou haſt ſhewne it flintie by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to giue thee mine.
Ed. Then ſtrike vp Drums, God and S. George for vs

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what newes?

Mes. The Duke of Norfolke sends you word by me,
The Queene is comming with a puissant Hoast,
And craues your company, for speedy counsell.

War. Why then it sorts, braue Warriors, let's away.

Exeunt Omnes.

Flourish. Enter the King, the Queene, Clifford, Northum-berland, Yong Prince, with Drumme and Trumpetors.

Qu. Welcome my Lord, to this braue town of Yorke,
Yonders the head of that Arch-enemy,
That sought to be incompast with your Crowne.
Doth not the obiect cheere your heart, my Lord.

K. I, as the rockes cheare them that feare their wrack,
To see this sight, it irkes my very soule:
With hold reuenge (deere God) 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly haue I infring'd my Vow.

Clif. My gracious Liege, this too much lenity
And harmfull pitty must be layd aside:
To whom do Lyons cast their gentle Lookes?
Not to the Beast, that would vsurpe their Den.
Whose hand is that the Forrest Beare doth licke?
Not his that spoyles her yong before her face.
Who scapes the lurking Serpents mortall sting?
Not he that sets his foot vpon her backe.
The smallest Worme will turne, being troden on,
And Doues will peck in safegard of their Brood.
Ambitious Yorke, did leuell at thy Crowne,
Thou smiling, while he knit his angry browes.
He but a Duke, would haue his Sonne a King,
And raise his issue like a louing Sire.
Thou being a King, blest with a goodly sonne,
Did'st yeeld consent to disinherit him:
Which argued thee a most vnlouing Father.
Vnreasonable Creatures feed their young,
And though mans face be fearefull to their eyes,
Yet in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seene them euen with those wings,
Which sometime they haue vs'd with fearfull flight,
Make warre with him that climb'd vnto their nest,
Offering their owne liues in their yongs defence?
For shame, my Liege, make them your President:
Were it not pitty that this goodly Boy
Should loose his Birth-right by his Fathers fault,
And long hereafter say vnto his childe,
What my great Grandfather, and Grandsire got,
My careleſſe Father fondly gaue away.
Ah, what a shame were this? Looke on the Boy,
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successefull Fortune steele thy melting heart,
To hold thine owne, and leaue thine owne with him.

King. Full well hath Clifford plaid the Orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force:
But Clifford tell me, did'st thou neuer heare,
That things ill got, had euer bad successe.
And happy alwayes was it for that Sonne,
Whose Father for his hoording went to hell?
Ile leaue my Sonne my Vertuous deeds behinde,
And would my Father had left me no more:
For all the rest is held at such a Rate,
As brings a thousand fold more care to keepe,
Then in possession any iot of pleasure.
Ah Cosin Yorke, would thy best Friends did know,
How it doth greeue me that my head is heere.

Qu. My Lord cheere vp your spirits, our foes are nye,
And this soft courage makes your Followers faint:
You promist Knighthood to our forward sonne,
Vnsheath your sword, and dub him presently.
Edward, kneele downe.

King. Edward Plantagenet, arise a Knight,
And learne this Lesson; Draw thy Sword in right.

Prin. My gracious Father, by your Kingly leaue,
Ile draw it as Apparant to the Crowne,
And in that quarrell, vse it to the death.

Clif. Why that is spoken like a towrard Prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Royall Commanders, be in readinesse,
For with a Band of thirty thousand men,
Comes Warwicke backing of the Duke of Yorke,
And in the Townes as they do march along,
Proclaimes him King, and many fly to him,
Darraigne your battell, for they are at hand.

Clif. I would your Highnesse would depart the field,
The Queene hath best successe when you are absent.

Qu. I good my Lord, and leaue vs to our Fortune.

King. Why, that's my fortune too, therefore Ile stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prin. My Royall Father, cheere these Noble Lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Vnsheath your Sword, good Father: Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, Clarence, Norfolke, Montague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now periur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace
And set thy Diadem vpon my head?
Or bide the mortall Fortune of the field.

Qu. Go rate thy Minions, proud insulting Boy.
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Soueraigne, and thy lawfull King?

Ed. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his consent.

Cla. Since when, his Oath is broke: for as I heare,
You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,
Haue caus'd him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reason too,
Who should succeede the Father, but the Sonne.

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.

Clif. I Crooke-back, here I stand to answer thee.
Or any he, the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd yong Rutland, was it not?

Clif. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For Gods sake Lords giue signall to the fight.

War. What say'st thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you Speak?

Qu. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwicke, dare
When you and I, met at Saint Albons last,
Your leggers did better seruice than your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turne to fly, and now 'tis thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valor Clifford drone me thence.

Nor. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reuerently,
Breake off the parley, for scarse I can refraine
The execution of my big-swolne heart
Vpon that Clifford, that cruell Child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy Father, call'st thou him a Child?

Rich.

…k. I like a Daſtard, and a treacherous Coward,
…a didſt kill our tender Brother Rutland,
…Sunſet, Ile make thee curſe the deed.
…g. Haue done with words (my Lords) and heare

King, and priuiledg'd to ſpeake.
My Liege, the wound that bred this meeting here

…k. Then Executioner vnſheath thy ſword:

Exeunt omnes.

Alarum. Excurſions. Enter Warwicke.

War. Fore-ſpent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:
For ſtrokes receiu'd, and many blowes repaid,
Haue robb'd my ſtrong knit ſinewes of their ſtrength,
And ſpight of ſpight, needs muſt I reſt a-while.

Enter Edward running.

Ed. Smile gentle heauen, or ſtrike vngentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edwards Sunne is clowded.
War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence.

Cla. Our hap is loſſe, our hope but ſad diſpaire,
Our rankes are broke, and ruine followes vs.
What counſaile giue you? whether ſhall we flye?
Ed. Bootleſſe is flight, they follow vs with Wings,
And weake we are, and cannot ſhun purſuite.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah Warwicke, why haſt'ſ withdrawn thy ſelfe?
Thy Brothers blood the thirſty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the Steely point of Cliffords Launce:
And in the very pangs of death, he cryde,
Like to a diſmall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke, reuenge; Brother, reuenge my death.
So vnderneath the belly of their Steeds,
That ſtain'd their Fetlockes in his ſmoaking blood,
The Noble Gentleman gaue vp the ghoſt.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our bloods
Ile kill my Horſe, becauſe I will not flye:
Why ſtand we like ſoft-hearted women heere,
Wayling our loſſes, whiles the Foe doth Rage,
And looke vpon, as if the Tragedie
Were plaid in ieſt, by counterfetting Actors.
Heere on my knee, I vow to God aboue,
Ile neuer pawſe againe, neuer ſtand ſtill,
Till either death hath clos'd theſe eyes of mine,
Or Fortune giuen me meaſure of Reuenge.
Ed. Oh Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chaine my ſoule to thine:
And ere my knee riſe from the Earths cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou ſetter vp, and plucker downe of Kings:
Beſeeching thee (if with thy will it ſtands)
That to my Foes this body muſt be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heauen may ope,
And giue ſweet paſſage to my ſinfull ſoule.
Now Lords, take leaue vntill we meete againe,
Where ere it be, in heauen, or in earth.
Rich. Brother,
Giue me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,
Let me imbrace thee in my weary armes:
I that did neuer weepe, now melt with woe,
That Winter ſhould cut off our Spring-time ſo.
War. Away, away:
Once more ſweet Lords farwell.
Cla. Yet let vs altogether to our Troopes,
And giue them leaue to flye, that will not ſtay:
And call them Pillars that will ſtand to vs:
And if we thriue, promiſe them ſuch rewards
As Victors weare at the Olympian Games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breaſts,
For yet is hope of Life and Victory:

Foreſlow no longer, make we hence amaine. Exeunt

Excurſions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now Clifford, I haue ſingled thee alone,
Suppoſe this arme is for the Duke of Yorke,
And this for Rutland, both bound to reuenge,
Wer't thou inuiron'd with a Brazen wall.

Clif. Now Richard, I am with thee heere alone,
This is the hand that ſtabb'd thy Father Yorke,
And this the hand, that ſlew thy Brother Rutland,
And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
And cheeres theſe hands, that ſlew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like vpon thy ſelfe,
And ſo haue at thee.

They Fight, Warwicke comes, Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay Warwicke, ſingle out ſome other Chace,
For I my ſelfe will hunt this Wolfe to death. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone.

Hen. This battell fares like to the mornings Warre,
When dying clouds contend, with growing light,
What time the Shepheard blowing of his nailes,
Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
Now ſwayes it this way, like a Mighty Sea,
Forc'd by the Tide, to combat with the Winde:
Now ſwayes it that way, like the ſelfe-ſame Sea,
Forc'd to retyre by furie of the Winde.
Sometime, the Flood preuailes; and than the Winde:
Now, one the better: then, another beſt;
Both tugging to be Victors, breſt to breſt:
Yet neither Conqueror, nor Conquered.
So is the equall poiſe of this fell Warre.
Heere on this Mole-hill will I ſit me downe,
To whom God will, there be the Victorie:
For Margaret my Queene, and Clifford too
Haue chid me from the Battell: Swearing both,
They proſper beſt of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead, if Gods good will were ſo;
For what is in this world, but Greefe and Woe.
Oh God! me thinkes it were a happy life,
To be no better then a homely Swaine,
To ſit vpon a hill, as I do now,
To carue out Dialls queintly, point by point,
Thereby to ſee the Minutes how they runne:
How many makes the Houre full compleate,
How many Houres brings about the Day,
How many Dayes will finiſh vp the Yeare,
How many Yeares, a Mortall man may liue.
When this is knowne, then to deuide the Times:
So many Houres, muſt I tend my Flocke;
So many Houres, muſt I take my Reſt:
So many Houres, muſt I Contemplate:
So many Houres, muſt I Sport my ſelfe:
So many Dayes, my Ewes haue beene with yong:
So many weekes, ere the poore Fooles will Eane:
So many yeares, ere I ſhall ſheere the Fleece:
So Minutes, Houres, Dayes, Monthes, and Yeares,
Paſt ouer to the end they were created,
Would bring white haires, vnto a Quiet graue.
Ah! what a life were this? How ſweet? how louely?
Giues not the Hawthorne buſh a ſweeter ſhade
To Shepheards, looking on their ſilly Sheepe,
Then doth a rich Imbroider'd Canopie
To Kings, that feare their Subiects treacherie?
Oh yes, it doth; a thouſand fold it doth.
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,
His cold thinne drinke out of his Leather Bottle,
His wonted ſleepe, vnder a freſh trees ſhade,
All which ſecure, and ſweetly he enioyes,
Is farre beyond a Princes Delicates:
His Viands ſparkling in a Golden Cup,
His bodie couched in a curious bed,
When Care, Miſtruſt, and Treaſon waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father, at one doore: and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowes the winde that profits no body,
This man whom hand to hand I ſlew in fight,
May be poſſeſſed with ſome ſtore of Crownes,
And I that (haply) take them from him now,
May yet (ere night) yeeld both my Life and them
To ſome man elſe, as this dead man doth me.
Who's this? Oh God! It is my Fathers face,
Whom in this Conflict, I (vnwares) haue kill'd:
Oh heauy times! begetting ſuch Euents.
From London, by the King was I preſt forth,
My Father being the Earle of Warwickes man,
Came on the part of Yorke, preſt by his Maſter:
And I, who at his hands receiu'd my life,
Haue by my hands, of Life bereaued him.
Pardon me God, I knew not what I did:
And pardon Father, for I knew not thee.
My Teares ſhall wipe away theſe bloody markes:
And no more words, till they haue ſlow'd their fill.

King. O pitteous ſpectacle! O bloody Times!
Whiles Lyons Warre, and battaile for their Dennes,
Poore harmleſſe Lambes abide their enmity.
Weepe wretched man: Ile ayde thee Teare for Teare,
And let our hearts and eyes, like Ciuill Warre,
Be blinde with teares, and break ore-charg'd with griefe

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. Thou that ſo ſtoutly hath reſiſted me,
Giue me thy Gold, if thou haſt any Gold:
For I haue bought it with an hundred blowes.
But let me ſee: Is this our Foe-mans face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine onely Sonne.
Ah Boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw vp thine eye: ſee, ſee, what ſhowres ariſe,
Blowne with the windie Tempeſt of my heart.
Vpon thy wounds, that killes mine Eye, and Heart.
O pitty God, this miſerable Age!
What Stratagems? how fell? how Butcherly?
Erroneous, mutinous, and vnnaturall,
This deadly quarrell daily doth beget?
O Boy! thy Father gaue thee life too ſoone,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too ſoone.

King. Wo aboue wo: greefe, more the common greefe
O that my death would ſtay theſe ruthfull deeds:
O pitty, pitty, gentle heauen pitty:
The Red Roſe and the White are on his face,
The fatall Colours of our ſtriuing Houſes:
The one, his purple Blood right well reſembles,
The other his pale Cheekes (me thinkes) preſenteth:
Wither one Roſe, and let the other flouriſh:
If you contend, a thouſand liues muſt wither.

Son. How will my Mother, for a Fathers death
Take on with me, and ne're be ſatisfi'd?

Fa. How will my Wife, for ſlaughter of my Sonne
Shed ſeas of Teares, and ne're be ſatisfi'd?

King. How will the Country, for theſe woeful chances,

Miſ-thinke

nke the King, and not be ſatisfied?
Was euer ſonne, ſo rew'd a Fathers death?
Was euer Father ſo bemoan'd his Sonne?
Was euer King ſo griev'd for Subiects woe?
your ſorrow; Muſe, ten times ſo much.
Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill.
Theſe armes of mine ſhall be thy winding ſheet:
rt (ſweet Boy) ſhall be thy Sepulcher,
n my heart, thine Image ne're ſhall go.
ing breſt, ſhall be thy Funerall bell:
obſequious will thy Father be,
the loſſe of thee, having no more,
as was for all his Valiant Sonnes.
e thee hence, and let them fight that will,
e murthered where I ſhould not kill. Exit
Sad-hearted-men, much ouergone with Care;
as a King, more wofull then you are.

Alarums. Excurſions. Enter the Queen, the Prince, and Exeter.

Fly Father, flye: for all your Friends are fled.
Warwicke rages like a chaſed Bull:
ſor death doth hold vs in purſuite.
Mount you my Lord, towards Barwicke poſt a-maine:
land Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,
the fearfull flying Hare in ſight,
iery eyes, ſparkling for very wrath,
oody ſteele graſpt in their yrefull hands
our backes, and therefore hence amaine.
Away: for vengeance comes along with them.
ay not to expoſtulate, make ſpeed,
come after, Ile away before.
Nay take me with thee, good ſweet Exeter:
at I feare to ſtay, but loue to go ere the Queene intends. Forward, away. Exeunt

A loud alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Heere burnes my Candle out; I, heere it dies, while it laſted, gaue King Henry light.
eaſter! I feare thy ouerthrow, hen my Bodies parting with my Soule:
ue and Feare, griev'd many Friends to thee,
w I fall. Thy tough Commixtures melts,
ing Henry, ſtrength'ning miſproud Yorke hether flye the Gnats, but to the Sunne?
ho ſhines now, but Henries Enemies?
ebus, had'ſt thou neuer giuen conſent,
Phaeton ſhould checke thy fiery Steeds,
aming Carre neuer had ſcorch'd the earth.
Henry, had'ſt thou ſway'd as Kings ſhould do,
hy Father, and his Father did,
g to ground vnto the houſe of Yorke,
neuer then had ſprung like Sommer Flyes:
ten thouſand in this luckleſſe Realme,
ſi no mourning Widdowes for our death,
ou this day, had'ſt kept thy Chaire in peace.
hat doth cherriſh Weeds, but gentle ayre?
hat makes Robbers bold, but too much lenity?
ttle are Plaines, and Cureleſſe are my Wounds:
ay to flye, nor ſtrength to hold our flight:
oe is mercileſſe, and will not pitty:
their hands I haue deſerv'd no pitty.
yre hath got into my deadly Wounds,
And much effuſe of blood, doth make me faint:
Come Yorke, and Richard, Warwicke, and the reſt,
I ſtab'd your Fathers boſomes; Split my breſt.

Alarum & Retreat. Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, and Soldiers, Montague, & Clarence.

Ed. Now breath we Lords, good fortune bids vs pauſe,
And ſmooth the frownes of War, with peacefull lookes:
Some Troopes purſue the bloody-minded Queene,
That led calme Henry, though he were a King,
As doth a Saile, fill'd with a freſhing Guſt
Command an Argoſie to ſtemme the Waues.
But thinke you (Lords) that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impoſſible he ſhould eſcape:
(For though before his face I ſpeake the words)
Your Brother Richard markt him for the Graue,
And whereſoere he is, hee's ſurely dead. Clifford groues
Rich. Whoſe ſoule is that which takes her heauy leaue?
A deadly grone, like life and deaths departing.
See who it is.
Ed. And now the Battailes ended,
If Friend or Foe, let him be gently vſed.
Rich. Reuoke that doome of mercy, for 'tis Clifford,
Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch
In hewing Rutland, when his leaues put forth,
But ſet his murth'ring knife vnto the Roote,
From whence that tender ſpray did ſweetly ſpring,
I meane our Princely Father, Duke of Yorke.
War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch down the head,
Your Fathers head, which Clifford placed there:
In ſtead whereof, let this ſupply the roome,
Meaſure for meaſure, muſt be anſwered.
Ed. Bring forth that fatall Schreechowle to our houſe,
That nothing ſung but death, to vs and ours:
Now death ſhall ſtop his diſmall threatning ſound,
And his ill-boading tongue, no more ſhall ſpeake.
War. I thinke his vnderſtanding is bereft:
Speake Clifford, doſt thou know who ſpeakes to thee?
Darke cloudy death ore-ſhades his beames of life,
And he nor ſees, nor heares vs, what we ſay.
Rich. O would he did, and ſo (perhaps) he doth,
'Tis but his policy to counterfet,
Becauſe he would anoid ſuch bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gaue our Father.
Cla. If ſo thou think'ſt,
Vex him with eager Words.
Rich. Clifford, aſke mercy, and obtaine no grace.
Ed. Clifford, repent in bootleſſe penitence.
War. Clifford, deuiſe excuſes for thy faults.
Cla. While we deuiſe fell Tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou did'ſt loue Yorke, and I am ſon to Yorke.
Edw. Thou pitied'ſt Rutland, I will pitty thee.
Cla. Where's Captaine Margaret, to fence you now?
War. They mocke thee Clifford,
Sweare as thou was't wont.
Rich. What, not an Oath? Nay then the world go's hard
When Clifford cannot ſpare his Friends an oath:
I know by that he's dead, and by my Soule,
If this right hand would buy two houres life,
That I (in all deſpight) might rayle at him,
This hand ſhould chop it off: & with the iſſuing Blood
Stifle the Villaine, whoſe vnſtanched thirſt
Yorke, and yong Rutland could not ſatisfie.
War. I, but he's dead. Of with the Traitors head.
And reare it in the place your Fathers ſtands.
And now to London with Triumphant march,

There to be crowned Englands Royall King:
From whence, ſhall Warwicke cut the Sea to France,
And aske the Ladie Bona for thy Queene:
So ſhalt thou ſinow both theſe Lands together,
And having France thy Friend, thou ſhalt not dread
The ſcattred Foe, that hopes to riſe againe:
For though they cannot greatly ſting to hurt,
Yet looke to haue them buz to offend thine eares:
Firſt, will I ſee the Coronation,
And then to Britanny Ile croſſe the Sea,
To effect this marriage, ſo it pleaſe my Lord.

Ed. Euen as thou wilt ſweet Warwicke, let it bee:
For in thy ſhoulder do I builde my Seate;
And neuer will I vndertake the thing
Wherein thy counſaile and conſent is wanting:
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester,
And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
Shall do, and vndo as him pleaſeth beſt.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloſter,
For Gloſters Dukedome is too ominous.

War. Tut, that's a fooliſh obſeruation:
Richard, be Duke of Gloſter: Now to London,
To ſee theſe Honors in poſſeſſion. Exeunt

Enter Sinkler, and Humfrey, with Croſſe-bowes in their hands.

(our ſelues:

Sink. Vnder this thicke growne brake, wee'l ſhrowd
For through this Laund anon the Deere will come,
And in this couert will we make our Stand,
Culling the principall of all the Deere.

Hum. Ile ſtay aboue the hill, ſo both may ſhoot.

Sink. That cannot be, the noiſe of thy Croſſe-bow
Will ſcarre the Heard, and ſo my ſhoot is loſt:
Heere ſtand we both, and ayme we at the beſt:
And for the time ſhall not ſeeme tedious,
Ile tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this ſelfe-place, where now we meane to ſtand.

Sink. Heere comes a man, let's ſtay till he be paſt:

Enter the King with a Prayer booke.

Hen. From Scotland am I ſtolne euen of pure loue,
To greet mine owne Land with my wiſhfull ſight:
No Harry, Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
Thy place is fill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
Thy Balme waſht off, wherewith thou was Annointed:
No bending knee will call thee Cæſar now,
No humble ſuters preaſe to ſpeake for right:
No, not a man comes for redreſſe of thee:
For how can I helpe them, and not my ſelfe?

Sink. I, heere's a Deere, whoſe skin's a Keepers Fee:
This is the quondam King; Let's ſeize vpon him.

Hen. Let me embrace the ſowre Aduerſaries,
For Wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe.

Hum. Why linger we? Let vs lay hands vpon him.

Sink. Forbeare a-while, wee'l heare a little more.

Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aid:
And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwicke
Is thither gone, to craue the French Kings Siſter
To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
Poore Queene, and Sonne, your labour is but loſt:
For Warwicke is a ſubtle Orator:
And Lewis a Prince ſoone wonne with moouing words:
By this account then, Margaret may winne him,
For ſhe's a woman to be pittied much
Her ſighes will make a batt'ry in his breſt,
Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart:
The Tyger will be milde, whiles ſhe doth mourne;
And Nero will be tainted with remorſe,
To heare and ſee her plaints, her Brinish Teares.
I, but ſhee's come to begge, Warwicke to giue:
Shee on his left ſide, crauing aydе for Henry;
He on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
Shee Weepes, and ſayes, her Henry is depoſ'd:
He Smiles, and ſayes, his Edward is inſtall'd;
That ſhe (poore Wretch) for greeſe can ſpeake no more:
Whiles Warwicke tells his Title, ſmoothes the Wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty ſtrength,
And in concluſion winnes the King from her,
With promiſe of his Siſter, and what elſe,
To ſtrengthen and ſupport King Edwards place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be, and thou (poore ſoule)
Art then forſaken, as thou went'ſt forlorne.

Hum. Say, what art thou talk'ſt of Kings & Queenes?

King. More then I ſeeme, and leſſe then I was born to:
A man at leaſt, for leſſe I ſhould not be:
And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?

Hum. I, but thou talk'ſt, as if thou wer't a King.

King. Why ſo I am (in Minde) and that's enough.

Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?

King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:
Not deck'd with Diamonds, and Indian ſtones:
Not to be ſeene: my Crowne, is call'd Content,
A Crowne it is, that ſildome Kings enioy.

Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,
Your Crowne Content, and you, muſt be contented
To go along with vs. For (as we thinke)
You are the king King Edward hath depoſ'd:
And we his ſubiects, ſworne in all Allegeance,
Will apprehend you, as his Enemie.

King. But did you neuer ſweare, and breake an Oath.

Hum. No, neuer ſuch an Oath, nor will not now.

King. Where did you dwell when I was K. of England?

Hum. Heere in this Country, where we now remaine.

King. I was annointed King at nine months old,
My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:
And you were ſworne true Subiects vnto me:
And tell me then, haue you not broke your Oathes?

Sin. No, for we were Subiects, but while you were king

King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?
Ah ſimple men, you know not what you ſweare:
Looke, as I blow this Feather from my Face,
And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,
Obeying with my winde when I do blow,
And yeelding to another, when it blowes,
Commanded alwayes by the greater guſt:
Such is the lightneſſe of you, common men.
But do not breake your Oathes, for of that ſinne,
My milde intreatie ſhall not make you guiltie.
Go where you will, the king ſhall be commanded,
And be you kings, command, and Ile obey.

Sinkler. We are true Subiects to the king,
King Edward.

King. So would you be againe to Henrie,
If he were ſeated as king Edward is.

Sinkler. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,
To go with vs vnto the Officers.

King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,
And what God will, that let your King performe,
And what he will, I humbly yeeld vnto. Exeunt

Enter K. Edward, Gloſter, Clarence, Lady Grey.

King. Brother of Gloſter, at S. Albons field

This

This Ladyes Husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slaine,
His Land then seiz'd on by the Conqueror,
Her suit is now, to repossesse those Lands,
Which wee in Iustice cannot well deny,
Because in Quarrell of the House of Yorke,
The worthy Gentleman did lose his Life.

Rich. Your Highnesse shall doe well to graunt her suit
It were dishonor to deny it her.

King. It were no lesse, but yet Ile make a pawse.

Rich. Yea, is it so:
I see the Lady hath a thing to graune,
Before the King will graunt her humble suit.

Clarence. Hee knowes the Game, how true hee keepes the winde?

Rich. Silence.

King. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our minde.

Wid. Right gracious Lord, I cannot brooke delay:
May it please your Highnesse to resolue me now,
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfie me.

Rich. I Widow? then Ile warrant you all your Lands,
And if what pleases him, shall pleasure you:
Fight closer, or good faith you'le catch a Blow.

Clarence. I feare her not, vnlesse she chance to fall.

Rich. God forbid that, for hee'le take vantages.

King. How many Children hast thou, Widow? tell me.

Clarence. I thinke he meanes to begge a Child of her.

Rich. Nay then whip me: hee'le rather giue her two.

Wid. Three, my most gracious Lord.

Rich. You shall haue foure, if you'le be rul'd by him.

King. 'Twere pittie they should lose their Fathers Lands.

Wid. Be pittifull, dread Lord, and graunt it then.

King. Lords giue vs leaue, Ile trye this Widowes wit.

Rich. I, good leaue haue you, for you will haue leaue
Till Youth take leaue, and leaue you to the Crutch.

King. Now tell me, Madame, doe you loue your Children?

Wid. I, full as dearely as I loue my selfe.

King. And would you not doe much to doe them good?

Wid. To doe them good, I would sustayne some harme.

King. Then get your Husbands Lands, to doe them good.

Wid. Therefore I came vnto your Maiestie.

King. Ile tell you how these Lands are to be got.

Wid. So shall you bind me to your Highnesse seruice.

King. What seruice wilt thou doe me, if I giue them?

Wid. What you command, that rests in me to doe.

King. But you will take exceptions to my Boone.

Wid. No, gracious Lord, except I cannot doe it.

King. I, but thou canst doe what I meane to aske.

Wid. Why then I will doe what your Grace commands.

Rich. Hee plyes her hard, and much Raine weares the Marble.

Clar. As red as fire? nay then, her Wax must melt.

Wid. Why stoppes my Lord? shall I not heare my Taske?

King. An easie Taske, 'tis but to loue a King.

Wid. That's soone perform'd, because I am a Subiect.

King. Why then, thy Husbands Lands I freely giue thee.

Wid. I take my leaue with many thousand thankes.

Rich. The Match is made, shee seales it with a Curtsie.

King. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of loue I meane.

Wid. The fruits of Loue, I meane, my loving Liege.

King. I, but I feare me in another sence.
What Loue, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

Wid. My loue till death, my humble thanks, my prayers,
That loue which Vertue begges, and Vertue graunts.

King. No, by my troth, I did not meane such loue.

Wid. Why then you meane not, as I thought you did.

King. But now you partly may perceiue my minde.

Wid. My minde will never graunt what I perceiue
Your Highnesse aymes at, if I ayme aright.

King. To tell thee plaine, I ayme to lye with thee.

Wid. To tell you plaine, I had rather lye in Prison.

King. Why then thou shalt not haue thy Husbands Lands.

Wid. Why then mine Honestie shall be my Dower,
For by that losse, I will not purchase them.

King. Therein thou wrong'st thy Children mightily.

Wid. Herein your Highnesse wrongs both them & me:
But mightie Lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadnesse of my suit:
Please you dismisse me, either with I, or no.

King. I, if thou wilt say I to my request:
No, if thou dost say No to my demand.

Wid. Then No, my Lord: my suit is at an end.

Rich. The Widow likes him not, shee knits her Browes.

Clarence. Hee is the bluntest Wooer in Christendome.

King. Her Lookes doth argue her replete with Modestly,
Her Words doth shew her Wit incomparable,
All her perfections challenge Soueraigntie,
One way, or other, shee is for a King,
And shee shall be my Loue, or else my Queene.
Say, that King Edward take thee for his Queene?

Wid. 'Tis better said then done, my gracious Lord:
I am a subiect fit to iest withall,
But farre vnfit to bee a Soueraigne.

King. Sweet Widow, by my State I sweare to thee,
I speake no more then what my Soule intends,
And that is, to enioy thee for my Loue.

Wid. And that is more then I will yeeld vnto:
I know, I am too meane to be your Queene,
And yet too good to be your Concubine.

King. You cauill, Widow, I did meane my Queene.

Wid. 'Twill grieue your Grace, my Sonnes should call you Father.

King. No more, then when my Daughters
Call thee Mother.
Thou art a Widow, and thou hast some Children,
And by Gods Mother, I being but a Batchelor,
Haue other-some. Why, 'tis a happy thing,
To be the Father vnto many Sonnes:
Answer no more, for thou shalt be my Queene.

Rich. The Ghostly Father now hath done his Shrift.

Clarence. When hee was made a Shriver, 'twas for shift.

King. Brothers, you muse what Chat wee two haue had.

Rich. The Widow likes it not, for shee lookes very sad.

King. You'ld thinke it strange, if I should marrie her.

Clarence. To who, my Lord?

King. Why Clarence, to my selfe.

Rich. That

Rich. That would be ten̄e dayes wonder at the leaſt.
Clarence. That's a day longer then a Wonder laſts.
Rich. By ſo much is the Wonder in extremes.
King. Well,ieaſt on Brothers: I can tell you both,
Her ſuit is graunted for her Husbands Lands.

Enter a Noble man.

Nob. My gracious Lord, Henry your Foe is taken,
And brought your Priſoner to your Palace Gate.
King. See that he be conuey'd vnto the Tower:
And goe wee Brothers to the man that tooke him,
To queſtion of his apprehenſion.
Widow goe you along: Lords vſe her honourable.
Exeunt.

Manet Richard.

Rich. I, Edward will vſe Women honourably:
Would he were waſted,Marrow,Bones,and all,
That from his Loynes no hopefull Branch may ſpring,
To croſſe me from the Golden time I looke for:
And yet,betweene my Soules deſire,and me,
The luſtfull Edwards Title buryed,
Is Clarence, Henry,and his Sonne young Edward,
And all the vnlook'd-for Iſſue of their Bodies,
To take their Roomes,ere I can place my ſelfe:
A cold premeditation for my purpoſe.
Why then I doe but dreame on Soueraignetie,
Like one that ſtands vpon a Promontorie,
And ſpyes a farre-off ſhore,where hee would tread,
Wiſhing his foot were equall with his eye,
And chides the Sea,that ſunders him from thence,
Saying he'le lade it dry,to haue his way:
So doe I wiſh the Crowne,being ſo farre off,
And ſo I chide the meanes that keepes me from it,
And ſo (I ſay) Ile cut the Cauſes off,
Flattering me with impoſſibilities:
My Eyes too quicke,my Heart o're-weenes too much,
Vnleſſe my Hand and Strength could equall them.
Well,ſay there is no Kingdome then for Richard:
What other Pleaſure can the World affoord?
Ile make my Heauen in a Ladies Lappe,
And decke my Body in gay Ornaments,
And 'witch ſweet Ladies with my Words and Lookes.
Oh miſerable Thought! and more vnlikely,
Then to accompliſh twentie Golden Crownes.
Why Loue forſwore me in my Mothers Wombe:
And for I ſhould not deale in her ſoft Lawes,
Shee did corrupt frayle Nature with ſome Bribe,
To ſhrinke mine Arme vp like a wither'd Shrub,
To make an enuious Mountaine on my Back,
Where ſits Deformitie to mocke my Body;
To ſhape my Legges of an vnequall ſize,
To diſ-proportion me in euery part:
Like to a Chaos, or an vn-lick'd Beare-whelpe,
That carryes no impreſſion like the Damme.
And am I then a man to be belou'd?
Oh monſtrous fault,to harbour ſuch a thought.
Then ſince this Earth affoords no Ioy to me,
But to command,to check,to o're-beare ſuch,
As are of better Perſon then my ſelfe:
Ile make my Heauen,to dreame vpon the Crowne,
And whiles I liue,t'account this World but Hell,
Vntill my mis-ſhap'd Trunke, that beares this Head,
Be round impaled with a glorious Crowne.
And yet I know not how to get the Crowne,
For many Liues ſtand betweene me and home:
And I,like one loſt in a Thornie Wood,
That rents the Thornes,and is rent with the Thornes,
Seeking a way,and ſtraying from the way,
Not knowing how to finde the open Ayre,
But toyling deſperately to finde it out,
Torment my ſelfe,to catch the Engliſh Crowne:
And from that torment I will free my ſelfe,
Or bew my way out with a bloody Axe.
Why I can ſmile,and murther whiles I ſmile,
And cry,Content,to that which grieues my Heart,
And wet my Cheekes with artificiall Teares,
And frame my Face to all occaſions.
Ile drowne more Saylers then the Mermaid ſhall,
Ile ſlay more gazers then the Baſiliske,
Ile play the Orator as well as Neſtor,
Deceiue more ſlyly then Vliſſes could,
And like a Synon,take another Troy.
I can adde Colours to the Camelion,
Change ſhapes with Proteus, for aduantages,
And ſet the murtherous Machiuell to Schoole.
Can I doe this,and cannot get a Crowne?
Tut,were it farther off,Ile plucke it downe. Exit.

Flouriſh.

Enter Lewis the French King, his Siſter Bona, his Admirall, call'd Bourbon: Prince Edward, Queene Margaret, and the Earle of Oxford. Lewis ſits, and riſeth vp againe.

Lewis. Faire Queene of England,worthy Margaret,
Sit downe with vs: it ill befits thy State,
And Birth, that thou ſhould'ſt ſtand,while Lewis doth ſit.
Marg. No,mighties King of France: now Margaret
Muſt ſtrike her ſayle,and learne a while to ſerue,
Where Kings command. I was (I muſt confeſſe)
Great Albions Queene,in formes Golden dayes:
But now miſchance hath trod my Title downe,
And with diſ-honor layd me on the ground,
Where I muſt take like Seate vnto my fortune,
And to my humble Seat conforme my ſelfe.
Lewis. Why ſay, faire Queene, whence ſpringe this deepe deſpaire?
Marg. From ſuch a cauſe, as fills mine eyes with teares,
And ſtops my tongue,while heart is drown'd in cares.
Lewis. What ere it be,be thou ſtill like thy ſelfe,
And ſit thee by our ſide. Seats her by him.
Yeeld not thy necke to Fortunes yoake,
But let thy dauntleſſe minde ſtill ride in triumph,
Ouer all miſchance.
Be plaine,Queene Margaret,and tell thy griefe,
It ſhall be eas'd,if France can yeeld reliefe.
Marg. Thoſe gracious words
Reuiue my drooping thoughts,
And giue my tongue-ty'd ſorrowes leaue to ſpeake.
Now therefore be it knowne to Noble Lewis,
That Henry,ſole poſſeſſor of my Loue,
Is,of a King,become a baniſht man,
And forc'd to liue in Scotland a Forlorne;
While proud ambitious Edward,Duke of Yorke,
Vſurpes the Regall Title,and the Seate
Of Englands true anoynted lawfull King.
This is the cauſe that I,poore Margaret,
With this my Sonne,Prince Edward, Henries Heire,
Am come to craue thy iuſt and loue-full aide:
And if thou faile vs,all our hope is done,
Scotland hath will to helpe,but cannot helpe:

ple,and our Peeres,are both mis-led,
ſure ſeiz'd,our Souldiors put to flight,
hou ſeeſt Jour ſelues in heauie plight.
Renowned Queene,
ience calme the Storme,
e bethinke a meanes to breake it off.
The more wee ſtay, the ſtronger growes our

The more I ſtay, the more Ile ſuccour thee.
O,but impatience waiteth on true ſorrow.
where comes the breeder of my ſorrow.

Enter Warwicke.

What's hee approacheth boldly to our pre-

Our Earle of Warwicke, Edwards greateſt

Welcome braue Warwicke, what bringa thee
? Hee diſcends. Shee ariſeth.
I now begins a ſecond Storme to riſe,
hee that moues both Winde and Tyde.
From worthy Edward,King of Albion, and Soueraigne,and thy vowed Friend, Kindneſſe, and vnfayned Loue)
be greetings to thy Royall Perſon, to craue a League of Amitie:
,to confirme that Amitie
ptiall Knot,if thou vouchſafe to graunt ious Lady Bona,thy faire Siſter, nds King,in lawfull Marriage.
If that goe forward,Henries hope is done.
And gracious Madame, Speaking to Bona.
gs behalfe,
manded,with your leaue and fauor,
o kiſſe your Hand, and with my Tongue passion of my Soueraignes Heart;
me,late entring at his heedfull Eares,
'd thy Beauties Image,and thy Vertue.
King Lewis,and Lady Bona,heare me ſpeake, u anſwer Warwicke. His demand
ſe from Edwards well-meant honeſt Loue, Decrie,bred by Neceſſitie:
an Tyrants ſafely gouerne home,
broad they purchaſe great allyance?
him Tyrant,this reaſon may ſuffice,
y liueth ſtill: but were hee dead,
Prince Edward ſtands,King Henries Sonne.
erefore Lewis,that by this League and Mariage
w not on thy Danger,and Diſ-honor:
gh Vſurpers ſway the rule a while,
ſts are iuſt,and Time ſuppreſſeth Wrongs.
Iniurious Margaret.
And why not Queene?
Becauſe thy Father Henry did vſurpe,
no more art Prince,then ſhee is Queene.
Then Warwicke diſanulls great Iohn of Gaunt, id ſubdue the greateſt part of Spaine;
Iohn of Gaunt,Henry the Fourth,
Viſdome was a Mirror to the wiſeſt:
that wiſe Prince,Henry the Fift,
his Proweſſe conquered all France:
ſe,our Henry lineally deſcends.
Oxford,how haps it in this ſmooth diſcourſe,
not,how Henry the Sixt hath loſt which Henry the Fift had gotten:
Me thinkes theſe Peeres of France ſhould ſmile at that.
But for the reſt: you tell a Pedigree
Of threeſcore and two yeeres,a ſilly time
To make preſcription for a Kingdomes worth.
Oxf. Why Warwicke,canſt thou ſpeak againſt thy Liege
Whom thou obey'dſt thirtie and ſix yeeres,
And not bewray thy Treaſon with a Bluſh?
Warw. Can Oxford,that did euer fence the right,
Now buckler Falſehood with a Pedigree?
For ſhame leaue Henry,and call Edward King.
Oxf. Call him my King,by whoſe iniurious doome
My elder Brother,the Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death? and more then ſo,my Father,
Euen in the downe-fall of his mellow'd yeeres,
When Nature brought him to the doore of Death?
No Warwicke,no: while Life vpholds this Arme,
This Arme vpholds the Houſe of Lancaſter.
Warw. And I the Houſe of Yorke.
Lewis. Queene Margaret,Prince Edward,and Oxford,
Vouchſafe at our requeſt,to ſtand aſide,
While I vſe further conference with Warwicke.
They ſtand aloofe.
Marg. Heauens graunt, that Warwickes wordes be witch him not.
Lew. Now Warwicke,tell me euen vpon thy conſcience
Is Edward your true King? for I were loth
To linke with him,that were not lawfull choſen.
Warw. Thereon I pawne my Credit, and mine Ho nor.
Lewis. But is hee gracious in the Peoples eye?
Warw. The more,that Henry was vnfortunate.
Lewis. Then further: all diſſembling ſet aſide,
Tell me for truth,the meaſure of his Loue
Vnto our Sifter Bona.
War. Such it ſeemes,
As may beſeeme a Monarch like himſelfe.
My ſelfe haue often heard him ſay,and ſweare,
That this his Loue was an eternall Plant,
Whereof the Root was fixt in Vertues ground,
The Leaues and Fruit maintain'd with Beauties Sunne,
Exempt from Enuy, but not from Diſdaine,
Vnleſſe the Lady Bona quit his paine.
Lewis. Now Sifter,let vs heare your firme reſolue.
Bona. Your graunt,or your denyall,ſhall be mine.
Yet I confeſſe,that often ere this day, Speaks to Wa
When I haue heard your Kings deſert recounted,
Mine eare hath tempted iudgement to deſire.
Lewis. Then Warwicke, thus:
Our Sifter ſhall be Edwards.
And now forthwith ſhall Articles be drawne,
Touching the Ioynture that your King muſt make,
Which with her Dowrie ſhall be counter-poys'd:
Draw neere,Queene Margaret,and be a witneſſe,
That Bona ſhall be Wife to the Engliſh King.
Pr. Edw. To Edward, but not to the Engliſh King
Marg. Deceitfull Warwicke,it was thy deuice,
By this alliance to make void my ſuit:
Before thy comming,Lewis was Henries friend.
Lewis. And ſtill is friend to him,and Margaret.
But if your Title to the Crowne be weake,
As may appeare by Edwards good ſucceſſe:
Then 'tis but reaſon,that I be releas'd
From giuing ayde,which late I promiſed.
Yet ſhall you haue all kindneſſe at my hand,
That your Eſtate requires,and mine can yeeld.
Warw. Henry now liues in Scotland,at his eaſe;

When

Where hauing nothing, nothing can he loſe.
And as for you your ſelfe (our quondam Queene)
You haue a Father able to maintaine you,
And better 'twere, you troubled him, then France.
Mar. Peace impudent, and ſhameleſſe Warwicke,
Proud ſetter vp, and puller downe of Kings,
I will not hence, till with my Talke and Teares
(Both full of Truth) I make King Lewis behold
Thy ſlye conueyance, and thy Lords falſe loue, Poſt blowing a horne Within.
For both of you are Birds of ſelfe-ſame Feather.
Lewis. Warwicke, this is ſome poſte to vs, or thee.
Enter the Poſte.
Poſt. My Lord Ambaſſador,
Theſe Letters are for you. Speakes to Warwick.
Sent from your Brother Marqueſſe Montague.
Theſe from our King, vnto your Maieſty. To Lewis.
And Madam, theſe for you: To Margaret
From whom, I know not.
They all reade their Letters.
Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene and Miſtris Smiles at her newes, while Warwicke frownes at his.
Prince Ed. Nay marke how Lewis ſtampes as he were nettled. I hope, all's for the beſt.
Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene.
Mar. Mine ſuch, as fill my heart with vnhop'd ioyes.
War. Mine full of ſorrow, and hearts diſcontent.
Lew. What? has your King married the Lady Grey?
And now to ſooth your Forgery, and his,
Sends me a Paper to perſwade me Patience?
Is this th'Alliance that he ſeekes with France?
Dare he preſume to ſcorne vs in this manner?
Mar. I told your Maieſty as much before:
This proueth Edwards Loue, and Warwickes honeſty.
War. King Lewis, I heere proteſt in ſight of heauen,
And by the hope I haue of heauenly bliſſe,
That I am cleere from this miſdeed of Edwards;
No more my King, for he diſhonors me,
But moſt himſelfe, if he could ſee his ſhame.
Did I forget, that by the Houſe of Yorke
My Father came vntimely to his death?
Did I let paſſe th'abuſe done to my Neece?
Did I impale him with the Regall Crowne?
Did I put Henry from his Native Right?
And am I guerdon'd at the laſt, with Shame?
Shame on himſelfe, for my Deſert is Honor.
And to repaire my Honor loſt for him,
I heere renounce him, and returne to Henry.
My Noble Queene, let former grudges paſſe,
And henceforth, I am thy true Seruitour:
I will reuenge his wrong to Lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former ſtate.
Mar. Warwicke,
Theſe words haue turn'd my Hate, to Loue,
And I forgiue, and quite forget old faults,
And ioy that thou becom'ſt King Henries Friend.
War. So much his Friend, I, his vnfained Friend,
That if King Lewis vouchſafe to furniſh vs
With ſome few Bands of choſen Soldiours,
Ile vndertake to Land them on our Coaſt,
And force the Tyrant from his ſeat by Warre.
'Tis not his new-made Bride ſhall ſuccour him.
And as for Clarence, as my Letters tell me,
Hee's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton Luſt, then Honor,
Or then for ſtrength and ſafety of our Country.
Bona. Deere Brother, how ſhall Bona be reueng'd,
But by thy helpe to this diſtreſſed Queene?
Mar. Renowned Prince, how ſhall Poore Henry liue,
Vnleſſe thou reſcue him from foule diſpaire?
Bona. My quarrel, and this Engliſh Queenes, are one.
War. And mine faire Lady Bona, ioynes with yours.
Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margarets.
Therefore, at laſt, I firmely am reſolu'd
You ſhall haue ayde.
Mar. Let me giue humble thankes for all, at once.
Lew. Then Englands Meſſenger, returne in Poſte,
And tell falſe Edward, thy ſuppoſed King,
That Lewis of France, is ſending ouer Maskers
To reuell it with him, and his new Bride.
Thou ſeeſt what's paſt, go feare thy King withall.
Bona. Tell him, in hope he'l proue a widower ſhortly
I weare the Willow Garland for his ſake.
Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are layde aſide,
And I am ready to put Armor on.
War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile vn-Crowne him, ere't be long.
There's thy reward, be gone. Exit Poſt.
Lew. But Warwicke,
Thou and Oxford, with fiue thouſand men
Shall croſſe the Seas, and bid falſe Edward battaile:
And as occaſion ſerues, this Noble Queen
And Prince, ſhall follow with a freſh Supply.
Yet ere thou go, but anſwer me one doubt.
What Pledge haue we of thy firme Loyalty?
War. This ſhall aſſure my conſtant Loyalty,
That if our Queene, and this young Prince agree,
Ile ioyne mine eldeſt daughter, and my Ioy,
To him forthwith, in holy Wedlocke bands.
Mar. Yes, I agree, and thanke you for your Motion.
Sonne Edward, ſhe is Faire and Vertuous,
Therefore delay not, giue thy hand to Warwicke,
And with thy hand, thy faith irreuocable,
That onely Warwickes daughter ſhall be thine.
Prin. Ed. Yes, I accept her, for ſhe well deſerues it,
And heere to pledge my Vow, I giue my hand.
He giues his hand to War.
Lew. Why ſtay we now? Theſe ſoldiers ſhalbe leuied,
And thou Lord Bourbon, our High Admirall
Shall waft them ouer with our Royall Fleete.
I long till Edward fall by Warres miſchance,
For mocking Marriage with a Dame of France.
Exeunt. Manet Warwicke.
War. I came from Edward as Ambaſſador,
But I returne his ſworne and mortall Foe:
Matter of Marriage was the charge he gaue me,
But dreadfull Warre ſhall anſwer his demand.
Had he none elſe to make a ſtale but me?
Then none but I, ſhall turne his Ieſt to Sorrow.
I was the Cheefe that rais'd him to the Crowne,
And I'le be Cheefe to bring him downe againe:
Not that I pitty Henries miſery.
But ſeeke Reuenge on Edwards mockery. Exit.

Enter Richard, Clarence, Somerſet, and Mountague.

Rich. Now tell me Brother Clarence, what think you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our Brother made a worthy choice?
Cla. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France.
How

ſtay till Warwicke made returne?
ords, forbeare this talke: heere comes the minde to tell him plainly what I thinke.

Brother of Clarence,
our Choyce,
penſiue, as halfe malecontent?
s well as Lewis of France,
f Warwicke,
weake of courage, and in iudgement,
ake no offence at our abuſe.
oſe they take offence without a cauſe
Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Warwicke, and muſt haue my will.
ſhall haue your will, becauſe our King:
rriage ſeldome proueth well.
Brother Richard, are you offended too?
I no:
hat I ſhould wiſh them ſeuer'd,
ath ioyn'd together:
ictie, to ſunder them,
well together.
ing your skornes, and your miſlike aſide,

come my Wife, and Englands Queene?
Somerſet, and Montague,
what you thinke.
hen this is mine opinion:
wis become your Enemie,
him about the Marriage Bona.
Warwicke, doing what you gaue in charge,
nored by this new Marriage.
t, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd, tion as I can deuiſe?
to haue ioyn'd with France in ſuch alliance,
haue ſtrength'ned this our Commonwealth
he ſtormes, then any home-bred Marriage.
by, knowes not Montague, that of it ſelfe,
, if true within it ſelfe?
ut the ſafer, when 'tis back'd with France.
better vſing France, then truſting France:

is one ſpeech, Lord Haſtings well deſerues deire of the Lord Hungerford.
hat of that? it was my will, and graunt,
nce, my Will ſhall ſtand for Law.
me thinks, your Grace hath not done well, deire and Daughter of Lord Scales
ther of your louing Bride;
ould haue fitted me, or Clarence:
ide you burie Brotherhood.
ſe you would not haue beſtow'd the Heire
Montall on your new Wiues Sonne, r Brothers to goe ſpeede elſewhere.
poore Clarence: Is it for a Wife malecontent? I will prouide thee.

Clarence. In chuſing for your ſelfe,
You ſhew'd your iudgement:
Which being ſhallow, you ſhall giue me leaue
To play the Broker in mine owne behalfe:
And to that end, I ſhortly minde to leaue you.
King. Leaue me, or tarry, Edward will be King,
And not be ty'd vnto his Brothers will.
Lady Grey. My Lords, before it pleas'd his Maieſtie
To rayſe my State to Title of a Queene,
Doe me but right, and you muſt all confeſſe,
That I was not ignoble of Deſcent,
And meaner then my ſelfe haue had like fortune
But as this Title honors me and mine,
So your diſlikes, to whom I would be pleaſing,
Doth cloud my ioyes with danger, and with ſorrow.
King My Loue, forbeare to fawne vpon their frownes
What danger, or what ſorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy conſtant friend,
And their true Soueraigne, whom they muſt obey?
Nay, whom they ſhall obey, and loue thee too,
Vnleſſe they ſeeke for hatred at my hands:
Which if they doe, yet will I keepe thee ſafe,
And they ſhall feele the vengeance of my wrath.
Rich. I heare, yet ſay not much, but thinke the more.

Enter a Poſte.

King. Now Meſſenger, what Letters, or what Newes from France?
Poſt. My Soueraigne Liege, no Letters, & few words,
But ſuch, as I (without your ſpeciall pardon)
Dare not relate.
King. Goe too, wee pardon thee:
Therefore, in briefe, tell me their words,
As neere as thou canſt gueſſe them.
What anſwer makes King Lewis vnto our Letters?
Poſt. At my depart, theſe were his very words:
Goe tell falſe Edward, the ſuppoſed King,
That Lewis of France is ſending ouer Maskers,
To reuell it with him, and his new Bride.
King. Is Lewis ſo braue? belike he thinkes me Henry.
But what ſaid Lady Bona to my Marriage?
Poſt. Theſe were her words, vttered with mild diſdaine
Tell him, in hope he'le proue a Widower ſhortly,
Ile weare the Willow Garland for his ſake.
King. I blame not her; ſhe could ſay little leſſe:
She had the wrong. But what ſaid Henries Queene?
For I haue heard, that ſhe was there in place.
Poſt. Tell him (quoth ſhe)
My mourning Weedes are done,
And I am readie to put Armour on.
King. Belike ſhe minds to play the Amazon.
But what ſaid Warwicke to theſe iniuries?
Poſt. He, more incens'd againſt your Maieſtie,
Then all the reſt, diſcharg'd me with theſe words:
Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile vncrowne him, ere't be long.
King. Ha? durſt the Traytor breath out ſo proud words?
Well, I will arme me, being thus fore-warn'd:
They ſhall haue Warres, and pay for their preſumption.
But ſay, is Warwicke friends with Margaret?
Poſt. I, gracious Soueraigne,
They are ſo link'd in friendſhip,
That yong Prince Edward marryes Warwicks Daughter.
Clarence. Belike, the elder;
Clarence will haue the younger.

Now

Now Brother King farewell, and ſit you faſt,
For I will hence to Warwicke other Daughter,
That though I want a Kingdome, yet in Marriage
I may not proue inferior to your ſelfe.
You that loue me, and Warwicke, follow me.

Exit Clarence, and Somerſet followes.

Rich. Not I:
My thoughts ayme at a further matter:
I ſtay not for the loue of Edward, but the Crowne.

King. Clarence and Somerſet both gone to Warwicke?
Yet am I arm'd againſt the worſt can happen:
And haſte is needfull in this deſp'rate caſe.
Pembrooke and Stafford, you in our behalfe
Goe leuie men, and make prepare for Warre;
They are alreadie, or quickly will be landed:
My ſelfe in perſon will ſtraight follow you.

Exeunt Pembrooke and Stafford.

But ere I goe, Haſtings and Mountague
Reſolue my doubt: you twaine, of all the reſt,
Are neere to Warwicke, by bloud, and by allyance:
Tell me, if you loue Warwicke more then me;
If it be ſo, then both depart to him:
I rather wiſh you foes, then hollow friends.
But if you minde to hold your true obedience,
Giue me aſſurance with ſome friendly Vow,
That I may neuer haue you in ſuſpect.

Mount. So God helpe Mountague, as hee proues true.

Haſt. And Haſtings, as hee ſauours Edwards cauſe.

King. Now, Brother Richard, will you ſtand by vs?

Rich. I, in deſpight of all that ſhall withſtand you.

King. Why ſo: then am I ſure of Victorie.
Now therefore let vs hence, and loſe no howre,
Till wee meet Warwicke, with his forreine powre.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke and Oxford in England, with French Souldiers.

Warw. Truſt me, my Lord, all hitherto goes well,
The common people by numbers ſwarme to vs.

Enter Clarence and Somerſet.

But ſee where Somerſet and Clarence comes:
Speake ſuddenly, my Lords, are wee all friends?

Clar. Feare not that, my Lord.

Warw. Then gentle Clarence, welcome vnto Warwicke.
And welcome Somerſet: I hold it cowardize,
To reſt miſtruſtfull, where a Noble Heart
Hath pawn'd an open Hand, in ſigne of Loue;
Elſe might I thinke, that Clarence, Edwards Brother,
Were but a fained friend to our proceedings:
But welcome ſweet Clarence, my Daughter ſhall be thine.
And now, what reſts? but in Nights Couerture,
Thy Brother being carelеſſely encamp'd,
His Souldiors lurking in the Towne about,
And but attended by a ſimple Guard,
Wee may ſurprize and take him at our pleaſure,
Our Scouts haue found the aduenture very eaſie:
That as Vyſſes, and ſtout Diomede,
With ſleight and manhood ſtole to Rheſus Tents,
And brought from thence the Thracian fatall Steeds;
So wee, well couer'd with the Nights black Mantle,
At vnawares may beat downe Edwards Guard,
And ſeize himſelfe: I ſay not, ſlaughter him,
For I intend but onely to ſurprize him,
You that will follow me to this attempt
Applaud the Name of Henry, with your Leader.

They all cry, Henry.

Why then, let's on our way in ſilent ſort,
For Warwicke and his friends, God and Saint George.

Exeunt.

Enter three Watchmen to guard the King's Tent.

1. Watch. Come on my Maſters, each man take his ſtan
The King by this, is ſet him downe to ſleepe.
2. Watch. What, will he not to Bed?
1. Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a ſolemne Vo
Neuer to lye and take his naturall Reſt,
Till Warwicke, or himſelfe, be quite ſuppreſt.
3. Watch. To morrow then belike ſhall be the day,
If Warwicke be ſo neere as men report.
3. Watch. But ſay, I pray, what Noble man is that,
That with the King here reſteth in his Tent?
1. Watch. 'Tis the Lord Haſtings, the Kings chiefeſt friend.
3. Watch. O, is it ſo? but why commands the King,
That his chiefe followers lodge in Townes about him,
While he himſelfe keepes in the cold field?
2. Watch. 'Tis the more honour, becauſe more dangerous.
3. Watch. I, but giue me worſhip, and quietneſſe,
I like it better then a dangerous honor.
If Warwicke knew in what eſtate he ſtands,
'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.
1. Watch. Vnleſſe our Halberds did ſhut vp his paſſage.
2. Watch. I: wherefore elſe guard we his Royall Tent,
But to defend his Perſon from Night-foes?

Enter Warwicke, Clarence, Oxford, Somerſet, and French Souldiers, ſilent all.

Warw. This is his Tent, and ſee where ſtand his Guard:
Courage my Maſters: Honor now, or neuer:
But follow me, and Edward ſhall be ours.
1. Watch. Who goes there?
2. Watch. Stay, or thou dyeſt.

Warwicke and the reſt cry all, Warwicke, Warwicke, and ſet vpon the Guard, who flye, crying, Arme, Arme. Warwicke and the reſt following them.

The Drummer playing, and Trumpet ſounding. Enter Warwicke, Somerſet, and the reſt, bringing the King out in his Gowne, ſitting in a Chaire: Richard and Haſtings flyes ouer the Stage.

Som. What are they that flye there?

Warw. Richard and Haſtings: let them goe, heere is the Duke.

K. Edw. The Duke?
Why Warwicke, when wee parted,
Thou call'dſt me King.

Warw. I, but the caſe is alter'd.
When you diſgrac'd me in my Embaſſade,
Then I degraded you from being King,
And come now to create you Duke of Yorke.
Alas, how ſhould you gouerne any Kingdome,
That know not how to vſe Embaſſadors,
Nor how to be contented with one Wife,
Nor how to vſe your Brothers Brotherly,
Nor how to ſtudie for the Peoples Welfare,
Nor how to ſhrowd your ſelfe from Enemies?

K. Edw. Yo

K. Edw. Yea, Brother of Clarence, re thou here too?
lay then I see, that Edward needs must downe.
et Warwicke, in despight of all mischance,
f those thy selfe, and all thy Complices,
dward will always beare himselfe as King:
hough Fortunes mallice overthrow my State,
y minde exceeden the compasse of her Wheele.
Warw. Then for his minde, be Edward England's King.

Takes off his Crowne.

ut Henry now shall weare the English Crowne,
nd be true King indeede: thou but the shadow.
y Lord of Somerset, at my request,
e that forthwith Duke Edward be conuey'd nto my Brother Arch-Bishop of Yorke:
When I have fought with Pembroke, and his fellowes,
e follow you, and tell what answer
ewes and the Lady Bona send to him.
low for a-while farewell good Duke of Yorke.

They leade him out forcibly.

K. Ed. What Fates impose, that men must needs abide s boots not to resist both winde and tide. Exeunt
Oxf. What now remaines my Lords for vs to do, ut march to London with our Soldiers?
War. I, that's the first thing that we have to do,
o free King Henry from imprisonment,
nd see him seated in the Regall Throne. exit.

Enter Rivers, and Lady Grey.

Riu. Madam, what makes you in this sodain change?
Grey. Why Brother Rivers, are you yet to learne hat late misfortune is befalne King Edward?
Riu. What losse of some pitcht battell gainst Warwicke?
Grey. No, but the losse of his owne Royall person.
Riu. Then is my Soueraigne slaine?
Grey. I almost slaine, for he is taken prisoner, ut betrayd by falshood of his Guard,
y his Foe surpriz'd at vnawares:
e I further haue to vnderstand,
e committed to the Bishop of Yorke,
Warwickes Brother, and by that our Foe.
Riu. These Newes I must confesse are full of greefe, ecause Madam, bearе it as you may.
cke may loose: that now hath wonne the day.
Till then, faire hope must hinder liues decay:
e rather waine me from dispaire of Edwards Off-spring in my wombe:
that makes me bridle passion,
e with Mildnesse my misfortunes crosse:
s I draw in many a teare,
he sting of blood-sucking sighes,
my sighes or teares, I blast or drowne
rds Feare, true heyre to th'English Crowne.
Madam,
Warwicke then become?
en inform'd that he comes towards London
Crowne once more on Henries head, the rest. King Edwards Friends must downe
e the Tyrants violence, him that hath once broken Faith)
hwith vnto the Sanctuary,
To saue (at least) the heire of Edwards right:
There shall I rest secure from force and fraud:
Come therefore let vs flye, while we may flye,
If Warwicke take vs, we are sure to dye. exeunt.

Enter Richard, Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Rich. Now my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley
Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiefest Thicket of the Parke.
Thus stand the case: you know our King, my Brother,
Is prisoner to the Bishop here, at whose hands
He hath good vsage, and great liberty,
And often but attended with weake guard,
Come hunting this way to disport himselfe.
I have aduertis'd him by secret meanes,
That if about this houre he make this way,
Vnder the colour of his vsuall game,
He shall heere finde his Friends with Horse and Men,
To set him free from his Captiuitie.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman with him.

Huntsman. This way my Lord,
For this way lies the Game.
King Edw. Nay this way man,
See where the Huntsmen stand.
Now Brother of Glocster, Lord Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steale the Bishops Deere?
Rich. Brother, the time and case, requireth haste,
Your horse stands ready at the Parke-corner.
King Ed. But whether shall we then?
Hast. To Lyn my Lord,
And shipt from thence to Flanders.
Rich. Well guest believe me, for that was my meaning
K. Ed. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardnesse.
Rich. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talke.
K. Ed. Huntsman, what say'st thou?
Wilt thou go along?
Hunts. Better do so, then tarry and be hang'd.
Rich. Come then away, lets ha no more adoo.
K. Ed. Bishop farewell,
Sheeld thee from Warwickes frowne,
And pray that I may re-possesse the Crowne. exeunt

Flourish. Enter King Henry the sixt, Clarence, Warwicke, Somerset, young Henry, Oxford, Montague, and Lieutenant.

K. Hen. M. Lieutenant, now that God and Friends
Have shaken Edward from the Regall seate,
And turn'd my captiue state to libertie,
My feare to hope, my sorrowes vnto ioyes,
At our enlargement what are thy due Fees?
Lieu. Subiects may challenge nothing of their Sou'raine
But, if an humble prayer may preuaile,
I then craue pardon of your Maiestie.
K. Hen. For what, Lieutenant? For well vsing me?
Nay, be thou sure, Ile well requite thy kindnesse.
For that it made my imprisonment, a pleasure:
I, such a pleasure, as incaged Birds
Conceiue; when after many moody Thoughts,
At last, by Notes of Houshold harmonie,
They quite forget their losse of Libertie.

But Warwicke, after God, thou ſet'ſt me free.
And chiefely therefore, I thanke God, and thee,
He was the Author, thou the Inſtrument.
Therefore that I may conquer Fortunes ſpight,
By living low, where Fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this bleſſed Land
May not be puniſht with my thwarting ſtarres.
Warwicke, although my Head ſhould weare the Crowne,
I here reſigne my Gouernment to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

Warw. Your Grace hath ſtill beene fam'd for vertuous,
And now may ſeeme as wiſe as vertuous.
By ſpying and auoiding Fortunes malice,
For few men rightly temper with the Starres:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your Grace,
For chuſing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No Warwicke, thou art worthy of the ſway,
To whom the Heau'ns in thy Natiuitie,
Adiudg'd an Oliue Branch, and Lawrell Crowne,
As likely to be bleſt in Peace and Warre:
And therefore I yeeld thee my free conſent.

Warw. And I chuſe Clarence onely for Protector.

King. Warwick and Clarence, giue me both your Hands
Now ioyne your Hands, & with your Hands your Hearts,
That no diſſention hinder Gouernment:
I make you both Protectors of this Land,
While I my ſelfe will lead a priuate Life,
And in deuotion ſpend my latter dayes,
To ſinnes rebuke, and my Creators prayſe.

Warw. What anſweres Clarence to his Soueraignes will?

Clar. That he conſents, if Warwicke yeeld conſent,
For on thy fortune I repoſe my ſelfe.

Warw Why then, though loth, yet muſt I be content:
We'le yoake together, like a double ſhadow
To Henries Body, and ſupply his place;
I meane, in bearing weight of Gouernment,
While he enioyes the Honor, and his eaſe.
And Clarence, now then it is more then needfull,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a Traytor,
And all his Lands and Goods confiſcate.

Clar. What elſe? and that Succeſſion be determined

Warw. I, therein Clarence ſhall not want his part.

King But with the firſt, of all your chiefe affaires,
Let me entreat (for I command no more)
That Margaret your Queene, and my Sonne Edward,
Be ſent for, to returne from France with ſpeed:
For till I ſee them here, by doubtfull feare,
My ioy of libertie is halfe eclips'd.

Clar. It ſhall bee done, my Soueraigne, with all ſpeede.

King My Lord of Somerſet, what Youth is that,
Of whom you ſeeme to haue ſo tender care?

Somerſ. My Liege, it is young Henry, Earle of Richmond

King. Come hither, Englands Hope: Layes his Hand on his Head.
If ſecret Powers ſuggeſt but truth
To my diuining thoughts,
This pretty Lad will proue our Countries bliſſe.
His Lookes are full of peacefull Maieſtie,
His Head by nature fram'd to weare a Crowne,
His Hand to wield a Scepter, and himſelfe
Likely in time to bleſſe a Regall Throne:
Make much of him, my Lords, for this is hee
Muſt helpe you more, then you are hurt by mee.

Enter a Poſte.

Warw. What newes, my friend?

Poſte. That Edward is eſcaped from your Brother,
And fled (as hee heares ſince) to Burgundie

Warw. Vnſauorie newes: but how made he eſcape?

Poſte. He was conuey'd by Richard, Duke of Glocſter,
And the Lord Haſtings, who attended him
In ſecret ambuſh on the Forreſt ſide,
And from the Biſhops Huntſmen reſcu'd him:
For Hunting was his dayly Exerciſe.

Warw. My Brother was too careleſſe of his charge.
But let vs hence, my Soueraigne, to prouide
A ſalue for any ſore, that may betide. Exeunt

Manet Somerſet, Richmond, and Oxford.

Som. My Lord, I like not of this flight of Edward.
For doubtleſſe, Burgundie will yeeld him helpe,
And we ſhall haue more Warres before't be long.
As Henries late preſaging Prophecie
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond:
So doth my heart miſ-giue me, in theſe Conflicts,
What may befall him, to his harme and ours.
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to preuent the worſt,
Forthwith wee'le ſend him hence to Britanie,
Till ſtormes be paſt of Ciuill Enmitie.

Oxf I: for if Edward re-poſſeſſe the Crowne,
'Tis like that Richmond, with the reſt, ſhall downe.

Som It ſhall be ſo, he ſhall to Britanie.
Come therefore, let's about it ſpeedily. Exeunt.

Flouriſh. Enter Edward, Richard, Haſtings, and Souldiers.

Edw Now Brother Richard, Lord Haſtings, and the reſt,
Yet thus farre Fortune maketh vs amends,
And ſayes, that once more I ſhall enter change
My wained ſtate, for Henries Regall Crowne.
Well haue we paſs'd, and now re-paſs'd the Seas,
And brought deſired helpe from Burgundie.
What then remaines, we being thus arriu'd
From Rauenſpurre Hauen, before the Gates of Yorke,
But that we enter, as into our Dukedome?

Rich. The Gates made faſt?
Brother, I like not this.
For many men that ſtumble at the Threſhold,
Are well fore-told, that danger lurkes within.

Edw. Tuſh man, aboidments muſt not now affright vs.
By faire or foule meanes we muſt enter in,
For hither will our friends repaire to vs.

Haſt. My Liege, Ile knocke once more, to ſummon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Maior of Yorke, and his Brethren.

Maior. My Lords,
We were fore-warned of your comming,
And ſhut the Gates, for ſafetie of our ſelues,
For now we owe allegeance vnto Henry.

Edw. But, Maſter Maior, if Henry be your King,
Yet Edward, at the leaſt, is Duke of Yorke.

Maior. True, my good Lord, I know you for no leſſe.

Edw Why, and I challenge nothing but my Dukedome,
As being well content with that alone.

Exit But

Rich. But when the Fox hath once got in his Nofe, Hee'le ſoone finde meanes to make the Body follow.
Hall. Why, Maſter Maior, why ſtand you in a doubt?
Open the Gates, we are King Henries friends.
Maior. I, ſay you ſo? the Gates ſhall then be opened.
He deſcends.
Rich. A wiſe ſtout Captaine, and ſoone perſwaded.
Hall. The good old man would faine that all were well,
So 'twere not long of him: but being entred,
I doubt not I, but we ſhall ſoone perſwade
Both him, and all his Brothers, vnto reaſon.

Enter the Maior, and two Aldermen.
Edw. So, Maſter Maior: theſe Gates muſt not be ſhut,
But in the Night, or in the time of Warre.
What, feare not man, but yeeld me vp the Keyes,
Takes his Keyes.
For Edward will defend the Towne, and thee,
And all thoſe friends, that deine to follow mee.

March. Enter Mountgomerie with Drumme and Souldiers.
Rich. Brother, this is Sir Iohn Mountgomerie,
Our truſtie friend, vnleſſe I be deceiu'd.
Edw. Welcome Sir Iohn: but why come you in Armes?
Mount. To helpe King Edward in his time of ſtorme,
As euery loyall Subiect ought to doe.
Edw. Thankes good Mountgomerie
But we now forget our Title to the Crowne,
And after clayme our Dukedome,
Till God pleaſe to ſend the reſt.
Mount. Then fare you well, for I will hence againe,
I came to ſerue a King, and not a Duke:
Drummer ſtrike vp, and let vs march away.
The Drummer begins to march.
Edw. Nay ſtay, Sir Iohn, a while, and wee'le debate
By what ſafe meanes the Crowne may be recouer'd.
Mount. What talke you of debating? in few words,
If you'le not here proclaime your ſelfe our King,
Ile leaue you to your fortune, and be gone,
To keepe them back, that come to ſuccour you.
Why ſhall we fight, if you pretend no Title?
Rich. Why Brother, wherefore ſtand you on nice points?
Edw. When wee grow ſtronger,
Then wee'le make our Clayme:
Till then, 'tis wiſdome to conceale our meaning.
Hall. Away with ſcrupulous Wit, now Armes muſt rule.
Rich. And fearefulleſſe minds clyme ſooneſt vnto Crowns.
Brother, we will proclaime you out of hand,
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.
Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but vſurpes the Diademe.
Mount. I, now my Soueraigne ſpeaketh like himſelfe,
And now will I be Edwards Champion.
Hall. Sound Trumpet, Edward ſhall be here proclaim'd:
Come, fellow Souldior, make thou proclamation.
Flouriſh. Sound.
Sold. Edward the Fourth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, &c.
Mount. And whoſoe'er gainſayes King Edwards right,
By this I challenge him to ſingle fight.
Throwes downe his Gauntlet.
All. Long liue Edward the Fourth.

Edw. Thankes braue Mountgomery,
And thankes vnto you all:
If fortune ſerue me, Ile requite this kindneſſe.
Now for this Night, let's harbor here in Yorke:
And when the Morning Sunne ſhall raiſe his Carre
Aboue the Border of this Horizon,
Wee'le forward towards Warwicke, and his Mates;
For well I wot, that Henry is no Souldier.
Ah froward Clarence, how euill it beſeemes thee,
To flatter Henry, and forſake thy Brother?
Yet as wee may, wee'le meet both thee and Warwicke.
Come on braue Souldiors: doubt not of the Day,
And that once gotten, doubt not of large Pay.
Exeunt.

Flouriſh. Enter the King, Warwicke, Mountague, Clarence, Oxford, and Somerſet.

War. What counſaile, Lords? Edward from Belgia,
With haſtie Germanes, and blunt Hollanders,
Hath paſs'd in ſafetie through the Narrow Seas,
And with his troupes doth march amaine to London,
And many giddie people flock to him.
King. Let's leaue men, and beat him backe againe.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which being ſuffer'd, Riuers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickſhire I haue true-hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in Warre.
Thoſe will I muſter vp: and thou Sonne Clarence
Shalt ſtirre vp in Suffolke, Norfolke, and in Kent,
The Knights and Gentlemen, to come with thee.
Thou Brother Mountague, in Buckingham,
Northampton, and in Leiceſterſhire, ſhalt find
Men well enclin'd to heare what thou command'ſt.
And thou, braue Oxford, wondrous well belou'd,
In Oxfordſhire ſhalt muſter vp thy friends.
My Soueraigne, with the louing Citizens,
Like to his Iland, gyrt in with the Ocean,
Or modeſt Dian, circled with her Nymphs,
Shall reſt in London, till we come to him:
Faire Lords take leaue, and ſtand not to reply.
Farewell my Soueraigne.
King. Farewell my Hector and my Troyes true hope Clar. In ſigne of truth, I kiſſe your Highneſſe Hand.
King. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.
Mount. Comfort, my Lord, and ſo I take my leaue.
Oxf. And thus I ſeale my truth, and bid adieu.
King. Sweet Oxford, and my louing Mountagur,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, ſweet Lords, let's meet at Couentry.
Exeunt.
King. Here at the Pallace will I reſt a while.
Couſin of Exeter, what thinkes your Lordſhip?
Me thinkes, the Power that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine
Exet. The doubt is, that he will ſeduce the reſt.
King. That's not my feare, my meed hath got me faine
I haue not ſtopt mine eares to their demands,
Nor poſted off their ſuites with ſlow delayes,
My pittie hath beene balme to heale their wounds,
My mildneſſe hath allay'd their ſwelling griefes,
My mercie dry'd their water-flowing teares.
I haue not been deſirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppreſt them with great Subſidies,
Nor forward of reuenge, though they much err'd.
Then why ſhould they loue Edward more then me?
No Exeter, theſe Graces challenge Grace:

And when the Lyon fawnes vpon the Lambe,
The Lambe will never ceaſe to follow him.

Shout within, A Lancaſter, A Lancaſter.

Exet. Hearke, hearke, my Lord, what Shoots are theſe?

Enter Edward and his Souldiers.

Edw. Seize on the ſhamefac'd Henry, beare him hence,
And once againe proclaime vs King of England.
You are the Fount that makes ſmall Brookes to flow,
Now ſtops thy Spring, my Sea ſhall ſuck them dry,
And ſwell ſo much the higher, by their ebbe.
Hence with him to the Tower, let him not ſpeake.

Exit with King Henry.

And Lords, towards Couentry bend we our courſe,
Where peremptorie Warwicke now remaines:
The Sunne ſhines hot, and if we vſe delay,
Cold biting Winter marres our hop'd-for Hay.

Rich. Away betimes, before his forces ioyne,
And take the great-growne Traytor vnawares:
Braue Warriors, march amaine towards Couentry.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, the Maior of Couentry, two Meſſengers, and others vpon the Walls.

War. Where is the Poſt that came from valiant Oxford?
How farre hence is thy Lord, mine honeſt fellow?

Meſſ. 1. By this at Dunſmore, marching hitherward.

War. How farre off is our Brother Mountague?
Where is the Poſt that came from Mountague?

Meſſ. 2. By this at Daintry, with a puiſſant troope.

Enter Someruile.

War. Say Somerule, what ſayes my louing Sonne?
And by thy gueſſe, how nigh is Clarence now?

Somer. At Southam I did leaue him with his forces,
And doe expect him here ſome two howres hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I heare his Drumme.

Somer. It is not his, my Lord, here Southam lyes:
The Drum your Honor heares, marcheth from Warwicke.

War. Who ſhould that be? belike vnlook'd for friends

Somer. They are at hand, and you ſhall quickly know.

March. Flouriſh. Enter Edward, Richard, and Souldiers.

Edw. Goe, Trumpet, to the Walls, and ſound a Parle.

Rich. See how the ſurly Warwicke mans the Wall.

War. Oh vnbid ſpight, is ſportfull Edward come?
Where ſlept our Scouts, or how are they ſeduc'd,
That we could heare no newes of his repayre.

Edw. Now Warwicke, wilt thou ope the Citie Gates,
Speake gentle words, and humbly bend thy Knee,
Call Edward King, and at his hands begge Mercy,
And he ſhall pardon thee theſe Outrages?

War. Nay rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confeſſe who ſet thee vp, and pluckt thee downe,
Call Warwicke Patron, and be penitent,
And thou ſhalt ſtill remaine the Duke of Yorke.

Rich. I thought at leaſt he would haue ſaid the King,
Or did he make the leaſt againſt his will?

War. Is not a Dukedome, Sir, a goodly gift?

Rich. I, by my faith, for a poore Earle to giue,
Ile doe thee ſeruice for ſo good a gift.

War. 'Twas I that gaue the Kingdome to thy Brother.

Edw. Why then 'tis mine, if but by Warwickes gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for ſo great a weight:
And Weakeling, Warwicke takes his gift againe,
And Henry is my King, Warwicke his Subiect.

Edw. But Warwicke King is Edwards Priſoner.
And gallant Warwicke, doe but anſwer this,
What is the Body, when the Head is off?

Rich. Alas, that Warwicke had no more fore-caſt,
But whiles he thought to ſteale the ſingle Ten,
The King was ſlyly finger'd from the Deck:
You left poore Henry at the Biſhops Pallace,
And ten to one you'le meet him in the Tower.

Edw. 'Tis euen ſo, yet you are Warwicke ſtill.

Rich. Come Warwicke,
Take the time, kneele downe, kneele downe:
Nay when? ſtrike now, or elſe the Iron cooles.

War. I had rather chop this Hand off at a blow,
And with the other, fling it at thy face,
Then beare ſo low a ſayle, to ſtrike to thee.

Edw. Sayle how thou canſt,
Haue Winde and Tyde thy friend,
This Hand, faſt wound about thy coale-black hayre,
Shall, whiles thy Head is warme, and new cut off,
Write in the duſt this Sentence with thy blood,
Wind-changing Warwicke now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with Drumme and Colours.

War. Oh cheereſull Colours, ſee where Oxford comes.

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaſter.

Rich. The Gates are open, let vs enter too.

Edw. So other foes may ſet vpon our backs.
Stand we in good array: for they no doubt
Will iſſue out againe, and bid vs battaile;
If not, the Citie being but of ſmall defence,
We'le quickly rowze the Traitors in the ſame.

War. Oh welcome Oxford, for we want thy helpe.

Enter Mountague, with Drumme and Colours.

Mount. Mountague, Mountague, for Lancaſter.

Rich. Thou and thy Brother both ſhall buy this Treaſon
Euen with the deareſt blood your bodies beare.

Edw. The harder matcht, the greater Victorie,
My minde preſageth happy gaine, and Conqueſt.

Enter Somerſet, with Drumme and Colours.

Som. Somerſet, Somerſet, for Lancaſter.

Rich. Two of thy Name, both Dukes of Somerſet, Haue ſold their Liues vnto the Houſe of Yorke,
And thou ſhalt be the third, if this Sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drumme and Colours.

War. And loe, where George of Clarence ſweepes along,
Of force enough to bid his Brother battaile:
With whom, in vpright zeale to right, prevailes
More then the nature of a Brothers Loue.
Come Clarence, come: thou wilt, if Warwicke call.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this meanes?
Looke here, I throw my infamie at thee:
I will not ruinate my Fathers Houſe,
Who gaue his blood to lyme the ſtones together,
And ſet vp Lancaſter. Why, trowneſt thou, Warwicke,
That Clarence is ſo harſh, ſo blunt, vnnaturall,
To bend the fatall inſtruments of Warre

Againſt

s Brother,and his lawfull King.
hou wilt obiect my holy Oath:
that Oath,were more impietie,
ah,when he facrific'd his Daughter.
ry for my Trefpas made,
ferue well at my Brothers hands,
claymе my felfe thy mortall foe:
lution,wherefoe're I meet thee, meet thee,if thou ftirre abroad)
thee,for thy foule mis-leading me.
owd-hearted Warwicke,I defie thee,
Brother turne my blufhing Cheekes.
e Edward,I will make amends:
rd,doe not frowne vpon my faults,
henceforth be no more vnconftant.
ow welcome more,and ten times more belou'd,
ou neuer hadft deferu'd our hate.
Welcome good Clarence,this is Brother-like.
Oh paffing Traytor,periur'd and vniuft.
What Warwicke,
leaue the Towne,and fight?
e beat the Stones about thine Eares?
Alas,I am not coop'd here for defence:
y towards Barnet prefently,
hee Battaile,Edward,if thou dar'ft.
Yes Warwicke,Edward dares,and leads the way:
the field: Saint George,and Victorie. Exeunt.
rch. Warwicke and his companie followes.

rum,and Excurfions. Enter Edward bringing forth Warwicke wounded.

So,lye thou there: dye thou,and dye our feare, icke was a Bugge that fear'd vs all.
ountague fit faft,I feeke for thee,
wickes Bones may keepe thine companie.
Exit.
Ah,who is nigh? come to me,friend,or foe,
e who is Victor,Yorke,or Warwicke?
e I that? my mangled body fhewes,
d,my want of ftrength,my ficke heart fhewes,
ft yeeld my body to the Earth,
y fall,the conqueft to my foe.
lds the Cedar to the Axes edge,
rmes gaue fhelter to the Princely Eagle,
hofe fhade the ramping Lyon flept,
p-branch ouer-peer'd Ioues fpreading Tree,
low Shrubs from Winters pow'rfull Winde.
s,that now are dim'd with Deaths black Veyle,
ne as piercing as the Mid-day Sunne,
the fecret Treafons of the World:
nckles in my Browes,now fill'd with blood,
ned oft to Kingly Sepulchers:
u'd King,but I could digge his Graue?
durft fmile,when Warwicke bent his Brow?
my Glory fmear'd in duft and blood.
s,my Walkes,my Mannors that I had,
forfake me; and of all my Lands,
g left me,but my bodies length.
t is Pompe,Rule,Reigne,but Earth and Duft?
ue how we can,yet dye we muft.

Enter Oxford and Somerfet.

Ah Warwicke,Warwicke,wert thou as we are,
t recouer all our Loffe againe:

The Queene from France hath brought a puiffant power.
Euen now we heard the newes: ah,could'ft thou flye.
Warw. Why then I would not flye. Ah Mountague,
If thou be there,fweet Brother,take my Hand,
And with thy Lippes keepe in my Soule a while.
Thou lou'ft me not: for,Brother,if thou didft,
Thy teares would wafh this cold congealed blood,
That glewes my Lippes,and will not let me fpeake.
Come quickly Mountague,or I am dead.
Som. Ah Warwicke,Mountague hath breath'd his laft,
And to the lateft gafpe,cry'd out for Warwicke:
And faid,Commend me to my valiant Brother.
And more he would haue faid,and more he fpoke,
Which founded like a Cannon in a Vault,
That mought not be diftinguifht: but at laft
I well might heare,deliuered with a groane,
Oh farewell Warwicke.
Warw. Sweet reft his Soule:
Flye Lords,and faue your felues,
For Warwicke bids you all farewell,to meet in Heauen.
Oxf. Away,away,to meet the Queenes great power.
Here they beare away his Body. Exeunt.

Flourifh. Enter King Edward in triumph, with Richard,Clarence,and the reft.

King. Thus farre our fortune keepes an vpward courfe,
And we are grac'd with wreaths of Victorie:
But in the midft of this bright-fhining Day,
I fpy a black fufpicious threatning Cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious Sunne,
Ere he attaine his eafefull Wefterne Bed:
I meane,my Lords,thofe powers that the Queene
Hath rays'd in Gallia,haue arriued our Coaft,
And,as we heare,march on to fight with vs.
Clar. A little gale will foone difperfe that Cloud,
And blow it to the Source from whence it came,
Thy very Beames will dry thofe Vapours vp,
For euery Cloud engenders not a Storme.
Rich. The Queene is valued thirtie thoufand ftrong,
And Somerfet,with Oxford,fled to her:
If fhe haue time to breathe,be well affur'd
Her faction will be full as ftrong as ours.
King. We are aduertis'd by our louing friends,
That they doe hold their courfe toward Tewksbury.
We hauing now the beft at Barnet field,
Will thither ftraight,for willingneffe rids way,
And as we march,our ftrength will be augmented:
In euery Countie as we goe along,
Strike vp the Drumme,cry courage,and away. Exeunt.

Flourifh. March. Enter the Queene, young Edward, Somerfet, Oxford, and Souldiers.

Qu. Great Lords,wife men ne'r fit and waile their loffe,
But chearely feeke how to redreffe their harmes.
What though the Maft be now blowne ouer-boord,
The Cable broke,the holding-Anchor loft,
And halfe our Saylors fwallow'd in the flood?
Yet liues our Pilot ftill. Is't meet,that hee
Should leaue the Helme,and like a fearefull Lad,
With tearefull Eyes adde Water to the Sea,
And giue more ftrength to that which hath too much,
Whiles in his moane,the Ship fplits on the Rock,
Which Induftrie and Courage might haue fau'd?
Ah what a fhame,ah what a fault were this.
Say Warwicke was our Anchor: what of that?

And Mountague our Top-Maſt: what of him?
Our ſlaught'red friends, the Tackles: what of theſe?
Why is not Oxford here, another Anchor?
And Somerſet, another goodly Maſt?
The friends of France our Shrowds and Tacklings?
And though vnskilfull, why not Ned and I,
For once allow'd the skilfull Pilots Charge?
We will not from the Helme, to ſit and weepe,
But keepe our Courſe (though the rough Winde ſay no)
From Shelues and Rocks, that threaten vs with Wrack.
As good to chide the Waues, as ſpeake them faire.
And what is Edward, but a ruthleſſe Sea?
What Clarence, but a Quick-ſand of Deceit?
And Richard, but a raged fatall Rocke?
All theſe, the Enemies to our poore Barke
Say you can ſwim, alas 'tis but a while.
Tread on the Sand, why there you quickly ſinke,
Beſtride the Rock, the Tyde will waſh you off,
Or elſe you ſamiſh, that's a three-fold Death.
This ſpeake I (Lords) to let you vnderſtand,
If caſe ſome one of you would flye from vs,
That there's no hop'd-for Mercy with the Brothers,
More then with ruthleſſe Waues, with Sands and Rocks.
Why courage then, what cannot be auoided,
'Twere childiſh weakeneſſe to lament, or feare.

Prince. Me thinkes a Woman of this valiant Spirit,
Should, if a Coward heard her ſpeake theſe words,
Infuſe his Breaſt with Magnanimitie,
And make him, naked, foyle a man at Armes.
I ſpeake not this, as doubting any here:
For did I but ſuſpect a fearefull man,
He ſhould haue leaue to goe away betimes,
Leaſt in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like ſpirit to himſelfe.
If any ſuch be here, as God forbid,
Let him depart, before we need his helpe.

Oxf. Women and Children of ſo high a courage,
And Warriors faint, why 'twere perpetuall ſhame.
Oh braue young Prince: thy famous Grandfather
Doth liue againe in thee: long may'ſt thou liue,
To beare his Image, and renew his Glories.

Som. And he that will not fight for ſuch a hope,
Goe home to Bed, and like the Owle by day,
If he ariſe, be mock'd and wondred at.

Qu. Thankes gentle Somerſet, (ſweet Oxford thankes.

Prince. And take his thankes, that yet hath nothing elſe.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Prepare you Lords, for Edward is at hand,
Readie to fight: therefore be reſolute.

Oxf. I thought no leſſe: it is his Policie,
To haſte thus faſt, to finde vs vnprouided.

Som. But hee's deceiu'd, we are in readineſſe.

Qu. This cheares my heart, to ſee your forwardneſſe.

Oxf. Here pitch our Battaile, hence we will not budge.

Flourish, and march. Enter Edward, Richard, Clarence, and Souldiers.

Edw. Braue followers, yonder ſtands the thornie Wood,
Which by the Heauens aſſiſtance, and your ſtrength,
Muſt by the Roots be hewne vp yet ere Night.
I need not adde more fuell to your fire,
For well I wot, ye blaze, to burne them out:
Giue ſignall to the fight, and to it Lords.

Qu. Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I ſhould ſay,
My teares gaine-ſay: for euery word I ſpeake,
Ye ſee I drinke the water of my eye.
Therefore no more but this: Henry your Soueraigne
Is Priſoner to the Foe, his State vſurp'd,
His Realme a ſlaughter-houſe, his Subiects ſlaine,
His Statutes cancell'd, and his Treaſure ſpent:
And yonder is the Wolfe, that makes this ſpoyle.
You fight in Iuſtice: then in Gods Name, Lords,
Be valiant, and giue ſignall to the fight.

Alarum, Retreat, Excurſions. Exeunt

Flourish. Enter Edward, Richard, Queene, Clarence, Oxford, Somerſet

Edw. Now here a period of tumultuous Broyles.
Away with Oxford to Hames Caſtle ſtraight:
For Somerſet, off with his guiltie Head
Goe beare them hence, I will not heare them ſpeake.

Oxf. For my part, Ile not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I, but ſtoupe with patience to my fortune.

Exeunt

Qu. So part we ſadly in this troublous World,
To meet with Ioy in ſweet Ieruſalem.

Edw. Is Proclamation made, That who finds Edward,
Shall haue a high Reward, and he his Life?

Rich. It is, and lo where youthfull Edward comes.

Enter the Prince.

Edw. Bring forth the Gallant, let vs heare him ſpeake.
What? can ſo young a Thorne begin to prick?
Edward, what ſatisfaction canſt thou make,
For bearing Armes, for ſtirring vp my Subiects,
And all the trouble thou haſt turn'd me to?

Prince. Speake like a Subiect, proud ambitious Yorke.
Suppoſe that I am now my Fathers Mouth,
Reſigne thy Chayre, and where I ſtand, kneele thou,
Whil'ſt I propoſe the ſelfe-ſame words to thee,
Which (Traytor) thou would'ſt haue me anſwere to.

Qu. Ah, that thy Father had beene ſo reſolu'd.

Rich. That you might ſtill haue worne the Petticoat,
And ne're haue ſtolne the Breech from Lancaſter.

Prince. Let Æſop fable in a Winters Night,
His Currish Riddles ſorts not with this place.

Rich. By Heauen, Brat, Ile plague ye for that word.

Qu. I, thou waſt borne to be a plague to men.

Rich. For Gods ſake, take away this Captiue Scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this ſcolding Crooke-backe, rather.

Edw. Peace wilfull Boy, or I will charme your tongue.

Clar. Vntutor'd Lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my dutie, you are all vnduteous:
Laſcinious Edward, and thou periur'd George,
And thou miſ-ſhapen Dicke, I tell ye all,
I am your better, Traytors as ye are,
And thou vſurp'ſt my Fathers right and mine.

Edw. Take that, the likeneſſe of this Rayler here.
Stabs him.

Rich. Sprawl'ſt thou? take that, to end thy agonie.
Rich. ſtabs him.

Clar. And there's for twitting me with periurie.
Clar. ſtabs him.

Qu. Oh, kill me too.

Rich. Marry, and ſhall. Offers to kill her.

Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we haue done too much.

Rich. Why

Rich. Why should ſhee liue, to fill the World with words.

Edw. What? doth ſhee ſwowne? vſe meanes for her recouerie.

Rich. Clarence excuſe me to the King my Brother: Ile hence to London on a ſerious matter, Ere ye come there, be ſure to heare ſome newes.

Cla. What? what?

Rich Tower, the Tower. Exit.

Qu. Oh Ned ſweet Ned, ſpeake to thy Mother Boy. Can'ſt thou not ſpeake? O Traitors, Murtherers! They that ſtabb'd Cæſar, ſhed no blood at all: Did not offend, nor were not worthy Blame, If this foule deed were by, to equall it. He was a Man; this (in reſpect) a Childe, And Men, ne're ſpend their fury on a Childe. What's worſe then Murtherer, that I may name it? No, no, my heart will burſt, and if I ſpeake, And I will ſpeake, that ſo my heart may burſt. Butchers and Villaines, bloudy Canniballes, How ſweet a Plant haue you vntimely crop't: You haue no children (Butchers) if you had, The thought of them would haue ſtirr'd vp remorſe, But if you euer chance to haue a Childe, Looke in his youth to haue him ſo cut off As deathſmen you haue rid this ſweet yong Prince.

King. Away with her, go beare her hence perforce.

Qu. Nay, neuer beare me hence, diſpatch me heere: Here ſheath thy Sword, Ile pardon thee my death: What? wilt thou not? Then Clarence do it thou.

Cla. By heauen, I will not do thee ſo much eaſe.

Qu. Good Clarence do: ſweet Clarence do thou do it.

Cla. Did'ſt thou not heare me ſweare I would not do it?

Qu. I, but thou vſeſt to forſweare thy ſelfe. 'Twas Sin before, but now 'tis Charity. What wilt thou not? Where is that diuels butcher Richard? Hard fauour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou? Thou art not heere; Murther is thy Almeſ-deed: Petitioners for Blood, thou ne're put'ſt backe.

Ed. Away I ſay, I charge ye beare her hence.

Qu. So come to you, and yours, as to this Prince. Exit Queene

Ed. Where's Richard gone.

Cla. To London all in poſt, and as I gueſſe, To make a bloudy Supper in the Tower.

Ed. He's ſodaine if a thing comes in his head. Now march we hence, diſcharge the common ſort With Pay and Thankes, and let's away to London, And ſee our gentle Queene how well ſhe fares, By this (I hope) ſhe hath a Sonne for me. Exit.

Enter Henry the ſixt, and Richard, with the Lieutenant on the Walles.

Rich. Good day, my Lord, what at your Booke ſo hard?

Hen. I my good Lord: my Lord I ſhould ſay rather, 'Tis ſinne to flatter. Good was little better: 'Good Gloſter, and good Deuill, were alike, And both prepoſterous therefore, not Good Lord.

Rich. Sirra, leaue vs to our ſelues, we muſt conferre.

Hen. So flies the reeakleſſe ſhepherd from ſ^e^ Wolfe: So firſt the harmleſſe Sheepe doth yeeld his Fleece, And next his Throate, vnto the Butchers Knife. What Scene of death hath Roſcius now to Acte?

Rich. Suſpition alwayes haunes the guilty minde, The Theefe doth feare each buſh an Officer.

Hen. The Bird that hath bin limed in a buſh, With trembling wings miſdoubteth euery buſh: And I the hapleſſe Male to one ſweet Bird, Haue now the fatall Obiect in my eye, Where my poore yong was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

Rich. Why what a peeuiſh Foole was that of Creet, That taught his Sonne the office of a Fowle, And yet for all his wings, the Foole was drown'd

Hen. I Dedalus, my poore Boy Icarus, Thy Father Minos, that deem'de our courſe, The Sunne that ſear'd the wings of my ſweet Boy. Thy Brother Edward, and thy Selfe, the Sea Whoſe enuious Gulfe did ſwallow vp his life: Ah, kill me with thy Weapon, not with words, My breſt can better brooke thy Daggers point, Then can my eares that Tragicke Hiſtory. But wherefore doſt thou come? Is't for my Life?

Rich. Think'ſt thou I am an Executioner?

Hen. A Perſecutor I am ſure thou art, If murthering Innocents be Executing, Why then thou art an Executioner.

Rich. Thy Son I kill'd for his preſumption.

Hen. Hadſt thou bin kill'd, when firſt ſ^u^ didſt preſume. Thou hadſt not liu'd to kill a Sonne of mine: And thus I propheſie, that many a thouſand, Which now miſtruſt no parcell of my feare, And many an old mans ſighe, and many a Widdowes, And many an Orphans water-ſtanding-eye, Men for their Sonnes, Wiues for their Husbands, Orphans, for their Parents timeles death, Shall rue the houre that euer thou was't borne. The Owle ſhriek'd at thy birth, an euill ſigne, The Night-Crow cry'de, aboding luckleſſe time, Dogs howl'd, and hideous Tempeſt ſhook down Trees: The Rauen rook'd her on the Chimnies top, And chatt'ring Pies in diſmall Diſcords ſung: Thy Mother felt more then a Mothers paine, And yet brought forth leſſe then a Mothers hope, To wit, an indigeſted and deformed lumpe, Not like the fruit of ſuch a goodly Tree. Teeth had'ſt thou in thy head, when thou was't borne, To ſignifie, thou cam'ſt to bite the world: And if the reſt be true, which I haue heard, Thou cam'ſt——

Rich. Ile heare no more:

Dye Prophet in thy ſpeech, Stabbes him.

For this (among'ſt the reſt) was I ordain'd.

Hen. I, and for much more ſlaughter after this. O God forgiue my ſinnes, and pardon thee. Dyes.

Rich. What? will the aſpiring blood of Lancaſter Sinke in the ground? I thought it would haue mounted. See how my ſword weepes for the poore Kings death. O may ſuch purple teares be alway ſhed From thoſe that wiſh the downfall of our houſe. If any ſparke of Life be yet remaining, Downe, downe to hell, and ſay I ſent thee thither, Stabs him againe.

I that haue neyther pitty, loue, nor feare. Indeed 'tis true that Henrie told me of: For I haue often heard my Mother ſay, I came into the world with my Legges forward. Had I not reaſon (thinke ye) to make haſt, And ſeeke their Ruine, that vſurp'd our Right? The Midwife wonder'd, and the Women cri'de O Ieſus bleſſe vs, he is borne with teeth.

And

And ſo I was, which plainly ſignified,
That I ſhould ſnarle, and bite, and play the dogge:
Then ſince the Heauens haue ſhap'd my Body ſo,
Let Hell make crook'd my Minde to anſwer it.
I haue no Brother, I am like no Brother:
And this word [Loue] which Gray-beards call Diuine,
Be reſident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am my ſelfe alone.
Clarence beware, thou keept'ſt me from the Light,
But I will ſort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buzze abroad ſuch Prophecies,
That Edward ſhall be fearefull of his life,
And then to purge his feare, Ile be thy death.
King Henry, and the Prince his Son are gone,
Clarence thy turne is next, and then the reſt,
Counting my ſelfe but bad, till I be beſt.
Ile throw thy body in another roome,
And Triumph Henry, in thy day of Doome. Exit

Flouriſh. Enter King, Queene, Clarence, Richard, Haſtings, Nurſe, and Attendants.

King. Once more we ſit in Englands Royall Throne,
Re-purchac'd with the Blood of Enemies:
What valiant Foe-men, like to Autumnes Corne,
Haue we mow'd downe in tops of all their pride?
Three Dukes of Somerſet, threefold Renowne,
For hardy and vndoubted Champions:
Two Cliffords, as the Father and the Sonne,
And two Northumberlands: two braue men.
Ne're ſpurr'd their Courſers at the Trumpets ſound
With them, the two braue Beares, Warwick & Montague,
That in their Chaines fetter'd the Kingly Lyon,
And made the Forreſt tremble when they roar'd.
Thus haue we ſwept Suſpition from our Seate,
And made our Footſtoole of Security.
Come hither Beſſe, and let me kiſſe my Boy:
Kong Ned, for thee, thine Vnckles, and my ſelfe,
Haue in our Armors watcht the Winters night,
Went all afoote in Summers ſcalding heate,
That thou might'ſt repoſſeſſe the Crowne in peace,
And of our Labours thou ſhalt reape the gaine.
Rich. Ile blaſt his Harueſt, if your head were laid,
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This ſhoulder was ordain'd ſo thicke, to heaue,
And heaue it ſhall ſome waight, or breake my backe,
Worke thou the way, and that ſhalt execute.
King. Clarence and Glouſter, loue my louely Queene,
And 'tis your Princely Nephew Brothers both.
Cla. The duty that I owe vnto your Maieſty,
I Seale vpon the lips of this ſweet Babe.
Cla. Thanke Noble Clarence, worthy brother thanks.
Rich. And that I loue the tree frõ whence ỹ ſprang'ſt
Witneſſe the louing kiſſe I giue the Fruite,
To ſay the truth, ſo Iudas kiſt his maſter,
And cried all haile, when as he meant all harme.
King. Now am I ſeated as my ſoule delights,
Hauing my Countries peace, and Brothers loues.
Clo. What will your Grace haue done with Margaret,
Reynard her Father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Ieruſalem,
And hither haue they ſent it for her ranſome.
King. Away with her, and waft her hence to France:
And now what reſts, but that we ſpend the time
With ſtately Triumphes, mirthfull Comicke ſhewes,
Such as befits the pleaſure of the Court.
Sound Drums and Trumpets, farwell ſowre annoy,
For heere I hope begins our laſting ioy. Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

e Tragedy of Richard the Third:

vith the Landing of Earle Richmond, and the Battell at Bosworth Field.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster solus.

ow is the Winter of our Discontent,
Made glorious Summer by this Son of Yorke:
And all the clouds that lowr'd vpon our house
In the deepe bosome of the Ocean buried.

ter Clarence and Brakenbury, guarded.

ood day: What meanes this armed guard
That waites vpon your Grace?

Cla. His Maiesty tendring my persons safety,
Hath appointed this Conduct, to conuey me to th' Tower

Rich. Vpon what cause?

Cla. Because my name is George.

Rich. Alacke my Lord, that fault is none of yours:
He should for that commit your Godfathers.
O belike, his Maiesty hath some intent,
That you should be new Christned in the Tower.
But what's the matter Clarence, may I know?

Cla. Yea Richard, when I know: but I protest
As yet I do not: But as I can learne,
He harkens after Prophesies and Dreames,
And from the Crosse-row pluckes the letter G:
And sayes, a Wizard told him, that by G,
His issue disinherited should be.
And for my name of George begins with G,
It followes in his thought, that I am he.
These (as I learne) and such like toyes as these,
Hath moou'd his Highnesse to commit me now.

Rich. Why this it is, when men are rul'd by Women
'Tis not the King that sends you to the Tower,
My Lady Grey his Wife, Clarence 'tis shee,
That tempts him to this harsh Extremity.
Was it not shee, and that good man of Worship,
Anthony Woodeuille her Brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower?
From whence this present day he is deliuered?
We are not safe Clarence, we are not safe.

Cla. By heauen, I thinke there is no man secure
But the Queenes Kindred, and night-walking Heralds,
That trudge betwixt the King, and Mistris Shore.
Heard you not what an humble Suppliant
Lord Hastings was, for her deliuery?

Rich. Humbly complaining to her Deitie,
Got my Lord Chamberlaine his libertie.
Ile tell you what, I thinke it is our way,
If we will keepe in fauour with the King,
To be her men, and weare her Liuery.
The iealous oreworne Widdow, and her selfe,
Since that our Brother dub'd them Gentlewomen,
Are mighty Gossips in our Monarchy.

Bra. I beseech your Graces both to pardon me,
His Maiesty hath straightly giuen in charge,
That no man shall haue priuate Conference
(Of what degree soeuer) with your Brother.

Rich.

Rich. Euen so,and please your Worship Brakenbury,
You may partake of any thing we say:
We speake no Treason man; We say the King
Is wise and vertuous, and his Noble Queene
Well strooke in yeares, faire,and not iealious.
We say, that Shores Wife hath a pretty Foot,
A cherry Lip, a bonny Eye, a pleasing pleasing tongue:
And that the Queenes Kindred are made gentle Folkes.
How say you sir? can you deny all this?

Bra. With this (my Lord) my selfe haue nought to doo.

Rich. Naught to do with Mistris Shore?
I tell thee Fellow, he that doth naught with her (Excepting one) were best to do it secretely alone.

Bra. What one, my Lord?

Rich. Her Husband Knaue, would'st thou betray me?

Bra. I do beseech your Grace
To pardon me, and withall forbeare
Your Conference with the Noble Duke.

Cla. We know thy charge Brakenbury, and will obey.

Rich. We are the Queenes abiects, and must obey.
Brother farewell, I will vnto the King,
And whatsoe're you will imploy me in,
Were it to call King Edwards Widdow, Sister,
I will performe it to enfranchise you.
Meane time, this deepe disgrace in Brotherhood,
Touches me deeper then you can imagine.

Cla. I know it pleaseth neither of vs well.

Rich. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long,
I will deliuer you, or else lye for you:
Meane time, haue patience.

Cla. I must perforce: Farewell. Exit Clar.

Rich Go treade the path that thou shalt ne're return:
Simple plaine Clarence, I do loue thee so,
That I will shortly send thy Soule to Heauen,
If Heauen will take the present at our hands.
But who comes heere? the new delliuered Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day vnto my gracious Lord.

Rich. As much vnto my good Lord Chamberlaine:
Well are you welcome to this open Ayre,
How hath your Lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience(Noble Lord)as prisoners must:
But I shall liue (my Lord) to giue them thankes
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Rich. No doubt,no doubt,and so shall Clarence too,
For they that were your Enemies,are his,
And haue preuail'd as much on him,as you.

Hast. More pitty,that the Eagles should be mew'd, Whiles Kites and Buzards play at liberty.

Rich. What newes abroad?

Hast. No newes so bad abroad,as this at home:
The King is sickly,weake,and melancholly,
And his Physitians feare him mightily.

Rich. Now by S. Iohn,that Newes is bad indeed
O he hath kept an euill Diet long,
And ouer-much consum'd his Royall Person:
'Tis very greeuous to be thought vpon.
Where is he, in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Rich. Go you before, and I will follow you. Exit Hastings.

He cannot liue I hope, and must not dye,
Till George be pack'd with post-horse vp to Heauen.
Ile in to vrge his hatred more to Clarence,
With Lyes well steel'd with weighty Arguments,
And if I faile not in my deepe intent,
Clarence hath not another day to liue:
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leaue the world for me to busie in.
For then, Ile marry Warwickes youngest daughter.
What though I kill'd her Husband,and her Father,
The readiest way to make the Wench amends,
Is to become her Husband,and her Father:
The which will I,not all so much for loue,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach vnto:
But yet I run before my horse to Market:
Clarence still breathes, Edward still liues and raignes,
When they are gone, then must I count my gaines. Exit

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Corse of Henrie the sixt with Halberds to guard it, Lady Anne being the Mourner.

Anne. Set downe,set downe your honourable load,
If Honor may be shrowded in a Herse;
Whil'st I a-while obsequiously lament
Th'vntimely fall of Vertuous Lancaster.
Poore key-cold Figure of a holy King,
Pale Ashes of the House of Lancaster;
Thou bloodlesse Remnant of that Royall Blood,
Be it lawfull that I inuocate thy Ghost,
To heare the Lamentations of poore Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughtred Sonne,
Stab'd by the selfesame hand that made these wounds.
Loe,in these windowes that let forth thy life,
I powre the helplesse Balme of my poore eyes.
O cursed be the hand that made these holes:
Cursed the Heart, that had the heart to do it:
Cursed the Blood, that let this blood from hence:
More direfull hap betide that hated Wretch
That makes vs wretched by the death of thee,
Then I can wish to Wolues,to Spiders,Toades,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that liues.
If euer he haue Childe, Abortiue be it,
Prodigeous, and vntimely brought to light,
Whose vgly and vnnaturall Aspect
May fright the hopefull Mother at the view,
And that be Heyre to his vnhappinesse.
If euer he haue Wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Then I am made by my young Lord,and thee.
Come now towards Chertsey with your holy Lode,
Taken from Paules, to be interred there
And still as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you,whiles I lament King Henries Corse.

Enter Richard Duke of Glocster

Rich. Stay you that beare the Corse,& set it downe.

An. What blacke Magitian coniures vp this Fiend,
To stop deuoted charitable deeds?

Rich. Villaines set downe the Corse,or by S. Paul,
Ile make a Corse of him that disobeyes.

Gen

My Lord ſtand backe, and let the Coffin paſſe.
. Vnmannerd Dogge,
t thou when I commaund:
ee thy Halbert higher then my breſt,
. Paul Ile ſtrike thee to my Foote, rne vpon thee Begger for thy boldneſſe.
. What do you tremble? are you all affraid?
blame you not, for you are Mortall,
ortall eyes cannot endure the Diuell.
hou dreadfull miniſter of Hell;
ad'ſt but power ouer his Mortall body,
le thou canſt not haue: Therefore be gone.
. Sweet Saint, for Charity, be not ſo curſt.
Foule Diuell,
ds ſake hence, and trouble vs not,
u haſt made the happy earth thy Hell:
with curſing ſtrikes, and deepe exclaimes:
delight to view thy heynous deeds,
this poſterne of thy Butcheries.
ntlemen, ſee, ſee dead Henries wounds,
eir congeal'd mouthes, and bleed afreſh.
ſuſh, thou lumpe of ſowle Deformitie:
thy preſence that exhales this blood
ld and empty Veines where no blood dwels.
eds inhumane and vnnaturall,
es this Deluge moſt vnnaturall.
which this Blood mad'ſt, reuenge his death:
which this Blood drink'ſt, reuenge his death.
Heau'n with Lightning ſtrike the murth'rer dead:
h gape open wide, and eate him quicke,
doſt ſwallow vp this good Kings blood,
his Hell-gouern'd arme hath butchered.
Lady, you know no Rules of Charity, renders good for bad, Bleſſings for Curſes.
Villaine, thou know'ſt not law of God nor Man,
ſt ſo fierce, but know'es ſome touch of pitty.
But I know none, and therefore am no Beaſt.
O wonderfull, when diuels tell the truth!
More wonderfull, when Angels are ſo angry:
afe (diuine perfection of a Woman)
ſuppoſed Crimes, to giue me leaue anſtance, but to acquit my ſelfe.
Vouchſafe (diſus'd infection of man)
knowne euils, but to giue me leaue anſtance, to curſe thy curſed Selfe.
. Fairer then tongue can name thee, let me haue atient leyſure to excuſe my ſelfe.
Fouler then heart can thinke thee,
n'ſt make no excuſe currant,
ang thy ſelfe.
. By ſuch diſpaire, I ſhould accuſe my ſelfe.
And by diſpairing ſhalt thou ſtand excuſed,
ng worthy Vengeance on thy ſelfe,
d'ſt vnworthy ſlaughter vpon others.
. Say that I ſlew them not.
Then ſay they were not ſlaine:
d they are, and diuelliſh ſlaue by thee.
. I did not kill your Husband.
Why then he is aliue.
. Nay, he is dead, and ſlaine by Edwards hands.
In thy foule throat thou Ly'ſt,
Margaret ſaw
rd'rous Fluſhchion ſmoaking in his blood:
uch, thou once didd'ſt bend againſt her breſt,
thy Brothers beare aſide the point.
. I was prouoked by her ſlanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt, vpon my guiltleſſe Shoulders.
An. Thou was't prouoked by thy bloody minde,
That neuer dream'ſt on ought but Butcheries:
Did'ſt thou not kill this King?
Rich. I graunt ye.
An. Do'ſt graut me Hedge-hogge,
Then God graunt me too
Thou may'ſt be damned for that wicked deede,
O he was gentle, milde, and vertuous.
Rich. The better for the King of heauen that hath him.
An. He is in heauen, where thou ſhalt neuer come.
Rich. Let him thanke me, that holpe to ſend him thither:
For he was fitter for that place then earth.
An. And thou vnfit for any place, but hell.
Rich. Yes one place elſe, if you will heare me name it.
An. Some dungeon.
Rich. Your Bed-chamber.
An. Ill reſt betide the chamber where thou lyeſt.
Rich. So will it Madam, till I lye with you.
An. I hope ſo.
Rich. I know ſo. But gentle Lady Anne,
To leaue this keene encounter of our wittes,
And fall ſomething into a ſlower method.
Is not the cauſer of the timeleſſe deaths
Of theſe Plantagenets, Henrie and Edward,
As blamefull as the Executioner.
An. Thou was't the cauſe, and moſt accurſt effect.
Rich. Your beauty was the cauſe of that effect:
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my ſleepe,
To vndertake the death of all the world,
So I might liue one houre in your ſweet boſome.
An. If I thought that, I tell thee Homicide,
Theſe Nailes ſhould rent that beauty from my Cheekes.
Rich. Theſe eyes could not endure ſ beauties wrack,
You ſhould not blemiſh it, if I ſtood by;
As all the world is cheared by the Sunne,
So I by that: It is my day, my life.
An. Blacke night ore-ſhade thy day, & death thy life.
Rich. Curſe not thy ſelfe faire Creature,
Thou art both.
An. I would I were, to be reueng'd on thee.
Rich. It is a quarrell moſt vnnaturall,
To be reueng'd on him that loueth thee.
An. It is a quarrell iuſt and reaſonable,
To be reueng'd on him that kill'd my Husband.
Rich. He that bereft the Lady of thy Husband,
Did it to helpe thee to a better Husband.
An. His better doth not breath vpon the earth.
Rich. He liues, that loues thee better then he could.
An. Name him.
Rich. Plantagenet.
An. Why that was he.
Rich. The ſelfeſame name, but one of better Nature.
An. Where is he?
Rich. Heere: Spits at him.
Why doſt thou ſpit at me.
An. Would it were mortall poyſon, for thy ſake.
Rich. Neuer came poyſon from ſo ſweet a place.
An. Neuer hung poyſon on a fowler Toade.
Out of my ſight, thou doſt infect mine eyes.
Rich. Thine eyes (ſweet Lady) haue infected mine.
An. Would they were Baſiliskes, to ſtrike thee dead.
Rich. I would they were, that I might dye at once:
For now they kill me with a liuing death.
Thoſe eyes of thine, from mine haue drawne ſalt Teares;

For

Sham'd their Aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorsefull teare,
No, when my Father Yorke, and Edward wept,
To heare the pittious moane that Rutland made
When black-fac'd Clifford shooke his sword at him.
Nor when thy warlike Father like a Childe,
Told the sad storie of my Fathers death,
And twenty times, made pause to sob and weepe:
That all the standers by had wet their cheekes
Like Trees bedash'd with raine. In that sad time,
My manly eyes did scorne an humble teare:
And what these sorrowes could not thence exhale,
Thy Beauty hath, and made them blinde with weeping.
I never sued to Friend, nor Enemy:
My Tongue could never learne sweet smoothing word.
But now thy Beauty is propos'd my Fee,
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speake.
She looketh scornefully at him.
Teach not thy lip such Scorne; for it was made
For kissing Lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengefull heart cannot forgiue,
Lo heere I lend thee this sharpe-pointed Sword,
Which if thou please to hide in this true breft,
And let the Soule forth that adoreth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly begge the death vpon my knee.
He layes his breft open, she offers at with his sword.
Nay do not pause: For I did kill King Henrie,
But 'twas thy Beauty that prouoked me.
Nay now dispatch: 'Twas I that stabb'd yong Edward,
But 'twas thy Heauenly face that set me on.
She falls the Sword.
Take vp the Sword againe, or take vp me.
An. Arise Dissembler, though I wish thy death,
I will not be thy Executioner.
Rich. Then bid me kill my selfe, and I will do it.
An. I haue already.
Rich. That was in thy rage:
Speake it againe, and euen with the word,
This hand, which for thy loue, did kill thy Loue,
Shall for thy loue, kill a farre truer Loue,
To both their deaths shalt thou be accessary.
An. I would I knew thy heart.
Rich. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.
An. I feare me, both are false.
Rich. Then neuer Man was true.
An. Well, well, put vp your Sword.
Rich. Say then my Peace is made.
An. That shalt thou know hereafter.
Rich. But shall I liue in hope.
An. All men I hope liue so.
Vouchsafe to weare this Ring.
Rich. Looke how my Ring incompasseth thy Finger,
Euen so thy Breft inclofeth my poore heart:
Weare both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy poore deuoted Seruant may
But beg one fauour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirme his happinesse for euer.
An. What is it?
Rich. That it may please you leaue these sad designes,
To him that hath most cause to be a Mourner,
And presently repayre to Crosbie House:
Where (after I haue solemnly interr'd
At Chertsey Monast'ry this Noble King,
And wet his Graue with my Repentant Teares)
I will with all expedient duty see you,
For diuers vnknowne Reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this Boon.
An. With all my heart, and much it ioyes me too,
To see you are become so penitent.
Tressel and Berkley, go along with me.
Rich. Bid me farewell.
An. 'Tis more then you deserue:
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I haue saide farewell already.
Exit two with Anne.
Gent. Towards Chertsey, Noble Lord?
Rich. Not to White Friars, there attend my comming.
Exit Gent.
Was euer woman in this humour woo'd?
Was euer woman in this humour wonne?
Ile haue her, but I will not keepe her long.
What? I that kill'd her Husband, and his Father,
To take her in her hearts extreamest hate,
With curses in her mouth, Teares in her eyes,
The bleeding witnesse of my hatred by,
Having God, her Conscience, and these bars against me,
And I, no Friends to backe my suite withall,
But the plaine Diuell, and dissembling looks?
And yet to winne her? All the world to nothing.
Hah!
Hath she forgot already that braue Prince,
Edward, her Lord, whom I (some three monthes since)
Stab'd in my angry mood, at Tewkesbury?
A sweeter, and a louelier Gentleman,
Fram'd in the prodigality of Nature:
Yong, Valiant, Wise, and (no doubt) right Royal,
The spacious World cannot againe affoord:
And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
That crept the Golden prime of this sweet Prince,
And made her Widdow to a woefull Bed?
On me, whose All not equals Edwards Moytie?
On me, that halts, and am misshapen thus?
My Dukedome, to a Beggerly denier!
I do mistake my person all this while:
Vpon my life she findes (although I cannot)
My selfe to be a marv'llous proper man.
Ile be at Charges for a Looking-glasse,
And entertaine a score or two of Taylors,
To study fashions to adorne my body:
Since I am crept in fauour with my selfe,
I will maintaine it with some little cost.
But first Ile turne yon Fellow in his Graue,
And then returne lamenting to my Loue.
Shine out faire Sunne, till I haue bought a glasse,
That I may see my Shadow as I passe. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the Queene Mother, Lord Riuers, and Lord Grey.

Riu. Haue patience Madam, ther's no doubt his Maiesty
Will soone recouer his accustom'd health.
Grey. In that you brooke it ill, it makes him worse,
Therefore for Gods sake entertaine good comfort,
And cheere his Grace with quicke and merry eyes.
Qu. If he were dead, what would betide on me?
Grey.

ad, what would betide on me?
other harme, but loſſe of ſuch a Lord.
loſſe of ſuch a Lord, includes all harmes.
Heavens haue bleſt you with a goodly Son, omforter, when he is gone.
he is yong; and his minority
e truſt of Richard Gloucſter, concluded he ſhall be Protector?

determin'd, not concluded yet:

ppineſſe is at the height.

Enter Richard.

Rich. ry do me wrong and I will not indure it,

rares with ſuch diſſentious Rumors.

ld a rancorous Enemy.
ine mean liue, and thinke no harme,
imple truth muſt be abus'd,

who in all this preſence ſpeaks your Grace?

aies ſcarſe a breathing while,
I trouble him with lewd complaints.
thee of Gloucſter, you miſtake the matter:

like) as your interiour hatred,
That in your outward action ſhewes it ſelfe
Againſt my Children, Brothers, and my Selfe,
Makes him to ſend, that he may learne the ground.
Rich. I cannot tell, the world is growne ſo bad,
That Wrens make prey, where Eagles dare not peirch.
Since euerie Iacke became a Gentleman,
There's many a gentle perſon made a Iacke.
Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother
You enuy my aduancement, and my friends: (Gloſter
God grant we neuer may haue neede of you.
Rich. Meane time, God grants that I haue need of you.
Our Brother is impriſon'd by your meanes,
My ſelfe diſgrac'd, and the Nobilitie
Held in contempt, while great Promotions
Are daily giuen to ennoble thoſe
That ſcarſe ſome two dayes ſince were worth a Noble.
Qu. By him that raiſ'd me to this carefull height,
From that contented hap which I inioy'd,
I neuer did incenſe his Maieſtie
Againſt the Duke of Clarence, but haue bin
An earneſt aduocate to plead for him.
My Lord you do me ſhamefull iniurie,
Falſely to draw me in theſe vile ſuſpects.
Rich. You may deny that you were not the meane
Of my Lord Haſtings late impriſonment
Riu. She may my Lord, for——
Rich. She may Lord Riuers, why who knowes not ſo?
She may do more ſir then denying that:
She may helpe you to many faire preferments,
And then deny her ayding hand therein,
And lay thoſe Honors on your high deſert.
What may ſhe not, ſhe may. I marry may ſhe.
Riu. What marry may ſhe?
Rich. What marrie may ſhe? Marrie with a King,
A Batchelor, and a handſome ſtripling too,
I wis your Grandam had a worſer match.
Qu. My Lord of Gloucſter, I haue too long borne
Your blunt vpbraidings, and your bitter ſcoffes:
By heauen, I will acquaint his Maieſtie
Of thoſe groſſe taunts that oft I haue endur'd.
I had rather be a Countrie ſeruant maide
Then a great Queene, with this condition,
To be ſo baited, ſcorn'd, and ſtormed at,
Small ioy haue I in being Englands Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And leſſned be that ſmall, God I beſeech him,
Thy honor, ſtate, and ſeate, is due to me.
Rich. What? threat you me with telling of the King?
I will auouch't in preſence of the King:
I dare aduenture to be ſent to th' Towre.
'Tis time to ſpeake,
My paines are quite forgot.
Margaret. Out Diuell,
I do remember them too well:
Thou kild'ſt my Husband Henrie in the Tower,
And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkeſburie.
Rich. Ere you were Queene,
I, or your Husband King:
I was a packe-horſe in his great affaires:
A weeder out of his proud Aduerſaries,
A liberall rewarder of his Friends,
To royalize his blood. I ſpent mine owne.
Margaret. I and much better blood
Then his, or thine.

Rich. In all which time, you and your Husband Grey
Were factious, for the House of Lancaster;
And Rivers, so were you: Was not your Husband,
In Margarets Battaile, at Saint Albons, slaine?
Let me put in your mindes, if you forget
What you have beene ere this, and what you are:
Withall, what I have beene, and what I am.

Q.M. A murth'rous Villaine, and so still thou art.

Rich. Poore Clarence did forsake his Father Warwicke,
I, and forswore himselfe (which Ieſu pardon.)

Q.M. Which God revenge.

Rich. To fight on Edwards partie, for the Crowne,
And for his meede, poore Lord, he is mewed up:
I would to God my heart were flint, like Edwards,
Or Edwards soft and pittifull, like mine:
I am too childish foolish for this World.

Q.M. Hye thee to Hell for shame, & leave this World
Thou Cacodemon, there thy Kingdome is.

Riv. My Lord of Glouster, in those busie dayes,
Which here you urge, to prove us Enemies,
We follow'd then our Lord, our Soveraigne King,
So should we you, if you should be our King.

Rich. If I should be? I had rather be a Pedler:
Farre be it from my heart, the thought thereof.

Qu. As little joy (my Lord) as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this Countries King,
As little joy you may suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the Queene thereof.

Q.M. A little joy enjoyes the Queene thereof,
For I am shee, and altogether joylesse:
I can no longer hold me patient.
Heare me, you wrangling Pyrates, that fall out,
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me:
Which of you trembles not, that lookes on me?
If not, that I am Queene, you bow like Subiects;
Yet that by you depos'd, you quake like Rebells.
Ah gentle Villaine, doe not turne away. (sight?

Rich. Foule wrinckled Witch, what mak'st thou in my

Q.M. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd,
That will I make, before I let thee goe.

Rich. Were thou not banished, on paine of death?

Q.M. I was: but I doe find more paine in banishment,
Then death can yeeld me here, by my abode.
A Husband and a Sonne thou ow'st to me,
And thou a Kingdome; all of you, allegeance:
This Sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the Pleasures you vsurpe, are mine.

Rich. The Curse my Noble Father layd on thee,
When thou didst Crowne his Warlike Browes with Paper
And with thy scornes drew'st Riuers from his eyes,
And then to dry them, gau'st the Duke a Clowt,
Steep'd in the faultlesse blood of pretty Rutland:
His Curses then, from bitternesse of Soule,
Denounc'd against thee, are all fallen vpon thee:
And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.

Qu. So iust is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that Babe,
And the most merciles, that ere was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselues wept when it was reported.

Dors No man but prophecied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.

Q.M. What? were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turne you all your hatred now on me?
Did Yorkes dread Curse prevaile so much with Heaven,
That Henries death, my lovely Edwards death,
Their Kingdomes losse, my wofull Banishment,
Should all but answer for that peevish Brat?
Can Curses pierce the Clouds, and enter Heaven?
Why then give way dull Clouds to my quick Curses.
Though not by Warre, by Surfeit dye your King,
As ours by Murther, to make him a King.
Edward thy Sonne, that now is Prince of Wales,
For Edward our Sonne, that was Prince of Wales,
Dye in his youth, by like untimely violence.
Thy selfe a Queene, for me that was a Queene,
Out-live thy glory, like my wretched selfe:
Long may'st thou live, to wayle thy Childrens death,
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy Rights, as thou art stall'd in mine.
Long dye thy happie dayes, before thy death,
And after many length'ned howres of griefe,
Dye neyther Mother, Wife, nor England's Queene.
Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by,
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings, when my Sonne
Was stab'd with bloody Daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live his naturall age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off.

Rich. Have done thy Charme, thou hateful wither'd Hagge.

Q.M. And leave out thee? stay Dog, for thou shalt heare me.
If Heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O let them keepe it, till thy sinnes be ripe,
And then hurle downe their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poore Worlds peace.
The Worme of Conscience still be-gnaw thy Soule,
Thy Friends suspect for Traytors while thou liv'st,
And take deepe Traytors for thy dearest Friends:
No sleepe close up that deadly Eye of thine,
Unlesse it be while some tormenting Dreame
Affrights thee with a Hell of ougly Deuills.
Thou elvish mark'd, abortive rooting Hogge,
Thou that wast seal'd in thy Nativitie
The slave of Nature, and the Sonne of Hell:
Thou slander of thy heavie Mothers Wombe,
Thou loathed Issue of thy Fathers Loynes,
Thou Ragge of Honor, thou detested—

Rich. Margaret.

Q.M. Richard Rich. Ha,

Q.M. I call thee not.

Rich. I cry thee mercie then: for I did thinke,
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q.M. Why so I did, but look'd for no reply.
Oh let me make the Period to my Curse.

Rich. 'Tis done by me, and ends in Margaret.

Qu. Thus have you breath'd your Curse against your self.

Q.M. Poore painted Queen, vain flourish of my fortune,
Why strew'st thou Sugar on that Bottel'd Spider,
Whose deadly Web ensnareth thee about?
Foole, foole, thou whet'st a Knife to kill thy selfe:
The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To helpe thee curse this poysonous Bunch-backt Toade.

Hast. False boding Woman, end thy frantick Curse,
Least to thy harme, thou move our patience.

Q.M. Foule shame upon you, you have all mov'd mine.

Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty.

Q.M. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,
Teach me to be your Queene, and you my Subiects:
O serve me well, and teach your selves that duty.

Dors. Dispute not with her, she is lunatticke.

Q.M. Peace Master Marquesse, you are malapert.
Your fire-new stampe of Honor is scarce current.

your yong Nobility could iudge
'twere to loſe it, and be miſerable.
that ſtand high, haue many blaſts to ſhake them,

b. Good counſaile marry, learne it, learne it Mar-

r. It touches you my Lord, as much as me.
b. I, and much more: but I was borne ſo high:
erie buildeth in the Cedars top,
allies with the winde, and ſcornes the Sunne.
r. And turnes the Sun to ſhade: alas, alas.
ſe my ſonne, now in the ſhade of death,
e bright out-ſhining beames, thy cloudy wrath
n eternall darkneſſe folded vp.
ipory buildeth in our ayeries Neſt:

wonne with blood, loſt be it ſo.
Peace, peace for ſhame: If not, for Charity.
r. Vrge neither charity, nor ſhame to me:
inably with me haue you dealt,
ameſully my hopes (by you) are butcher'd.
arity is outrage, Life my ſhame,
that ſhame, ſtill liue my ſorrowes rage.
c. Haue done, haue done.
r. O Princely Buckingham, Ile kiſſe thy hand, ne of League and amity with thee:
faire befall thee, and thy Noble houſe:
arments are not ſpotted with our blood:
hou within the compaſſe of my curſe.
c. Nor no one heere: for Curſes neuer paſſe ps of thoſe that breath them in the tyre.
r. I will not thinke but they aſcend the ſky, here awake Gods gentle ſleeping peace.
kingham, take heede of yonder dogges

h. What doth ſhe ſay, my Lord of Buckingham.
c. Nothing that I reſpect my gracious Lord.
r. What doſt thou ſcorne me
y gentle counſell?
ooth the diuell that I warne thee from.
remember this another day:
he ſhall ſplit thy very heart with ſorrow:

ach of you the ſubiects to his hate,

r. My haire doth ſtand an end to heare her curſes.
h. And ſo doth mine, I muſe why ſhe's at libertie.
b. I cannot blame her, by Gods holy mother, ſh had too much wrong, and I repent are thereof, that I haue done to her.
ar. I neuer did her any to my knowledge.
b. Yet you haue all the vantage of her wrong:
too hot, to do ſomebody good,
a too cold in thinking of it now:
y as for Clarence, he is well repayed:
frank'd vp to faſting for his paines,
pardon them, that are the cauſe thereof.
r. A vertuous, and a Chriſtian-like concluſion ay for them that haue done ſcath to vs.
b. So do I euer, being well aduis'd.
Speakes to himſelfe.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his Maieſty doth call for you,
And for your Grace, and yours my gracious Lord.
Qu. Catesby I come, Lords will you go with mee.
Riu. We wait vpon your Grace.
Exeunt all but Glo.
Ruch. I do the wrong, and firſt begin to brawle.
The ſecret Miſcheeſes that I ſet abroach,
I lay vnto the grieuous charge of others.
Clarence, who I indeede haue caſt in darkneſſe,
I do beweepe to many ſimple Gulles,
Namely to Derby, Haſtings, Buckingham,
And tell them 'tis the Queene, and her Allies,
That ſtirre the King againſt the Duke my Brother.
Now they beleeue it, and withall whet me
To be reueng'd on Riuers, Dorſet, Grey.
But then I ſigh, and with a peece of Scripture,
Tell them that God bids vs do good for euill:
And thus I cloath my naked Villanie
With odde old ends, ſtolne forth of holy Writ,
And ſeeme a Saint, when moſt I play the deuill.

Enter two murtherers.
But ſoft, heere come my Executioners,
How now my hardy ſtout reſolued Mates,
Are you now going to diſpatch this thing?
Vil. We are my Lord, and come to haue the Warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.
Ric. Well thought vpon, I haue it heere about me:
When you haue done, repayre to Crosby place:
But firſt be ſodaine in the execution,
Withall obdurate, do not heare him pleade:
For Clarence is well ſpoken, and perhappes
May moue your hearts to pitty, if you marke him.
Vil. Tut, tut, my Lord, we will not ſtand to prate.
Talkers are no good doers, be aſſur'd:
We go to vſe our hands, and not our tongues.
Rich. Your eyes drop Mill-ſtones, when Fooles eyes fall Teares:
I like you Lads, about your buſineſſe ſtraight.
Go, go, diſpatch.
Vil. We will my Noble Lord.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Clarence and Keeper.
Keep. Why lookes your Grace ſo heauily to day.
Cla. O, I haue paſt a miſerable night,
So full of feareſull Dreames, of vgly ſights,
That as I am a Chriſtian faithfull man,
I would not ſpend another ſuch a night
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy daies:
So full of diſmall terror was the time.
Keep. What was your dream my Lord, I pray you tel me
Cla. Me thoughts that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to croſſe to Burgundy,
And in my company my Brother Gloucſter,
Who from my Cabin tempted me to walke,
Vpon the Hatches: There we look'd toward England,
And cited vp a thouſand heauy times,

During the warres of Yorke and Lancaster
That had befalne vs. As we pac'd along
Vpon the giddy footing of the Hatches,
Me thought that Glouſter ſtumbled, and in falling
Strooke me (that thought to ſtay him) ouer-boord,
Into the tumbling billowes of the maine.
O Lord, me thought what paine it was to drowne,
What dreadfull noiſe of water in mine eares,
What ſights of vgly death within mine eyes.
Me thoughts, I ſaw a thouſand fearfull wrackes:
A thouſand men that Fiſhes gnaw'd vpon:
Wedges of Gold, great Anchors, heapes of Pearle,
Ineſtimable Stones, vnvalewed Jewels,
All ſcattred in the bottome of the Sea.
Some lay in dead-mens Sculles, and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in ſcorne of eyes) reflecting Gemmes,
That woo'd the ſlimy bottome of the deepe,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay ſcattred by.

Keep. Had you ſuch leyſure in the time of death
To gaze vpon theſe ſecrets of the deepe?

Cla. Me thought I had, and often did I ſtriue
To yeeld the Ghoſt: but ſtill the enuious Flood
Stop'd in my ſoule, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vaſt, and wand'ring ayre;
But ſmother'd it within my panting bulke,
Who almoſt burſt, to belch it in the Sea.

Keep. Awak'd you not in this ſore Agony?

Clar. No, no, my Dreame was lengthen'd after life.
O then, began the Tempeſt to my Soule.
I paſt (me thought) the Melancholly Flood,
With that ſowre Ferry-man which Poets write of,
Vnto the Kingdome of perpetuall Night.
The firſt that there did greet my Stranger-ſoule,
Was my great Father-in-Law, renowned Warwicke,
Who ſpake aloud: What ſcourge for Periurie,
Can this darke Monarchy affoord falſe Clarence?
And ſo he vaniſh'd. Then came wand'ring by,
A Shadow like an Angell, with bright hayre
Dabbel'd in blood, and he ſhriek'd out aloud
Clarence is come, falſe, fleeting, periur'd Clarence,
That ſtabb'd me in the field by Tewkeſbury:
Seize on him Furies, take him vnto Torment.
With that (me thought) a Legion of foule Fiends
Inuiron'd me, and howled in mine eares
Such hiddeous cries, that with the very Noiſe,
I (trembling) wak'd, and for a ſeaſon after,
Could not beleeue, but that I was in Hell,
Such terrible Impreſſion made my Dreame.

Keep. No maruell Lord, though it affrighted you,
I am affraid (me thinkes) to heare you tell it.

Cla. Ah Keeper, Keeper, I haue done theſe things
(That now giue euidence againſt my Soule)
For Edwards ſake, and ſee how he requites mee.
O God! if my deepe prayres cannot appeaſe thee,
But thou wilt be aueng'd on my miſdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone:
O ſpare my guiltleſſe Wife, and my poore children.
Keeper, I prythee ſit by me a-while,
My Soule is heauy, and I faine would ſleepe.

Keep. I will my Lord, God giue your Grace good reſt.

Enter Brakenbury the Lieutenant.

Bra. Sorrow breakes Seaſons, and repoſing houres,
Makes the Night Morning, and the Noon-tide night:
Princes haue but their Titles for their Glories,
An outward Honor, for an inward Toyle,
And for vnfelt Imaginations
They often feele a world of reſtleſſe Cares:
So that betweene their Titles, and low Name,
There's nothing differs, but the outward fame.

Enter two Murtherers.

1. Mur. Ho, who's here?

Bra. What would ſt thou Fellow? And how cam'ſt thou hither.

2. Mur. I would ſpeak with Clarence, and I came hither on my Legges.

Bra. What ſo breefe?

1. 'Tis better (Sir) then to be tedious:
Let him ſee our Commiſſion, and talke no more. Exit

Bra. I am in this, commanded to deliuer
The Noble Duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reaſon what is meant hereby,
Becauſe I will be guiltleſſe from the meaning.
There lies the Duke aſleepe, and there the Keyes.
Ile to the King, and ſignifie to him,
That thus I haue reſign'd to you my charge. Exit

1 You may ſir, 'tis a point of wiſe-dome:
Far you well.

2 What, ſhall we ſtab him as he ſleepes.

1 No: hee'l ſay 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes

2 Why he ſhall neuer wake, vntill the great Iudgment day.

1 Why then hee'l ſay, we ſtab'd him ſleeping.

2 The reuing of that word Iudgement, hath bred a kinde of remorſe in me.

1 What? art thou affraid?

2 Not to kill him, hauing a Warrant,
But to be damn'd for killing him, from the which
No Warrant can defend me.

1 I thought thou had'ſt him reſolute.

2 So I am, to let him liue.

1 Ile backe to the Duke of Glouſter, and tell him ſo.

2 Nay, I prythee ſtay a little:
I hope this paſſionate humor of mine, will change,
It was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

1 How do'ſt thou feele thy ſelfe now?

2 Some certaine dregges of conſcience are yet within mee.

1 Remember our Reward, when the deed's done.

2 Come, he dies: I had forgot the Reward.

1 Where's thy conſcience now.

2 O, in the Duke of Glouſters purſe.

1 When he opens his purſe to giue vs our Reward, thy Conſcience flyes out.

2 'Tis no matter, let it go: There's few or none will entertaine it.

1 What if it come to thee againe?

2 Ile not meddle with it, it makes a man a Coward:
A man cannot ſteale, but it accuſeth him: A man cannot Sweare, but it Checkes him: A man cannot lye with his Neighbours Wife, but it detecteth him. 'Tis a bluſhing ſhamefac'd ſpirit, that mutinies in a mans boſome: It filles a man full of Obſtacles. It made me once reſtore a Purſſe of Gold that (by chance) I found. It beggers any man that keepes it: It is turn'd out of Townes and Cities for a dangerous thing, and every man that meanes to liue well, endeuours to truſt to himſelfe, and liue without it.

1 'Tis

1 'Tis euen now at my elbow, perſwading me not to kill the Duke.

2 Take the deuell in thy minde, and beleeue him not: He would inſinuate with thee but to make thee ſigh.

1 I am ſtrong fram'd, he cannot preuaile with me.

2 Spoke like a tall man, that reſpects thy reputation. Come, ſhall we fall to worke?

1 Take him on the Coſtard, with the hilts of thy Sword, and then throw him into the Malmeſey-Butte in the next roome.

2 O excellent deuice; and make a ſop of him.

1 Soft, he wakes.

2 Strike.

1 No, wee'l reaſon with him.

Cla. Where art thou Keeper? Giue me a cup of wine.

1 You ſhall haue Wine enough my Lord anon.

Cla. In Gods name, what art thou?

1 A man, as you are.

Cla. But not as I am Royall.

1 Not you as we are, Loyall.

Cla. Thy voice is Thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1 My voice is now the Kings, my looks mine owne.

Cla. How darkly, and how deadly doſt thou ſpeake? Your eyes do menace me: why looke you pale? Who ſent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

2 To, to, to——

Cla. To murther me?

Both. I, I.

Cla. You ſcarſely haue the hearts to tell me ſo, And therefore cannot haue the hearts to do it. Wherein my Friends haue I offended you?

2 Offended vs you haue not, but the King.

Cla. I ſhall be reconcil'd to him againe.

2 Neuer my Lord, therefore prepare to dye.

Cla. Are you drawne forth among a world of men To ſlay the innocent? What is my offence? Where is the Euidence that doth accuſe me? What lawfull Queſt haue giuen their Verdict vp Vnto the frowning Iudge? Or who pronounc'd The bitter ſentence of poore Clarence death, Before I be convict by courſe of Law? To threaten me with death, is moſt vnlawfull. I charge you, as you hope for any goodneſſe, That you depart, and lay no hands on me: The deed you vndertake is damnable.

1 What we will do, we do vpon command.

2 And he that hath commanded, is our King.

Cla. Erroneous Vaſſals, the great King of Kings Hath in the Table of his Law commanded That thou ſhalt do no murther. Will you then Spurne at his Edict, and fulfill a Mans? Take heed: for he holds Vengeance in his hand, To hurle vpon their heads that breake his Law.

2 And that ſame Vengeance doth he hurle on thee, For falſe Forſwearing, and for murther too: Thou did'ſt receiue the Sacrament, to fight In quarrell of the Houſe of Lancaſter.

1 And like a Traitor to the name of God, Did'ſt breake that Vow, and with thy treacherous blade, Vnrip'ſt the Bowels of thy Sou'raignes Sonne.

2 Whom thou was't ſworne to cheriſh and defend.

1 How canſt thou vrge Gods dreadfull Law to vs, When thou haſt broke it in ſuch deere degree?

Cla. Alas! for whoſe ſake did I that ill deede? For Edward, for my Brother, for his ſake. He ſends you not to murther me for this: For in that ſinne, he is as deepe as I. If God will be auenged for the deed, O know you yet, he doth it publiquely, Take not the quarrell from his powerfull arme: He needs no indirect, or lawleſſe courſe, To cut off thoſe that haue offended him.

1 Who made thee then a bloody miniſter, When gallant ſpringing braue Plantagenet, That Princely Nouice was ſtrucke dead by thee?

Cla. My Brothers loue, the Diuell, and my Rage.

1 Thy Brothers Loue, our Duty, and thy Faults, Prouoke vs hither now, to ſlaughter thee.

Cla. If you do loue my Brother, hate not me: I am his Brother, and I loue him well. If you are hyr'd for meed, go backe againe, And I will ſend you to my Brother Gloucſter: Who ſhall reward you better for my life, Then Edward will for tydings of my death.

2 You are deceiu'd, Your Brother Gloucſter hates you.

Cla. Oh no, he loues me, and he holds me deere: Go you to him from me.

1 I ſo we will.

Cla. Tell him, when that our Princely Father Yorke, Bleſt his three Sonnes with his victorious Arme, He little thought of this diuided Friendſhip: Bid Gloucſter thinke on this, and he will weepe.

1 I Miſſtones, as he leſſoned vs to weepe.

Cla. O do not ſlander him, for he is kinde.

1 Right, as Snow in Harueſt: Come, you deceiue your ſelfe, 'Tis he that ſends vs to deſtroy you heere.

Cla. It cannot be, for he bewept my Fortune, And bugg'd me in his armes, and ſwore with ſobs, That he would labour my deliuery.

1 Why ſo he doth, when he deliuers you From this earths thraldome, to the ioyes of heauen.

2 Make peace with God, for you muſt die my Lord.

Cla. Haue you that holy feeling in your ſoules, To counſaile me to make my peace with God, And are you yet to your owne ſoules ſo blinde, That you will warre with God, by murd'ring me. O ſirs conſider, they that ſet you on To do this deede, will hate you for the deede.

2 What ſhall we do?

Clar. Relent, and ſaue your ſoules: Which of you, if you were a Princes Sonne, Being pent from Liberty, as I am now, If two ſuch murtherers as your ſelues came to you, Would not intreat for life, as you would begge Were you in my diſtreſſe.

1 Relent? no: 'Tis cowardly and womaniſh.

Cla. Not to relent, is beaſtly, ſauage, diuelliſh: My Friend, I ſpy ſome pitty in thy lookes: O, if thine eye be not a Flatterer, Come thou on my ſide, and intreate for me, A begging Prince, what begger pitties not.

2 Looke behinde you, my Lord.

1 Take that, and that, if all this will not do, Stabs him. Ile drowne you in the Malmeſey-But within. Exit.

2 A bloody deed, and deſperately diſpatcht: How faine (like Pilate) would I waſh my hands Of this moſt greeuous murther. Enter 1. Murtherer

1 How now? what mean'ſt thou that thou help'ſt me not? By Heauen the Duke ſhall know how ſlacke you haue beene.

2. Mur. I would he knew that I had ſau'd his brother,
Take thou the Fee, and tell him what I ſay,
For I repent me that the Duke is ſlaine. Exit.

1. Mur. So do not I: go Coward as thou art.
Well, ſlle go hide the body in ſome hole,
Till that the Duke giue order for his buriall:
And when I haue my meede, I will away,
For this will out, and then I muſt not ſtay. Exit

Actus Secundus. Scoen Prima.

Flourish.

Enter the King ſicke the Queene, Lord Marqueſſe Dorſet, Rivers, Haſtings, Catesby, Buckingham, Woodvill.

King. Why ſo: now haue I done a good daies work.
You Peeres, continue this vnited League:
I, every day expect an Embaſſage
From my Redeemer, to redeeme me hence.
And more to peace my ſoule ſhall part to heauen,
Since I haue made my Friends at peace on earth.
Dorſet and Rivers, take each others hand,
Diſſemble not your hatred, Sweare your loue.
Riu. By heauen, my ſoule is purg'd from grudging hate
And with my hand I ſeale my true hearts Loue.
Haſt. So thriue I, as I truly ſweare the like.
King. Take heed you dally not before your King,
Leſt he that is the ſupreme King of Kings
Confound your hidden falſhood, and award
Either of you to be the others end.
Haſt. So proſper I, as I ſweare perfect loue.
Riu. And I, as I loue Haſtings with my heart.
King. Madam, your ſelfe is not exempt from this:
Nor you Sonne Dorſet, Buckingham nor you;
You haue beene factious one againſt the other.
Wife, loue Lord Haſtings, let him kiſſe your hand,
And what you do, do it vnfeignedly.
Qu. There Haſtings, I will neuer more remember
Our former hatred, ſo thriue I, and mine.
King. Dorſet, imbrace him:
Haſtings, loue Lord Marqueſſe.
Dor. This interchange of loue, I heere proteſt
Vpon my part, ſhall be inuiolable.
Haſt. And ſo ſweare I.
King. Now Princely Buckingham, ſeale ſt this league
With thy embracements to my wiues Allies,
And make me happy in your vnity.
Buc. When euer Buckingham doth turne his hate
Vpon your Grace, but with all dutious loue,
Doth cheriſh you, and yours, God puniſh me
With hate in thoſe where I expect moſt loue,
When I haue moſt need to imploy a Friend,
And moſt aſſured that he is a Friend,
Deepe, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he vnto me: This do I begge of heauen,
When I am cold in loue, to you, or yours. Embrace
King. A pleaſing Cordiall, Princely Buckingham,
Is this thy Vow, vnto my ſickely heart:
There wanteth now our Brother Gloſter heere,
To make the bleſſed period of this peace.
Buc. And in good time,
Heere comes Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and the Duke.

Enter Ratcliffe, and Gloſter.

Rich. Good morrow to my Soueraigne King & Queen,
And Princely Peeres, a happy time of day.
King. Happy indeed, as we haue ſpent the day.
Gloſter, we haue done deeds of Charity,
Made peace of enmity, faire loue of hate,
Betweene theſe ſwelling wrong incenſed Peeres.
Rich. A bleſſed labour my moſt Soueraigne Lord.
Among this Princely heape, if any heere
By falſe intelligence, or wrong ſurmize
Hold me a Foe. If I vnwillingly, or in my rage,
Haue ought committed that is hardly borne,
To any in this preſence, I deſire
To reconcile me to his Friendly peace:
'Tis death to me to be at enmitie:
I hate it, and deſire all good mens loue,
Firſt Madam, I intreate true peace of you,
Which I will purchaſe with my dutious ſeruice.
Of you my Noble Coſin Buckingham,
If euer any grudge were lodg'd betweene vs.
Of you and you, Lord Rivers and of Dorſet,
That all without deſert haue frown'd on me:
Of you Lord Woodvill, and Lord Scales of you,
Dukes, Earles, Lords, Gentlemen, indeed of all.
I do not know that Engliſhman aliue,
With whom my ſoule is any iot at odds,
More then the Infant that is borne to night:
I thanke my God for my Humility.
Qu. A holy day ſhall this be kept heereafter:
I would to God all ſtrifes were well compounded.
My Soueraigne Lord, I do beſeech your Highneſſe
To take our Brother Clarence to your Grace.
Rich. Why Madam, haue I offred loue for this,
To be ſo flowted in this Royall preſence?
Who knowes not that the gentle Duke is dead? They
You do him injurie to ſcorne his Coarſe. all ſtart.
King. Who knowes not he is dead?
Who knowes he is?
Qu. All-ſeeing heauen, what a world is this?
Buc. Looke I ſo pale Lord Dorſet, as the reſt?
Dor. I my good Lord, and no man in the preſence,
But his red colour hath forſooke his cheekes.
King. Is Clarence dead? The Order was reuerſ.
Rich. But he (poore man) by your firſt order dyde
And that a winged Mercurie did beare:
Some tardie Cripple bare the Countermand,
That came too lagge to ſee him buried.
God grant, that ſome leſſe Noble, and leſſe Loyall,
Neerer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deſerue not worſe then wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from Suſpition.

Enter Earle of Derby.

Der. A boone my Soueraigne for my ſeruice done.
King. I prethee peace, my ſoule is full of ſorrow.
Der. I will not riſe, vnleſſe your Highnes heare me.
King Then ſay at once, what is it thou requeſt.
Der. The forfeit (Soueraigne) of my ſeruants life.
Who ſlew to day a Riotous Gentleman,
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolke.
King. Haue I a tongue to doome my Brothers death?
And ſhall that tongue giue pardon to a ſlaue?
My Brother kill'd no man, his fault was Thought,
And yet his puniſhment was bitter death.

Who

ued to me for him? Who (in my wrath)
d and my feet, and bid me be aduis'd?
poke of Brother-hood? who ſpoke of loue?
old me how the poore ſoule did forſake
ighty Warwicke, and did fight for me?
old me in the field at Tewkesbury,
Oxford had me downe, he reſcued me:
id deare Brother liue, and be a King?
old me, when we both lay in the Field, (almoſt) to death, how he did lap me his Garments, and did giue himſelfe in and naked) to the numbe cold night?
from my Remembrance, brutiſh wrath plucket, and not a man of you much grace to put it in my minde.
en your Carters, or your waiting Vaſſails
one a drunken Slaughter, and defac'd cious Image of our deere Redeemer, raight art on your knees for Pardon, pardon, (vniuſtly too) muſt grant it you.
my Brother, not a man would ſpeake, vngracious) ſpeake vnto my ſelfe poore Soule. The proudeſt of you all, in beholding to him in his life:
ne of you, would once begge for his life.
! I feare thy iuſtice will take hold
, and you, and mine, and yours for this.
Haſtings helpe me to my Cloſſet.
re Clarence. Exeunt ſome with K. & Queen.
. This is the fruits of raſhnes: Marke you not,
at the guilty Kindred of the Queene
pale, when they did heare of Clarence death.
did vrge it ſtill vnto the King, ill reuenge it. Come Lords will you go,
nfort Edward with our company.
. We wait vpon your Grace. exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the old Dutcheſſe of Yorke, with the two children of Clarence.

. Good Grandam tell vs, is our Father dead?
ch. No Boy.
gr. Why do weepe ſo oft? And beate your Breſt?
y, O Clarence, my vnhappy Sonne.
. Why do you looke on vs, and ſhake your head,
ll vs Orphans, Wretches, Caſtawayes,
our Noble Father were aliue?
. My pretty Coſins, you miſtake me both,
ment the ſickneſſe of the King,
h to loſe him, not your Fathers death:
loſt ſorrow to waile one that's loſt.
. Then you conclude, (my Grandam) he is dead:
ng mine Vncle is too blame for it.
ill reuenge it, whom I will importune arneſt prayers, all to that effect.
gr. And ſo will I.
Peace children peace, the King doth loue you wel.
able, and ſhallow innocents,
not gueſſe who cauſ'd your Fathers death.
Grandam we can for my good Vncle Gloſter
Told me, the King prouok'd to it by the Queene, Deuis'd impeachments to impriſon him:
And when my Vncle told me ſo, he wept,
And pittied me, and kindly kiſt my cheeke:
Bad me rely on him, as on my Father,
And he would loue me deerely as a childe.
Duc. Ah! that Deceit ſhould ſteale ſuch gentle ſhape,
And with a vertuous Vizor hide deepe vice.
He is my ſonne, I, and therein my ſhame,
Yet from my dugges, he drew not this deceit.
Boy. Thinke you my Vncle did diſſemble Grandam?
Duc. I Boy.
Boy. I cannot thinke it. Hearke, what noiſe is this?

Enter the Queene with her haire about her eares, Riuers & Dorſet after her.

Qu. Ah! who ſhall hinder me to waile and weepe?
To chide my Fortune, and torment my Selfe.
Ile ioyne with blacke diſpaire againſt my Soule,
And to my ſelfe, become an enemie.
Duc. What meanes this Scene of rude impatience?
Qu. To make an act of Tragicke violence.
Edward my Lord, thy Sonne, our King is dead.
Why grow the Branches, when the Roote is gone?
Why wither not the leaues that want their ſap?
If you will liue, Lament: if dye, be breefe,
That our ſwift-winged Soules may catch the Kings,
Or like obedient Subiects follow him,
To his new Kingdome of ner-changing night.
Duc. Ah ſo much intereſt haue in thy ſorrow,
As I had Title in thy Noble Husband:
I haue bewept a worthy Husbands death,
And liu'd with looking on his Images:
But now two Mirrors of his Princely ſemblance,
Are crack'd in pieces, by malignant death,
And I for comfort, haue but one falſe Glaſſe,
That greeues me, when I ſee my ſhame in him.
Thou art a Widdow: yet thou art a Mother,
And haſt the comfort of thy Children left,
But death hath ſnatch'd my Husband from mine Armes,
And pluckt two Crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what cauſe haue I,
(Thine being but a moity of my moane)
To ouer-go thy woes, and drowne thy cries.
Boy. Ah Aunt! you wept not for our Fathers death:
How can we ayde you with our Kindred teares?
Daugh. Our Fatherleſſe diſtreſſe was left vnmoan'd,
Your widdow-dolour, likewiſe be vnwept.
Qu. Giue me no helpe in Lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth complaints:
All Springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I being gouern'd by the watery Moone,
May ſend forth plenteous teares to drowne the World.
Ah, for my Husband, for my deere Lord Edward.
Chil. Ah for our Father, for our deere Lord Clarence.
Duc. Alas for both, both mine Edward and Clarence.
Qu. What ſtay had I but Edward, and he's gone?
Chil. What ſtay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.
Duc. What ſtayes had I, but they? and they are gone.
Qu. Was neuer widdow had ſo deere a loſſe.
Chil. Were neuer Orphans had ſo deere a loſſe.
Duc. Was neuer Mother had ſo deere a loſſe.
Alas! I am the Mother of theſe Greefes,
Their woes are parcell'd, mine is generall.
She for an Edward weepes, and ſo do I:

I for a Clarence weepes, ſo doth not ſhee:
Theſe Babes for Clarence weepe, ſo do not they.
Alas! you three, on me threefold diſtreſt:
Powre all your teares, I am your ſorrowes Nurſe,
And I will pamper it with Lamentation.

Dor. Comfort deere Mother, God is much diſpleas'd,
That you take with unthankfulneſſe his doing.
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungratefull,
With dull unwillingneſſe to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent:
Much more to be thus oppoſite with heauen,
For it requires the Royall debt it lent you.

Riuers. Madam, bethinke you like a carefull Mother
Of the young Prince your ſonne: ſend ſtraight for him,
Let him be Crown'd, in him your comfort liues.
Drowne deſperate ſorrow in dead Edwards graue,
And plant your ioyes in liuing Edwards Throne.

Enter Richard, Buckingham, Derbie, Haſtings, and Ratcliffe.

Rich. Siſter haue comfort, all of vs haue cauſe
To waile the dimming of our ſhining Starre:
But none can helpe our harmes by wayling them.
Madam, my Mother, I do cry you mercie,
I did not ſee your Grace. Humbly on my knee,
I ſeaſe your Bleſſing.

Duc. God bleſſe thee, and put meekneſs in thy breaſt,
Loue Charity, Obedience, and true Dutie.

Rich. Amen, and make me die a good old man,
That is the butt-end of a Mothers bleſſing;
I marueil that her Grace did leaue it out.

Buc. You cloudy-Princes, & hart-ſorowing-Peeres,
That beare this heauie mutuall load of Mone,
Now cheere each other, in each others Loue:
Though we haue ſpent our Harueſt of this King.
We are to reape the Harueſt of his Sonne.
The broken rancour of your high-ſwolne hates,
But lately ſplinter'd, knit, and ioyn'd together,
Muſt gently be preſerv'd, cheriſht, and kept:
Me ſeemeth good, that with ſome little Traine,
Forthwith from Ludlow, the young Prince be fet
Hither to London, to be crown'd our King.

Riuers. Why with ſome little Traine,
My Lord of Buckingham?

Buc. Marrie my Lord, leaſt by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of Malice ſhould breake out,
Which would be ſo much the more dangerous,
By how much the eſtate is greene, and yet vngouern'd.
Where euery Horſe beares his commanding Reine,
And may direct his courſe as pleaſe himſelfe.
As well the feare of harme, as harme apparant,
In my opinion, ought to be preuented.

Rich. I hope the King made peace with all of vs,
And the compact is firme, and true in me.

Riu. And ſo in me, and ſo (I thinke) in all.
Yet ſince it is but greene, it ſhould be put
To no apparant likely-hood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be vrg'd:
Therefore I ſay with Noble Buckingham,
That it is meete ſo few ſhould fetch the Prince.

Haſt. And ſo ſay I.

Rich. Then be it ſo, and go we to determine
Who they ſhall be that ſtrait ſhall poſte to London.
Madam, and you my Siſter, will you go
To giue your cenſures in this buſineſſe. Exeunt

Manet Buckingham, and Richard.

Buc. My Lord, who euer iourney's to the Prince,
For God ſake let not vs two ſtay at home:
For by the way, Ile ſort occaſion,
As Index to the ſtory we late talk'd of,
To part the Queenes proud Kindred from the Prince.

Rich. My other ſelfe, my Counſailes Conſiſtory,
My Oracle, My Prophet, my deere Coſin,
I, as a childe, will go by thy direction,
Toward London then, for wee'l not ſtay behinde. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter one Citizen at one doore, and another at the other.

1 Ci. Good morrow Neighbour, whether a-ſtaſt?

2 Cit. I promiſe you, I ſcarſely know my ſelfe:
Heare you the newes abroad?

1. Yes, that the King is dead.

2. Ill newes by'rlady, ſeldome comes the better:
I feare, I feare, 'twill proue a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3. Neighbours, God ſpeed.

1. Giue you good morrow ſir.

3. Doth the newes hold of good king Edwards death?

2. I ſir, it is too true, God helpe the while.

3. Then Maſters looke to ſee a troubleous world.

1. No, no, by Gods good grace, his Son ſhall reigne.

3. Woe to that Land that's gouern'd by a Childe.

2. In him there is a hope of Gouernment,
Which in his nonage, counſell vnder him,
And in his full and ripened yeares, himſelfe
No doubt ſhall then, and till then gouerne well.

1. So ſtood the State, when Henry the ſixt
Was crown'd in Paris, but a mone months old.

3. Stood the State ſo? No, no, good friends God wot
For then this Land was famouſly enrich'd
With politike graue Counſell; then the King
Had vertuous Vnkles to protect his Grace.

1. Why ſo hath this, both by his Father and Mother

3. Better it were they all came by his Fathers
Or by his Father there were none at all:
For emulation, who ſhall now be neereſt,
Will touch vs all too neere, if God preuent not.
O full of danger is the Duke of Glouſter,
And the Queenes Sons, and Brothers, haught and proud
And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This ſickly Land, might ſolace as before.

1. Come, come, we feare the worſt: all will be well.

3. When Clouds are ſeen, wiſemen put on their cloakes
When great leaues fall, then Winter is at hand;
When the Sun ſets, who doth not looke for night?
Vntimely ſtormes, makes men expect a Deluge:
All may be well; but if God ſort it ſo,
'Tis more then we deſerue, or I expect.

2. Truly, the hearts of men are full of feare:
You cannot reaſon (almoſt) with a man,
That looks not heauily, and full of dreed

3. Before the dayes of Change, ſtill is it ſo,
By a diuine inſtinct, mens mindes miſtruſt

Ensuing

g danger: as by proofe we see ater ſwell before a boyſt'rous ſtorme:
e it all to God. Whither away?
larry we were ſent for to the Iuſtices.
nd ſo was I: Ile beare you company. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Arch-Biſhop yong Yorke, the Queene, and the Ducheſſe

h. Laſt night I heard they lay at Stony Stratford, Northampton they do reſt to night:
row, or next day, they will be heere.
I long with all my heart to ſee the Prince:
he is much growne ſince laſt I ſaw him.
But I heare no, they ſay my ſonne of Yorke moſt ouertane him in his growth.
r. I Mother, but I would not haue it ſo.
Why my good Coſin, it is good to grow.
Grandam, one night as we did ſit at Supper,
kie Riuers talk'd how I did grow
hen my Brother, I quoth my Vnkle Glouſter, Herbes haue grace, great Weeds do grow apace.
ace, me thinkes I would not grow ſo faſt,
t ſweet Flowres are ſlow, and Weeds make haſt.
Good faith, good faith, the ſaying did not hold that did obiect the ſame to thee.
the wretched'ſt thing when he was yong,
g growing, and ſo leyſurely,
his rule were true, he ſhould be gracious.
And ſo no doubt he is, my gracious Madam.
I hope he is, but yet let Mothers doubt.
Now by my troth, if I had beene remembred,
I haue giuen my Vnkles Grace, a ſlout,
ch his growth, nearer then he toucht mine.
How my yong Yorke,
ue let me heare it.
Marry (they ſay) my Vnkle grew ſo faſt,
e could gnaw a cruſt at two houres old,
full two yeares ere I could get a tooth.
am, this would haue beene a byting Ieſt.
I prythee pretty Yorke, who told thee this?
Grandam, his Nurſſe.
His Nurſe? why ſhe was dead, ere'r was borne.
If't were not ſhe, I cannot tell who told me.
A parlous Boy: go too, you are too ſhrew'd.
Good Madam, be not angry with the Childe.
Pitchers haue eares.

Enter a Meſſenger.

h. Heere comes a Meſſenger: What Newes?
Such newes my Lord, as grieues me to report.
How doth the Prince?
Well Madam, and in health.
What is thy Newes?
Lord Riuers, and Lord Grey,
t to Pomfret, and with them,
mas Vaughan, Priſoners.
Who hath commanded them?
The mighty Dukes, Glouſter and Buckingham.
Arch. For what offence?
Mef. The ſumme of all I can, I haue diſcloſ'd:
Why, or for what, the Nobles were committed,
Is all vnknowne to me, my gracious Lord.
Qu. Aye me! I ſee the ruine of my Houſe:
The Tyger now hath ſeiz'd the gentle Hinde,
Inſulting Tirranny beginnes to Iutt
Vpon the innocent and aweleſſe Throne:
Welcome Deſtruction, Blood, and Maſſacre,
I ſee (as in a Map) the end of all.
Duc. Accurſed, and vnquiet wrangling dayes,
How many of you haue mine eyes beheld?
My Husband loſt his life, to get the Crowne,
And often vp and downe my ſonnes were toſt
For me to ioy, and weepe, their gaine and loſſe.
And being ſeated, and Domeſticke broyles
Cleane ouer-blowne, themſelues the Conquerors,
Make warre vpon themſelues, Brother to Brother;
Blood to blood, ſelfe againſt ſelfe: O prepoſterous
And franticke outrage, end thy damned ſpleene,
Or let me dye, to looke on earth no more.
Qu. Come, come my Boy, we will to Sanctuary.
Madam, farwell.
Duc. Stay, I will go with you.
Qu. You haue no cauſe.
Arch. My gracious Lady go,
And thether beare your Treaſure and your Goodes,
For my part, Ile reſigne vnto your Grace
The Seale I keepe, and ſo betide to me,
As well I tender you, and all of yours.
Go, Ile conduct you to the Sanctuary. Exeunt

Actus Tertius. Scœna Prima.

The Trumpets ſound.
Enter yong Prince, the Dukes of Glouceſter, and Buckingham, Lord Cardinall, with others.

Buc. Welcome ſweete Prince to London,
To your Chamber.
Rich. Welcome deere Coſin, my thoughts Soueraign
The wearie way hath made you Melancholly.
Prin. No Vnkle, but our croſſes on the way,
Haue made it tedious, weariſome, and beſide,
I want more Vnkles heere to welcome me.
Rich. Sweet Prince, the vntainted vertue of your yeers
Hath not yet div'd into the Worlds deceit:
No more can you diſtinguiſh of a man,
Then of his outward ſhew, which God he knowes,
Seldome or neuer iumpeth with the heart.
Thoſe Vnkles which you want, were dangerous:
Your Grace attended to their ſugred words,
But look'd not on the poyſon of their hearts:
God keepe you from them, and from ſuch falſe Friends.
Prin. God keepe me from falſe Friends,
But they were none.
Rich. My Lord, the Maior of London comes to greet you.

Enter Lord Maior.

La. Maior. God bleſſe your Grace, with health and happie dayes.
Prin. I thanke you, good my Lord, and thank you all:

I thought my Mother, and my Brother Yorke,
Would long, ere this, haue met vs on the way.
Fie, what a Slug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell vs, whether they will come, or no.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Buck. And in good time, heere comes the sweating Lord.

Prince. Welcome, my Lord: what, will our Mother come?

Hast. On what occasion God he knowes, not I;
The Queene your Mother, and your Brother Yorke,
Haue taken Sanctuarie: The tender Prince
Would faine haue come with me, to meet your Grace,
But by his Mother was perforce with-held.

Buck. Fie, what an indirect and peeuish course
Is this of hers? Lord Cardinall, will your Grace
Perswade the Queene, to send the Duke of Yorke Vnto his Princely Brother presently?
If she denie, Lord Hastings goe with him,
And from her iealous Armes pluck him perforce.

Card. My Lord of Buckingham, if my weake Oratorie
Can from his Mother winne the Duke of Yorke,
Anon expect him here: but if she be obdurate
To milde entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy Priuiledge
Of blessed Sanctuarie: not for all this Land,
Would I be guiltie of so great a sinne.

Buck. You are too senceleſse obstinate, my Lord,
Too ceremonious, and traditionall.
Weigh it but with the grossenesse of this Age,
You breake not Sanctuarie, in seizing him:
The benefit thereof is alwayes granted
To those, whose dealings haue deseru'd the place,
And those who haue the wit to clayme the place:
This Prince hath neyther claym'd it, nor deserv'd it,
And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot haue it.
Then taking him from thence, that is not there,
You breake no Priuiledge, nor Charter there:
Oft haue I heard of Sanctuarie men,
But Sanctuarie children, ne're till now.

Card. My Lord, you shall o're-rule my mind for once.
Come on, Lord Hastings, will you goe with me?

Hast. I goe, my Lord. Exit Cardinall and Hastings.

Prince. Good Lords, make all the speedie haſt you may.
Say, Vnckle Glocester, if our Brother come,
Where shall we sojourne, till our Coronation?

Glo. Where it think'ſt best vnto your Royall selfe.
If I may counsaile you, some day or two
Your Highnesse shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health, and recreation.

Prince. I doe not like the Tower, of any place:
Did Iulius Cæsar build that place, my Lord?

Buck. He did, my gracious Lord, begin that place,
Which since, succeeding Ages haue re-edify'd.

Prince. Is it vpon record? or else reported
Successiuely from age to age, he built it?

Buck. Vpon record, my gracious Lord.

Prince. But say, my Lord, it were not registred,
Me thinkes the truth should liue from age to age,
As 'twere retayl'd to all posteritie,
Euen to the generall ending day.

Glo. So wise, so young, they say doe neuer liue long.

Prince. What say you, Vnckle?

Glo. I say, without Characters, Fame liues long.
Thus, like the formall Vice, Iniquitie,
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Iulius Cæsar was a famous man,
With what his Valour did enrich his Wit,
His Wit set downe, to make his Valour liue:
Death makes no Conquest of his Conqueror,
For now he liues in Fame, though not in Life.
Ile tell you what, my Cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious Lord?

Prince. And if I liue vntil I be a man,
Ile win our ancient Right in France againe,
Or dye a Souldier, as I liu'd a King.

Glo. Short Summers lightly haue a forward Spring.

Enter young Yorke, Hastings, and Cardinall.

Buck. Now in good time, heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Prince. Richard of Yorke, how fares our Noble Brother?

Yorke. Well, my deare Lord, so must I call you now.

Prince. I, Brother, to our griefe, as it is yours:
Too late he dy'd, that might haue kept that Title,
Which by his death hath lost much Maiestie.

Glo. How fares our Cousin, Noble Lord of Yorke?

Yorke. I thanke you, gentle Vnckle. O my Lord,
You said, that idle Weeds are fast in growth:
The Prince, my Brother, hath out-growne me farre.

Glo. He hath, my Lord.

Yorke. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. Oh my faire Cousin, I must not say so.

Yorke. Then he is more beholding to you, than I.

Glo. He may command me as my Soueraigne,
But you haue power in me, as in a Kinsman.

Yorke. I pray you, Vnckle, giue me this Dagger.

Glo. My Dagger, little Cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A Begger, Brother?

Yorke. Of my kind Vnckle, that I know will giue,
And being but a Toy, which is no griefe to giue.

Glo. A greater gift then that, Ile giue my Cousin.

Yorke. A greater gift? O, that's the Sword to it.

Glo. I, gentle Cousin, were it light enough.

Yorke. O then I see, you will part but with light gifts,
In weightier things you'le say a Begger nay.

Glo. It is too weightie for your Grace to weare.

Yorke. I weigh it lightly, were it heauier.

Glo. What, would you haue my Weapon, little Lord?

Yorke. I would that I might thanke you, as, as, you call me.

Glo. How?

Yorke. Little.

Prince. My Lord of Yorke will still be crosse in talke:
Vnckle, your Grace knowes how to beare with him.

Yorke. You meane to beare me, not to beare with me:
Vnckle, my Brother mockes both you and me,
Because that I am little, like an Ape,
He thinkes that you should beare me on your shoulder.

Buck. With what a sharpe prouided wit he reasons:
To mitigate the scorne he giues his Vnckle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himselfe:
So cunning, and so young, is wonderfull.

Glo. My Lord, will't please you passe along?
My selfe, and my good Cousin Buckingham,
Will to your Mother, to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

Yorke. What.

…w. What, will you goe vnto the Tower, my Lord?
…ers. My Lord Protector will haue it ſo.
…y. I ſhall not ſleepe in quiet at the Tower.
… Why, what ſhould you feare?
…y. Marry, my Vncle Clarences angry Ghoſt:
…andom told me he was murther'd there.
…ers. I feare no Vnckles dead.
… Nor none that liue, I hope.
…ers. And if they liue, I hope I need not feare.
…me my Lord: and with a heauie heart,
…ing on them, goe I vnto the Tower.
Sonet. Exeunt Prince, Yorke, Haſtings, and Dorſet.

Manet Richard, Buckingham, and Catesby.

…. Shall we heare from you, Catesby, ere we ſleepe?
…. You ſhall, my Lord.
…. At Crosby Houſe, there ſhall you find vs both.
Exit Catesby.
…. Now, my Lord,
…hall wee doe, if wee perceiue

…. Chop off his Head:

Buck. Ile claime that promiſe at your Graces hand.
Rich. And looke to haue it yeelded with all kindneſſe.
Come, let vs ſuppe betimes, that afterwards
Wee may digeſt our complots in ſome forme.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter a Meſſenger to the Doore of Haſtings.

Meſſ. My Lord, my Lord.
Haſt. Who knockes?
Meſſ. One from the Lord Stanley.
Haſt. What is't a Clocke?
Meſſ. Vpon the ſtroke of foure.

Enter Lord Haſtings.

Haſt. Cannot my Lord Stanley ſleepe theſe tedious Nights?
Meſſ. So it appeares, by that I haue to ſay:
Firſt, he commends him to your Noble ſelfe.
Haſt. What then?
Meſſ. Then certifies your Lordſhip, that this Nighe
He dreamt, the Bore had raſed off his Helme:
Beſides, he ſayes there are two Councels kept;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th'other.
Therefore he ſends to know your Lordſhips pleaſure,
If you will preſently take Horſe with him,
And with all ſpeed poſt with him toward the North,
To ſhun the danger that his Soule diuines.
Haſt. Goe fellow, goe, returne vnto thy Lord,
Bid him not feare the ſeperated Councell:
His Honor and my ſelfe are at the one,
And at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceede, that toucheth vs,
Whereof I ſhall not haue intelligence:
Tell him his Feares are ſhallow, without inſtance.
And for his Dreames, I wonder he's ſo ſimple,
To truſt the mock'ry of vnquiet ſlumbers.
To fly the Bore, before the Bore purſues,
Were to incenſe the Bore to follow vs,
And make purſuit, where he did meane no chaſe.
Goe, bid thy Maſter riſe, and come to me,
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where he ſhall ſee the Bore will vſews kindly.
Meſſ. Ile goe, my Lord, and tell him what you ſay.
Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.
Haſt. Good morrow Catesby, you are early ſtirring:
What newes, what newes, in this our tott'ring State?
Cates. It is a reeling World indeed, my Lord:
And I beleeue will neuer ſtand vpright,
Till Richard weare the Garland of the Realme.
Haſt. How weare the Garland?
Doeſt thou meane the Crowne?
Cates. I, my good Lord.
Haſt. Ile haue this Crown of mine cut frō my ſhoulders,
Before Ile ſee the Crowne ſo foule miſ-plac'd:
But canſt thou gueſſe, that he doth ayme at it?

Cates. I,

I thought my Mother, and my Brother Yorke,
Would long ere this, haue met vs on the way.
Fie, what a Slug is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell vs, whether they will come, or no.

Enter Lord Hastings.

Haſt. I thanke thee, good Sir John, with all my heart.
I am in your debt, for your laſt Exerciſe:
Come the next Sabboth, and I will content you.
Prieſt. Ile waite vpon your Lordſhip.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. What, talking with a Prieſt, Lord Chamberlaine?
Your friends at Pomfret, they doe need the Prieſt,
Your Honor hath no ſhriuing worke in hand.
Haſt. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talke of, came into my minde.
What, goe you toward the Tower?
Buc. I doe, my Lord, but long I cannot ſtay there:
I ſhall returne before your Lordſhip, thence.

Come, will you goe?
Haſt. Ile waite vpon your Lordſhip. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliffe with Halbert &c. carrying the Nobles to death at Pomfret.

Riuers. Sir Richard Ratcliffe, let me tell thee this,
To day ſhalt thou behold a Subiect die,
For Truth, for Dutie, and for Loyaltie.
Grey. God bleſſe the Prince from all the Pack of you,
A Knot you are, of damned Blood-ſuckers.
Vaugh. You liue, that ſhall cry woe for this hereafter.
Rat. Diſpatch, the limit of your Liues is out.
Riuers. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody Priſon!
Fatall and ominous to Noble Peeres:
Within the guiltie Cloſure of thy Walls,
Richard the Second here was hackt to death:
And for more ſlander to thy diſmall Seat,
We giue to thee our guiltleſſe blood to drinke.
Grey. Now Margarets Curſe is falne vpon our Heads,
When ſhee exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
For ſtanding by, when Richard ſtab'd her Sonne.
Riuers. Then curs'd ſhee Richard,
Then curs'd ſhee Buckingham,
Then curs'd ſhee Haſtings. Oh remember God,
To heare her prayer for them, as now for vs:
And for my Siſter, and her Princely Sonnes,
Be ſatisfy'd, deare God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'ſt, vniuſtly muſt be ſpilt.
Rat. Make haſte, the houre of death is expirde.
Riuers. Come Grey, come Vaughan, let vs here imbrace.
Farewell, vntill we meet againe in Heauen.
Exeunt

Scæna Quarta.

... Derby, Hastings, Bishop of Ely, ...cliffe, Lovell, with others, ... a Table.

... Peeres, the cause why we are met,
... of the Coronation:
... same speake, when is the Royall day?
... Is all things ready for the Royall time?
Derb. It is, and wants but nomination.
Ely. To morrow then I iudge a happie day.
Buck. Who knowes the Lord Protectors mind herein?
Who is most inward with the Noble Duke?
Ely. Your Grace, we thinke, should soonest know his minde.
Buck. We know each others Faces: for our Hearts,
He knowes no more of mine, then I of yours,
Or I of his, my Lord, then you of mine:
Lord Hastings, you and he are neere in loue.
Hast. I thanke his Grace, I know he loues me well:
But for his purpose in the Coronation,
I haue not sounded him, nor he deliuer'd
His gracious pleasure any way therein:
But you, my Honorable Lords, may name the time,
And in the Dukes behalfe Ile giue my Voice,
Which I presume he'le take in gentle part.

Enter Gloucester.

Ely. In happie time, here comes the Duke himselfe.
Rich. My Noble Lords, and Cousins all, good morrow:
I haue beene long a sleeper: but I trust,
My absence doth neglect no great designe,
Which by my presence might haue beene concluded.
Buck. Had you not come vpon your Q. my Lord,
William, Lord Hastings, had pronounc'd your part;
I meane your Voice, for Crowning of the King.
Rich. Then my Lord Hastings, no man might be bolder,
His Lordship knowes me well, and loues me well.
My Lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborne,
I saw good Strawberries in your Garden there,
I doe beseech you, send for some of them.
Ely. Marry and will, my Lord, with all my heart.
Exit Bishop.
Rich. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.
Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our businesse,
And findes the testie Gentleman so hot,
That he will lose his Head, ere giue consent
His Masters Child, as wisely he termes it,
Shall lose the Royaltie of Englands Throne.
Buck. Withdraw your selfe a while, Ile goe with you.
Exeunt.
Derb. We haue not yet set downe this day of Triumph:
To morrow, in my iudgement, is too sudden,
For I my selfe am not so well prouided,
As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Enter the Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my Lord, the Duke of Glosters?
I haue sent for these Strawberries.
Ha. His Grace looks cheerfully & smooth this morning,
There's some conceit or other likes him well,
When that he bids good morrow with such spirit.
I thinke there's neuer a man in Christendome
Can lesser hide his loue, or hate, then hee,
For by his Face straight shall you know his Heart.
Derb. What of his Heart perceiue you in his Face,
By any liuelyhood he shew'd to day?
Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended:
For were he, he had shewne it in his Lookes.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham.

Rich. I pray you all, tell me what they deserue,
That doe conspire my death with diuelish Plots
Of damned Witchcraft, and that haue preuail'd
Vpon my Body with their Hellish Charmes.
Hast. The tender loue I beare your Grace, my Lord,
Makes me most forward, in this Princely presence,
To doome th'Offendors, whosoe're they be:
I say, my Lord, they haue deserued death.
Rich. Then be your eyes the witnesse of their euill.
Looke how I am bewitch'd: behold, mine Arme
Is like a blasted Sapling, wither'd vp:
And this is Edwards Wife, that monstrous Witch,
Consorted with that Harlot, Strumpet Shore,
That by their Witchcraft thus haue marked me.
Hast. If they haue done this deed, my Noble Lord.
Rich. If? thou Protector of this damned Strumpet,
Talk'st thou to me of Ifs? thou art a Traytor,
Off with his Head: now by Saint Paul I sweare,
I will not dine, vntill I see the same.
Lovell and Ratcliffe, looke that it be done: Exeunt.
The rest that loue me, rise, and follow me.

Manet Lovell and Ratcliffe, with the Lord Hastings.

Hast Woe, woe for England, not a whit for me,
For I, too fond, might haue preuented this:
Stanley did dreame, the Bore did rowse our Helmes,
And I did scorne it, and disdaine to flye:
Three times to day my Foot-Cloth-Horse did stumble,
And started, when he look'd vpon the Tower,
As loth to beare me to the slaughter-house.
O now I need the Priest, that spake to me:
I now repent I told the Pursuiuant,
As too triumphing, how mine Enemies
To day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I my selfe secure, in grace and fauour.
Oh Margaret, Margaret, now thy heauie Curse
Is lighted on poore Hastings wretched Head.
Ra. Come, come, dispatch, the Duke would be at dinner:
Make a short Shrift, he longs to see your Head.
Hast. O momentarie grace of mortall men,
Which we more hunt for, then the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in ayre of your good Lookes,
Liues like a drunken Sayler on a Mast,
Readie with euery Nod to tumble downe,
Into the fatall Bowels of the Deepe.
Lov. Come, come, dispatch, 'tis bootlesse to exclaime.
Hast. O bloody Richard: miserable England,
I prophecie the fearefull'st time to thee,
That euer wretched Age hath look'd vpon.
Come, lead me to the Block, beare him my Head,
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.
Exeunt.

Cates. I, on my life, and hopes to find you forward,
Vpon his partie, for the gaine thereof:
And thereupon he ſends you this good newes,
That this ſame very day your enemies,
The Kindred of the Queene, muſt dye at Pomfret.
Haſt. Indeed I am no mourner for that newes,
Becauſe they haue beene ſtill my aduerſaries:
But, that Ile giue my voice on Richards ſide,
To barre my Maſters Heires in true Deſcent,
God knowes I will not doe it, to the death.
Cates. God keepe your Lordſhip in that gracious minde.
Haſt. But I ſhall laugh at this a twelue-month hence,
That they which brought me in my Maſters hate,
I liue to looke vpon their Tragedie.
Well Catesby, ere a fort-night make me older,
Ile ſend ſome packing, that yet thinke not on't.
Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to dye, my gracious Lord,
When men are vnprepar'd, and looke not for it.
Haſt. O monſtrous, monſtrous! and ſo falls it out
With Riuers, Vaughan, Grey: and ſo 'twill doe
With ſome men elſe, that thinke themſelues as ſafe
As thou and I, who (as thou know'ſt) are deare
To Princely Richard, and to Buckingham.
Cates. The Princes both make high account of you,
For they account his Head vpon the Bridge.
Haſt. I know they doe, and I haue well deſeru'd it.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on, come on, where is your Boare-ſpeare man?
Feare you the Boare, and goe ſo vnprouided?
Stan. My Lord good morrow, good morrow Catesby:
You may ieaſt on, but by the holy Rood,
I doe not like theſe ſeuerall Councels, I.
Haſt. My Lord, I hold my Life as deare as yours,
And neuer in my dayes, I doe proteſt,
Was it ſo precious to me, as 'tis now:
Thinke you, but that I know our ſtate ſecure,
I would be ſo triumphant as I am?
Sta. The Lords at Pomfret, whē they rode from London,
Were iocund, and ſuppos'd their ſtates were ſure,
And they indeed had no cauſe to miſtruſt:
But yet you ſee, how ſoone the Day o're-caſt.
This ſudden ſtab of Rancour I miſdoubt:
Pray God (I ſay) I proue a needleſſe Coward.
What, ſhall we toward the Tower? the day is ſpent.
Haſt. Come, come, haue with you:
Wot you what, my Lord,
To day the Lords you talke of, are beheaded.
Sta. They, for their truth, might better wear their Heads,
Then ſome that haue accus'd them, wear their Hats,
But come, my Lord, let's away

Enter a Purſuiuant.

Haſt. Goe on before, Ile talke with this good fellow.
Exit Lord Stanley, and Catesby
How now, Sirrha? how goes the World with thee?
Purſ. The better, that your Lordſhip pleaſe to aske.
Haſt. I tell thee man, 'tis better with me now,
Then when thou met'ſt me laſt, where now we meet
Then was I going Priſoner to the Tower,
By the ſuggeſtion of the Queenes Allyes.
But now I tell thee (keepe it to thy ſelfe)
This day thoſe Enemies are put to death,
And I in better ſtate then ere I was.
Purſ. God hold it, to your Honors good content.
Haſt. Gramercie fellow: there, drinke that for me.
Throwes him his Purſe.
Purſ. I thanke your Honor. Exit Purſuiuant.

Enter a Prieſt.

Readie with euery Nod to tumble downe,
Into the fatall Bowels of the Deepe.
Lov. Come, come, diſpatch, 'tis bootleſſe to exclaime.
Haſt. O bloody Richard: miſerable England,
I prophecie the fearefull'ſt time to thee,
That euer wretched Age hath look'd vpon.
Come, lead me to the Block, beare him my Head,
They ſmile at me, who ſhortly ſhall be dead.

Exeunt.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham, in rotten Armour, marueilous ill-fauoured.

Richard. Come Couſin,
Canſt thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
And then againe begin, and ſtop againe,
As if thou were diſtraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deepe Tragedian,
Speake, and looke backe, and pry on euery ſide,
Tremble and ſtart at wagging of a Straw:
Intending deepe ſuſpition, gaſtly Lookes
Are at my ſeruice, like enforced Smiles:
And both are readie in their Offices,
At any time to grace my Stratagemes.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Rich. He is, and ſee he brings the Maior along.

Enter the Maior, and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Maior.

Rich. Looke to the Draw-Bridge there.

Buck. Hearke, a Drumme.

Rich. Catesby, o're-looke the Walls.

Buck. Lord Maior, the reaſon we haue ſent.

Rich. Looke back, defend thee, here are Enemies.

Buck. God and our Innocencie defend, and guard vs.

Enter Louell and Ratcliffe, with Haſtings Head.

Rich. Be patient, they are friends: Ratcliffe, and Louell.

Louell. Here is the Head of that ignoble Traytor,
The dangerous and vnſuſpected Haſtings.

Rich. So deare I lou'd the man, that I muſt weepe:
I tooke him for the plaineſt harmeleſſe Creature,
That breath'd vpon the Earth, a Chriſtian,
Made him my Booke, wherein my Soule recorded
The Hiſtorie of all her ſecret thoughts.
So ſmooth he dawb'd his Vice with ſhew of Vertue,
That his apparant open Guilt omitted,
I meane, his Conuerſation with Shores Wife,
He liu'd from all attainder of ſuſpects.

Buck. Well, well, he was the couerſt ſheltred Traytor
That euer liu'd.
Would you imagine, or almoſt beleeue,
Were not, that by great preſeruation
We liue to tell it, that the ſubtill Traytor
This day had plotted, in the Councell-Houſe,
To murther me, and my good Lord of Gloſter.

Maior. Had he done ſo?

Rich. What? thinke you we are Turkes, or Infidels?
Or that we would, againſt the forme of Law,
Proceed thus raſhly in the Villaines death,
But that the extreme perill of the caſe,
The Peace of England, and our Perſons ſafetie,
Enforc'd vs to this Execution.

Maior. Now faire befall you, he deſeru'd his death,
And your good Graces both haue well proceeded,
To warne falſe Traytors from the like Attempts.

Buck. I neuer look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with Miſtreſſe Shore:
Yet had we not determin'd he ſhould dye,
Vntill your Lordſhip came to ſee his end,
Which now the louing haſte of theſe our friends,
Something againſt our meanings, haue preuented;
Becauſe, my Lord, I would haue had you heard
The Traytor ſpeake, and timorouſly confeſſe
The manner and the purpoſe of his Treaſons:
That you might well haue ſignify'd the ſame
Vnto the Citizens, who haply may
Miſconſter vs in him, and wayle his death.

Maior. But, my good Lord, your Graces words ſhall ſerue,
As well as I had ſeene, and heard him ſpeake:
And doe not doubt, right Noble Princes both,
But Ile acquaint our dutious Citizens
With all your juſt proceedings in this caſe.

Rich. And to that end we wiſh'd your Lordſhip here,
T'auoid the Cenſures of the carping World.

Buck. Which ſince you come too late of our intent,
Yet witneſſe what you heare we did intend:
And ſo, my good Lord Maior, we bid farwell.

Exit Maior.

Rich. Goe after, after, Couſin Buckingham.
The Maior towards Guild-Hall hyes him in all poſte:
There, at your meeteſt vantage of the time,
Inferre the Baſtardie of Edwards Children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a Citizen,
Onely for ſaying, he would make his Sonne
Heire to the Crowne, meaning indeed his Houſe,
Which, by the Signe thereof, was tearmed ſo.
Moreouer, vrge his hatefull Luxurie,
And beſtiall appetite in change of Luſt,
Which ſtretcht vnto their Seruants, Daughters, Wiues,
Euen where his raging eye, or ſauage heart,
Without controll, luſted to make a prey.
Nay, for a need, thus farre come neere my Perſon:
Tell them, when that my Mother went with Child
Of that inſatiate Edward; Noble Yorke,
My Princely Father, then had Warres in France,
And by true computation of the time,
Found, that the Iſſue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his Lineaments,
Being nothing like the Noble Duke, my Father:
Yet touch this ſparingly, as 'twere farre off,
Becauſe, my Lord, you know my Mother liues.

Buck. Doubt not, my Lord, Ile play the Orator,
As if the Golden Fee, for which I plead,
Were for my ſelfe: and ſo, my Lord, adue.

Rich. If you thriue well, bring them to Baynards Caſtle,
Where you ſhall finde me well accompanied
With reuerend Fathers, and well-learned Biſhops.

Buck. I goe, and towards three or foure a Clocke
Looke for the Newes that the Guild-Hall affoords.

Exit Buckingham.

Rich. Goe Louell with all ſpeed to Doctor Shaw, Goe thou to Fryer Penker, bid them both
Meet me within this houre at Baynards Caſtle. Exit.
Now will I goe to take ſome priuie order,
To draw the Beaſts of Clarence out of ſight,
And to giue order, that no manner perſon
Haue any time recourſe vnto the Princes. Exeunt.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. Here is the Indictment of the good Lord Haſtings,
Which in a ſet Hand fairely is engroſs'd,
That it may be to day read o're in Paules.
And marke how well the ſequell hangs together:
Eleuen houres I haue ſpent to write it ouer,
For yeſter-night by Catesby was it ſent me,
The Precedent was full as long a doing,
And yet within theſe fiue houres Haſtings liu'd,
Vnattainted, vnexamin'd, free, at libertie.
Here's a good World the while.
Who is ſo groſſe, that cannot ſee this palpable deuice?

Yet

ho ſo bold, but ſayes he ſees it not?
the World, and all will come to nought,
ſuch ill dealing muſt be ſeene in thought. Exit.

ter Richard and Buckingham at ſeuerall Doores

. How now, how now, what ſay the Citizens?
k. Now by the holy Mother of our Lord, tizens are mum, ſay not a word.
. Toucht you the Baſtardie of Edwards Children?
k. I did, with his Contract with Lady Lucy,
s Contract by Deputie in France,
atiate greedineſſe of his deſire,
s enforcement of the Citie Wiues, rannie for Trifles, his owne Baſtardie,
ng got, your Father then in France,
s reſemblance, being not like the Duke.
ll, I did inferre your Lineaments,
the right Idea of your Father,
n your forme, and Nobleneſſe of Minde:
ſpen all your Victories in Scotland,
Diſcipline in Warre, Wiſdome in Peace,
lountie, Vertue, faire Humilitie:
l, left nothing fitting for your purpoſe,
cht, or ſleightly handled in diſcourſe.
hen my Oratorie drew toward end,
hem that did loue their Countries good,
od ſaue Richard, Englands Royall King.
. And did they ſo?
k. No, ſo God helpe me, they ſpake not a word,
e dumbe Statues, or breathing Stones,
each on other, and look'd deadly pale:
when I ſaw, I reprehended them,
k'd the Maior, what meant this wilfull ſilence?
ſwer was, the people were not vſed
ſpoke to, but by the Recorder.
e was vrg'd to tell my Tale againe:
ith the Duke, thus hath the Duke inferr'd,
thing ſpoke, in warrant from himſelfe.
he had done, ſome followers of mine owne,
er end of the Hall, hurld vp their Caps,
me teene voyces cry'd, God ſaue King Richard:
hus I tooke the vantage of thoſe few.
es gentle Citizens, and friends, quoth I,
ewes all applauſe, and chearefull ſhowt,
s your wiſdome, and your loue to Richard:
en here brake off, and came away.
. What tongue-leſſe Blockes were they,
d they not ſpeake?
ot the Maior then, and his Brethren, come?
k. The Maior is here at hand: intend ſome feare, you ſpoke with, but by mightie ſuit:
oke you get a Prayer-Booke in your hand,
and betweene two Church-men, good my Lord,
that ground ile make a holy Deſcant:
not eaſily wonne to our requeſts,
e Maids part, ſtill anſwer nay, and take it.
. I goe: and if you plead as well for them,
n ſay nay to thee for my ſelfe,
ake we bring it to a happie iſſue.
. Go, go vp to the Leads, the Lord Maior knocks.

Enter the Maior, and Citizens.

me, my Lord, I dance attendance here,
e the Duke will not be ſpoke withall.

Enter Catesby

Buck. Now Catesby, what ſayes your Lord to my requeſt?
Catesby. He doth entreat your Grace, my Noble Lord,
To viſit him to morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reuerend Fathers,
Diuinely bent to Meditation,
And in no Worldly ſuites would he be mou'd,
To draw him from his holy Exerciſe.
Buck. Returne, good Catesby, to the gracious Duke,
Tell him, my ſelfe, the Maior and Aldermen,
In deepe deſignes, in matter of great moment,
No leſſe importing then our generall good,
Are come to haue ſome conference with his Grace.
Catesby. Ile ſignifie ſo much vnto him ſtraight. Exit.
Buck. Ah ha, my Lord, this Prince is not an Edward,
He is not lulling on a lewd Loue-Bed,
But on his Knees, at Meditation:
Not dallying with a Brace of Curtizans,
But meditating with two deepe Diuines:
Not ſleeping, to engroſſe his idle Body,
But praying, to enrich his watchfull Soule.
Happie were England, would this vertuous Prince
Take on his Grace the Soueraignetie thereof.
But ſure I feare we ſhall not winne him to it.
Maior. Marry God defend his Grace ſhould ſay vs nay.
Buck. I feare he will: here Catesby comes againe.

Enter Catesby.

Now Catesby, what ſayes his Grace?
Catesby. He wonders to what end you haue aſſembled
Such troopes of Citizens, to come to him.
His Grace not being warn'd thereof before:
He feares, my Lord, you meane no good to him.
Buck. Sorry I am, my Noble Couſin ſhould
Suſpect me, that I meane no good to him:
By Heauen, we come to him in perfit loue,
And ſo once more returne, and tell his Grace. Exit.
When holy and deuout Religious men
Are at their Beades, 'tis much to draw them thence,
So ſweet is zealous Contemplation.

Enter Richard aloft, betweene two Biſhops.

Maior. See where his Grace ſtands, betweene two Clergie men.
Buck. Two Props of Vertue, for a Chriſtian Prince,
To ſtay him from the fall of Vanitie:
And ſee a Booke of Prayer in his hand,
True Ornaments to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet, moſt gracious Prince,
Lend fauourable eare to our requeſts,
And pardon vs the interruption
Of thy Deuotion, and right Chriſtian Zeale.
Rich. My Lord, there needes no ſuch Apologie:
I doe beſeech your Grace to pardon me,
Who earneſt in the ſeruice of my God,
Deferr'd the viſitation of my friends.
But leauing this, what is your Graces pleaſure?
Buck. Euen that (I hope) which pleaſeth God aboue,
And all good men, of this vngouern'd Ile.
Rich. I doe ſuſpect I haue done ſome offence,
That ſeemes diſgracious in the Cities eye,
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You haue,my Lord:
Would it might pleaſe your Grace,
On our entreaties, to amend your fault.
Rich. Elſe wherefore breathe I in a Chriſtian Land.
Buck. Know then,it is your fault,that you reſigne
The Supreme Seat, the Throne Maieſticall,
The Sceptred Office of your Anceſtors,
Your State of Fortune,and your Deaw of Birth,
The Lineall Glory of your Royall Houſe,
To the corruption of a blemiſht Stock;
Whiles in the mildneſſe of your ſleepie thoughts,
Which here we waken to our Countries good,
The Noble Ile doth want his proper Limmes:
His Face defac'd with skarres of Infamie,
His Royall Stock graft with ignoble Plants,
And almoſt ſhouldred in the ſwallowing Gulfe
Of darke Forgetfulneſſe,and deepe Oblivion.
Which to recure,we heartily ſolicite
Your gracious ſelfe to take on you the charge
And Kingly Gouernment of this your Land:
Not as Protector,Steward,Subſtitute,
Or lowly Factor,for anothers gaine;
But as ſucceſſiuely,from Blood to Blood,
Your Right of Birth,your Empyrie,your owne.
For this,conſorted with the Citizens,
Your very Worſhipfull and louing friends,
And by their vehement inſtigation,
In this iuſt Cauſe come I to moue your Grace.
Rich. I cannot tell,if to depart in ſilence,
Or bitterly to ſpeake in your reproofe,
Beſt fitteth my Degree,or your Condition.
If not to anſwer, you might haply thinke,
Tongue-ty'd Ambition,not replying,yeelded
To beare the Golden Yoake of Soueraigntie,
Which ſondly you would here impoſe on me.
If to reproue you for this ſuit of yours,
So ſeaſon'd with your faithfull loue to me,
Then on the other ſide I check'd my friends.
Therefore to ſpeake,and to auoid the firſt,
And then in ſpeaking,not to incurre the laſt,
Definitiuely thus I anſwer you.
Your loue deſerues my thankes, but my deſert
Vnmeritable,ſhunnes your high requeſt.
Firſt,if all Obſtacles were cut away,
And that my Path were euen to the Crowne,
As the ripe Reuenue,and due of Birth:
Yet ſo much is my pouertie of ſpirit,
So mightie, and ſo manie my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my Greatneſſe,
Being a Barke to brooke no mightie Sea;
Then in my Greatneſſe couet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my Glory ſmother'd.
But God be thank'd,there is no need of me,
And much I need to helpe you,were there need:
The Royall Tree hath left vs Royall Fruit,
Which mellow'd by the ſtealing howres of time,
Will well become the Seat of Maieſtie,
And make (no doubt) vs happy by his Reigne.
On him I lay that,you would lay on me,
The Right and Fortune of his happie Starres,
Which God defend that I ſhould wring from him.
Buck. My Lord,this argues Conſcience in your Grace,
But the reſpects thereof are nice, and triuiall,
All circumſtances well conſidered.
You ſay,that Edward is your Brothers Sonne,
So ſay we too,but not by Edwards Wife:
For firſt was he contract to Lady Lucie,
Your Mother liues a Witneſſe to his Vow:
And afterward by ſubſtitute betroth'd
To Bona,Siſter to the King of France.
Theſe both put off,a poore Petitioner,
A Care-cras'd Mother to a many Sonnes,
A Beautie-waining,and diſtreſſed Widow,
Euen in the after-noone of her beſt dayes,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton Eye,
Seduc'd the pitch,and height of his degree,
To baſe declenſion,and loath'd Bigamie.
By her,in his vnlawfull Bed,he got
This Edward,whom our Manners call the Prince.
More bitterly could I expoſtulate,
Saue that for reuerence to ſome alioe,
I giue a ſparing limit to my Tongue.
Then good,my Lord,take to your Royall ſelfe
This proffer'd benefit of Dignitie:
If not to bleſſe vs and the Land withall,
Yet to draw forth your Noble Anceſtrie
From the corruption of abuſing times,
Vnto a Lineall true deriued courſe.
Maior. Do good my Lord,your Citizens entreat you.
Buck. Refuſe not,mightie Lord,this proffer'd loue.
Catesb. O make them ioyfull, grant their lawfull ſuit.
Rich. Alas,why would you heape this Care on me?
I am vnfit for State,and Maieſtie:
I doe beſeech you take it not amiſſe,
I cannot,nor I will not yeeld to you.
Buck. If you refuſe it,as in loue and zeale,
Loth to depoſe the Child,your Brothers Sonne,
As well we know your tenderneſſe of heart,
And gentle,kinde,effeminate remorſe,
Which we haue noted in you to your Kindred,
And egally indeede to all Eſtates:
Yet know,where you accept our ſuit,or no,
Your Brothers Sonne ſhall neuer reigne our King,
But we will plant ſome other in the Throne,
To the diſgrace and downe-fall of your Houſe:
And in this reſolution here we leaue you.
Come Citizens,we will entreat no more. Exeunt.
Catesb. Call him againe,ſweet Prince,accept their ſuit:
If you denie them,all the Land will rue it.
Rich. Will you enforce me to a world of Care.
Call them againe,I am not made of Stones,
But penetrable to your kinde entreaties,
Albeit againſt my Conſcience and my Soule.
Enter Buckingham and the reſt.
Couſin of Buckingham,and ſage graue men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To beare her burthen,where I will or no.
I muſt haue patience to endure the Load:
But if black Scandall,or foule-fac'd Reproach,
Attend the ſequell of your Impoſition,
Your meere enforcement ſhall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and ſtaynes thereof;
For God doth know,and you may partly ſee,
How farre I am from the deſire of this.
Maior. God bleſſe your Grace, we ſee it, and will ſay it.
Rich. In ſaying ſo,you ſhall but ſay the truth.
Buck. Then I ſalute you with this Royall Title,
Long liue King Richard,Englands worthie King.
All. Amen.
Buck. To morrow may it pleaſe you to be Crown'd.
Rich. Euen when you pleaſe,for you will haue it ſo.

Buck. To

ct. To morrow then we will attend your Grace.
o moſt ioyfully we take our leaue.
th. Come, let vs to our holy Worke againe.
ell my Couſins, farewell gentle friends. Exeunt.

ſtus Quartus. Scena Prima.

ter the Queene, Anne Ducheſſe of Glouceſter, the Ducheſſe of Yorke, and Marqueſſe Dorſet.

ch. Yorke. Who meetes vs heere?
ieece Plantagenet,
i the hand of her kind Aunt of Gloſter?
for my Life, ſhee's wandring to the Tower,
te hearts loue, to greet the tender Prince.
ter, well met.
me. God giue your Graces both, a happie ioyfull time of day.
. As much to you, good Siſter: whither away?
ne. No farther then the Tower, and as I gueſſe,
the like deuotion as your ſelues,
aulate the gentle Princes there.
. Kind Siſter thankes, we'le enter all together:

Enter the Lieutenant.

n good time, here the Lieutenant comes.
r Lieutenant, pray you, by your leaue,
doth the Prince, and my young Sonne of Yorke?
ne. Right well, deare Madame: by your patience, not ſuffer you to viſit them,
ſing hath ſtrictly charg'd the contrary.
. The King? who's that?
ne. I meane, the Lord Protector.
. The Lord protect him from that Kingly Title.
he ſet bounds betweene their loue, and me?
heir Mother, who ſhall barre me from them?
uch. Yorke. I am their Fathers Mother, I will ſee

ne. Their Aunt I am in law, in loue their Mother:
bring me to their ſights, Ile beare thy blame,
ake thy Office from thee, on my peril.
ne. No, Madame, no; I may not leaue it ſo:
bound by Oath, and therefore pardon me.
Exit Lieutenant.

Enter Stanley.

nley. Let me but meet you Ladies one howre hence,
Ile ſalute your Grace of Yorke as Mother,
reuerend looker on of two faire Queenes.
: Madame, you muſt ſtraight to Weſtminſter,
: to be crowned Richards Royall Queene.
. Ah, cut my Lace aſunder,
my pent heart may haue ſome ſcope to beat,
e I ſwoone with this dead-killing newes.
ne. Deſpightfull tidings, O vnpleaſing newes.
rſ. Be of good cheare: Mother, how fares your
. O Dorſet, ſpeake not to me, get thee gone,
and Deſtruction dogges thee at thy heeles,
Mothers Name is ominous to Children.
If thou wilt out-ſtrip Death, goe croſſe the Seas,
And liue with Richmond, from the reach of Hell.
Goe hye thee, hye thee from this ſlaughter-houſe,
Leſt thou encreaſe the number of the dead,
And make me dye the thrall of Margarets Curſe,
Nor Mother, Wife, nor Englands counted Queene.
Stanley. Full of wiſe care, is this your counſaile, Madame:
Take all the ſwift aduantage of the howres:
You ſhall haue Letters from me to my Sonne,
In your behalfe, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'ne tardie by vnwiſe delay.
Duch. Yorke. O ill diſperſing Winde of Miſerie,
O my accurſed Wombe, the Bed of Death:
A Cockatrice haſt thou hatcht to the World,
Whoſe vnauoided Eye is murtherous.
Stanley. Come, Madame, come, I in all haſte was ſent.
Anne. And I with all vnwillingneſſe will goe.
O would to God, that the incluſiue Verge
Of Golden Metall, that muſt round my Brow,
Were red hot Steele, to ſeare me to the Braines,
Anoynted let me be with deadly Venome,
And dye ere men can ſay, God ſaue the Queene.
Qu. Goe, goe, poore ſoule, I enuie not thy glory,
To feed my humor, with thy ſelfe no harme.
Anne. No; why? When he that is my Husband now,
Came to me, as I follow'd Henries Corſe,
When ſcarce the blood was well waſht from his hands,
Which iſſued from my other Angell Husband,
And that deare Saint, which then I weeping follow'd:
O, when I ſay I look'd on Richards Face,
This was my Wiſh: Be thou (quoth I) accurſt,
For making me, ſo young, ſo old a Widow:
And when thou wed'ſt, let ſorrow haunt thy Bed;
And be thy Wife, if any be ſo mad,
More miſerable, by the Life of thee,
Then thou haſt made me, by my deare Lords death.
Loe, ere I can repeat this Curſe againe,
Within ſo ſmall a time, my Womans heart
Groſſely grew captiue to his honey words,
And prou'd the ſubiect of mine owne Soules Curſe,
Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from reſt:
For neuer yet one howre in his Bed
Did I enioy the golden deaw of ſleepe,
But with his timorous Dreames was ſtill awak'd.
Beſides, he hates me for my Father Warwicke,
And will (no doubt) ſhortly be rid of me.
Qu. Poore heart adieu, I pitie thy complaining.
Anne. No more, then with my ſoule I mourne for yours.
Dorſ. Farewell, thou wofull welcommer of glory.
Anne. Adieu, poore ſoule, that tak'ſt thy leaue of it.
Du. Y. Go thou to Richmond, & good fortune guide thee.
Go thou to Richard, and good Angels tend thee,
Go thou to Sanctuarie, and good thoughts poſſeſſe thee,
I to my Graue, where peace and reſt lye with me.
Eighteene odde yeeres of ſorrow haue I ſeene,
And each howres ioy wrackt with a weeke of teene.
Qu. Stay, yet looke backe with me vnto the Tower.
Pitty, you ancient Stones, thoſe tender Babes,
Whom Enuie hath immur'd within your Walls,
Rough Cradle for ſuch little prettie ones,
Rude ragged Nurſe, old ſullen Play-fellow,
For tender Princes: vſe my Babies well;
So fooliſh Sorrowes bids your Stones farewell.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Sound a Sonnet. Enter Richard in pompe, Buckingham, Catesby, Ratcliffe, Louel.

Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham.
Buck. My gracious Soueraigne.
Rich. Giue me thy hand. Sound.
Thus high, by thy aduice, and thy assistance,
Is King Richard seated:
But shall we weare these Glories for a day?
Or shall they last, and we reioyce in them?
Buck. Still liue they, and for euer let them last.
Rich. Ah Buckingham, now doe I play the Touch,
To trie if thou be currant Gold indeed:
Young Edward liues, thinke now what I would speake.
Buck. Say on my loving Lord.
Rich. Why Buckingham, I say I would be King.
Buck. Why so you are, my thrice-renowned Lord.
Rich. Ha? am I King? 'tis so: but Edward liues.
Buck. True, Noble Prince.
Rich. O bitter consequence!
That Edward still should liue true Noble Prince.
Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull.
Shall I be plaine? I wish the Bastards dead,
And I would haue it suddenly perform'd.
What say'st thou now? speake suddenly, be briefe.
Buck. Your Grace may doe your pleasure.
Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all Ice, thy kindnesse freezes:
Say, haue I thy consent, that they shall dye?
Buc. Giue me some litle breath, some pawse, deare Lord,
Before I positiuely speake in this:
I will resolue you herein presently. Exit Buck.
Catesby. The King is angry, see he gnawes his Lippe.
Rich. I will conuerse with Iron-witted Fooles,
And vnrespectiue Boyes: none are for me,
That looke into me with considerate eyes,
High-reaching Buckingham growes circumspect.
Boy.
Page. My Lord.
Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting Gold
Will tempt vnto a close exploit of Death?
Page. I know a discontented Gentleman,
Whose humble meanes match not his haughtie spirit:
Gold were as good as twentie Orators,
And will (no doubt) tempt him to any thing.
Rich. What is his Name?
Page. His Name, my Lord, is Tirrel.
Rich. I partly know the man: goe call him hither,
Boy. Exit.
The deepe reuoluing wittie Buckingham,
No more shall be the neighbor to my counsailes.
Hath he so long held out with me, vntryr'd,
And stops he now for breath? Well, be it so.

Enter Stanley.

How now, Lord Stanley, what's the newes?
Stanley. Know my loving Lord, the Marquesse Dorset
As I heare, is fled to Richmond,
In the parts where he abides.
Rich. Come hither Catesby, rumor is abroad,
That Anne my Wife is very grieuous sicke,
I will take order for her keeping close.
Inquire me out some meane poore Gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence Daughter:
The Boy is foolish, and I feare not him.
Looke how thou dream'st: I say againe, giue out,
That Anne, my Queene, is sicke, and like to dye.
About it, for it stands me much vpon
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damnage me.
I must be married to my Brothers Daughter,
Or else my Kingdome stands on brittle Glasse:
Murther her Brothers, and then marry her,
Vncertaine way of gaine. But I am in
So farre in blood, that sinne will pluck on sinne,
Teare-falling Pitie dwells not in this Eye.

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy Name Tyrrel?
Tyr. Iames Tyrrel, and your most obedient subiect.
Rich. Art thou indeed?
Tyr. Proue me, my gracious Lord.
Rich. Dar'st thou resolue to kill a friend of mine?
Tyr. Please you:
But I had rather kill two enemies.
Rich. Why then thou hast it: two deepe enemies,
Foes to my Rest, and my sweet sleepes disturbers,
Are they that I would haue thee deale vpon:
Tyrrel, I meane those Bastards in the Tower.
Tyr. Let me haue open meanes to come to them,
And soone Ile rid you from the feare of them.
Rich. Thou sing'st sweet Musique.
Hearke, come hither Tyrrel,
Goe by this token: rise, and lend thine Eare, Whisper.
There is no more but so: say it is done,
And I will loue thee, and preferre thee for it.
Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. Exit.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. My Lord, I haue consider'd in my minde,
The late request that you did sound me in.
Rich. Well, let that rest: Dorset is fled to Richmond.
Buck. I heare the newes, my Lord.
Rich. Stanley, he is your Wiues Sonne: well, looke vnto it.
Buck. My Lord, I claime the gift, my due by promise,
For which your Honor and your Faith is pawn'd,
Th'Earledome of Hertford, and the moueables,
Which you haue promised I shall possesse.
Rich. Stanley looke to your Wife: if she conuey
Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.
Buck. What sayes your Highnesse to my iust request?
Rich. I doe remember me, Henry the Sixt
Did prophecie, that Richmond should be King,
When Richmond was a little peeuish Boy.
A King perhaps.
Buck. My gracious Soueraigne.
Rich. Thou troublest me, I am not in the vaine. Exit.
Buck. And is it thus? repayes he my deepe seruice
With such contempt? made I him King for this?
O let me thinke on Hastings, and be gone
To Brecnock, while my fearefull Head is on. Exit.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloodie Act is done,
The most arch deed of pittious massacre

Enter Richard.

If to haue done the thing you gaue in charge,

. But did'ſt thou ſee them dead.
I did my Lord.
And buried gentle Tirrell.
The Chaplaine of the Tower hath buried them,

Enter Ratcliffe.

. My Lord.
. Good or bad newes, that thou com'ſt in ſo
ad news my Lord, Morton is fled to Richmond,
ckingham backt with the hardy Welſhmen field, and ſtill his power encreaſeth.
. Ely with Richmond troubles me more neere, uckingham and his raſh leuied Strength.
I haue learn'd, that fearfull commenting

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. So now proſperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death:
Heere in theſe Confines ſlily haue I lurkt,
To watch the waining of mine enemies.
A dire induction, am I witneſſe to,
And will to France, hoping the conſequence
Will proue as bitter, blacke, and Tragicall.
Withdraw thee wretched Margaret, who comes heere?

Enter Dutcheſſe and Queene.

Qu. Ah my poore Princes! ah my tender Babes:
My vnblowed Flowres, new appearing ſweets:
If yet your gentle ſoules flye in the Ayre,
And be not fixt in doome perpetuall,
Houer about me with your ayery wings,
And heare your mothers Lamentation.
Mar. Houer about her, ſay that right for right
Hath dim'd your Infant morne, to Aged night
Duc. So many miſeries haue craz'd my voyce,
That my woe-wearied tongue is ſtill and mute.
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward, payes a dying debt.
Qu. Wilt thou, O God, flye from ſuch gentle Lambs,
And throw them in the intrailes of the Wolfe?
When didſt thou ſleepe, when ſuch a deed was done?
Mar. When holy Harry dyed, and my ſweet Sonne.
Duc Dead life, blind ſight, poore mortall liuing ghoſt,
Woes Scene, Worlds ſhame, Graues due, by life vſurpt,
Breefe abſtract and record of tedious dayes,
Reſt thy vnreſt on Englands lawfull earth,
Vnlawfully made drunke with innocent blood.
Qu. Ah that thou would'ſt aſſoone affoord a Grave,
As thou canſt yeeld a melancholly ſeate:
Then would I hide my bones, not reſt them heere,
Ah who hath any cauſe to mourne but wee?
Mar. If ancient ſorrow be moſt reuerent,
Giue mine the benefit of ſigneurie,
And let my greefes frowne on the vpper hand
If ſorrow can admit Society.
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:
I had a Husband, till a Richard kill'd him:
Thou had'ſt an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:
Thou had'ſt a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Duc. I had a Richard too, and thou did'ſt kill him;
I had a Rutland too, thou hop'ſt to kill him.
Mar. Thou had'ſt a Clarence too,
And Richard kill'd him.
From forth the kennell of thy wombe hath crept
A Hell-hound that doth hunt vs all to death:
That Dogge, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry Lambes, and lap their gentle blood:
That foule defacer of Gods handy worke:
That reignes in gauled eyes of weeping ſoules:
That excellent grand Tyrant of the earth,
Thy wombe let looſe to chaſe vs to our graues.
O vpright, iuſt, and true-diſpoſing God,
How do I thanke thee, that this carnall Curre

Preyes

Prayes on the iſſue of his Mothers body,
And makes her Pue-fellow with others mone.
Duc. Oh Harries wife, triumph not in my woes:
God witneſſe with me, I haue wept for thine.
Mar. Beare with me: I am hungry for reuenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward,
The other Edward dead, to quit my Edward.
Yong Yorke, he is but boote, becauſe both they Matcht not the high perfection of my loſſe.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that ſtab'd my Edward,
And the beholders of this frantick play,
Th'adulterate Haſtings, Riuers, Vaughan, Grey,
Vntimely ſmother'd in their duſky Graues.
Richard yet liues, Hells blacke Intelligencer,
Onely reſerv'd their Factor, to buy ſoules,
And ſend them thither: But at hand, at hand
Inſues his pittious and vnpittied end.
Earth gapes, Hell burnes, Fiends roare, Saints pray,
To haue him ſodainly conuey'd from hence:
Cancell his bond of life, deere God I pray,
That I may liue and ſay, The Dogge is dead.
Qu. O thou did'ſt prophecie, the time would come,
That I ſhould wiſh for thee to helpe me curſe
That bottel'd Spider, that ſoule bunch-back'd Toad.
Mar. I call'd thee then, vaine flouriſh of my fortune:
I call'd thee then, poore Shadow, painted Queen,
The preſentation of but what I was;
The flattering Index of a direfull Pageant;
One heau'd a high, to be hurl'd downe below:
A Mother onely mockt with two faire Babes;
A dreame of what thou waſt, a gariſh Flagge
To be the ayme of euery dangerous Shot,
A ſigne of Dignity, a Breath, a Bubble;
A Queene in ieaſt, onely to fill the Scene.
Where is thy Husband now? Where be thy Brothers?
Where be thy two Sonnes? Wherein doſt thou Ioy?
Who ſues, and kneeles, and ſayes, God ſaue the Queene?
Where be the bending Peeres that flattered thee?
Where be the thronging Troopes that followed thee?
Decline all this, and ſee what now thou art.
For happy Wife, a moſt diſtreſſed Widdow:
For ioyfull Mother, one that wailes the name:
For one being ſued too, one that humbly ſues:
For Queene, a very Caytiffe, crown'd with care:
For ſhe that ſcorn'd at me, now ſcorn'd of me:
For ſhe being feared of all, now fearing one:
For ſhe commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the courſe of Iuſtice whirl'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time,
Hauing no more but Thought of what thou waſt,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art,
Thou didſt vſurpe my place, and doſt thou not
Vſurpe the iuſt proportion of my Sorrow?
Now thy proud Necke, bearers halfe my burthen'd yoke,
From which, euen heere I ſlip my wearied head,
And leaue the burthen of it all, on thee.
Farwell Yorkes wife, and Queene of ſad miſchance,
Theſe Engliſh woes, ſhall make me ſmile in France.
Qu. O thou well skill'd in Curſes, ſtay a-while,
And teach me how to curſe mine enemies.
Mar. Forbeare to ſleepe the night, and faſt the day:
Compare dead happineſſe, with liuing woe:
Thinke that thy Babes were ſweeter than they were,
And he that ſlew them fowler than he is:
Bett'ring thy loſſe, makes the bad cauſer worſe,
Reuoluing this, will teach thee how to Curſe.
Qu. My words are dull, O quicken them with thine.
Mar. Thy woes will make them ſharpe,
And pierce like mine. Exit Margaret.
Duc. Why ſhould calamity be full of words?
Qu. Windy Attornies to their Clients Woes,
Ayery ſucceeders of inteſtine Ioyes,
Poore breathing Orators of miſeries,
Let them haue ſcope, though what they will impart,
Helpe nothing els, yet do they eaſe the hart.
Duc. If ſo then, be not Tongue-ty'd: go with me,
And in the breath of bitter words, let's ſmother
My damned Son, that thy two ſweet Sonnes smother'd.
The Trumpet ſounds, be copious in exclaimes.

Enter King Richard, and his Traine.

Rich. Who intercepts me in my Expedition?
Duc. O ſhe, that might haue intercepted thee
By ſtrangling thee in her accurſed wombe,
From all the ſlaughters (Wretch) that thou haſt done
Qu. Hid'ſt thou that Forhead with a Golden Crowne
Where't ſhould be branded, if that right were right?
The ſlaughter of the Prince that ow'd that Crowne,
And the dyre death of my poore Sonnes, and Brothers.
Tell me thou Villaine-ſlaue, where are my Children?
Duc. Thou Toad, thou Toade,
Where is thy Brother Clarence?
And little Ned Plantagenet his Sonne?
Qu. Where is the gentle Riuers, Vaughan, Grey?
Duc. Where is kinde Haſtings?
Rich. A flouriſh Trumpets, ſtrike Alarum. Drummes:
Let not the Heauens heare theſe Tell-tale women
Raile on the Lords Annointed. Strike I ſay.
Flouriſh. Alarums.
Either be patient, and intreat me fayre,
Or with the clamorous report of Warre,
Thus will I drowne your exclamations.
Duc. Art thou my Sonne?
Rich. I. I thanke God, my Father, and your ſelfe.
Duc. Then patiently heare my impatience.
Rich. Madam, I haue a touch of your condition,
That cannot brooke the accent of reproofe.
Duc. O let me ſpeake.
Rich. Do then, but Ile not heare.
Duc. I will be milde, and gentle in my words.
Rich. And breefe (good Mother) for I am in haſt.
Duc. Art thou ſo haſty? I haue ſtaid for thee
(God knowes) in torment and in agony.
Rich. And came I not at laſt to comfort you?
Duc. No by the holy Rood, thou know'ſt it well,
Thou cam'ſt on earth, to make the earth my Hell.
A grieuous burthen was thy Birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy Infancie.
Thy School-dayes frightfull, deſp'rate, wilde, and furious,
Thy prime of Manhood, daring, bold, and venturous.
Thy Age confirm'd, proud, ſubtle, ſlye, and bloody,
More milde, but yet more harmfull; Kinde in hatred:
What comfortable houre canſt thou name,
That euer grac'd me with thy company?
Rich. Faith none, but Humfrey Hower,
That call'd your Grace
To Breakefaſt once, forth of my company.
If I be ſo diſgracious in your eye,
Let me march on, and not offend you Madam.
Strike vp the Drumme.
Duc. I prythee heare me ſpeake.

h. You ſpeake too bitterly.
r. Heare me a word:
ſhall neuer ſpeake to thee againe.
h. So.
r. Either thou wilt dye, by Gods iuſt ordinance en this warre thou turne a Conqueror:
ith greeſe and extreame Age ſhall periſh,
euer more behold thy face againe.
ore take with thee my moſt grieuous Curſe,
h in the day of Battell tyre thee more all the compleat Armour that thou wear'ſt.
yers on the aduerſe party fight,
here the little ſoules of Edwards Children,
er the Spirits of thine Enemies,
romiſe them Succeſſe and Victory:
y thou art, bloody will be thy end:
ſerues thy life, and doth thy death attend. Exit.
Though far more cauſe, yet much leſſe ſpirit to curſe
a in me, I ſay Amen to her.
h. Stay Madam, I muſt talke a word with you.
. I haue no more ſonnes of the Royall Blood ee to ſlaughter. For my Daughters (Richard) ſhall be praying Nunnes, not weeping Queenes:
herefore leaſell not to hit their liues.
h. You haue a daughter call'd Elizabeth, ous and Faire, Royall and Gracious?
. And muſt ſhe dye for this? O let her liue,
le corrupt her Manners, ſtaine her Beauty,
r my Selfe, as falſe to Edwards bed:
v'ooer her the vaile of Infamy,
may liue vnſcarr'd of bleeding ſlaughter,
confeſſe ſhe was not Edwards daughter.
h. Wrong not her Byrth, ſhe is a Royall Princeſſe.
. To ſaue her life, Ile ſay ſhe is not ſo.
h. Her life is ſafeſt onely in her byrth.
. And onely in that ſafety, dyed her Brothers.
h. Loe at their Birth, good Starres were oppoſite.
. No, to their liues, ill friends were contrary.
h. All vnauoyded is the doome of Deſtiny.
. True: when auoyded grace makes Deſtiny.
abes were deſtin'd to a fairer death,
re had bleſt thee with a fairer life.
h. You ſpeake as if that I had ſlaine my Coſins?
. Coſins indeed, and by their Vncle couzend, omfort, Kingdome, Kindred, Freedome, Life,
ſe hand ſoeuer lanch'd their tender hearts,
ead (all indirectly) gaue direction.
oubt the murd'rous Knife was dull and blunt,
was whetted on thy ſtone-hard heart,
ell in the Intrailes of my Lambes,
at ſtill vſe of greeſe, makes wilde greeſe tame,
ngue ſhould to thy eares not name my Boyes,
at my Nayles were anchor'd in thine eyes:
l in ſuch a deſp'rate Bay of death,
poore Barke, of ſailes and tackling reft,
all to peeces on thy Rocky boſome.
h. Madam, ſo thriue I in my enterprize angerous ſucceſſe of bloody warres, tend more good to you and yours,
euer you and yours by me were harm'd.
. What good is couer'd with the face of heauen, diſcouered, that can do me good.
ch. Th'aduancement of your children, gentle Lady
. Vp to ſome Scaffold, there to loſe their heads.
ch. Vnto the dignity and height of Fortune,
igh Imperiall Type of this earths glory.

Qu. Flatter my ſorrow with report of it:
Tell m , what State, what Dignity, what Honor,
Canſt thou deuiſe to any childe of mine.
Rich. Euen all I haue; I, and my ſelfe and all,
Will I withall indow a childe of thine:
So in the Lethe of thy angry ſoule,
Thou drowne the ſad remembrance of thoſe wrongs,
Which thou ſuppoſeſt I haue done to thee.
Qu. Be breefe, leaſt that the proceſſe of thy kindneſſe
Laſt longer telling then thy kindneſſe date.
Rich. Then know,
That from my Soule, I loue thy Daughter.
Qu. My daughters Mother thinkes it with her ſoule.
Rich. What do you thinke?
Qu. That thou doſt loue my daughter from thy ſoule
So from thy Soules loue didſt thou loue her Brothers,
And from my hearts loue, I do thanke thee for it.
Rich. Be not ſo haſty to confound my meaning:
I meane that with my Soule I loue thy daughter,
And do intend to make her Queene of England.
Qu. Well then, who doſt thou meane ſhallbe her King.
Rich. Euen he that makes her Queene:
Who elſe ſhould bee?
Qu. What, thou?
Rich. Euen ſo: How thinke you of it?
Qu. How canſt thou woo her?
Rich. That I would learne of you,
As one being beſt acquainted with her humour.
Qu. And wilt thou learne of me?
Rich. Madam, with all my heart.
Qu. Send to her by the man that ſlew her Brothers,
A paire of bleeding hearts: thereon ingraue
Edward and Yorke, then haply will ſhe weepe:
Therefore preſent to her, as ſometime Margaret
Did to thy Father, ſteept in Rutlands blood,
A hand-kercheefe, which ſay to her did dreyne
The purple ſappe from her ſweet Brothers body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withall.
If this inducement moue her not to loue,
Send her a Letter of thy Noble deeds:
Tell her, thou mad'ſt away her Vncle Clarence,
Her Vncle Riuers, I (and for her ſake)
Mad'ſt quicke conueyance with her good Aunt Anne.
Rich. You mocke me Madam, this not the way
To win your daughter.
Qu. There is no other way,
Vnleſſe thou could'ſt put on ſome other ſhape,
And not be Richard, that hath done all this.
Ric. Say that I did all this for loue of her.
Qu. Nay then indeed ſhe cannot chooſe but hate thee
Hauing bought loue, with ſuch a bloody ſpoyle.
Rich. Looke what is done, cannot be now amended:
Men ſhall deale vnaduiſedly ſometimes,
Which after-houres giues leyſure to repent.
If I did take the Kingdome from your Sonnes,
To make amends, Ile giue it to your daughter:
If I haue kill'd the iſſue of your wombe,
To quicken your encreaſe, I will beget
Mine yſſue of your blood, vpon your Daughter:
A Grandams name is little leſſe in loue,
Then is the doting Title of a Mother;
They are as Children but one ſteppe below,
Euen of your mettall, of your very blood:
Of all one paine, ſaue for a night of groanes
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like ſorrow.
Your Children were vexation to your youth,

But mine shall be a comfort to your Age,
The losse you haue, is but a Sonne being King,
And by that losse, your Daughter is made Queene.
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindnesse as I can.
Dorset your Sonne, that with a fearfull soule
Leads discontented steppes in Forraine soyle,
This faire Alliance, quickly shall call home
To high Promotions, and great Dignity.
The King that calles your beauteous Daughter Wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset, Brother:
Againe shall you be Mother to a King:
And all the Ruines of distressefull Times,
Repayr'd with double Riches of Content.
What? we haue many good'ly dayes to see:
The liquid drops of Teares that you haue shed,
Shall come againe, transform'd to Orient Pearle,
Aduantaging their Loue, with interest
Often-times double gaine of happinesse.
Go then (my Mother) to thy Daughter go,
Make bold her bashfull yeares, with your experience,
Prepare her eares to heare a Woers Tale.
Put in her tender heart, th'aspiring Flame
Of Golden Soueraignty: Acquaint the Princesse
With the sweet silent houres of Marriage ioyes:
And when this Arme of mine hath chastised
The petty Rebell, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with Triumphant Garlands will I come,
And leade thy daughter to a Conquerors bed:
To whom I will retaile my Conquest wonne,
And she shalbe sole Victoresse, Cæsars Cæsar.

Qu. What were I best to say, her Fathers Brother
Would be her Lord? Or shall I say her Vnkle?
Or he that slew her Brothers, and her Vnkles?
Vnder what Title shall I woo for thee,
That God, the Law, my Honor, and her Loue,
Can make seeme pleasing to her tender yeares?

Rich. Inferre faire Englands peace by this Alliance.

Qu. Which she shall purchase with still lasting warre.

Rich. Tell her, the King that may command, intreats.

Qu. That at her hands, which the kings King forbids.

Rich. Say she shall be a High and Mighty Queene.

Qu. To vaile the Title, as her Mother doth.

Rich. Say I will loue her euerlastingly.

Qu. But how long shall that title euer last?

Rich. Sweetly in force, vnto her faire liues end.

Qu. But how long fairely shall her sweet life last?

Rich. As long as Heauen and Nature lengthens it.

Qu. As long as Hell and Richard likes of it.

Rich. Say, I her Soueraigne, am her Subiect low.

Qu. But she your Subiect, loathes such Soueraignty.

Rich. Be eloquent in my behalfe to her.

Qu. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

Rich. Then plainly to her, tell my louing tale.

Qu. Plaine and not honest, is too harsh a Style.

Rich. Your Reasons are too shallow, and too quicke.

Qu. O no, my Reasons are too deepe and dead,
Too deepe and dead (poore Infants) in their graues,
Harpe on it still shall I, till heart-strings breake.

Rich. Harpe not on that string Madam, that is past.

Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne.

Qu. Prophan'd, dishonor'd, and the third vsurpt.

Rich. I sweare.

Qu. By nothing, for this is no Oath:
Thy George prophan'd, hath lost his Lordly Honor;
Thy Garter blemish'd, pawn'd his Knightly Vertue;
Thy Crowne vsurp'd, disgrac'd his Kingly Glory:
If something thou would'st sweare to be beleev'd,
Sweare then by something, that thou hast not wrong'd.

Rich. Then by my Selfe.

Qu. Thy Selfe, is selfe-misvs'd.

Rich. Now by the World.

Qu. 'Tis full of thy foule wrongs.

Rich. My Fathers death.

Qu. Thy life hath it dishonor'd.

Rich. Why then, by Heauen.

Qu. Heauens wrong is most of all:
If thou did'st feare to breake an Oath with him,
The vnity the King my husband made,
Thou had'st not broken, nor my Brothers died.
If thou had'st fear'd to breake an oath by him,
Th'Imperiall mettall, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my Child,
And both the Princes had bene breathing heere,
Which now two tender Bed-fellowes for dust,
Thy broken Faith hath made the prey for Wormes.
What can'st thou sweare by now.

Rich. The time to come.

Qu. That thou hast wronged in the time ore-past:
For I my selfe haue many teares to wash
Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.
The Children liue, whose Fathers thou hast slaughter'd,
Vngouern'd youth, to waile it with their age:
The Parents liue, whose Children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren Plants, to waile it with their Age.
Sweare not by time to come, for that thou hast
Misvs'd ere vs'd, by times ill-vs'd repast.

Rich. As I entend to prosper, and repent:
So thriue I in my dangerous Affayres
Of hostile Armes: My selfe, my selfe confound:
Heauen, and Fortune barre me happy houres:
Day, yeeld me not thy light; nor Night, thy rest.
Be opposite all Planets of good lucke
To my proceeding, if with deere hearts loue,
Immaculate deuotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beautious Princely daughter.
In her, consists my Happinesse, and thine:
Without her, follow es to my selfe, and thee;
Her selfe, the Land, and many a Christian soule,
Death, Desolation, Ruine, and Decay;
It cannot be auoyded, but by this:
It will not be auoyded, but by this.
Therefore deare Mother (I must call you so)
Be the Attorney of my loue to her:
Pleade what I will be, not what I haue beene;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserue:
Vrge the Necessity and state of times,
And be not peeuish found, in great Designes.

Qu. Shall I be tempted of the Diuel thus?

Rich. I, if the Diuell tempt you to do good.

Qu. Shall I forget my selfe, to be my selfe.

Rich. I, if your selfes remembrance wrong your selfe.

Qu. Yet thou did'st kil my Children.

Rich. But in your daughters wombe I bury them.
Where in that Nest of Spicery they will breed
Selues of themselues, to your recomforture.

Qu. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

Rich. And be a happy Mother by the deed.

Qu. I go, write to me very shortly,
And you shal vnderstand from me her mind. Exit Q.

Rich. Beare her my true loues kisse, and so farewell.
Relenting Foole, and shallow-changing Woman.

. Richmond is on the Seas.
, There let him ſinke, and be the Seas on him,
-liuer'd Runnagate, what doth he there?
. I know not, mightie Soueraigne, but by gueſſe.
. Well, as you gueſſe.
. Stirr'd vp by Dorſet, Buckingham, and Morton,
kes for England, here to clayme the Crowne.
. Is the Chayre emptie? is the Sword vnſway'd?
King dead? the Empire vnpoſſeſt?
Heire of Yorke is there aliue, but wee?
he is Englands King, but greate Yorkes Heire?
ell me, what makes he vpon the Seas?
. Vnleſſe for that, my Liege, I cannot gueſſe.
. Vnleſſe for that he comes to be your Liege, newes gueſſe wherefore the Welchman comes.
wilt reuolt, and flye to him, I feare.
. No, my good Lord, therefore miſtruſt me not.
. Where is thy Power then, to beat him back?

y but now vpon the Welterne Shore,
onducting the Rebels from their Shippes?
. No, my good Lord, my friends are in the
. Cold friends to me: what do they in the North,
they ſhould ſerue their Soueraigne in the Weſt?

Stan. They haue not been commanded, mighty King:
Pleaſeth your Maieſtie to giue me leaue,
Ile muſter vp my friends, and meet your Grace,
Where, and what time your Maieſtie ſhall pleaſe.
Rich. I, thou would'ſt be gone, to ioyne with Richmond.
But Ile not truſt thee.
Stan. Moſt mightie Soueraigne,
You haue no cauſe to hold my friendſhip doubtfull,
I neuer was, nor neuer will be falſe.
Rich. Goe then, and muſter men: but leaue behind
Your Sonne George Stanley: looke your heart be firme,
Or elſe his Heads aſſurance is but fraile.
Stan. So deale with him, as I proue true to you.
Exit Stanley.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My gracious Soueraigne, now in Deuonſhire,
As I by friends am well aduertiſed,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughtie Prelate,
Biſhop of Exeter, his elder Brother,
With many moe Confederates, are in Armes.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. In Kent, my Liege, the Guiſfords are in Armes,
And euery houre more Competitors

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord, the Armie of great Buckingham.
Rich. Out on ye, Owles, nothing but Songs of Death,
He ſtriketh him.
There, take thou that, till thou bring better newes.
Meſſ. The newes I haue to tell your Maieſtie,
Is, that by ſudden Floods, and fall of Waters,
Buckinghams Armie is diſpers'd and ſcatter'd,
And he himſelfe wandred away alone,
No man knowes whither.
Rich. I cry thee mercie:
There is my Purſe, to cure that Blow of thine.
Hath any well-adui'ſed friend proclaym'd
Reward to him that brings the Traytor in?
Meſſ. Such Proclamation hath been made, my Lord.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Sir Thomas Louell, and Lord Marqueſſe Dorſet,
'Tis ſaid, my Liege, in Yorkeſhire are in Armes:
But this good comfort bring I to your Highneſſe,
The Britaine Nauie is diſpers'd by Tempeſt.
Richmond in Dorſetſhire ſent out a Boat
Vnto the ſhore, to aſke thoſe on the Banks,
If they were his Aſſiſtants, yea, or no?
Who anſwer'd him, they came from Buckingham,
Vpon his partie: he miſtruſting them,
Hoyſ'd ſayle, and made his courſe againe for Britaine.
Rich. March on, march on, ſince we are vp in Armes,
If not to fight with forraine Enemies,
Yet to beat downe theſe Rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cat. My Liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the beſt newes: that the Earle of Richmond

Is with a mighty power Landed at Milford,
Is colder Newes, but yet they muſt be told.
Rich. Away towards Salsbury, while we reaſon here,
A Royall battell might be wonne and loſt:
Some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salsbury, the reſt march on with me. Florish. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Derby, and Sir Chriſtopher.

Der. Sir Chriſtopher, tell Richmond this from me,
That in the ſtye of the moſt deadly Bore,
My Sonne George Stanley is franke vp in hold:
If I reuolt, off goes yong Georges head,
The feare of that, holds off my preſent ayde.
So get thee gone: commend me to thy Lord.
Withall ſay, that the Queene hath heartily conſented
He ſhould eſpouſe Elizabeth her daughter.
But tell me, where is Princely Richmond now?
Chri. At Penbroke, or at Hertford Weſt in Wales.
Der. What men of Name reſort to him.
Chri. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned Souldier,
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley,
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir Iames Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant Crew,
And many other of great name and worth:
And towards London do they bend their power,
If by the way they be not fought withall.
Der. Well hye thee to thy Lord: I kiſſe his hand,
My Letter will reſolue him of my minde.
Farewell. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Buckingham with Halberds, led to Execution

Buc. Will not King Richard let me ſpeake with him?
Sher. No my good Lord, therefore be patient
Buc. Haſtings, and Edwards children, Gray & Riuers,
Holy King Henry, and thy faire Sonne Edward,
Vaughan, and all that haue miſcarried
By vnder-hand corrupted foule iniuſtice,
If that your moody diſcontented ſoules,
Do through the clowds behold this preſent houre,
Euen for reuenge mocke my deſtruction.
This is All-ſoules day (Fellow) is it not?
Sher. It is.
Buc. Why then Al-ſoules day, is my bodies doomſday
This is the day, which in King Edwards time
I wiſh'd might fall on me, when I was found
Falſe to his Children, and his Wiues Allies,
This is the day, wherein I wiſhe to fall
By the falſe Faith of him whom moſt I truſted.
This, this All-ſoules day to my fearfull Soule,
Is the determin'd reſpit of my wrongs.
That high All-ſeer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my fained Prayer on my head,
And giuen in earneſt, what I begg'd in ieſt.
Thus doth he force the ſwords of wicked men
To turne their owne points in their Maſters boſomes.
Thus Margarets curſe falles heauy on my necke:
When he (quoth ſhe) ſhall ſplit thy heart with ſorrow,
Remember Margaret was a Prophetteſſe:
Come leade me Officers to the blocke of ſhame,
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
Exeunt Buckingham with Officers.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert, and others, with drum and colours.

Richm Fellowes in Armes, and my moſt louing Friends
Bruis'd vnderneath the yoake of Tyranny,
Thus farre into the bowels of the Land,
Haue we marcht on without impediment:
And heere receiue we from our Father Stanley
Lines of faire comfort and encouragement.
The wretched, bloody, and vſurping Boare,
(That ſpoyl'd your Summer Fields, and fruitfull Vines)
Swilles your warm blood like waſh, & makes his trough
In your embowel'd boſomes: This foule Swine
Is now euen in the Centry of this Iſle,
Ne're to the Towne of Leiceſter, as we learne:
From Tamworth thither, is but one dayes march.
In Gods name cheerely on, courageous Friends,
To reape the Harueſt of perpetuall peace,
By this one bloody tryall of ſharpe Warre.
Oxf. Euery mans Conſcience is a thouſand men,
To fight againſt this guilty Homicide.
Her. I doubt not but his Friends will turne to vs.
Blunt. He hath no friends, but what are friends for feare
Which in his deereſt needs will flye from him.
Richm. All for our vantage, then in Gods name march,
True Hope is ſwift, and flyes with Swallowes wings,
Kings it makes Gods, and meanes creatures Kings.
Exeunt Omnes.

Enter King Richard in Armes with Norfolke, Ratcliffe, and the Earle of Surrey.

Rich Here pitch our Tent, euen here in Boſworth field.

Nor. Heere moſt gracious Liege.
Rich. Norfolke, we muſt haue knockes:
Ha, muſt we not?
Nor. We muſt both giue and take my louing Lord.
Rich. Vp with my Tent, heere will I lye to night,
But where to morrow? Well, all's one for that
Who hath deſcried the number of the Traitors?
Nor Six or ſeuen thouſand is their vtmoſt power.
Rich. Why our Battalia trebbles that accompt
Beſides, the Kings name is a Tower of ſtrength,
Which they vpon the aduerſe Faction want.
Vp with the Tent: Come Noble Gentlemen,
Let vs ſuruey the vantage of the ground.
Call for ſome men of ſound direction:

Let's

y Lord.

ugh the Army, cheering vp the Souldiers.
o, I am ſatisfied: Giue me a Bowle of Wine,

And helpe to arme me. Leaue me I ſay. Exit Ratclif.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his Tent.
Der. Fortune, and Victory ſit on thy Helme.
Rich. All comfort that the darke night can affoord,
Be to thy Perſon, Noble Father in Law.
Tell me, how fares our Noble Mother?
Der. I by Attourney, bleſſe thee from thy Mother,
Who prayes continually for Richmonds good:
So much for that. The ſilent houres ſteale on,
And flakie darkeneſſe breakes within the Eaſt.
In breefe, for ſo the ſeaſon bids vs be,
Prepare thy Battell early in the Morning,
And put thy Fortune to th'Arbitrement
Of bloody ſtrokes, and mortall ſtaring Warre:
I, as I may, that which I would I cannot,
With beſt aduantage will deceiue the time,
And ayde thee in this doubtfull ſhocke of Armes.
But on thy ſide I may not be too forward,
Leaſt being ſeene, thy Brother, tender George
Be executed in his Fathers ſight.
Farewell: the leyſure, and the fearfull time
Cuts off the ceremonious Vowes of Loue,
And ample enterchange of ſweet Diſcourſe,
Which ſo long ſundred Friends ſhould dwell vpon:
God giue vs leyſure for theſe rites of Loue.
Once more Adieu, be valiant, and ſpeed well.
Richm. Good Lords conduct him to his Regiment:
Ile ſtriue with troubled noiſe, to take a Nap,
Leſt leaden ſlumber peize me downe to morrow,
When I ſhould mount with wings of Victory:
Once more, good night kinde Lords and Gentlemen.
Exeunt. Manet Richmond.
O thou, whoſe Captaine I account my ſelfe,
Looke on my Forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruſing Irons of wrath,
That they may cruſh downe with a heauy fall,
Th'vſurping Helmets of our Aduerſaries:
Make vs thy miniſters of Chaſtiſement,
That we may praiſe thee in thy victory:
To thee I do commend my watchfull ſoule,
Ere I let fall the windowes of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, oh defend me ſtill. Sleeps.

Enter the Ghoſt of Prince Edward, Sonne to Henry the ſixt.
Gh. to Ri. Let me ſit heauy on thy ſoule to morrow:
Thinke how thou ſtab'ſt me in my prime of youth
At Tewkeſbury: Diſpaire therefore, and dye.
Ghoſt to Richm. Be chearefull Richmond,
For the wronged Soules
Of butcher'd Princes, fight in thy behalfe:
King Henries iſſue Richmond comforts thee.

Enter the Ghoſt of Henry the ſixt.
Ghoſt. When I was mortall, my Annointed body
By thee was punched full of holes:
Thinke on the Tower, and me: Diſpaire, and dye,
Harry the ſixt, bids thee diſpaire, and dye.
To Richm. Vertuous and holy be thou Conqueror:
Harry that prophеſied thou ſhould'ſt be King,
Doth comfort thee in ſlepe: Liue, and flouriſh.

Enter the Ghoſt of Clarence.

Ghoſt. Let me ſit heauy in thy ſoule to morrow,
I that was waſh'd to death with Fulſome Wine:
Poore Clarence by thy guile betray'd to death:
To morrow in the battell thinke on me,
And fall thy edgeleſſe Sword, diſpaire and dye.

To Richm. Thou off-ſpring of the houſe of Lancaſter
The wronged heyres of Yorke do pray for thee,
Good Angels guard thy battell, Liue and Flouriſh.

Enter the Ghoſts of Riuers, Grey, and Vaughan.

Riu Let me ſit heauy in thy ſoule to morrow,
Riuers, that dy'de at Pomfret: diſpaire, and dye.

Grey. Thinke vpon Grey, and let thy ſoule diſpaire.

Vaugh. Thinke vpon Vaughan, and with guiltie feare
Let fall thy Lance, diſpaire and dye.

All to Richm. Awake,
And thinke our wrongs in Richards Boſome,
Will conquer him. Awake, and win the day.

Enter the Ghoſt of Lord Haſtings.

Gho. Bloody and guiltie: guiltily awake,
And in a bloody Battell end thy dayes.
Thinke on Lord Haſtings: diſpaire, and dye.

Haſt. to Rich. Quiet vntroubled ſoule,
Awake, awake:
Arme, fight, and conquer, for faire Englands ſake.

Enter the Ghoſts of the two yong Princes.

Ghoſts. Dreame on thy Couſins
Smothered in the Tower:
Let vs be laid within thy boſome Richard,
And weigh thee downe to ruine, ſhame, and death,
Thy Nephewes ſoule bids thee diſpaire and dye.

Ghoſts to Richm. Sleepe Richmond,
Sleepe in Peace, and wake in Ioy,
Good Angels guard thee from the Boares annoy,
Liue, and beget a happy race of Kings,
Edwards vnhappy Sonnes, do bid thee flouriſh.

Enter the Ghoſt of Anne his Wife.

Ghoſt to Rich. Richard, thy Wife,
That wretched Anne thy Wife,
That neuer ſlept a quiet houre with thee,
Now fills thy ſleepe with perturbations,
To morrow in the Battaile, thinke on me,
And fall thy edgeleſſe Sword, diſpaire and dye:

Ghoſt to Richm. Thou quiet ſoule,
Sleepe thou a quiet ſleepe:
Dreame of Succeſſe, and Happy Victory,
Thy Aduerſaries Wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghoſt of Buckingham.

Ghoſt to Rich. The firſt was I
That help'd thee to the Crowne:
The laſt was I that felt thy Tyranny.
O, in the Battaile think on Buckingham,
And dye in terror of thy guiltineſſe.
Dreame on, dreame on, of bloody deeds and death,
Fainting diſpaire; diſpairing yeeld thy breath.

Ghoſt to Richm. I dyed for hope
Ere I could lend thee Ayde;
But cheere thy heart, and be thou not diſmayde:
God, and good Angels fight on Richmonds ſide,
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.

Richard ſtarts out of his dreame.

Rich. Giue me another Horſe, bind vp my Wounds:
Haue mercy Ieſu. Soft. I did but dreame.
O coward Conſcience! how doſt thou afflict me?
The Lights burne blew. It is not dead midnight.
Cold fearefull drops ſtand on my trembling fleſh.
What? do I feare my Selfe? There's none elſe by,
Richard loues Richard, that is, I am I.
Is there a Murtherer heere? No; Yes, I am:
Then flye; What from my Selfe? Great reaſon: why?
Leſt I Reuenge. What? my Selfe vpon my Selfe?
Alacke, I loue my Selfe. Wherefore? For any good
That I my Selfe, haue done vnto my Selfe?
O no. Alas, I rather hate my Selfe,
For hatefull Deeds committed by my Selfe.
I am a Villaine: yet I Lye, I am not.
Foole, of thy Selfe ſpeake well: Foole, do not flatter.
My Conſcience hath a thouſand ſeuerall Tongues,
And euery Tongue brings in a ſeuerall Tale,
And euerie Tale condemnes me for a Villaine:
Periurie, in the high'ſt Degree,
Murther, ſterne murther, in the dyr'ſt degree,
All ſeuerall ſinnes, all vs'd in each degree,
Throng all to'th' Barre, crying all, Guilty, Guilty.
I ſhall diſpaire, there is no Creature loues me;
And if I die, no ſoule ſhall pittie me.
Nay, wherefore ſhould they? Since that I my Selfe,
Finde in my Selfe, no pittie to my Selfe.
Me thought, the Soules of all that I had murther'd
Came to my Tent, and euery one did threat
To morrowes vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.

King Who's there?

Rat. Ratcliffe my Lord, 'tis I: the early Village Cock
Hath twice done ſalutation to the Morne,
Your Friends are vp, and buckle on their Armour.

King. O Ratcliffe, I feare, I feare.

Rat. Nay good my Lord, be not affraid of Shadowes.

King. By the Apoſtle Paul, ſhadowes to night
Haue ſtroke more terror to the ſoule of Richard,
Then can the ſubſtance of ten thouſand Soldiers
Armed in proofe, and led by ſhallow Richmond.
'Tis not yet neere day. Come go with me,
Vnder our Tents Ile play the Eaſe-dropper,
To heare if any meane to ſhrinke from me.

Exeunt Richard & Ratliffe.

Enter the Lords to Richmond ſitting in his Tent.

Richm. Good morrow Richmond.

Rich. Cry mercy Lords, and watchfull Gentlemen,
That you haue ta'ne a tardie ſluggard heere?

Lords. How haue you ſlept my Lord?

Rich. The ſweeteſt ſleepe,
And faireſt boading Dreames,
That euer entred in a drowſie head,
Haue I ſince your departure had my Lords.
Me thought their Soules, whoſe bodies Rich. murther'd,
Came to my Tent, and cried on Victory:
I promiſe you my Heart is very iocond,
In the remembrance of ſo faire a dreame,
How farre into the Morning is it Lords?

Lor. Vpon the ſtroke of foure.

Rich. Why then 'tis time to Arme, and giue direction.

His Oration to his Souldiers.

More then I haue ſaid, louing Countrymen,
The leyſure and inforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell vpon: yet remember this,

God

our good cauſe, fight vpon our ſide, rs of holy Saints and wronged ſoules,
rear'd Bulwarkes, ſtand before our Faces.
except) thoſe whom we fight againſt,
r haue vs win, then him they follow.
is he they follow? Truly Gentlemen,
Tyrant, and a Homicide:
l in blood, and one in blood eſtabliſh'd;
made meanes to come by what he hath,
peter'd thoſe that were the meanes to help him:
le Stone, made precious by the ſoyle
nds Chaire, where he is falſely ſet:
hath euer beene Gods Enemy.
o fight againſt Gods Enemy,
in iuſtice word you as his Soldiers.
ſweare to put a Tyrant downe,
e in peace, the Tyrant being ſlaine:
fight againſt your Countries Foes, ountries Fat ſhall pay your paines the hyre,
fight in ſafegard of your wiues,
es ſhall welcome home the Conquerors.
free you Children from the Sword,
ldrens Children quits it in your Age.
he name of God and all theſe rights,
your Standards, draw your willing Swords.
he ranſome of my bold attempt,
his cold Corpes on the earth's cold face.
riue, the gaine of my attempt,
of you ſhall ſhare his part thereof.
rummes and Trumpets boldly, and cheerefully,
Saint George, Richmond, and Victory.

Enter King Richard, Ratcliffe, and Catesby.

t ſaid Northumberland as touching Richmond?
hat he was neuer trained vp in Armes.
he ſaid the truth: and what ſaid Surrey then?
ſmil'd and ſkild, the better for our purpoſe.
he was in the right, and ſo indeed it is.
locke there. Clocke ſtrikes.
a Kalender: Who ſaw the Sunne to day?
Not I my Lord.
Then he diſdaines to ſhine: for by the Booke d haue bram'd the Eaſt an houre ago,
day will it be to ſomebody. Ratcliffe.
dy Lord.
The Sun will not be ſeene to day,
doth frowne, and lowre vpon our Army.
theſe dewy teares were from the ground.
e to day? Why, what is that to me n to Richmond? For the ſelfe-ſame Heauen ones on me, lookes ſadly vpon him.

Enter Norfolke.

rme, arme, my Lord: the foe vaunts in the field.
Come, buſtle, buſtle. Capariſon my horſe.
ord Stanley, bid him bring his power,
he forth my Soldiers to the plaine,
my Battell ſhall be ordred.
rward ſhall be drawne in length,
g equally of Horſe and Foote:
ers ſhall be placed in the mid'ſt:
e of Norfolke, Thomas Earle of Surrey,
e the leading of the Foote and Horſe.
directed, we will follow

In the maine Battell, whoſe puiſſance on either ſide
Shall be well-winged with our cheefeſt Horſe:
This, and Saint George to boote.
What think'ſt thou Norfolke.
Nor. A good direction warlike Soueraigne,
This found I on my Tent this Morning.
Iackey of Norfolke, be not ſo bold,
For Dickon thy maſter is bought and ſold.
King. A thing deuiſed by the Enemy.
Go Gentlemen, every man to his Charge,
Let not our babling Dreames affright our ſoules:
For Conſcience is a word that Cowards vſe,
Deuis'd at firſt to keepe the ſtrong in awe,
Our ſtrong armes be our Conſcience, Swords our Law.
March on, ioyne brauely, let vs too't pell mell,
If not to heauen, then hand in hand to Hell.
What ſhall I ſay more then I haue inferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withall,
A ſort of Vagabonds, Rafcals, and Run-awayes,
A ſcum of Brittaines, and baſe Lackey Peazants,
Whom their o're-cloyed Country vomits forth
To deſperate Aduentures, and aſſur'd Deſtruction.
You ſleeping ſafe, they bring you to vnreſt:
You hauing Lands, and bleſt with beauteous wiues,
They would reſtraine the one, diſtaine the other,
And who doth leade them, but a paltry Fellow?
Long kept in Britaine at our Mothers coſt,
A Milke-ſop, one that neuer in his life
Felt ſo much cold, as ouer ſhooes in Snow:
Let's whip theſe ſtraglers o'er the Seas againe,
Laſh hence theſe ouer-weening Ragges of France,
Theſe famiſh'd Beggers, weary of their liues,
Who (but for dreaming on this fond exploit)
For want of meanes (poore Rats) had hang'd themſelues.
If we be conquered, let men conquer vs,
And not theſe baſtard Britaines, whom our Fathers
Haue in their owne Land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,
And on Record, left them the heires of ſhame.
Shall theſe enioy our Lands? lye with our Wiues?
Rauiſh our daughters? Drum a farre off
Hearke, I heare their Drumme,
Right Gentlemen of England, fight boldly yeomen,
Draw Archers draw your Arrowes to the head,
Spurre your proud Horſes hard, and ride in blood,
Amaze the welkin with your broken ſtaues.

Enter a Meſſenger.

What ſayes Lord Stanley, will he bring his power?
Meſ. My Lord, he doth deny to come.
King. Off with his ſonne Georges head.
Nor. My Lord, the Enemy is paſt the Marſh:
After the battaile, let George Stanley dye.
King. A thouſand hearts are great within my boſome.
Aduance our Standards, ſet vpon our Foes,
Our Ancient word of Courage, faire S. George
Inſpire vs with the ſpleene of fiery Dragons:
Vpon them, Victorie ſits on our helpes.

Alarum, excurſions. Enter Catesby.

Cat. Reſcue my Lord of Norfolke,
Reſcue, Reſcue:
The King enacts more wonders then a man,
Daring an oppoſite to every danger:
His horſe is ſlaine, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:
Reſcue faire Lord, or elſe the day is loſt.
Alarums.

Enter Richard.

Rich. A Horſe, a Horſe, my Kingdome for a Horſe.
Cates. Withdraw my Lord, Ile helpe you to a Horſe
Rich. Slaue, I haue ſet my life vpon a caſt,
And I will ſtand the hazard of the Dye:
I thinke there be ſixe Richmonds in the field,
Fiue haue I ſlaine to day, in ſtead of him.
A Horſe, a Horſe, my Kingdome for a Horſe.

Alarum, Enter Richard and Richmond, they fight, Richard is ſlaine.

Retreat and Flourish. Enter Richmond, Derby bearing the Crowne, with diuers other Lords.

Richm. God, and your Armes
Be prais'd Victorious Friends;
The day is ours, the bloudy Dogge is dead.
Der. Courageous Richmond,
Well haſt thou acquit thee: Loe,
Heere theſe long vſurped Royalties,
From the dead Temples of this bloudy Wretch,
Haue I pluck'd off, to grace thy Browes withall.
Weare it, and make much of it.
Richm. Great God of Heauen, ſay Amen to all.
But tell me, is yong George Stanley liuing?
Der. He is my Lord, and ſafe in Leiceſter Towne,
Whither (if you pleaſe) we may withdraw vs.
Richm. What men of name are ſlaine on either ſide?
Der. Iohn Duke of Norfolke, Walter Lord Ferris,
Sir Robert Brokenbury, and Sir William Brandon.
Richm. Interre their Bodies, as become their Births,
Proclaime a pardon to the Soldiers fled,
That in ſubmiſſion will returne to vs,
And then as we haue ta'ne the Sacrament,
We will vnite the White Roſe, and the Red.
Smile Heauen vpon this faire Conioniction,
That long haue frown'd vpon their Enmity:
What Traitor heares me, and ſayes not Amen?
England hath long beene mad, and ſcarr'd her ſelfe;
The Brother blindely ſhed the Brothers blood;
The Father, raſhly ſlaughtered his owne Sonne;
The Sonne compell'd, beene Butcher to the Sire;
All this diuided Yorke and Lancaſter,
Diuided, in their dire Diuiſion.
O now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true Succeeders of each Royall Houſe,
By Gods faire ordinance, conioyne together:
And let thy Heires (God if thy will be ſo)
Enrich the time to come, with Smooth-fac'd Peace,
With ſmiling Plenty, and faire Proſperous dayes.
Abate the edge of Traitors, Gracious Lord,
That would reduce theſe bloudy dayes againe.
And make poore England weepe in Streames of Blood;
Let them not liue to taſte this Lands increaſe,
That would with Treaſon, wound this faire Lands peace.
Now Ciuill wounds are ſtopp'd, Peace liues againe;
That ſhe may long liue heere, God ſay, Amen. Exeu

FINIS.

The Famous Hiſtory of the Life of King HENRY the Eight.

THE PROLOGVE.

I Come no more to make you laugh, Things now,
That beare a Weighty, and a Serious Brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of State and Woe.
Such Noble Scenes, as drawe the Eye to flow
We now preſent. Thoſe that can Pity, heere
May (if they thinke it well) let fall a Teare,
The Subiect will deſerue it. Such as giue
Their Money out of hope they may beleeue,
May heere finde Truth too. Thoſe that come to ſee
Onely a ſhow or two, and ſo agree,
The Play may paſſe: If they be ſtill, and willing,
Ile vndertake may ſee away their ſhilling Richly in two ſhort houres. Onely they
That come to heare a Merry, Bawdy Play,
A noiſe of Targets: Or to ſee a Fellow
In a long Motley Coate, garded with Yellow,
Will be deceyu'd. For gentle Hearers, know
To ranke our choſen Truth with ſuch a ſhow
As Foole, and Fight is, beſide forfeyting
Our owne Braines, and the Opinion that we bring
To make that onely true, we now intend.
Will leaue vs euer an vnderſtanding Friend.
Therefore, for Goodneſſe ſake, and as you are knowne
The Firſt and Happieſt Hearers of the Towne,
Be ſad, as we would make ye. Thinke ye ſee
The very Perſons of our Noble Story,
As they were Liuing: Thinke you ſee them Great,
And follow'd with the generall throng, and ſweat
Of thouſand Friends: Then, in a moment, ſee
How ſoone this Mightineſſe, meets Miſery:
And if you can be merry then, Ile ſay,
A Man may weepe vpon his Wedding day.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the Duke of Norfolke at one doore. At the other, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abergauenny.

Buckingham.

GOod morrow, and well met. How haue ye done
Since laſt we ſaw in France?

Nor. I thanke your Grace:
Healthfull, and euer ſince a freſh Admirer
Of what I ſaw there.

Buck. An vntimely Ague
Staid me a Priſoner in my Chamber, when Thoſe Sunnes of Glory, thoſe two Lights of Men
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde,
I was then preſent, ſaw them ſalute on Horſeback,
Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their Embracement, as they grew together,
Which had they,
What foure Thron'd ones could haue weigh'd
Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my Chambers Priſoner.

Nor. Then you loſt
The view of earthly glory: Men might ſay
Till this time Pompe was ſingle, but now married
To one aboue it ſelfe. Each following day
Became the next dayes maſter, till the laſt
Made former Wonders, it's. To day the French,
All Cinquant all in Gold, like Heathen Gods
Shone downe the Engliſh; and to morrow, they Made Britaine, India: Euery man that ſtood, Shew d like a Mine. Their Dwarfiſh Pages were
As Cherubins, all gilt: the Madams too,
Not vs'd to toyle, did almoſt ſweat to beare
The Pride vpon them, that their very labour
Was to them, as a Painting. Now this Maſke
Was cry'de incompareable; and th'enſuing night
Made it a Foole, and Begger. The two Kings
Equall in luſtre, were now beſt, now worſt
As preſence did preſent them: Him in eye,
Still him in praiſe, and being preſent both,
'Twas ſaid they ſaw but one, and no Diſcerner
Durſt wagge his Tongue in cenſure, when theſe Sunnes
(For ſo they phraſe 'em) by their Heralds challeng'd
The Noble Spirits to Armes, they did performe

Beyond thoughts Compaſſe, that former fabulous Storie
Being now ſeene, poſſible enough, got credit
That Bowre was beleeu'd.
Buc. Oh you go farre.
Nor. As I belong to worſhip, and affect
In Honor, Honeſty, the tract of eu'ry thing,
Would by a good Diſcourſer looſe ſome life,
Which Actions ſelfe, was tongue too.
Buc. All was Royall,
To the diſpoſing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gaue each thing view. The Office did
Diſtinctly his full Function: who did guide,
I meane who ſet the Body, and the Limbes
Of this great Sport together?
Nor. As you gueſſe:
One certes, that promiſes no Element
In ſuch a buſineſſe.
Buc. I pray you who, my Lord?
Nor. All this was ordred by the good Diſcretion
Of the right Reuerend Cardinall of Yorke.
Buc. The diuell ſpeed him: No mans Pye is freed
From his Ambitious finger. What had he
To do in theſe fierce Vanities? I wonder,
That ſuch a Keech can with his very bulke
Take vp the Rayes o'th'beneficiall Sun,
And keepe it from the Earth.
Nor. Surely Sir,
There's in him ſtuffe, that put's him to theſe ends:
For being not propt by Aunceſtry, whoſe grace
Chalkes Succeſſors their way; nor call'd vpon
For high feats done to'th Crowne; neither Allied
To eminent Aſſiſtants; but Spider-like
Out of his Selfe-drawing Web. O giues vs note,
The force of his owne merit makes his way
A guift that heauen giues for him, which buyes
A place next to the King.
Aber. I cannot tell
What Heauen hath giuen him: let ſome Grauer eye
Pierce into that, but I can ſee his Pride
Peepe through each part of him: whence ha's he that,
If not from Hell? The Diuell is a Niggard,
Or ha's giuen all before, and he begins
A new Hell in himſelfe.
Buc. Why the Duell,
Vpon this French going out, tooke he vpon him
(Without the priuity o'th'King) t'appoint
Who ſhould attend on him? He makes vp the File
Of all the Gentry; for the moſt part ſuch
To whom as great a Charge, as little Honor
He meant to lay vpon: and his owne Letter
The Honourable Board of Councell, out
Muſt fetch him in, he Papers.
Aber. I do know
Kinſmen of mine, three at the leaſt, that haue
By this, ſo ſicken'd their Eſtates, that neuer
They ſhall abound as formerly.
Buc. O many
Haue broke their backes with laying Manors on 'em
For this great Iourney. What did this vanity
But miniſter communication of
A moſt poore iſſue.
Nor. Greeningly I thinke,
The Peace betweene the French and vs, not valewes
The Coſt that did conclude it.
Buc. Euery man,
After the hideous ſtorme that follow'd, was
A thing Inſpir'd, and not conſulting, broke
Into a generall Prophecie: That this Tempeſt
Diſſhing the Garment of this Peace, abouded
The ſodaine breſch on't.
Nor. Which is budded out,
For France hath flaw'd the League, and hath attach'd
Our Merchants goods at Burdeux.
Aber. Is it therefore Th'Ambaſſador is ſilenc'd?
Nor. Marry is't.
Aber. A proper Title of a Peace, and purchas'd
At a ſuperfluous rate.
Buc. Why all this Buſineſſe
Our Reuerend Cardinall carried.
Nor. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the priuate difference
Betwixt you, and the Cardinall. I aduiſe you
(And take it from a heart, that wiſhes towards you Honor, and plenteous ſafety) that you reade
The Cardinals Malice, and his Potency
Together; To conſider further, that
What his high Hatred would effect, wants not
A Miniſter in his Power. You know his Nature,
That he's Reuengefull; and I know, his Sword
Hath a ſharpe edge: It's long, and 'tmay be ſtiide
It reaches farre, and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Boſome vp my counſell,
You'l finde it wholeſome. Loe, where comes that Rock
That I aduiſe your ſhunning.

Enter Cardinall Wolſey, the Purſe borne before him, certaine of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers: The Cardinall in his paſſage, fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of diſdaine.

Car. The Duke of Buckingham Surueyor? Ha?
Where's his Examination?
Secr. Heere ſo pleaſe you.
Car. Is he in perſon, ready?
Secr. I, pleaſe your Grace.
Car. Well, we ſhall then know more, & Buckingham
Shall leſſen this bigge looke.
Exeunt Cardinall, and his Traine.
Buc This Butchers Curre is venom'd-mouth'd, and I
Haue not the power to muzzle him, therefore beſt
Not wake him in his ſlumber. A Beggers booke,
Out-worths a Nobles blood.
Nor. What are you chaff'd?
Aske God for Temp'rance, that's th'appliance only
Which your diſeaſe requires.
Buc. I read in's looks
Matter againſt me, and his eye reuil'd
Me as his abiect obiect, at this inſtant
He bores me with ſome tricke; He's gone to'th King:
Ile follow, and out-ſtare him.
Nor. Stay my Lord,
And let your Reaſon with your Choller queſtion
What 'tis you go about: to climbe ſteepe hilles Requires ſlow pace at firſt. Anger is like
A full hot Horſe, who being allow'd his way
Self-mettle tyres him: Not a man in England
Can aduiſe me like you: Be to your ſelfe,
As you would to your Friend.
Buc. Ile to the King,
And from a mouth of Honor, quite cry downe

The

This Ipswich fellowes inſolence; or proclaime,
There's difference in no perſons.
Norf. Be aduis'd;
Heat not a Furnace for your foe ſo hot
That it do ſindge your ſelfe. We may out-runne
By violent ſwiftneſſe that which we run at,
And loſe by over-running: know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till't run ore,
In ſeeming to augment it, waſtes it. be aduis'd;
I ſay againe there is no Engliſh Soule
More ſtronger to direct you then your ſelfe;
If with the ſap of reaſon you would quench,
Or but allay the fire of paſſion.
Buck. Sir,
I am thankfull to you, and Ile goe along
By your preſcription: but this top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From ſincere motions, by Intelligence,
And proofes as cleere as Founts in July, when
We ſee each graine of gravell; I doe know
To be corrupt and treaſonous.
Norf. Say not treaſonous.
Buck. To th'King Ile ſay't, & make my vouch as ſtrong
As ſhore of Rocke: attend. This holy Foxe,
Or Wolſe, or both (for he is equall rau'nous
As he is ſubtile, and as prone to miſchiefe,
As able to perform't) his minde, and place
Infecting one another, yea reciprocally,
Only to ſhew his pompe, as well in France,
As here at home, ſuggeſts the King our Maſter
To this laſt coſtly Treaty: Th'enterview,
That ſwallowed ſo much treaſure, and like a glaſſe
Did breake ith'wrenching.
Norf. Faith, and ſo it did.
Buck. Pray giue me fauour Sir: This cunning Cardinall
The Articles o'th' Combination drew
As himſelfe pleas'd; and they were ratified
As he cride thus let be, to as much end,
As giue a Crutch to th'dead. But our Count-Cardinall
Has done this, and tis well: for worthy Wolſey
(Who cannot erre) he did it. Now this followes, (Which as I take it, is a kinde of Puppie
To th'old dam Treaſon) Charles the Emperour, Vnder pretence to ſee the Queene his Aunt,
(For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whiſper Wolſey) here makes viſitation,
His feares were that the Interview betwixt
England and France, might through their amity
Breed him ſome preiudice; for from this League,
Peep'd harmes that menac'd him. Priuily
Deales with our Cardinal, and as I trow
Which I doe well; for I am ſure the Emperour
Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his Suit was granted
Ere it was aſk'd. But when the way was made
And pau'd with gold: the Emperor thus deſir'd,
That he would pleaſe to alter the Kings courſe,
And breake the foreſaid peace. Let the King know
(As ſoone he ſhall by me) that thus the Cardinall
Does buy and ſell his Honour as he pleaſes,
And for his owne aduantage.
Norf. I am ſorry
To heare this of him; and could wiſh he were Something miſtaken in't.
Buck. No, not a ſillable:
I doe pronounce him in that very ſhape
He ſhall appeare in proofe.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant at Armes before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Brandon. Your Office Sergeant: execute it.
Sergeant. Sir,
My Lord the Duke of Buckingham and Earle
Of Herreford Stafford and Northampton, I
Arreſt thee of High Treaſon, in the name
Of our moſt Soueraigne King.
Buck. Lo you my Lord,
The net has falne vpon me, I ſhall periſh
Vnder deuice, and practiſe.
Bran. I am ſorry,
To ſee you tane from liberty, to looke on
The buſines preſent. 'Tis his Highneſs pleaſure
You ſhall to th' Tower
Buck. It will helpe me nothing
To plead mine Innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'ſt part, black. The will of Heav'n
Be done in this and all things: I obey.
O my Lord Aburgany, Fare you well.
Bran. Nay, he muſt beare you company. The King
Is pleas'd you ſhall to th'Tower, till you know
How he determines further.
Abur. As the Duke ſaid.
The will of Heauen be done, and the Kings pleaſure
By me obey'd.
Bran. Here is a warrant from
The King, t'attach Lord Abergauenny, and the Bodies
Of the Dukes Confeſſor, John de la Car,
One Gilbert Peck, his Councellour.
Buck. So, ſo;
Theſe are the limbs o'th' Plot: no more I hope.
Bra. A Monke o'th' Chartreux.
Buck. O Michaell Hopkins?
Bra. He.
Buck. My Surueyor is falſe. The ote-greſt Cardinall
Hath ſhew'd him gold; my life is ſpand already:
I am the ſhadow of poore Buckingham,
Whoſe Figure euen this inſtant Cloud puts on,
By Darkning my cleere Sunne. My Lords farewell. Exe.

Scena Secunda.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinals ſhoulder, the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Louell: the Cardinall places himſelfe vnder the Kings feete on his right ſide.

King. My life it ſelfe, and the beſt heart of it,
Thankes you for this great care. I ſtood i'th' leuell
Of a full-charg'd confederacie, and giue thankes
To you that choak'd it. Let be cald before vs
That Gentleman of Buckingham, in perſon,
Ile heare him his confeſſions iuſtifie,
And point by points the Treaſons of his Maſter,
He ſhall againe relate.
A noiſe within crying roome for the Queene, vſher'd by the Duke of Norfolke. Enter the Queene, Norfolke and Suffolke: ſhe kneels. King riſeth from his State, takes her vp, kiſſes and placeth her by him.
Queen. Nay, we muſt longer kneele; I am a Suitor.
King. Ariſe, and take place by vs; halfe your Suit
Neuer name to vs; you haue halfe our power:

The

The other moity ere you aske is giuen,
Repeat your will, and take it.

Quee. Thanke your Maiesty
That you would loue your selfe, and in that loue
Not vnconsidered leaue your Honour, nor
The dignity of your Office; is the poynt
Of my Petition.

Kin. Lady mine proceed.

Quee. I am solicited not by a few,
And those of true condition; That your Subiects
Are in great grieuance: There haue beene Commissions
Sent downe among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their Loyalties; wherein, although
My good Lord Cardmall, they vent reproches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on
Of these exactions: yet the King, our Maister (not Whose Honor Heauen shield from soile; euen he escapes
Language vnmannerly; yea, such which breakes
The sides of loyalty, and almost appeares
In lowd Rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appeares,
It doth appeare; for, vpon these Taxations,
The Clothiers all not able to maintaine
The many to them longing, haue put off
The Spinsters, Carders, Fullers, Weauers, who
Vnfit for other life, compeld by hunger
And lack of other meanes, in desperate manner
Daring th'euent too th'teeth, are all in vproare,
And danger serues among them.

Kin. Taxation?
Wherein? and what Taxation? My Lord Cardinall,
You that are blam'd for it alike with vs,
Know you of this Taxation?

Card. Please you Sir,
I know but of a single part in ought Pertaines to th'State; and front but in that File
Where others tell steps with me.

Quee. No, my Lord?
You know no more then others? But you frame
Things that are knowne alike, which are not wholsome
To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions (Whereof my Soueraigne would haue note) they are Most pestilent to th'hearing, and to beare 'em,
The Backe is Sacrifice to th'load; They say
They are deuis'd by you, or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

Kin. Still Exaction:
The nature of it, in what kinde let's know,
Is this Exaction?

Quee. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience, but am boldned
Vnder your promis'd pardon. The Subiects griefe
Comes through Commissions, which compels from each
The first part of his Substance, to be leuied
Without delay; and the pretence for this
Is nam'd, your warres in France: this makes bold mouths,
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegeance in them; their curses now
Liue where their prayers did: and i'is come to passe,
This tractable obedience is a Slaue
To each incensed Will: I would your Highneſſe
Would giue it quicke consideration; for
There is no primer baseneſſe.

Kin. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Card. And for me,
I haue no further gone in this, then by
A single voice, and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the Iudges: If I am
Traduc'd by ignorant Tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The Chronicles of my doing: Let me say,
'Tis but the fate of Place, and the rough brake
That Vertue must go through: we must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the feare
To cope malicious Censurers, which ever,
As rauenous Fishes doe a Vessell follow
That is new trim'd; but benefit no further
Then vainly longing. What we oft doe best,
By sicke Interpreters (once weake ones) is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cride vp
For our best Act: if we shall stand still,
In feare our motion will be mock'd, or carp'd at,
We should take roote here, where we sit;
Or sit State-Statues onely.

Kin. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselues from feare:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Haue you a President
Of this Commission? I beleeue, not any.
We must not rend our Subiects from our Lawes,
And sticke them in our Will. Sixt part of each?
A trembling Contribution; why we take
From euery Tree, lop, barke, and part o'th' Timber:
And though we leaue it with a roote thus hackt,
The Apre will drinke the Sap. To euery County
Where this is question'd, send our Letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denyed
The force of this Commission: pray looke too't;
I put it to your care.

Card. A word with you.
Let there be Letters writ to euery Shire,
Of the Kings grace and pardon: the greeued Commons
Hardly conceiue of me. Let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession, this Reuokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon aduise you Further in the proceeding. Exit Secret.

Enter Surueyor.

Quee. I am sorry, that the Duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

Kin. It grieues many:
The Gentleman is Learn'd, and a most rare Speaker,
To Nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great Teachers,
And neuer seeke for ayd out of himselfe: yet see,
When these so Noble benefits shall proue
Not well dispos'd, the minde growing once corrupt,
They turne to vicious formes, ten times more vgly
Then euer they were faire. This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders; and when we Almost with rauish'd listning, could not finde
His houre of speech, a minute: He, (my Lady)
Hath into monstrous habits put the Graces
That once were his, and is become as blacke,
As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by vs, you shall heare
(This was his Gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike Honour sad. Bid him recount
The fore-recited practises, whereof
We cannot feele too little, heare too much.

Card.

Stand forth, & with bold Spirit relate what you e a carefull Subiect haue collected he Duke of Buckingham.
Speake freely.
Firſt, it was vſuall with him; every day
d infect his Speech: That if the King without iſſue dye; hee'l carry it ſo e the Scepter his. Theſe very words rd him vtter to his Sonne in Law, burgany, to whom by oth he menac'd
e vpon the Cardinall.
L. Pleaſe your Highneſſe note ngerous conception in this point, nded by his with to your High perſon;
is moſt malignant, and it ſtretches
you to your friends.
n. My learn'd Lord Cardinall, all with Charity.
Speake on:
grounded hee his Title to the Crowne er ſuite; to this poynt haſt thou heard him, ime ſpeake ought?
He was brought to this,
ne Prophecie of Nicholas Henton.
What was that Henton?
Sir, a Chartreux Fryer, confeſſor, who fed him every minute
ords of Soueraignty.
How know'ſt thou this?
Not long before your Highneſſe ſped to France,
he being at the Roſe, within the Pariſh aurence Pountney, did of me demand rus the ſpeech among the Londoners, ning the French Journey. I replide, re the French would preuue perfidious
ings danger: preſently, the Duke
as the ſtate indeed, and that he doubted ſ proue the verity of certaine words
y a holy Monke, that oft, ſayes he,
s to me, willing me to permit
y Car, my Chaplaine, a choyce houre from him a matter of ſome moment:
after vnder the Commiſſions Seale, mnly had ſworne, that what he ſpoke plaine to no Creature liuing, but ſhould vtter, with demure Confidence, aſingly enſu'de; neither the King, nor's Heyres ne the Duke) ſhall proſper, bid him ſtriue ome o'th' Commonalty, the Duke uerne England.
n. If I know you well,
re the Dukes Surueyor, and loſt your Office complaint o'th' Tenance; take good heed
arge not in your ſpleene a Noble perſon, yle your nobler Soule; I ſay, take heed;
eſtly beſeech you.
Let him on: Goe forward.
On my Soule, Ile ſpeake but truth.
y Lord the Duke, by th'Diuels illuſions nke might be deceiu'd, and that 'twas dangerous ſo rumination on this ſo farre, vnwill (him ſome deſigne, which being beleeu'd uch like to doe: He anſwer'd, Tuſh, ue me no damage; adding further,
the King in his laſt Sickneſſe faild, dmals and vic Thomas Louells heads
Should haue gone off.
Kin. Ha? What, ſo rancke? Ah, ha,
There's miſchiefe in this man; canſt thou ſay further?
Sur. I can my Liedge.
Kin. Proceed.
Sur. Being at Greenwich,
After your Highneſſe had reprou'd the Duke
About Sir William Blomer (ſant,
Kin. I remember of ſuch a time, being my ſworn ſer-
The Duke retein'd him his. But on: what hence?
Sur. If (quoth he) I for this had beene committed,
As to the Tower, I thought; I would haue plaid
The Part my Father meant to act vpon
Th'Vſurper Richard, who being at Salsbury,
Made ſuit to come in's preſence; which if granted,
(As he made ſemblance of his duty) would
Haue put his knife into him.
Kin. A Gyant Traytor.
Card. Now Madam, may his Highnes liue in freedome,
And this man out of Priſon.
Queen. God mend all. (ſay'ſt
Kin. Ther's ſomthing more would out of thee; what
Sur. After the Duke his Father, with the knife
He ſtretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger,
Another ſpread on's breaſt, mounting his eyes,
He did diſcharge a horrible Oath, whoſe tenor
Was, were he euill vs'd, he would outgoe
His Father, by as much as a performance
Do's an irreſolute purpoſe.
Kin. There's his period,
To ſheath his knife in vs: he is attach'd,
Call him to preſent tryall: if he may
Finde mercy in the Law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not ſeek't of vs: By day and night
Hee's Traytor to th' height. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter L. Chamberlaine and L. Sandys.

L. Ch. Is't poſſible the ſpels of France ſhould iuggle
Men into ſuch ſtrange myſteries?
L. San. New cuſtomes,
Though they be neuer ſo ridiculous,
(Nay let 'em be vnmanly) yet are follow'd.
L. Ch. As farre as I ſee, all the good our Engliſh
Haue got by the late Voyage, is but meerely
A fit or two o'th' face, (but they are ſhrewd ones)
For when they hold 'em, you would ſweare directly
Their very noſes had been Councellours
To Pepin or Clotharius, they keepe State ſo.
L. San. They haue all new legs,
And lame ones; one would take it,
That neuer ſee 'em pace before, the Spauen
A Spring-halt rein'd among 'em.
L. Ch. Death my Lord,
Their cloathes are after ſuch a Pagan cut too't,
That ſure th'haue worne out Chriſtendome: how now!
What newes, Sir Thomas Louell?

Enter Sir Thomas Louell.

Louell. Faith my Lord,
I heare of none but the new Proclamation,
That's clapt vpon the Court Gate.

L. Cham.

L. Cham. What is't for?

Lou. The reformation of our trauel'd Gallants,
That fill the Court with quarrels, talke, and Taylors.

L. Cham. I'm glad 'tis there;
Now I would pray our Monfrers
To thinke an English Courtier may be wife,
And neuer see the Louure.

Lou. They muft either
(For fo run the Conditions) leaue thofe remnants
Of Foole and Feather, that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto; as Fights and Fire-workes, Abufing better men then they can be
Out of a forreigne wifedome, renouncing cleane
The faith they haue in Tennis and tall Stockings,
Short blifter'd Breeches, and thofe types of Trauell;

Exeunt with Trumpets.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at ſeuerall Doores.

1. Whether away ſo faſt?
2. O, God ſaue ye:
Eu'n to the Hall, to heare what ſhall become
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.
1. Ile ſaue you
That labour Sir. All's now done but the Ceremony
Of bringing backe the Priſoner.
2. Were you there?
1. Yes indeed was I.
2. Pray ſpeake what has happen'd.
1. You may gueſſe quickly what.
2. Is he found guilty?
1. Yes truely is he,
And condemn'd vpon't.
2. I am ſorry for't.
1. So are a number more.
2. But pray how paſt it?
1. Ile tell you in a little. The great Duke
Came to the Bar; where, to his accuſations
He pleaded ſtill not guilty, and alledged
Many ſharpe reaſons to defeat the Law.
The Kings Attorney on the contrary,
Vrg'd on the Examinations, proofes, confeſſions

Of

Of diuers witneſſes, which the Duke deſir'd
To him brought, vive voce to his face;
At which appear'd againſt him, his Surueyor
Sir Gilbert Peck his Chancellour, and Iohn Car,
Confeſſor to him, with that Diuell Monke,
Hopkins, that made this miſchiefe.
2. That was hee
That fed him with his Prophecies.
1. The ſame.
All theſe accus'd him ſtrongly, which he faine
Would haue flung from him; but indeed he couldnot;
And ſo his Peeres vpon this euidence,
Haue found him guilty of high Treaſon. Much
He ſpoke, and learnedly for life: But all
Was either pittied in him, or forgotten.
3. After all this, how did he beare himſelfe?
1. When he was brought agen to th' Bar, to heare
His Knell rung out, his Iudgement, he was ſtir'd
With ſuch an Agony, he ſweat extreamly,
And ſomthing ſpoke in choller, ill, and haſty:
But he ſell to himſelfe againe, and ſweetly,
In all the reſt ſhew'd a moſt Noble patience.
2. I doe not thinke he feares death.
1. Sure he does not,
He neuer was ſo womanith, the cauſe
He may a little grieue at.
3. Certainly.
The Cardinall is the end of this.
1. 'Tis likely,
By all coniectures: Firſt Kildares Attendure;
Then Deputy of Ireland, who remou'd
Earle Surrey, was ſent thither, and in haſt too,
Leaſt he ſhould helpe his Father.
2. That ſtrieke of State
Was a deepe enuious one.
1. At his returne,
No doubt he will requite it; this is noted
(And generally) who euer the King fauours,
The Cardnall inſtantly will finde imployment,
And ſarre enough from Court too.
2. All the Commons
Hate him perniciouſly, and o' my Conſcience
Wiſh him ten fadom deepe: This Duke as much
They loue and dearly as euill him bounteous Buckingham,
The Mirror of all courteſie.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignment, Tipſtaues before him, the Axe with the edge towards him. Halberds on each ſide, accompanied with Sir Thomas Louell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir Walter Sands, and common people, &c.

1. Stay there Sir,
And ſee the noble ruin'd man you ſpeake of.
2. Let's ſtand cloſe and behold him.
Buck. All good people,
You that thus ſarre haue come to pitty me;
Heare what I ſay, and then goe home and loſe me.
I haue this day receiu'd a Traitors iudgement,
And by that name muſt dye; yet Heauen beare witneſſe,
And if I haue a Conſcience, let it ſincke me,
Euen as the Axe falls, if I be not faithfull.
The Law I beare no malice for my death,
'Has done vpon the premiſes, but Iuſtice:
But thoſe that ſought it, I could with more Chriſtians:
(Be what they will) I heartily forgiue 'em;
Yet let 'em looke they glory not in miſchiefe;
Nor build their euils on the graues of great men;
For then, my guiltleſſe blood muſt cry againſt 'em.
For ſarther life in this world I ne're hope,
Nor will I ſue, although the King haue mercies
More then I dare make faults.
You few that lou'd me,
And dare be bold to weepe for Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes; whom to leaue
Is only bitter to him, only dying:
Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long diuorce of Steele falls on me,
Make of your Prayers one ſweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heauen.
Lead on a Gods name.
Louell. I doe beſeech your Grace, for charity
If euer any malice in your heart
Were hid againſt me, now to forgiue me frankly.
Buck. Sir Thomas Louell, I as free forgiue you
As I would be forgiuen: I forgiue all.
There cannot be thoſe numberleſſe offences
Gainſt me, that I cannot take peace with:
No blacke Enuy ſhall make my Graue,
Commend mee to his Grace.
And if he ſpeake of Buckingham; pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heauen: my vowes and prayers
Yet are the Kings; and till my Soule forſake,
Shall cry for bleſſings on him. May he liue
Longer then I haue time to tell his yeares;
Euer belou'd and louing, may his Rule be;
And when old Time ſhall lead him to his end,
Goodneſſe and he, fill vp one Monument.
Lou. To th' waters ſide I muſt conduct your Grace
Then giue my Charge vp to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who vndertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there,
The Duke is comming: See the Barge be ready,
And fit it with ſuch furniture as ſuites
The Greatneſſe of his Perſon.
Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone, my State now will but mocke me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Conſtable,
And Duke of Buckingham; now poore Edward Bohun.
Yet I am richer then my baſe Accuſers,
That neuer knew what Truth meant: I now ſeale it;
And with that blood will make 'em one day groane for't.
My noble Father Henry of Buckingham,
Who firſt rais'd head againſt Vſurping Richard,
Flying for ſuccour to his Seruant Banaſter,
Being diſtreſt; was by that wretch betrayd,
And without Tryall, ſell; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seuenth ſucceeding, truly pitying
My Fathers loſſe; like a moſt Royall Prince
Reſtor'd me to my Honours: and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eight, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy; at one ſtroake ha's taken
For euer from the World. I had my Tryall,
And muſt needs ſay a Noble one; which makes me
A little happier then my wretched Father:
Yet thus ſarre we are one in Fortunes: both
Fell by our Seruants, by thoſe Men we lou'd moſt:
A moſt vnnaturall and falſe Seruice.
Heauen ha's an end in all: yet, you that haue me,
This from a dying man receiue as certaine:
Where you are liberall of your loues and Counſels,
Be ſure you be not looſe; for thoſe you make friends

And

Sir.

I feare he will indeede; well, let him haue them; he will haue all I thinke

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Norf. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.
Cham. Good day to both your Graces.
Suff. How is the King employd?
Cham. I left him priuate,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.
Norf. What's the cause?
Cham. It seemes the Marriage with his Brothers Wife
Has crept too neere his Conscience.
Suff. No, his Conscience
Has crept too neere another Ladie.
Norf. 'Tis so;
This is the Cardinals doing: The King-Cardinall,
That blinde Priest, like the eldest Sonne of Fortune,
Turnes what he list. The King will know him one day.
Suff. Pray God he doe,
Hee'l neuer know himselfe else.
Norf. How holily he workes in all his businesse,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Betweene vs & the Emperor (the Queens great Nephew)
He diues into the Kings Soule, and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the Conscience,
Feares, and despaires, and all these for his Marriage.
And out of all these, to restore the King,
He counsels a Diuorce, a losse of her
That like a Jewell, has hung twenty yeares
About his necke, yet neuer lost her lustre;
Of her that loues him with that excellence,
That Angels loue good men with: Euen of her,
That when the greatest stroake of Fortune falls
Will blesse the King: and is not this course pious?
Cham. Heauen keep me from such counsell: 'tis most true
These newes are euery where, euery tongue speaks 'em,
And euery true heart weepes for't. All that dare
Looke into these affaires, see this main end,
The French Kings Sister. Heauen will one day open
The Kings eyes, that so long haue slept vpon
This bold bad man.
Suff. And free vs from his slauery.
Norf. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliuerance;
Or this imperious man will worke vs all
From Princes into Pages: all mens honours
Lie like one lumpe before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.
Suff. For me, my Lords,
I loue him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede:
As I am made without him, so I'le stand,
If the King please: his Curses and his blessings
Touch me alike: th'are breath I not beleeue in.
I knew him, and I know him: so I leaue him
To him that made him proud; the Pope.
Norf. Let's in;
And with some other businesse, put the King
From these sad thoughts, that work too much vpon him:
My Lord, youle beare vs company?
Cham. Excuse me,
The King has sent me otherwhere: Besides
You'l finde a most fit time to disturbe him:
Health to your Lordships.

Norf.

Norfolke. Thankes my good Lord Chamberlaine.

Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King draws the Curtaines and ſits reading penſively.

Suff. How ſad he lookes; ſure he is much afflicted.

Kin. Who's there? Ha?

Norff. Pray God he be not angry. (ſeliues

Kin. Who's there I ſay? How dare you thruſt your ſelues into my priuate Meditations? Who am I? Ha?

Norff. A gracious King, that pardons all offences Malice ne're meant: Our breach of Duty this way. Is buſineſſe of Eſtate; in which, we come To know your Royall pleaſure.

Kin. Ye are too bold: Go too; Ile make ye know your times of buſineſſe: Is this an howre for temporall affaires? Ha?

Enter Wolſey and Campeius with a Commiſſion.

Who's there? my good Lord Cardinall? O my Wolſey, The quiet of my wounded Conſcience; Thou art a cure fit for a King: you're welcome Moſt learned Reuerend Sir, into our Kingdome. Vſe vs, and it: My good Lord, haue great care, I be not found a Talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot; I would your Grace would giue vs but an houre Of priuate conference.

Kin. We are buſie; goe.

Norff. This Prieſt ha's no pride in him?

Suff. Not to ſpeake of: I would not be ſo ſicke though for his place: But this cannot continue.

Norff. If it doe, Ile venture one; haue at him.

Suff. I another.

Exeunt Norfolke and Suffolke.

Wol. Your Grace ha's giuen a Preſident of wiſedome Aboue all Princes, in committing freely Your ſcruple to the voyce of Chriſtendome: Who can be angry now? What Enuy reach you? The Spaniard tide by blood and fauour to her, Muſt now confeſſe, if they haue any goodneſſe, The Tryall, iuſt and Noble. Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome, And thanke the holy Conclaue for their loues, They haue ſent me ſuch a Man, I would haue wiſh'd for.

Cam. Your Grace muſt needs deſerue all ſtrangers loues, You are ſo Noble: To your Highneſſe hand I tender my Commiſſion; by whoſe vertue, The Court of Rome commanding. You my Lord Cardinall of Yorke, are ioyn'd with me their Seruant, In the impartiall iudging of this Buſineſſe. (too

Wol. I know your Maieſty, ha's alwayes lou'd her So deare in heart, not to deny her that A Woman of leſſe Place might aske by Law; Schollers allow'd freely to argue for her.

Kin. I, and the beſt ſhe ſhall haue; and my fauour To him that does beſt, God forbid elſe: Cardinall, Prethee call Gardiner to me, my new Secretary. I find him a fit fellow.

Enter Gardiner.

Wol. Giue me your hand: much ioy & fauour to you; You are the Kings now.

Gard. But to be commanded For euer by your Grace, whoſe hand he's rais'd me.

Kin. Come hither Gardiner.

Walkes and whiſpers.

Camp. My Lord of Yorke, was not one Doctor Pace In this mans place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Camp. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes ſurely.

Camp. Beleeue me, there's an ill opinion ſpread then, Euen of your ſelfe Lord Cardinall.

Wol. How? of me?

Camp. They will not ſticke to ſay, you enuide him: And feareing he would riſe (he was ſo vertuous) Kept him a forreigne man ſtill, which ſo griev'd him, That he ran mad, and dide.

Wol. Heau'ns peace be with him! That's Chriſtian care enough: for liuing Murmurers, There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole; For he would needs be vertuous. That good Fellow, If I command him followes my appointment, I will haue none to neere eh. Learne this Brother, We ſhue not to be grip'd by meaner perſons.

Kin. Deliuer this with modeſty to th' Queene.

Exit Gardiner.

The moſt conuenient place, that I can thinke of For ſuch receipt of Learning, is Black-Fryers: There ye ſhall meete about this weighey buſines. My Wolſey, ſee it furniſh'd. O my Lord, Would it not grieue an able man to leaue So ſweet a Bedfellow? But Conſcience, Conſcience; O 'tis a tender place, and I muſt leaue her. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither; here's the pang that pinches His Highneſſe, hauing liu'd ſo long with her, and ſhe So good a Lady, that no Tongue could euer Pronounce diſhonour of her; by my life, She neuer knew harme-doing: Oh, now after So many courſes of the Sun enthroned, Still growing in a Maieſty and pompe, the which To leaue, a thouſand fold more bitter, than 'Tis ſweet at firſt t'acquire. Cham. Lady;
I ſhall not faile t'approue the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I haue perus'd her well,
Beauty and Honour in her are ſo mingled,
That they haue caught the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady, may proceed a Iemme,
To lighten all this Ile. I'le to the King,
And ſay I ſpoke with you.

Exit Lord Chamberlaine

An. My honour'd Lord.

Old L. Why this it is: See, ſee,
I haue beene begging ſixteene yeares in Court (Am yet a Courtier beggerly) not could Come pat betwixt too early, and too late
For any ſuit of pounds: and you, (oh fate)
A very freſh Fiſh heere; fye, fye, fye vpon
This compel'd fortune: haue your mouth fild vp,
Before you open it.

An. This is ſtrange to me.

Old L. How taſts it? Is it bitter? Forty pence, no:
There was a Lady once ('tis an old Story)
That would not be a Queene, that would ſhe not
For all the mud in Egypt; haue you heard it?

An. Come you are pleaſant.

Old L. With your Theame, I could
O're-mount the Larke. The Marchioneſſe of Pembroke?
A thouſand pounds a yeare, for pure reſpect?
No other obligation? by my Life,
That promiſes moe thouſands: Honours traine
Is longer then his fore-skirt: by this time
I know your backe will beare a Dutcheſſe. Say,
Are you not ſtronger then you were?

An. Good Lady,
Make your ſelfe mirth with your particular fancy,
And leaue me out on't. Would I had no being
If this ſalute my blood a iot; it ſtarts me
To thinke what followes.
The Queene is comfortleſſe, and we forgetfull
In our long abſence: pray doe not deliuer
What heere y'haue heard to her.

Old L. What doe you thinke me —— Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Trumpets, Sennet, and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with ſhort ſilver wands; next them two Scribes in the habite of Doctors; after them, the Biſhop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Biſhops of Lincolne, Elie, Rochſter, and S. Aſaph: Next them, with ſome ſmall diſtance, followes a Gentleman bearing the Purſe, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat: Then two Prieſts bearing each a Siluer Croſſe: Then a Gentleman Vſher bare-headed, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Siluer Mace: Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Siluer Pillers: After them, ſide by ſide the two Cardinalls, two Noblemen, with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place vnder the Cloth of State. The two Cardinalls ſit vnder him as Iudges. The Queene takes place ſome diſtance from the King. The Biſhops place themſelues on each ſide the Court in manner of a Conſiſtory: Below them the Scribes. The Lords ſit next the Biſhops. The reſt of the Attendants ſtand in conuenient order about the Stage.

Car. Whil'ſt our Commiſſion from Rome is read,
Let ſilence be commanded.
King. What's the need?
It hath already publiquely bene read,
And on all ſides th'Authority allow'd,
You may then ſpare that time.
Car. Be't ſo, proceed.
Scri. Say, Henry K. of England, come into the Court.
Crier. Henry King of England, &c.
King. Heere.
Scribe. Say, Katherine Queene of England,
Come into the Court.
Crier. Katherine Queene of England, &c.
The Queene makes no anſwer, riſes out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then ſpeakes.
Sir, I deſire you do me Right and Iuſtice,
And to beſtow your pitty on me; for
I am a moſt poore Woman, and a Stranger,
Borne out of your Dominions: having heere
No Iudge indifferent, nor no more aſſurance
Of equall Friendſhip and Proceeding. Alas Sir
In what haue I offended you? What cauſe
Hath my behaviour given to your diſpleaſure,
That thus you ſhould proceede to put me off
And take your good Grace from me? Heauen witneſſe,
I haue bene to you, a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Euer in feare to kindle your Diſlike,
Yea, ſubiect to your Countenance: Glad, or ſorry,
As I ſaw it inclin'd? When was the houre
I euer contradicted your Deſire?
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Friends
Haue I not ſtroue to loue, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? What Friend of mine,
That had to him deriu'd your Anger, did I Continue in my Liking? Nay, gaue notice
He was from hence diſcharg'd? Sir, call to minde,
That I haue beene your Wife, in this Obedience,
Vpward of twenty yeares, and haue bene bleſt
With many Children by you. If in the courſe
And proceſſe of this time, you can report,
And proue it too, againſt mine Honor, aught;
My bond to Wedlocke, or my Loue and Dutie
Againſt your Sacred Perſon; in Gods name
Turne me away: and let the foul'ſt Contempt
Shut doore vpon me, and ſo giue me vp
To the ſharp'ſt kinde of Iuſtice. Pleaſe you, Sir,
The King your Father, was reputed for
A Prince moſt Prudent; of an excellent
And vnmatch'd Wit, and Iudgement. Ferdinand
My Father, King of Spaine, was reckon'd one
The wiſeſt Prince, that there had reign'd, by many
A yeare before. It is not to be queſtion'd,
That they had gather'd a wiſe Councell to them
Of euery Realme, that did debate this Buſineſſe,
Who deem'd our Marriage lawfull. Wherefore I humbly
Beſeech you Sir, to ſpare me, till I may
Be by my Friends in Spaine, aduis'd; whoſe Counſaile
I will implore. If not, i'th'name of God
Your pleaſure be fulfill'd.
Wol. You haue heere Lady,
(And of your choice) theſe Reuerend Fathers, men
Of ſingular Integrity, and Learning;
Yea, the elect o'th'Land, who are aſſembled
To plead your Cauſe. It ſhall be therefore bootleſſe,
That longer you deſire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to reſtuſe
What is vnfeeled in the King.
Camp. His Grace
Hath ſpoken well, and iuſtly: Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Seſſion do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be new produc'd, and heard.
Qu. Lord Cardinall, to you I ſpeake.
Wol. Your pleaſure, Madam.
Qu. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long haue dream'd ſo) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
Ile turne to ſparkes of fire.
Wol. Be patient yet.
Qu. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will puniſh me. I do beleeue (Induc'd by potent Circumſtances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge,
You ſhall not be my Iudge. For it is you
Haue blowne this Coale, betwixt my Lord, and me
(Which Gods dew quench) therefore I ſay againe,
I vtterly abhorre; yea, from my Soule
Refuſe you for my Iudge, whom yet once more
I hold my moſt malicious Foe, and thinke not
At all a Friend to truth.
Wol. I do profeſſe
You ſpeake not like your ſelfe: who euer yet
Haue ſtood to Charity, and diſplay'd th'effects
Of diſpoſition gentle, and of wiſedome,
Ore-topping womans powre. Madam, you do me wrong
I haue no Spleene againſt you, nor iniuſtice
For you, or any: how farre I haue proceeded,
Or how farre further (Shall) is warranted
By a Commiſſion from the Conſiſtorie,
Yea, the whole Conſiſtorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I haue blowne this Coale: I do deny it,
The King is preſent: If it be knowne to him,
That I gainſay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my Falſehood; yea, as much
As you haue done my Truth. If he know
That I am free of your Report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the Cure is to Remoue theſe Thoughts from you. The which before
His Highneſſe ſhall ſpeake in, I do beſeech
You (gracious Madam) to vnthinke your ſpeaking,
And to ſay ſo no more.
Quee. My Lord, my Lord,
I am a ſimple woman, much too weake
T'oppoſe your cunning. Y'are meek, & humble-mouth'd
You ſigne your Place, and Calling, in full ſeeming,
With Meekeneſſe and Humilitie: but your Heart
Is cramm'd with Arrogancie, Spleene, and Pride.
You haue by Fortune, and his Highneſſe fauors,
Gone ſlightly o're low ſteppes, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domeſtickes to you) ſerue your will, as't pleaſe
Your ſelfe pronounce their Office. I muſt tell you,
You tender more your perſons Honor, than
Your high profeſſion Spirituall. That againſt
I do refuſe you for my Iudge, and heere
Before you all, Appeale vnto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cauſe 'fore his Holineſſe,
And to be iudg'd by him.
She Curtſies to the King, and offers to depart.
Camp.

The Queene is obſtinate,

I to be tride by't; tis not well.

The boſome of my Conſcience, enter'd me;
Yea, with a ſplitting power and made to tremble
The region of my Breaſt, which forc'd ſuch way,
That many maz'd conſiderings, did throng
And preſt in with this Caution. Firſt, me thought
I ſtood not in the ſmile of Heauen, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it conceiu'd a male-child by me, ſhould
Doe no more Offices of life too't; then
The Graue does to th' dead: For her Male Iſſue,
Or di'de where they were made, or ſhortly after
This world had air'd them. Hence I tooke a thought,
This was a Iudgement on me, that my Kingdome
(Well worthy the beſt Heyre o'th' World) ſhould not Be gladded in't by me. Then followes, that I weigh'd the danger which my Realmes ſtood in
By this my Iſſues faile, and that gaue to me
Many a groaning throw: thus hulling in
The wild Sea of my Conſcience, I did ſteere Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now preſent heere together: that's to ſay,
I meant to rectifie my Conſcience, which
I then did feele full ſicke, and yet not well,
By all the Reuerend Fathers of the Land,
And Doctors learn'd. Firſt I began in priuate,
With you my Lord of Lincolne; you remember
How vnder my oppreſſion I did reeke
When I firſt mou'd you.
B. Lin. Very well my Liedge.
Kin. I haue ſpoke long, be pleas'd your ſelfe to ſay
How farre you ſatisfide me.
Lin. So pleaſe your Highnes,
The queſtion did at firſt ſo ſtagger me,
Bearing a State of mighty moment in't,
And conſequence of dread, that I committed
The daring'ſt Counſaile which I had to doubt,
And did entreate your Highnes to this courſe,
Which you are running heere.
Kin. I then mou'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leaue
To make this preſent Summons vnſolicited.
I left no Reuerend Perſon in this Court,
But by particular conſent proceeded
Vnder your hands and Seales; therefore goe on,
For no diſlike i'th' world againſt the perſon
Of the good Queene; but the ſharpe thorny points
Of my alleadged reaſons, driues this forward:
Proue but our Marriage lawfull, by my Life
And Kingly Dignity, we are contented
To weare our mortall State to come, with her,
(Katherine our Queene) before the primeſt Creature
That's Paragon'd o'th' World
Camp. So pleaſe your Highnes,
The Queene being abſent, 'tis a needfull fitneſſe,
That we adiourne this Court till further day;
Meane while, muſt be an earneſt motion
Made to the Queene to call backe her Appeale
She intends vnto his Holineſſe.
Kin. I may perceiue
Theſe Cardinals trifle with me: I abhorre
This dilatory ſloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well beloued Seruant Cranmer,
Prethee returne, with thy approch: I know,
My comfort comes along. breake vp the Court:

Exeunt, in manner as they entred.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Queene and her Women as at worke.

Queen. Take thy Lute wench,
My Soule growes sad with troubles,
Sing, and disperse 'em if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

ORpheus with his Lute made Trees,
And the Mountaine tops that freeze,
Bow themselues when he did sing.
To his Musicke, Plants and Flowers
Ever sprung; as Sunne and Showers,
There had made a lasting Spring.
Every thing that heard him play,
Even the Billowes of the Sea,
Hung their heads, & then lay by.
In sweet Musicke is such Art,
Killing care, & griefe of heart,
Fall asleepe, or hearing dye.

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now?

Gent. And't please your Grace, the two great Cardinals Wait in the presence.

Queen. Would they speake with me?

Gent. They wil'd me say so Madam.

Queen. Pray their Graces
To come neere: what can be their busines
With me, a poore weake woman, falne from favour?
I doe not like their comming; now I thinke on't,
They should be good men, their affaires as righteous:
But all Hoods, make not Monkes.

Enter the two Cardinalls, Wolsey & Campian.

Wolf. Peace to your Highnesse.

Queen. Your Graces find me heere part of a Housewife, (I would be all) against the worst may happen:
What are your pleasures with me, reverent Lords?

Wol. May it please you Noble Madam, to withdraw
Into your private Chamber; we shall give you
The full cause of our comming.

Queen. Speake it heere.
There's nothing I have done yet o' my Conscience
Deserves a Corner: would all other Women
Could speake this with as free a Soule as I doe.
My Lords, I care not (so much I am happy Above a number) if my actions
Were tri'de by ev'ry tongue, ev'ry eye saw 'em,
Envy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even. If your busines
Seeke me out, and that way I am Wife in;
Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.

Card. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas Regina serenissima.

Queen. O good my Lord, no Latin;
I am not such a Truant since my comming,
As not to know the Language I have liv'd in: (ous;
A strange Tongue makes my cause more strange, suspici-
Pray speake in English; heere are some will thanke you,
If you speake truth, for their poore Mistris sake;
Beleeve me she ha's had much wrong. Lord Cardinall,
The willing'st sinne I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Card. Noble Lady,
I am sorry my integrity should breed,
(And service to his Majesty and you)
So deepe suspition, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of Accusation,
To taint that honour every good Tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much good Lady: But to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference
Betweene the King and you, and to deliver (Like free and honest men) our just opinions,
And comforts to our cause.

Camp. Most honour'd Madam,
My Lord of Yorke, out of his Noble nature,
Zeale and obedience he still bore your Grace,
Forgetting (like a good man) your late Censure
Both of his truth and him (which was too farre)
Offers, as I doe, in a figne of peace,
His Service, and his Counsell.

Queen. To betray me.
My Lords, I thanke you both for your good wills,
Ye speake like honest men, (pray God ye prove so)
But how to make ye sodainly an Answere
In such a poynt of weight, so neere mine Honour,
(More neere my Life I feare) with my weake wit;
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth I know not. I was set at worke,
Among my Maids, full little (God knowes) looking Either for such men, or such businesse;
For her sake that I have beene, for I feele
The last fit of my Greatnesse; good your Graces
Let me have time and Counsell for my Cause:
Alas, I am a Woman friendlesse, hopelesse.

Wol. Madam,
You wrong the Kings love with these feares,
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Queen. In England,
But little for my profit: can you thinke Lords,
That any English man dare give me Counsell?
Or be a knowne friend 'gainst his Highnes pleasure,
(Though he be growne so desperate to be honest)
And live a Subiect? Nay forsooth, my Friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not heere,
They are (as all my other comforts) farre hence
In mine owne Country Lords.

Camp. I would your Grace
Would leave your greefes, and take my Counsell.

Queen. How Sir?

Camp. Put your maine cause into the Kings protection,
He's loving and most gracious: 'twill be much,
Both for your Honour better, and your Cause:
For if the tryall of the Law o'ertake ye,
You'l part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tels you rightly.

Queen. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruine:
Is this your Christian Counsell? Out upon ye.
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge,
That no King can corrupt.

Camp. Your rage mistakes us.

Queen. The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye,
Upon my Soule two reverend Cardinall Vertues:
But Cardinall Sins, and hollow hearts I feare ye:
Mend 'em for shame my Lords: Is this your comfort?
The Cordiall that ye bring a wronged Lady?
A woman lost among ye, laught'r at, forsaken?
I will not wish ye halfe my miseries,

I haue more Charity. But say I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heauens sake take heed, least at once
The burthen of my sorrowes, fall vpon ye.
Car. Madam, this is a meere distraction,
You turne the good we offer, into enuy.
Qu. Ye turne me into nothing. Woe vpon ye,
And all such false Professors. Would you haue me
(If you haue any Iustice, any Pitty,
If ye be any thing but Churchmens habits)
Put my sicke cause into his hands, that hates me?
Alas, ha's banish'd me his Bed already,
His Loue, too long ago. I am old my Lords,
And all the Fellowship I hold now with him
Is onely my Obedience. What can happen
To me, aboue this wretchednesse? All your Studies
Make me a Curse, like this.
Cam. Your fears are worse.
Qu. Haue I liu'd thus long (let me speake my selfe, Since Vertue findes no friends) a Wife, a true one?
A Woman (I dare say without Vainglory)
Neuer yet branded with Suspition?
Haue I, with all my full Affections
Still met the King? Lou'd him next Heau'n? Obey'd him?
Been (out of fondnesse) superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my Prayres to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'Tis not well Lords,
Bring me a constant woman to her Husband,
One that ne're dream'd a Ioy, beyond his pleasure;
And to that Woman (when she has done most)
Yet will I adde an Honor; a great Patience.
Car. Madam, you wander from the good
We ayme at.
Qu. My Lord,
I dare not make my selfe so guiltie,
To giue vp willingly that Noble Title
Your Master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e're diuorce my Dignities.
Car. Pray heare me.
Qu. Would I had neuer trod this English Earth,
Or felt the Flatteries that grow vpon it:
Ye haue Angels Faces; but Heauen knowes your hearts.
What will become of me now, wretched Lady?
I am the most vnhappy Woman liuing.
Alas (poore Wenches) where are now your Fortunes?
Shipwrack'd vpon a Kingdome, where no Pitty,
No Friends, no Hope, no Kindred weepe for me?
Almost no Graue allow'd me? Like the Lilly
That once was Mistris of the Field, and flourish'd, Ile hang my head, and perish.
Car. If your Grace
Could but be brought to know, our Ends are honest, You'd feele more comfort. Why (should we (good Lady)
Vpon what cause wrong you? Alas, our Places,
The way of our Profession is against it:
We are to Cure such sorrowes, not to sowe 'em.
For Goodnesse sake, consider what you do,
How you may hurt your selfe: I, vtterly
Grow from the Kings Acquaintance, by this Carriage.
The hearts of Princes kisse Obedience,
So much they loue it. But to stubborne Spirits,
They swell and grow, as terrible as stormes.
I know you haue a Gentle, Noble temper,
A Soule as euen as a Calme; Pray thinke vs,
Those we professe, Peace-makers, Friends, and Seruants.
Cam. Madam, you'l finde it so:
You wrong your Vertues
With these weake Womens feares. A Noble Spirit,
As yours was, put into you, euer casts
Such doubts as false Coine from it. The King loues you, Beware you loose it not: For vs (if you please
To trust vs in your businesse) we are ready
To vse our vtmost Studies, in your seruice.
Qu. Do what ye will, my Lords:
And pray forgiue me;
If I haue vs'd my selfe vnmannerly,
You know I am a Woman, lacking wit
To make a seemely answer to such persons.
Pray do my seruice to his Maiestie,
He has my heart yet, and shall haue my Prayers
While I shall haue my life. Come reuerend Fathers, Bestow your Counsels on me. She now begges
That little thought when she set footing heere,
She should haue bought her Dignities so deere. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Duke of Norfolke, Duke of Suffolke, Lord Surrey, and Lord Chamberlaine

Norf. If you will now vnite in your Complaints,
And force them with a Constancy, the Cardinall
Cannot stand vnder them. If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustaine moe new disgraces,
With these you beare already.
Sur. I am ioyfull
To meete the least occasion, that may giue me
Remembrance of my Father-in-Law, the Duke,
To be reueng'd on him.
Suf. Which of the Peeres
Haue vncontemn'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? When did he regard
The stampe of Noblenesse in any person
Out of himselfe?
Cham. My Lords, you speake your pleasures:
What he deserues of you and me, I know:
What we can do to him (though now the time Giues way to vs) I much feare. If you cannot Barre his access to th'King, neuer attempt
Any thing on him: for he hath a Witchcraft
Ouer the King in's Tongue.
Nor. O feare him not,
His spell in that is out: the King hath found
Matter against him, that for euer marres
The Honey of his Language. No, he's settled
(Not to come off) in his displeasure.
Sur. Sir,
I should be glad to heare such Newes as this Once euery houre.
Nor. Beleeue it, this is true.
In the Diuorce, his contrarie proceedings
Are all vnfolded: wherein he appeares,
As I would wish mine Enemy.
Sur. How came
His practises to light?
Suf. Most strangely.
Sur. O how? how?
Suf. The Cardinals Letters to the Pope miscarried,
And

And came to th'eye o'th'King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did intreat his Holineſſe
To ſtay the Iudgement o'th'Diuorce; for if
It did take place, I do (quoth he) perceiue
My King is tangled in affection, to
A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.
Sur. Ha's the King this?
Suf. Beleeue it.
Sur. Will this worke?
Cham. The King in this perceiues him, how he coaſts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his trickes founder, and he brings his Phyſicke
After his Patients death; the King already Hath married the faire Lady.
Sur. Would he had.
Suf. May you be happy in your wiſh my Lord,
For I profeſſe you haue it.
Sur. Now all my ioy
Trace the Conion ſhion.
Suf. My Anneu too't.
Nor. All mens.
Suf. There's order giuen for her Coronation:
Marry this is yet but young, and may be left
To ſome ears vnrecounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and compleate
In minde and feature. I perſwade me, from her
Will fall ſome bleſſing to this Land, which ſhall
In it be memoriz'd.
Sur. But will the King
Digeſt this Letter of the Cardinals?
The Lord forbid.
Nor. Marry Amen.
Suf. No, no:
There be moe Waſpes that buz about his Noſe,
Will make this ſting the ſooner. Cardinall Campeius,
Is ſtolne away to Rome, hath 'tane no leaue,
Has left the cauſe o'th'King vnhandled, and
Is poſted as the Agent of our Cardinall,
To ſecond all his plot. I do aſſure you,
The King cry'de Ha, at this.
Cham. Now God incenſe him,
And let him cry Ha, louder.
Nor. But my Lord
When returnes Cranmer?
Suf. He is return'd in his Opinions, which Haue ſatisfied the King for his Diuorce,
Together with all famous Colledges
Almoſt in Chriſtendome: ſhortly (I beleeue)
His ſecond Marriage ſhall be publiſhd, and
Her Coronation. Katherine no more
Shall be call'd Queene, but Princeſſe Dowager,
And Widdow to Prince Arthur.
Nor. This ſame Cranmer's
A worthy Fellow, and hath tane much paine
In the Kings buſineſſe.
Suf. He has, and we ſhall ſee him
For it, an Arch-byſhop.
Nor. So I heare.
Suf. 'Tis ſo
Enter Wolſey and Cromwell.
The Cardinall.
Nor. Obſerue, obſerue, hee's moody.
Car. The Packet Cromwell,
Gau't you the King?
Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.
Card. Look'd he o'th'inſide of the Paper?
Crom. Preſently
He did vnſeale them, and the firſt he view'd,
He did it with a Serious minde; a heede
Was in his countenance. You he bad
Attend him heere this Morning.
Card. Is he ready to come abroad?
Crom. I thinke by this he is.
Card. Leaue me a while. Exit Cromwell.
It ſhall be to the Duches of Alanſon,
The French Kings Siſter; He ſhall marry her
Anne Bullen? No: Ile no Anne Bullens for him,
There's more in't then faire Viſage. Bullen?
No, wer't no Bullen: Speedily I wiſh
To heare from Rome. The Marchioneſſe of Penbroke?
Nor. He's diſcontented.
Suf. Maybe he heares the King
Does whet his Anger to him.
Sur. Sharpe enough,
Lord for thy Iuſtice.
Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?
A Knights Daughter
To be her Miſtris Miſtris? The Queenes, Queene?
This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I muſt ſnuffe it,
Then out it goes. What though I know her vertuous
And well deſeruing? yet I know her for
A ſpleeny Lutheran, and not wholſome to
Our cauſe, that ſhe ſhould lye i'th'boſome of Our hard rul'd King. Againe, there is ſprung vp
An Heretique, an Arch-one; Cranmer, one
Hath crawl'd into the fauour of the King,
And is his Oracle.
Nor. He is vex'd at ſomething
Enter King reading of a Scedule.
Sur. I would 'twere ſomthing that would fret the ſtring,
The Maſter-cord on's heart.
Suf. The King, the King.
King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by'th'houre Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th'name of Thrift Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?
Nor. My Lord, we haue
Stood heere obſeruing him. Some ſtrange Commotion
Is in his braine: He bites his lip, and ſtarts,
Stops on a ſodaine, lookes vpon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple: ſtraight
Springs out into faſt gate, then ſtops againe,
Strikes his breſt hard, and anon, he caſts
His eye againſt the Moone: in moſt ſtrange Poſtures
We haue ſeene him ſet himſelfe.
King. It may well be,
There is a mutiny in's minde. This morning,
Papers of State he ſent me, to peruſe
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There (on my Conſcience put vnwittingly?)
Forſooth an Inuentory, thus importing
The ſeuerall parcels of his Plate, his Treaſure, Rich Stuffes and Ornaments of Houſhold, which I finde at ſuch proud Rate, that it out-ſpeakes
Poſſeſſion of a Subiect.
Nor. It's Heauens will,
Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,
To bleſſe your eye withall.
King. If we did thinke

His Contemplation were aboue the earth,
And fixt on Spirituall obiect, he should still Dwell in his Musings, but I am affraid
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His serious considering.

King takes his Seat, whispers Louell, who goes to the Cardinall.

Car. Heauen forgiue me,
Euer God blesse your Highnesse.
King. Good my Lord,
You are full of Heauenly stuffe, and beare the Inuentory
Of your best Graces, in your minde; the which
You were now running o're: you haue scarse time
To steale from Spirituall leysure, a briefe span
To keepe your earthly Audit, sure in that
I deeme you an ill Husband, and am gald
To haue you therein my Companion.
Car. Sir,
For Holy Offices I haue a time; a time
To thinke vpon the part of businesse, which I beare i'th'State: and Nature does require
Her times of preseruation, which perforce
I her fraile sonne, among'st my Brethren mortall,
Must giue my tendance to.
King. You haue said well.
Car. And euer may your Highnesse yoake together,
(As I will lend you cause) my doing well,
With my well saying.
King. 'Tis well said agen,
And 'tis a kinde of good deede to say well,
And yet words are no deeds. My Father lou'd you,
He said he did, and with his deed did Crowne
His word vpon you. Since I had my Office,
I haue kept you next my Heart, haue not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profits might come home,
But par'd my present Hauings, to bestow
My Bounties vpon you.
Car. What should this meane?
Sur. The Lord increase this businesse.
King. Haue I not made you
he prime man of the State? I pray you tell me, what I now pronounce, you haue found true:
nd if you may confesse it, say withall
you are bound to vs, or no. What say you?
Car. My Soueraigne, I confesse your Royall graces owr'd on me daily, haue bene more then could studied purposes requite, which went ond all mans endeauors. My endeauors, e euer come too short of my Desires,
fill'd with my Abilities: Mine owne ends beene mine so, that euermore they pointed 'good of your most Sacred Person, and rofit of the State. For your great Graces d vpon me (poore Vndeseruer) I othing render but Allegiant thankes, ayres to heauen for you; my Loyaltie euer ha's, and euer shall be growing,
th (that Winter) kill it.
Fairely answer'd:
l, and obedient Subiect is llustrated, the Honor of it the Act of it, as i'th'contrary enesse is the punishment. I presume,
y hand ha's open'd Bounty to you,
drop'd Loue, my powre rain'd Honor, more en any: So your Hand, and Heart,

Your Braine, and euery Function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twer in Loues particular, be more
To me your Friend, then any.
Car. I do professe,
That for your Highnesse good, I euer labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, haue, and will be (Though all the world should cracke their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did Abound, as thicke as thought could make 'em, and Appeare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke against the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde Riuer breake,
And stand vnshaken yours.
King. 'Tis Nobly spoken:
Take notice Lords, he ha's a Loyall brest,
For you haue seene him open't. Read o're this,
And after this, and then to Breakfast with
What appetite you haue.

Exit King, frowning vpon the Cardinall, the Nobles throng after him smiling, and whispering.

Car. What should this meane?
What sodaine Anger's this? How haue I reap'd it?
He parted Frowning from me, as if Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So lookes the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntsman that has gall'd him:
Then makes him nothing. I must reade this paper:
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis so:
This paper ha's vndone me: 'Tis th'Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I haue drawne together
For mine owne ends, (Indeed to gaine the Popedome,
And fee my Friends in Rome.) O Negligence!
Fit for a Foole to fall by: What crosse Diuell
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet
I sent the King? Is there no way to cure this?
No new deuice to beate this from his Braines?
I know 'twill stirre him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spight of Fortune
Will bring me off againe. What's this? To th'Pope?
The Letter (as I liue) with all the Businesse
I writ too's Holinesse. Nay then, farewell:
I haue touch'd the highest point of all my Greatnesse,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haste now to my Setting. I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Euening,
And no man see me more.

Enter to Woolsey, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. Heare the Kings pleasure Cardinall,
Who commands you
To render vp the Great Seale presently
Into our hands, and to Confine your selfe
To Asher-house, my Lord of Winchesters,
Till you heare further from his Highnesse.
Car. Stay:
Where's your Commission? Lords, words cannot carrie Authority so weighty.
Suf. Who dare crosse 'em,
Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expressely?
Car. Till I finde more then will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice) know, Officious Lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feele
Of what course Mettle ye are molded, Enuy,
How eagerly ye follow my Disgraces

As if it fed ye, and how ſleeke and wanton
Ye appeare in every thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your enuious courſes, men of Malice;
You haue Chriſtian warrant for 'em, and no doubt
In time will finde their fit Rewards. That Seale
You aſke with ſuch a Violence, the King
(Mine, and your Maſter) with his owne hand, gaue me:
Bad me enioy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my life; and to confirme his Goodneſſe, Ti'de it by Letters Patents. Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The King that gaue it.

Car. It muſt be himſelfe then.

Sur. Thou art a proud Traitor, Prieſt.

Car. Proud Lord, thou lyeſt:
Within theſe forty houres, Surrey durſt better
Haue burnt that Tongue, then ſaide ſo.

Sur. Thy Ambition
(Thou Scarlet ſinne) robb'd this bewailing Land
Of Noble Buckingham, my Father-in-Law,
The heads of all thy Brother-Cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy beſt parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a haire of his. Plague of your policie,
You ſent me Deputie for Ireland,
Farre from his ſuccour; from the King, from all
That might haue mercie on the fault, thou gau'ſt him:
Whil'ſt your great Goodneſſe, out of holy pitty,
Abſolu'd him with an Axe.

Wol. This, and all elſe
This talking Lord can lay vpon my credit,
I anſwer, is moſt falſe. The Duke by Law Found his deſerts. How innocent I was
From any priuate malice in his end,
His Noble Iurie, and foule Cauſe can witneſſe.
If I lou'd many words, Lord, I ſhould tell you,
You haue as little Honeſtie, as Honor,
That in the way of Loyaltie, and Truth,
Toward the King, my euer Royall Maſter,
Dare mate a ſounder man then Surrie can be,
And all that loue his follies.

Sur. By my Soule,
Your long Coat (Prieſt) protects you,
Thou ſhould'ſt feele
My Sword i'th'life blood of thee elſe. My Lords,
Can ye endure to heare this Arrogance?
And from this Fellow? If we liue thus tamely,
To be thus Iaded by a peece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobilitie: let his Grace go forward,
And dare vs with his Cap, like Larkes.

Card. All Goodneſſe
Is poyſon to thy Stomacke.

Sur. Yes, that goodneſſe
Of gleaning all the Lands wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by Extortion:
The goodneſſe of your intercepted Packets
You writ to'th Pope, againſt the King: your goodneſſe
Since you prouoke me, ſhall be moſt notorious.
My Lord of Norfolke, as you are truly Noble,
As you reſpect the common good, the State
Of our deſpis'd Nobilitie, our Iſſues,
(Whom if he liue, will ſcorne to be Gentlemen)
Produce the grand ſumme of his ſinnes, the Articles
Collected from his life. Ile ſtartle you
Worſe then the Sacring Bell, when the browne Wench
Lay kiſſing in your Armes, Lord Cardinall.

Car. How much me thinkes, I could deſpiſe this man,
But that I am bound in Charitie againſt it.

Nor. Thoſe Articles, my Lord, are in the Kings hand:
But thus much, they are foule ones.

Wol. So much fairer
And ſpotleſſe, ſhall mine Innocence ariſe,
When the King knowes my Truth.

Sur. This cannot ſaue you:
I thanke my Memorie, I yet remember
Some of theſe Articles, and out they ſhall.
Now, if you can bluſh, and crie guiltie Cardinall,
You'l ſhew a little Honeſtie.

Wol. Speake on Sir,
I dare your worſt Obiections: If I bluſh,
It is to ſee a Nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want thoſe, then my head;
Haue at you.
Firſt, that without the Kings aſſent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You maim'd the Iuriſdiction of all Biſhops.

Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or elſe
To Forraigne Princes. Ego & Rex meus
Was ſtill inſcrib'd: in which you brought the King
To be your Seruant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went Ambaſſador to the Emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders, the Great Seale.

Sur. Item, You ſent a large Commiſſion
To Gregory de Caſſado, to conclude
Without the Kings will, or the States allowance,
A League betweene his Highneſſe, and Ferrara.

Suf. That out of meere Ambition, you haue caus'd
Your holy-Hat to be ſtampt on the Kings Coine.

Sur Then, That you haue ſent innumerable ſubſtance,
(By what meanes got, I leaue to your owne conſcience)
To furniſh Rome, and to prepare the wayes
You haue for Dignities, to the meere vndoing
Of all the Kingdome. Many more there are,
Which ſince they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my Lord,
Preſſe not a falling man too farre: 'tis Vertue:
His faults lye open to the Lawes, let them
(Not you) correct him. My heart weepes to ſee him
So little, of his great Selfe.

Sur. I forgiue him.

Suf. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleaſure is,
Becauſe all thoſe things you haue done of late
By your power Legatine within this Kingdome,
Fall into'th' compaſſe of a Premunire;
That therefore ſuch a Writ be ſued againſt you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Caſtles, and whatſoeuer, and to be
Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.

Nor. And ſo we'l leaue you to your Meditations
How to liue better. For your ſtubborne anſwer
About the giuing backe the Great Seale to vs,
The King ſhall know it, and (no doubt) ſhal thanke you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.

Exeunt all but Wolſey.

Wol. So farewell, to the little good you beare me.
Farewell? A long farewell to all my Greatneſſe.
This is the ſtate of Man; to day he puts forth
The tender Leaues of hopes, to morrow Bloſſoms,
And beares his bluſhing Honors thicke vpon him:
The third day, comes a Froſt; a killing Froſt,
And when he thinkes, good eaſie man, full ſurely

His

His Greatneſſe is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he falls as I do. I haue ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that ſwim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But farre beyond my depth: my high-blowne Pride
At length broke vnder me, and now has left me
Weary, and old with Seruice, to the mercy
Of a rude ſtreame, that muſt for euer hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye,
I feele my heart new open'd. Oh how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes fauours?
There is betwixt that ſmile we would aſpire too,
That ſweet Aſpect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs, and feares then warres, or women haue:
And when he falles, he falles like Lucifer,
Neuer to hope againe.

Enter Cromwell, ſtanding amazed.

Why how now Cromwell?

Crom. I haue no power to ſpeake Sir.

Car. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes? Can thy Spirit wonder
A great man ſhould decline. Nay, and you weep
I am falne indeed.

Crom. How does your Grace.

Card. Why well:
Neuer ſo truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know my ſelfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace aboue all earthly Dignities,
A ſtill, and quiet Conſcience. The King ha's cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace: and from theſe ſhoulders
Theſe ruin'd Pillers, out of pitty, taken
A load, would ſinke a Navy. (too much Honor)
O 'tis a burden Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heauy for a man, that hopes for Heauen.

Crom. I am glad your Grace,
Ha's made that right vſe of it.

Card. I hope I haue:
I am able now (me thinkes)
Out of a Fortitude of Soule, I feele)
To endure more Miſeries, and greater farre
Then my Weake-hearted Enemies, dare offer.
What Newes abroad?

Crom. The heauieſt, and the worſt,
Your diſpleaſure with the King.

Card. God bleſſe him.

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas Moore is choſen
Lord Chancellor, in your place

Card. That's ſomewhat ſodaine.
But he's a Learned man. May he continue
Long in his Highneſſe fauour, and do iuſtice
For truths-ſake, and his Conſcience: that his bones,
When he has run his courſe, and ſleepes in Bleſſings,
May haue a Tombe of Orphanes teares wept on him.
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome:
Install'd Lord Arch-byſhop of Canterbury.

Card. That's Newes indeed.

Crom. Laſt, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the King hath in ſecrecie long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his Queene,
Going to Chappell: and the voyce is now
Only about her Coronation.

Card. There was the weight that pull'd me downe.
O Cromwell,
The King has gone beyond me: All my Glories
In that one woman, I haue loſt for euer.
No Sun, ſhall euer vſher forth mine Honors,
Or gilde againe the Noble Troopes that waighted
Vpon my ſmiles. Go get thee from me Cromwell,
I am a poore falne man, vnworthy now
To be thy Lord, and Maſter. Seeke the King
(That Sun, I pray may neuer ſet) I haue told him,
What, and how true thou art; he will aduance thee.
Some little memory of me, will ſtirre him
(I know his Noble Nature) not to let Thy hopefull ſeruice periſh too. Good Cromwell
Neglect him not; make vſe now, and prouide
For thine owne future ſafety.

Crom. O my Lord,
Muſt I then leaue you? Muſt I needes forgo
So good, ſo Noble, and ſo true a Maſter?
Bearе witneſſe, all that haue not hearts of Iron,
With what a ſorrow Cromwell leaues his Lord.
The King ſhall haue my ſeruice; but my prayres
For euer, and for euer ſhall be yours.

Card. Cromwell, I did not thinke to ſhed a teare
In all my Miſeries: But thou haſt forc'd me
(Out of thy honeſt truth) to play the Woman.
Let's dry our eyes: And thus farre heare me Cromwell,
And when I am forgotten, as I ſhall be,
And ſleepe in dull cold Marble, where no mention
Of me, more muſt be heard of: Say I taught thee:
Say Wolſey, that once trod the wayes of Glory,
And ſounded all the Depths, and Shoales of Honor,
Found thee a way (out of his wracke) to riſe in:
A ſure, and ſafe one, though thy Maſter miſt it.
Marke but my Fall, and that that Ruin'd me:
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away Ambition,
By that ſinne fell the Angels: how can man then
(The Image of his Maker) hope to win by it?
Loue thy ſelfe laſt, cheriſh thoſe hearts that hate thee;
Corruption wins not more then Honeſty.
Still in thy right hand, carry gentle Peace
To ſilence enuious Tongues. Be iuſt, and feare not:
Let all the ends thou aym'ſt at, be thy Countries,
Thy Gods, and Truths. Then if thou fall'ſt (O Cromwell)
Thou fall'ſt a bleſſed Martyr.
Serue the King: And prythee leade me in:
There take an Inuentory of all I haue,
To the laſt peny, 'tis the Kings. My Robe,
And my Integrity to Heauen, is all,
I dare now call mine owne. O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but ſeru'd my God, with halfe the Zeale
I ſerv'd my King: he would not in mine Age
Haue left me naked to mine Enemies.

Crom. Good Sir, haue patience.

Card. So I haue. Farewell
The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heauen do dwell.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1 Y'are well met once againe.

2 So are you.

1 You come to take your ſtand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne, paſſe from her Coronation.

2 'Tis all my buſineſſe. At our laſt encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Triall.
1 'Tis very true. But that time offer'd ſorrow,
This generall joy.
2 'Tis well: The Citizens
I am ſure have ſhewne at full their Royall minds,
As let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honor.
1 Never greater,
Nor I'le aſſure you better taken Sir.
2 May I be bold to aske what that containes,
That Paper in your hand.
1 Yes, 'tis the Liſt
Of thoſe that claime their Offices this day,
By cuſtome of the Coronation.
The Duke of Suffolke is the firſt, and claimes
To be high Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolke,
He to be Earle Marſhall: you may reade the reſt.
2 I thanke you Sir: Had I not known thoſe cuſtoms,
I ſhould have beene beholding to your Paper:
But I beſeech you, what's becom of Katherine
The Princeſſe Dowager? How goes her buſineſſe?
1 That I can tell you too. The Archbiſhop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned, and Reverend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunſtable; ſixe miles off
From Ampthill, where the Princeſſe lay, to which
She was often cyted by them, but appear'd not:
And to be ſhort, for not Appearance, and
The Kings late Scruple, by the maine aſſent
Of all theſe Learned men, ſhe was diuorc'd,
And the late Marriage made of none effect:
Since which, ſhe was remou'd to Kymmalton,
Where ſhe remaines now ſicke.
2 Alas good Lady.
The Trumpets ſound: Stand cloſe,
The Queene is comming. Hoboyes.

The Order of the Coronation.

1 A lively Flouriſh of Trumpets.
2 Then, two Iudges
3 Lord Chancellor, with Purſe and Mace before him.
4 Quiriſters ſinging. Muſicke
5 Maior of London, bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coate of Armes, and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper Crowne.
6 Marqueſſe Dorſet, bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head, a Demy Coronall of Gold. With him, the Earle of Surrey, bearing the Rod of Siluer with the Done, Crowned with an Earles Coronet. Collars of Eſſes.
7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Eſtate, his Coronet on his head, bearing a long white Wand, as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolke, with the Rod of Marſhalſhip, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Eſſes.
8 A Canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque-Ports, vnder it the Queene in her Robe, in her haire, richly adorned with Pearle, Crowned. On each ſide her, the Biſhops of London, and Winchester.
9 The Olde Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers, bearing the Queenes Traine
10 Certaine Ladies or Counteſſes, with plaine Circles of Gold, without Flowers.

Exeunt, firſt paſſing ouer the Stage in Order and State, and then, A great Flouriſh of Trumpets.

2 A Royall Traine beleeue me: Theſe I know:
Who's that that beares the Scepter?
1 Marqueſſe Dorſet,
And that the Earle of Surrey, with the Rod.
2 A bold braue Gentleman. That ſhould be The Duke of Suffolke.
1 'Tis the ſame: high Steward.
2 And that my Lord of Norfolke?
1 Yes.
2 Heauen bleſſe thee,
Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I euer look'd on.
Sir, as I haue a Soule, ſhe is an Angell;
Our King has all the Indies in his Armes,
And more, and richer, when he ſtraines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conſcience.
1 They that beare
The Cloath of Honour ouer her, are foure Barons
Of the Cinque Ports.
2 Thoſe men are happy,
And ſo are all, are neere her.
I take it, ſhe that carries vp the Traine,
Is that old Noble Lady, Dutcheſſe of Norfolke.
1 It is, and all the reſt are Counteſſes.
2 Their Coronets ſay ſo. Theſe are Starres indeed,
And ſometimes falling ones.
2 No more of that.
Enter a third Gentleman.
1 God ſaue you Sir. Where haue you bin broiling?
3 Among the crow'd i'th'Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am ſtifled
With the meere rankneſſe of their ioy.
2 You ſaw the Ceremony?
3 That I did.
1 How was it?
3 Well worth the ſeeing.
2 Good Sir, ſpeake it to vs?
3 As well as I am able. The rich ſtreame
Of Lords, and Ladies, having brought the Queene
To a prepar'd place in the Quire, fell off
A diſtance from her; while her Grace ſate downe
To reſt a while, ſome halfe an houre, or ſo,
In a rich Chaire of State, oppoſing freely
The Beauty of her Perſon to the People.
Beleeue me Sir, ſhe is the goodlieſt Woman
That euer lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, ſuch a noyſe aroſe,
As the ſhrowdes make at Sea, in a ſtiffe Tempeſt,
As lowd, and to as many Tunes. Hats, Cloakes,
(Doublets, I thinke) flew vp, and had their Faces
Bin looſe, this day they had beene loſt. Such ioy
I neuer ſaw before. Great belly'd women,
That had not halfe a weeke to go, like Rammes
In the old time of Warre, would ſhake the preſſe
And make 'em reele before 'em. No man liuing
Could ſay this is my wife there, all were woouen
So ſtrangely in one peece.
2 But what follow'd?
3 At length, her Grace roſe, and with modeſt paces
Came to the Altar, where ſhe kneel'd, and ſaint-like Caſt her faire eyes to Heauen and pray'd deuoutly.
Then roſe againe, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Arch-byſhop of Canterbury,
She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;
As holy Oyle, Edwards Confeſſors Crowne,
The Rod, and Bird of Peace, and all ſuch Emblemes
Laid Nobly on her: which perform'd, the Quire

Sung

With all the choyſeſt Muſicke of the Kingdome,
Together ſung Te Deum. So ſhe parted,
And with the ſame full State pac'd backe againe
To Yorke-Place, where the Feaſt is held.

1 Sir,
You muſt no more call it Yorke-place, that's paſt:
For ſince the Cardinall fell, that Title loſt,
'Tis now the Kings, and call'd White-Hall.

3 I know it:
But 'tis ſo lately alter'd, that the old name
Is freſh about me.

2 What two Reverend Biſhops
Were thoſe that went on each ſide of the Queene?

1 Stokeſley and Gardiner, the one of Winchester,
Newly preferr'd from the Kings Secretary:
The other London.

2 He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the Archbiſhops,
The vertuous Cranmer.

3 All the Land knowes that:
How ever, yet there is no great breach, when it comes
Cranmer will finde a Friend will not ſhrinke from him.

2 Who may that be, I pray you.

3 Thomas Cromwell,
A man in much eſteeme with th'King, and truly
A worthy Friend. The King ha's made him
Maſter o'th'Jewell Houſe,
And one already of the Privy Councell.

2 He will deſerve more.

1 Yes without all doubt.
Come Gentlemen, ye ſhall go my way,
Which is to'th Court, and there ye ſhall be my Gueſts:
Something I can command. As I walke thither,
Ile tell ye more.

Both. You may command vs Sir. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Katherine Dowager, ſicke, led between Griffith, her Gentleman Vſher, and Patience her Woman.

Grif. How do's your Grace?

Kath. O Griffith ſicke to death:
My Legges like loaden Branches bow to'th Earth,
Willing to leave their burthen: Reach a Chaire,
So now (me thinkes) I feele a little eaſe.
Did'ſt thou not tell me Griffith, as thou led'ſt me,
That the great Childe of Honor, Cardinall Wolſey
Was dead?

Grif. Yes Madam: but I thanke your Grace
Out of the paine you ſuffer'd, gave no eare too't.

Kath. Pre'thee good Griffith, tell me how he dy'de.
If well, he ſlept before me happily
For my example.

Grif. Well, the voyce goes Madam,
For after the ſtout Earle Northumberland
Arreſted him at Yorke, and brought him forward
As a man ſorely tainted, to his Anſwer,
He fell ſicke ſodainly, and grew ſo ill
He could not ſit his Mule.

Kath. Alas poore man.

Grif. At laſt, with eaſie Rodes, he came to Leiceſter,
Lodg'd in the Abbey; where the reverend Abbot
With all his Covent, honourably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave theſe words. O Father Abbot,
An old man, broken with the ſtormes of State,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:
Give him a little earth for Charity.
So went to bed; where eagerly his ſickneſſe
Purſu'd him ſtill, and three nights after this,
About the hours of eight, which he himſelfe
Foretold ſhould be his laſt, full of Repentance,
Continuall Meditations, Teares, and Sorrowes,
He gave his Honors to the world agen,
His bleſſed part to Heaven, and ſlept in peace.

Kath. So may he reſt,
His Faults lye gently on him:
Yet thus farre Griffith, give me leave to ſpeake him,
And yet with Charity. He was a man
Of an vnbounded ſtomacke, ever ranking
Himſelfe with Princes. One that by ſuggeſtion
Ty'de all the Kingdome. Symonie, was faire play,
His owne Opinion was his Law. I'th'preſence
He would ſay untruths, and be ever double Both in his words, and meaning. He was never (But where he meant to Ruine) pitifull.
His Promiſes, were as he then was, Mighty:
But his performance, as he is now, Nothing:
Of his owne body he was ill, and gave
The Clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble Madam:
Mens evill manners, live in Braſſe, their Vertues
We write in Water. May it pleaſe your Highneſſe
To heare me ſpeake his good now?

Kath. Yes good Griffith,
I were malicious elſe.

Grif. This Cardinall,
Though from an humble Stocke, vndoubtedly
Was faſhion'd to much Honor. From his Cradle
He was a Scholler, and a ripe, and good one
Exceeding wiſe, faire ſpoken, and perſwading:
Lofty, and ſowre to them that lov'd him not:
But, to thoſe men that ſought him, ſweet as Summer.
And though he were vnſatisfied in getting,
(Which was a ſinne) yet in beſtowing, Madam,
He was moſt Princely: Ever witneſſe for him
Thoſe twinnes of Learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipſwich and Oxford: one of which, fell with him,
Vnwilling to out-live the good that did it.
The other (though vnfiniſh'd) yet ſo Famous,
So excellent in Art, and ſtill ſo riſing,
That Chriſtendome ſhall ever ſpeake his Vertue.
His Overthrow, heap'd Happineſſe vpon him:
For then, and not till then, he felt himſelfe,
And found the Bleſſednesſe of being little.
And to adde greater Honors to his Age
Then man could give him; he dy'de, fearing God.

Kath. After my death, I with no other Herald,
No other ſpeaker of my living Actions,
To keepe mine Honor, from Corruption,
But ſuch an honeſt Chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I moſt hated living, thou haſt made mee
With thy Religious Truth, and Modeſtie,
(Now in his Aſhes) Honor: Peace be with him.
Patience, be neere me ſtill, and ſet me lower,
I have not long to trouble thee. Good Griffith,
Cauſe the Muſitians play me that ſad note
I nam'd my Knell; whil'ſt I ſit meditating

On that Coelestiall Harmony I go too.
Sad and solemne Muſicke.
Grif. She is aſleep: Good wench, let's ſit down quiet,
For feare we wake her. Softly, gentle Patience.

The Viſion.

Enter ſolemnely tripping one after another, ſixe Perſonages, clad in white Robes, wearing on their heades Garlands of Bayes, and golden Vizards on their faces, Branches of Bayes or Palme in their hands. They firſt Conge vnto her, then Dance: and at certaine Changes, the firſt two hold a ſpare Garland over her Head, at which the other foure make reuerend Curtſies. Then the two that held the Garland, deliuer the ſame to the other next two, who obſerue the ſame order in their Changes, and holding the Garland over her head. Which done, they deliuer the ſame Garland to the laſt two: who likewiſe obſerue the ſame Order. At which (as it were by inſpiration) ſhe wakes (in her ſleepe) ſtirres of reioycing, and lifteth vp her hands to heauen. And ſo in their Dancing vaniſh, carrying the Garland with them. The Muſicke continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone
And leaue me heere in wretchednesſe, behinde ye?
Grif. Madam, we are heere.
Kath. It is not you I call for,
Saw ye none enter ſince I ſlept?
Grif. None Madam.
Kath. No? Saw you not euen now a bleſſed Troope
Inuite me to a Banquet, whoſe bright faces
Caſt thouſand beames vpon me, like the Sun?
They promis'd me eternall Happineſſe,
And brought me Garlands (Griffith) which I feele
I am not worthy yet to weare: I ſhall aſſuredly.
Grif. I am moſt ioyfull Madam, ſuch good dreames Poſſeſſe your Fancy.
Kath. Bid the Muſicke leaue,
They are harſh and heauy to me. Muſicke ceaſes.
Pat. Do you note
How much her Grace is alter'd on the ſodaine?
How long her face is drawne? How pale ſhe looks,
And of an earthy cold? Marke her eyes?
Grif. She is going Wench. Pray, pray.
Pat. Heauen comfort her.
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſ. And't like your Grace——
Kath. You are a ſawcy Fellow,
Deſerue we no more Reuerence?
Grif. You are too blame,
Knowing ſhe will not looſe her wonted Greatneſſe
To vſe ſo rude behauiour, Go too, kneele.
Meſ. I humbly do entreat your Highneſſe pardon,
My haſt made me vnmannerly. There is ſtaying
A Gentleman ſent from the King, to ſee you.
Kath. Admit him entrance Griffith. But this Fellow
Let me ne're ſee againe. Exit Meſſeng.
Enter Lord Capuchius.
If my ſight faile not,
You ſhould be Lord Ambaſſador from the Emperor,
My Royall Nephew, and your name Capuchius.
Cap. Madam the ſame. Your Seruant.
Kath. O my Lord,
The Times and Titles now are alter'd ſtrangely
With me, ſince firſt you knew me.
But I pray you,
What is your pleaſure with me?
Cap. Noble Lady,
Firſt mine owne ſeruice to your Grace, the next
The Kings requeſt, that I would viſit you,
Who greeues much for your weakneſſe, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.
Kath. O my good Lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a Pardon after Execution:
That gentle Phyſicke giuen in time, had cur'd me:
But now I am paſt all Comforts heere, but Prayers.
How does his Highneſſe?
Cap. Madam, in good health.
Kath. So may he euer do, and euer flouriſh,
When I ſhall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Baniſh'd the Kingdome. Patience, is that Letter
I caus'd you write, yet ſent away?
Pat. No Madam.
Kath. Sir, I moſt humbly pray you to deliuer
This to my Lord the King.
Cap. Moſt willing Madam.
Kath. In which I haue commended to his goodneſſe
The Modell of our chaſte loues: his yong daughter,
The dewes of Heauen fall thicke in Bleſſings on her,
Beſeeching him to giue her vertuous breeding
She is yong, and of a Noble modeſt Nature,
I hope ſhe will deſerue well; and a little
To loue her for her Mothers ſake, that lou'd him,
Heauen knowes how deerely.
My next poore Petition,
Is, that his Noble Grace would haue ſome pittie
Vpon my wretched women, that ſo long
Haue follow'd both my Fortunes faithfully,
Of which there is not one, I dare auow
(And now I ſhould not lye) but will deſerue
For Vertue, and true Beauties of the Soule,
For honeſtie, and decent Carriage
A right good Husband (let him be a Noble)
And ſure thoſe men are happy that ſhall haue 'em.
The laſt is for my men, they are the pooreſt,
(But pouerty could neuer draw 'em from me)
That they may haue their wages, duly paid 'em,
And ſomething ouer to remember me by.
If Heauen had pleas'd to haue giuen me longer life
And able meanes, we had not parted thus.
Theſe are the whole Contents. And good my Lord,
By that you loue the deereſt in this world,
As you wiſh Chriſtian peace to ſoules departed,
Stand theſe poore peoples Friend, and vrge the King
To do me this laſt right.
Cap. By Heauen I will,
Or let me looſe the faſhion of a man.
Kath. I thanke you honeſt Lord. Remember me
In all humilitie vnto his Highneſſe:
Say his long trouble now is paſſing
Out of this world. Tell him in death I bleſt him
(For ſo I will) mine eyes grow dimme. Farewell
My Lord. Griffith farewell. Nay Patience,
You muſt not leaue me yet. I muſt to bed,
Call in more women. When I am dead, good Wench,
Let me be vs'd with Honor; ſtrew me ouer
With Maiden Flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaſte Wife, to my Graue: Embalme me,
Then lay me forth (although vnqueen'd) yet like
A Queene, and Daughter to a King enterre me.
I can no more.
Exeunt leading Katherine.

Scene

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one a clocke Boy, is't not.

Boy. It hath ſtrooke.

Gard. Theſe ſhould be houres for neceſſities,
Not for delights: Times to repayre our Nature
With comforting repoſe, and not for vs
To waſte theſe times. Good houre of night Sir Thomas:
Whether ſo late?

Lou. Came you from the King, my Lord?

Gar. I did Sir Thomas, and left him at Primero
With the Duke of Suffolke.

Lou. I muſt to him too
Before he go to bed. Ile take my leaue.

Gard. Not yet Sir Thomas Louell: what's the matter?
It ſeemes you are in haſt: and if there be
No great offence belongs too't, giue your Friend
Some touch of your late buſineſſe: Affaires that walke
(As they ſay Spirits do) at midnight, haue
In them a wilder Nature, then the buſineſſe
That ſeekes diſpatch by day.

Lou. My Lord, I loue you;
And durſt commend a ſecret to your eare
Much waighties then this worke. The Queens in Labor
They ſay in great Extremity, and fear'd
She'l with the Labour, end.

Gard. The fruite ſhe goes with
I pray for heartily, that it may finde
Good time, and liue: but for the Stocke Sir Thomas,
I wiſh it grubb'd vp now.

Lou. Me thinkes I could Cry the Amen, and yet my Conſcience ſayes
She's a good Creature, and ſweet-Ladie do's
Deſerue our better wiſhes.

Gard. But Sir, Sir,
Heare me Sir Thomas, y'are a Gentleman
Of mine owne way. I know you Wiſe, Religious,
And let me tell you, it will ne're be well,
'Twill not Sir Thomas Louell, tak't of me,
Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and ſhee
Sleepe in their Graues.

Louell. Now Sir, you ſpeake of two
The moſt remark'd i'th'Kingdome: as for Cromwell,
Beſide that of the Iewell-Houſe, is made Maſter
O'th'Rolles, and the Kings Secretary. Further Sir,
Stands in the gap and Trade of moe Preferments,
With which the Time will loade him. Th'Archbyſhop
Is the Kings hand, and tongue, and who dare ſpeak
One ſyllable againſt him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
There are that Dare, and I my ſelfe haue ventur'd
To ſpeake my minde of him: and indeed this day,
Sir (I may tell it you) I thinke I haue
Incenſt the Lords o'th'Councell, that he is (For ſo I know he is, they know he is)
A moſt Arch-Heretique, a Peſtilence
That does infect the Land: with which, they moued
Haue broken with the King, who hath ſo farre
Giuen eare to our Complaint, of his great Grace,
And Princely Care, foreſeeing thoſe fell Miſchiefes,
Our Reaſons layd before him, hath commanded
To morrow Morning to the Councell Board
He be conuented. He's a ranke weed Sir Thomas,
And we muſt root him out. From your Affaires
I hinder you too long: Good night, Sir Thomas.

Exit Gardiner and Page.

Lou. Many good nights, my Lord, I reſt your ſeruant.

Enter King and Suffolke.

King. Charles, I will play no more to night,
My minde's not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suff. Sir, I did neuer win of you before.

King. But little Charles,
Nor ſhall not when my Fancies on my play.
Now Louell, from the Queene what is the Newes.

Lou. I could not perſonally deliuer to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman,
I ſent your Meſſage, who return'd her thankes
In the greateſt humbleneſſe, and deſir'd your Highneſſe
Moſt heartily to pray for her.

King. What ſay'ſt thou? Ha?
To pray for her? What, is ſhe crying out?

Lou. So ſaid her woman, and that her ſuffrance made
Almoſt each pang, a death.

King. Alas good Lady.

Suf. God ſafely quit her of her Burthen, and
With gentle Trauaile, to the gladding of Your Highneſſe with an Heire.

King. 'Tis midnight Charles,
Prythee to bed, and in thy Praytes remember
Th'eſtate of my poore Queene. Leaue me alone,
For I muſt thinke of that, which company
Would not be friendly too.

Suf. I wiſh your Highneſſe
A quiet night, and my good Miſtris will Remember in my Prayers.

King. Charles good night. Exit Suffolke.
Well Sir, what follows?

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Den. Sir, I haue brought my Lord the Arch-byſhop
As you commanded me.

King. Ha? Canterbury?

Den. I my good Lord.

King. 'Tis true: where is he Denny?

Den. He attends your Highneſſe pleaſure.

King. Bring him to Vs.

Lou. This is about that, which the Byſhop ſpake,
I am happily come hither.

Enter Cranmer and Denny.

King. Auoyd the Gallery. Louell ſeemes to ſtay.
Ha? I haue ſaid. Be gone.
What? Exeunt Louell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearefull: Wherefore frownes he thus?
'Tis his Aſpect of Terror. All's not well.

King. How now my Lord?
You do deſire to know wherefore
I ſent for you.

Cran. It is my dutie
T'attend your Highneſſe pleaſure.

King. Pray you ariſe
My good and gracious Lord of Canterburie:
Come, you and I muſt walke a turne together:
I haue Newes to tell you.
Come, come, giue me your hand.
Ah my good Lord, I greeue at what I ſpeake,
And am right ſorrie to repeat what followes.
I haue, and moſt vnwillingly of late

Heard many grieuous. I do ſay my Lord
Grieuous complaints of you; which being conſider'd,
Haue mou'd Vs, and our Councell, that you ſhall
This Morning come before vs, where I know
You cannot with ſuch freedome purge your ſelfe,
But that till further Triall, in thoſe Charges
Which will require your Anſwer, you muſt take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your houſe our Towre: you, a Brother of vs
It fits we thus proceed, or elſe no witneſſe
Would come againſt you.

Cran. I humbly thanke your Highneſſe,
And am right glad to catch this good occaſion
Moſt throughly to be winnowed, where my Chaffe
And Corne ſhall flye aſunder. For I know
There's none ſtands vnder more calumnious tongues,
Then I my ſelfe, poore man.

King. Stand vp, good Canterbury,
Thy Truth, and thy Integrity is rooted
In vs thy Friend. Giue me thy hand, ſtand vp, Prythee let's walke. Now by my Holydame,
What manner of man are you? My Lord, I look'd
You would haue giuen me your Petition, that
I ſhould haue tane ſome paines, to bring together
Your ſelfe, and your Accuſers, and to haue heard you Without indurance further.

Cran. Moſt dread Liege,
The good I ſtand on, is my Truth and Honeſtie:
If they ſhall faile, I with mine Enemies
Will triumph o're my perſon, which I weigh not,
Being of thoſe Vertues vacant. I feare nothing
What can be ſaid againſt me.

King. Know you not
How your ſtate ſtands i'th'world, with the whole world?
Your Enemies are many, and not ſmall; their practiſes
Muſt beare the ſame proportion, and not euer
The Iuſtice and the Truth o'th'queſtion carries
The dew o'th'Verdict with it; at what eaſe
Might corrupt mindes procure, Knaues as corrupt
To ſweare againſt you: Such things haue bene done.
You are Potently oppos'd, and with a Malice
Of as great Size. Weene you of better lucke.
I meane in periur'd Witneſſe, then your Maſter,
Whoſe Miniſter you are, whiles heere he liu'd
Vpon this naughty Earth? Go too, go too,
You take a Precepit for no leape of danger,
And woe your owne deſtruction.

Cran. God, and your Maieſty
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me.

King. Be of good cheere,
They ſhall no more preuaile, then we giue way too:
Keepe comfort to you, and this Morning ſee
You do appeare before them. If they ſhall chance
In charging you with matters, to commit you:
The beſt perſwaſions to the contrary
Faile not to vſe, and with what vehemencie
Th'occaſion ſhall inſtruct you. If entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this Ring
Deliuer them, and your Appeale to vs
There make before them. Looke, the goodman weeps:
He's honeſt on mine Honor. Gods bleſſ Mother,
I ſweare he is true-hearted, and a ſoule
None better in my Kingdome. Get you gone,
And do as I haue bid you. Exit Cranmer.
He ha's ſtrangled his Language in his teares.

Enter Olde Lady.

Gent. within. Come backe: what meane you?

Lady. Ile not come backe, the tydings that I bring
Will make my boldneſſe, manners. Now good Angels
Fly o're thy Royall head, and ſhade thy perſon
Vnder their bleſſed wings.

King. Now by thy lookes
I geſſe thy Meſſage. Is the Queene deliuer'd?
Say I, and of a boy.

Lady. I, I my Liege,
And of a louely Boy: the God of heauen
Both now, and euer bleſſe her: 'Tis a Gyrle
Promiſes Boyes hereafter. Sir, your Queen
Deſires your Viſitation, and to be Acquainted with this ſtranger; 'tis as like you,
As Cherry, is to Cherry.

King. Louell.

Lou. Sir.

King. Giue her an hundred Markes.
Ile to the Queene. Exit King.

Lady. An hundred Markes? By this light, Ile ha more.
An ordinary Groome is for ſuch payment.
I will haue more, or ſcold it out of him.
Said I for this, the Gyrle was like to him? Ile
Haue more, or elſe vnſay't: and now, while 'tis hot,
Ile put it to the iſſue. Exit Lady.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Cran. I hope I am not too late, and yet the Gentleman
That was ſent to me from the Councell, pray'd me
To make great haſt. All faſt? What meanes this? Hoa?
Who waites there? Sure you know me?
Enter Keeper.

Keep. Yes, my Lord:
But yet I cannot helpe you.

Cran. Why?

Keep. Your Grace muſt waigh a while till you be call'd in.
Enter Doctor Buts.

Cran. So.

Buts. This is a Peere of Malice: I am glad
I came this way ſo happily. The King
Shall vnderſtand it preſently. Exit Buts.

Cran. 'Tis Buts.
The Kings Phyſitian, as he paſt along
How earneſtly he caſt his eyes vpon me:
Pray heauen he found not my diſgrace: for certaine
This is of purpoſe laid by ſome that hate me,
(God turne their hearts, I neuer ſought their malice)
To quench mine Honor; they would faine haue made me
Wait ſtill at doore: a fellow Counſellor
'Mong Boyes, Groomes, and Lackeyes.
But their pleaſures
Muſt be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Buts, at a Window aboue.

Buts. Ile ſhew your Grace the ſtrangeſt ſight.

King. What's that Buts?

Buts

Butts. I thinke your Highneſſe ſaw this many a day.
Kin. Body a me: where is it?
Butts. There my Lord:
The high promotion of his Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his State at doore 'mongſt Purſeuants,
Pages, and Foot-boyes.
Kin. Ha! 'Tis he indeed.
Is this the Honour they doe one anacher?
'Tis well there's one above 'em yet; I had thought
They had parted ſo much honeſty among 'em,
At leaſt good manners; as not thus to ſuffer
A man of his Place, and ſo neere our ſauour
To dance attendance on their Lordſhips pleaſures,
And at the doore too, like a Poſt with Packets:
By holy Mary (Butts) there's knauery;
Let 'em alone, and draw the Curtaine cloſe:
We ſhall heare more anon.

A Councell Table brought in with Chayres and Stooles, and placed vnder the State. Enter Lord Chancellour, places himſelfe at the vpper end of the Table, on the left hand: A Seate being left void aboue him, as for Canterburies Seate. Duke of Suffolke, Duke of Norfolke, Surrey, Lord Chamberlaine, Gardiner, ſeat themſelues in Order on each ſide. Cromwell at lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speake to the buſineſſe, M. Secretary;
Why are we met in Councell?
Crom. Pleaſe your Honours,
The chiefe cauſe concernes his Grace of Canterbury.
Gard. Has't he had knowledge of it?
Crom. Yes.
Norf. Who waits there?
Kee. Without my Noble Lords?
Gard. Yes.
Kee. My Lord Archbiſhop:
And ha's done halfe an houre to know your pleaſures.
Chan. Let him come in.
Kee. Your Grace may enter now.
Cranmer approches the Councell Table
Chan. My good Lord Archbiſhop, I'm very ſorry
To ſit heere at this preſent, and behold
That Chayre ſtand empty: But we all are men
In our owne natures frayle, and capable
Of our flesh, few are Angels; out of which frailty
And want of wiſedome, you that beſt ſhould teach vs,
Haue miſdemean'd your ſelfe, and not a little:
Toward the King firſt, then his Lawes, in filling
The whole Realme, by your teaching & your Chaplaines
(For ſo we are inform'd) with new opinions,
Diuers and dangerous; which are Hereſies;
And not reform'd, may prooue pernicious.
Gard. Which Reformation muſt be ſodaine too
My Noble Lords; for thoſe that tame wild Horſes,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But ſtop their mouthes with ſtubborn Bits & ſpurre 'em,
Till they obey the mannage. If we ſuffer
Out of our eaſineſſe and childiſh pitty
To one mans Honour, this contagious ſickneſſe;
Farewell all Phyſicke: and what followes then?
Commotions, vprores, with a generall Taint
Of the whole State; as of late dayes our neighbours,
The vpper Germany can dearely witneſſe
Yet freſhly pittied in our memories.
Cran. My good Lords; Hitherto, in all the Progreſſe
Both of my Life and Office, I haue labour'd,
And with no little ſtudy, that my teaching
And the ſtrong courſe of my Authority,
Might goe one way, and ſafely; and the end
Was euer to doe well: nor is there liuing,
(I ſpeake it with a ſingle heart, my Lords)
A man that more deteſts, more ſtirres againſt,
Both in his priuate Conſcience, and his place,
Defacers of a publique peace then I doe.
Pray Heauen the King may neuer find a heart
With leſſe Allegeance in it. Men that make Enuy, and crooked malice, nouriſhment;
Dare bite the beſt. I doe beſeech your Lordſhips,
That in this caſe of Iuſtice, my Accuſers,
Be what they will, may ſtand forth face to face,
And freely vrge againſt me.
Suff. Nay, my Lord,
That cannot be; you are a Counſellor,
And by that vertue no man dare accuſe you. (ment,
Gard. My Lord, becauſe we haue buſines of more mo-
We will be ſhort with you. 'Tis his Highneſſe pleaſure
And our conſent, for better tryall of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower,
Where being but a priuate man againe,
You ſhall know many dare accuſe you boldly,
More then (I feare) you are prouided for.
Cran. Ah my good Lord of Winchester: I thanke you,
You are alwayes my good Friend, if your will paſſe,
I ſhall both finde your Lordſhip, Iudge and Iuror,
You are ſo mercifull. I ſee your end,
'Tis my vndoing. Loue and meekeneſſe, Lord
Become a Churchman, better then Ambition:
Win ſtraying Soules with modeſty againe,
Caſt none away: That I ſhall cleere my ſelfe,
Lay all the weight ye can vpon my patience,
I make as little doubt as you doe conſcience,
In doing dayly wrongs. I could ſay more,
But reuerence to your calling, makes me modeſt.
Gard. My Lord, my Lord, you are a Sectary,
That's the plaine truth; your painted gloſſe diſcouers
To men that vnderſtand you, words and weakneſſe.
Crom. My Lord of Winchester, y'are a little,
By your good fauour, too ſharpe; Men ſo Noble,
How euer faultly, yet ſhould finde reſpect
For what they haue beene: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.
Gard. Good M. Secretary,
I cry your Honour mercie, you may worſt
Of all this Table ſay ſo.
Crom. Why my Lord?
Gard. Doe not I know you for a Fauourer
Of this new Sect? ye are not ſound.
Crom. Not ſound?
Gard. Not ſound I ſay.
Crom. Would you were halfe ſo honeſt:
Mens prayers then would ſeeke you, not their feares.
Gard. I ſhall remember this bold Language.
Crom. Doe.
Remember your bold life too.
Chan. This is too much;
Forbeare for ſhame my Lords.
Gard. I haue done.
Crom. And I.
Chan. Then thus for you my Lord, it ſtands agreed
I take it, by all voyces: That forthwith,
You be conuaid to th' Tower a Priſoner;
There to remaine till the Kings further pleaſure
Be knowne vnto vs: are you all agreed Lords.

All

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I muſt needs to th' Tower my Lords?

Gard. What other,
Would you expect? You are ſtrangely troubleſome:
Let ſome o'th' Guard be ready there.

Enter the Guard.

Cran. For me?
Muſt I goe like a Traytor thither?

Gard. Receive him,
And ſee him ſafe i'th Tower.

Cran. Stay good my Lords,
I have a little yet to ſay. Looke there my Lords,
By vertue of that Ring, I take my cauſe
Out of the gripes of cruell men, and give it
To a moſt Noble Iudge, the King my Maſter.

Cham. This is the Kings Ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suff. 'Tis the right Ring, by Heav'n. I told ye all,
When we firſt put this dangerous ſtone a rowling,
'Twould fall upon our ſelves.

Nor. Doe you thinke my Lords
The King will ſuffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'Tis now too certaine;
How much more is his Life in value with him?
Would I were fairely out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In ſeeking tales and Informations
Againſt this man, whoſe honeſty the Deuell
And his Diſciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burnes ye. now have at ye.

Enter King, frowning on them, takes his Seate.

Gard. Dread Soueraigne,
How much are we bound to Heaven,
In dayly thankes; that gave us ſuch a Prince;
Not onely good and wiſe, but moſt religious:
One that in all obedience, makes the Church
The chiefe ayme of his Honour, and to ſtrengthen
That holy duty out of deare reſpect,
His Royall ſelfe in Iudgement comes to heare
The cauſe betwixt her, and this great offender.

Kin. You were euer good at ſodaine Commendations, Biſhop of Wincheſter. But know I come not
To heare ſuch flattery now, and in my preſence
They are too thin, and baſe to hide offences,
To me you cannot reach. You play the Spaniell,
And thinke with wagging of your tongue to win me:
But whatſoere thou tak'ſt me for; I'm ſure
Thou haſt a cruell Nature and a bloody.
Good man ſit downe: Now let me ſee the proudeſt
Hee, that dares moſt, but wag his finger at thee.
By all that's holy, he had better ſtarue,
Then but once thinke his place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it pleaſe your Grace; ——

Kin. No Sir, it doe's not pleaſe me,
I had thought, I had had men of ſome vnderſtanding,
And wiſedome of my Councell; but I finde none:
Was it diſcretion Lords, to let this man,
This good man (few of you deſerue that Title)
This honeſt man, wait like a lowſie Foot-boy
At Chamber doore? and one, as great as you are?
Why, what a ſhame was this? Did my Commiſſion
Bid ye ſo farre forget your ſelues? I gave ye Power, as he was a Counſellour to try him,
Not as a Groome: There's ſome of ye, I ſee,
More out of Malice then Integrity,
Would try him to the vtmoſt, had ye meanes,
Which ye ſhall never have while I live.

Chan. Thus farre
My moſt dread Soueraigne, may it like your Grace,
To let my tongue excuſe all. What was purpoſe'd Concerning his Impriſonment, was rather
(If there be faith in men) meant for his Tryall,
And faire purgation to the world then malice,
I'm ſure in me.

Kin. Well, well my Lords reſpect him,
Take him, and vſe him well; he's worthy of it,
I will ſay thus much for him, if a Prince
May be beholding to a Subiect; I
Am for his loue and ſeruice, ſo to him.
Make me no more adoe, but all embrace him;
Be friends for ſhame my Lords: My Lord of Canterbury
I have a Suite which you muſt not deny me.
That is, a faire young Maid that yet wants Baptiſme,
You muſt be Godfather, and anſwere for her.

Cran. The greateſt Monarch now alive may glory
In ſuch an honour: how may I deſerue it,
That am a poore and humble Subiect to you?

Kin. Come, come my Lord, you'd ſpare your ſpoones;
You ſhall have two noble Partners with you: the old Ducheſſe of Norfolke, and Lady Marqueſſe Dorſet: will theſe pleaſe you?
Once more my Lord of Wincheſter, I charge you
Embrace, and loue this man.

Gard. With a true heart,
And Brother; loue I doe it.

Cran. And let Heauen
Witneſſe how deare, I hold this Confirmation. (heart,

Kin. Good Man, thoſe ioyfull teares ſhew thy true
The common voyce I ſee is verified
Of thee, which ſayes thus: Doe my Lord of Canterbury
A ſhrewd turne, and he's your friend for euer:
Come Lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a Chriſtian.
As I have made ye one Lords, one remaine:
So I grow ſtronger, you more Honour gaine. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Noyſe and Tumult within: Enter Porter and his man.

Port. You'l leaue your noyſe anon ye Raſcals: do you take the Court for Parish Garden: ye rude ſlaues, leaue your gaping:

within. Good M. Porter I belong to th' Larder.

Port. Belong to th' Gallowes, and be hang'd ye Rogue: Is this a place to roare in? Fetch me a dozen Crab-tree ſtaues, and ſtrong ones: theſe are but ſwitches to 'em: Ile ſcratch your heads: you muſt be ſeeting Cheſtnuts, I doe you looke for Ale, and Cakes heere, you rude Raſcalls?

Man. Pray Sir be patient; 'tis as much impoſſible, Vnleſſe we ſweepe 'em from the doore with Cannons, To ſcatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em ſleepe On May-day Morning, which will never be: We may as well puſh againſt Powles as ſtirre 'em.

Por. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man

Man. Alas I know not, how gets the Tide in?
As much as one sound Cudgell of foure foote,
(You see the poore remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare Sir.

Port. You did nothing Sir.

Man. I am not Samplon, nor Sir Guy, nor Colebrand,
To mow 'em downe before me: but if I spar'd any
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or shee, Cuckold or Cuckold-maker:
Let me ne're hope to see a Chine againe,
And that I would not for a Cow, God saue her.

Within. Do you heare M. Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good M. Puppy.
Keepe the dore close Sirha.

Man. What would you haue me doe?

Por. What should you doe,
But knock 'em downe by th' dozens? Is this More fields to muster in? Or haue we some strange Indian with the great Toole, come to Court, the women so beseige vs? Bleſſe me, what a fry of Fornication is at dore? On my Christian Conscience this one Christening will beget a thousand; here will bee Father, God-father, and all together.

Man. The Spoones will be the bigger Sir. There is a fellow somewhat neere the doore, he should be a Brasier by his face, for o'my conscience twenty of the Dog-dayes now reigne in's Nose; all that stand about him are vnder the Line, they need no other pennance: that Fire-Drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his Nose discharged against me; hee stands there like a Morter-piece to blow vs. There was a Habberdasher's Wife of small wit, neere him, that rail'd vpon me, till her pinck'd porrenger fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the State. I miſt the Meteor once, and hit that Woman, who cryed out Clubbes, when I might see from farre, some forty Truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope o'th' Strond where she was quartered; they fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to th' broome ſtaffe to me, I defide 'em ſtill, when ſodainly a File of Boyes behind 'em, loos'e ſhot, deliuer'd ſuch a ſhowre of Pibbles, that I was faine to draw mine Honour in, and let 'em win the Worke, the Dwell was amongſt 'em I thinke ſurely.

Por. These are the youths that thunder at a Playhouſe, and fight for bitten Apples, that no Audience but the tribulation of Tower Hill, or the Limbes of Limehouſe, their deare Brothers are able to endure. I haue ſome of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three dayes, beſides the running Banquet of two Beadles, that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Mercy o'me: what a Multitude are heere?
They grow ſtill too; from all Parts they are comming,
As if we kept a Faire heere? Where are these Porters?
These lazy knaues? Y'haue made a fine hand fellowes?
There's a trim rabble let in: are all these
Your faithfull friends o'th' Suburbs? We ſhall haue Great ſtore of roome no doubt, left for the Ladies,
When they paſſe backe from the Christening?

Por. And't pleaſe your Honour,
We are but men; and what ſo many may doe,
Not being torne a pieces, we haue done:
An Army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I liue,
If the King blame me for't; Ile lay ye all
By th' heeles, and ſodainly; and on your heads
Clap round Fines for neglect: y'are lazy knaues,
And heere ye lye baiting of Bombards, when Ye ſhould doe ſeruice. Harke the Trumpets ſound, Th'are come already from the Christening,
Go breake among the preaſſe, and finde away out
To let the Troope paſſe ſafely; or Ile finde
A Marſhallſey, ſhall hold ye play theſe two Monthes.

Por Make way there, for the Princeſſe.

Man. You great fellow,
Stand cloſe vp, or Ile make your head ake.

Por. You i'th' Chamblet, get vp o'th' raile,
Ile pecke you o're the pales elſe. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Trumpets ſounding: Then two Aldermen, L. Maior, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolke with his Marſhals Staffe, Duke of Suffolke, two Noblemen, bearing great ſtanding Bowles for the Chriſtening Gifts: Then three Noblemen bearing a Canopy, vnder which the Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, Godmother, bearing the Child richly habited in a Mantle, &c. Traine borne by a Lady: Then follower the Marchioneſſe Dorſet, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troope paſſe once about the Stage, and Garter ſpeakes.

Gart. Heauen
From thy endleſſe goodneſſe, ſend proſperous life,
Long and euer happie, to the high and Mighty
Princeſſe of England Elizabeth.

Flouriſh. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. And to your Royall Grace, & the good Queen,
My Noble Partners, and my ſelfe thus pray
All comfort, ioy in this moſt gracious Lady,
Heauen euer laid vp to make Parents happy,
May hourely fall vpon ye.

Kin. Thanke you good Lord Archbiſhop:
What is her Name?

Cran Elizabeth.

Kin. Stand vp Lord,
With this Kiſſe, take my Bleſſing: God protect thee,
Into whoſe hand, I giue thy Life.

Cran. Amen.

Kin. My Noble Goſſips, y'haue beene too Prodigall:
I thanke ye heartily: So ſhall this Lady,
When ſhe ha's ſo much Engliſh.

Cran. Let me ſpeake Sir,
For Heauen now bids me; and the words I vtter,
Let none thinke Flattery; for they'l finde 'em Truth.
This Royall Infant, Heauen ſtill moue about her;
Though in her Cradle; yet now promiſes
Vpon this Land a thouſand thouſand Bleſſings,
Which Time ſhall bring to ripeneſſe: She ſhall be,
(But few now liuing can behold that goodneſſe)
A Patterne to all Princes liuing with her,
And all that ſhall ſucceed: Saba was neuer
More coueteous of Wiſedome, and faire Vertue
Then this pure Soule ſhall be. All Princely Graces
That mould vp ſuch a mighty Piece as this is,
With all the Vertues that attend the good,
Shall ſtill be doubled on her. Truth ſhall Nurſe her,

Holy

Holy and Heauenly thoughts ſtill Counſell her.
She ſhall be lou'd and fear'd. Her owne ſhall bleſſe her;
Her Foes ſhake like a Field of beaten Corne,
And hang their heads with ſorrow.
Good growes with her
In her dayes, Every Man ſhall eate in ſafety,
Vnder his owne Vine what he plants; and ſing
The merry Songs of Peace to all his Neighbours.
God ſhall be truely knowne, and thoſe about her,
From her ſhall read the perfect way of Honour,
And by thoſe claime their greatneſſe, not by Blood.
Nor ſhall this peace ſleepe with her: But as when
The Bird of Wonder dyes, the Mayden Phoenix,
Her Aſhes new create another Heyre,
As great in admiration as her ſelfe.
So ſhall ſhe leaue her Bleſſednеſſe to One,
(When Heauen ſhall call her from this clowd of darkneſs)
Who, from the ſacred Aſhes of her Honour
Shall Star-like riſe, as great in fame as ſhe was,
And ſo ſtand fix'd. Peace, Plenty, Loue, Truth, Terror,
That were the Seruants to this choſen Infant,
Shall then be his, and like a Vine grow to him;
Where euer the bright Sunne of Heauen ſhall ſhine,
His Honour, and the greatneſſe of his Name,
Shall be, and make new Nations. He ſhall flouriſh,
And like a Mountaine Cedar, reach his branches,
To all the Plaines about him: Our Childrens Children
Shall ſee this, and bleſſe Heauen.

Kin. Thou ſpeakeſt wonders.

Cran. She ſhall be to the happineſſe of England,
An aged Princeſſe; many dayes ſhall ſee her,
And yet no day without a deed to Crowne it.
Would I had knowne no more: But ſhe muſt dye,
She muſt, the Saints muſt haue her; yet a Virgin,
A moſt vnſpotted Lilly ſhall ſhe paſſe
To th' ground, and all the World ſhall mourne her.

Kin. O Lord Archbiſhop
Thou haſt made me now a man, neuer before
This happy Child, did I get any thing.
This Oracle of comfort, has ſo pleas'd me,
That when I am in Heauen, I ſhall deſire
To ſee what this Child does, and praiſe my Maker.
I thanke ye all. To you my good Lord Maior,
And you good Brethren, I am much beholding;
I haue receiu'd much Honour by your preſence,
And ye ſhall find me thankfull. Lead the way Lords,
Ye muſt all ſee the Queene, and ſhe muſt thanke ye,
She will be ſicke elſe. This day, no man thinke
'Has buſineſſe at his houſe; for all ſhall ſtay:
This Little-One ſhall make it Holy-day. Exeunt.

THE EPILOGVE.

'Tis ten to one, this Play can neuer pleaſe
All that are here. Some come to take their eaſe,
And ſleepe an Act or two; but thoſe we feare
We haue frighted with our Trumpets: ſo 'tis cleare, They'l ſay 'tis naught. Others, to heare the City
Abus'd extreamely, and to cry that's witty,
Which we haue not done neither; that I feare
All the expected good w'are like to heare.
For this Play at this time, is meerely an
The merciſull conſtruction of good women.
For ſuch a one we ſhew'd em. If they ſmile,
And ſay 'twill do; I know within a while
All the beſt men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their Ladies bid 'em clap

FINIS.

The Prologue.

IN Troy there lyes the Scene: From Iles of Greece
The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd
Haue to the Port of Athens sent their shippes
Fraught with the miniſters and inſtruments
Of cruell Warre: Sixty and nine that wore
Their Crownets Regall, from th'Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made
To ranſacke Troy, within whoſe ſtrong emures
The raviſh'd Helen, Menelaus Queene,
With wanton Paris ſleepes, and that's the Quarrell.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deepe-drawing Barke do there diſgorge
Their warlike frautage: now on Dardan Plaines
The freſh and yet vnbruiſed Greekes do pitch
Their braue Pauillions. Priams ſix-gated City,
Dardan and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus with maſsie Staples
And correſponſiue and fulfilling Bolts
Stirre vp the Sonnes of Troy.
Now Expectation tickling skittiſh ſpirits,
On one and other ſide, Troian and Greeke,
Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come,
A Prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of Authors pen, or Actors voyce, but ſuited
In like conditions, as our Argument,
To tell you (faire Beholders) that our Play
Leapes ore the vaunt and firſtlings of thoſe broyles,
Beginning in the middle: ſtarting thence away,
To what may be digeſted in a Play:
Like, or finde fault, do as your pleaſures are,
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of Warre.

THE TRAGEDIE OF
Troylus and Creſsida.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troylus.

Troylus.

CAll here my Varlet, Ile vnarme againe.
Why ſhould I warre without the wals of Troy
That finde ſuch cruell battell here within?
Each Troian that is maſter of his heart,
Let him to field, Troylus alas hath none.

Pan. Will this geere nere be mended?

Troy. The Greeks are ſtrong, & skilful to their ſtrength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fiercenesſe Valiant:
But I am weaker then a womans teare;
Tamer then ſleepe, fonder then ignorance;
Leſſe valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And ſkilleſſe as vnpractis'd Infancie.

Pan. Well, I haue told you enough of this: For my part, Ile not meddle nor make no farther. Hee that will haue a Cake out of the Wheate, muſt needes tarry the grinding.

Troy. Haue I not tarried?

Pan. I the grinding, but you muſt tarry the bolting.

Troy. Haue I not tarried?

Pan. I the boulting; but you muſt tarry the leau'ning.

Troy Still haue I tarried.

Pan. I, to the leauening; but heeres yet in the word hereafter, the Kneading, the making of the Cake, the heating of the Ouen, and the Baking; nay, you muſt ſtay the cooling too, or you may chance to burne your lips.

Troy. Patience her ſelfe, what Goddeſſe ere ſhe be,
Doth leſſer blench at ſufferance, then I doe:
At Priams Royall Table doe I ſit;
And when faire Creſſid comes into my thoughts,
So (Traitor) then ſhe comes, when ſhe is thence

Pan. Well:
She look'd yeſternight fairer, then euer I ſaw her looke,
Or any woman elſe.

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a ſigh, would riue in twaine,
Leaſt Hellen, or my Father ſhould perceiue me:
I haue (as when the Sunne doth light a-ſcorne)
Buried this ſigh, in wrinkle of a ſmile:
But ſorrow, that is couch'd in ſeeming gladneſſe,
Is like that mirth, Fate turnes to ſudden ſadneſſe.

Pan. And her haire were not ſomewhat darker then Helens, well go too, there were no more compariſon betweene the Women. But for my part ſhe is my Kinſwoman, I would not (as they tearme it) praiſe it, but I wold ſome-body had heard her talke yeſterday as I did: I will not diſpraiſe your ſiſter Caſſandra's wit, but——

Troy. Oh Pandarus! I tell thee Pandarus;
When I doe tell thee, there my hopes lye drown'd:
Reply not in how many Fadomes deepe
They lye indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Creſſids loue. Thou anſwer'ſt ſhe is Faire, Powr'ſt in the open Vlcer of my heart,
Her Eyes, her Haire, her Cheeke, her Gate, her Voice,
Handleſt in thy diſcourſe. O that her Hand
(In whoſe compariſon, all whites are Inke)
Writing their owne reproach; to whoſe ſoft ſeizure,
The Cignets Downe is harſh, and ſpirit of Sence
Hard as the palme of Plough-man. This thou tel'ſt me;
As true thou tel'ſt me, when I ſay I loue her:
But ſaying thus, inſtead of Oyle and Balme,
Thou lai'ſt in euery gaſh that loue hath giuen me,
The Knife that made it.

Pan. I ſpeake no more then truth.

Troy Thou do'ſt not ſpeake ſo much.

Pan Faith, Ile not meddle in't: Let her be as ſhe is, if ſhe be faire, 'tis the better for her: and ſhe be not, ſhe ha's the mends in her owne hands.

Troy. Good Pandarus: How now Pandarus?

Pan. I haue had my Labour for my trauell, ill thought on of her, and ill thought on of you; Gone betweene and betweene, but ſmall thankes for my labour.

Troy. What art thou angry Pandarus? what with me?

Pan. Becauſe ſhe's Kinne to me, therefore ſhee's not ſo faire as Helen, and ſhe were not kin to me, ſhe would be as faire on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not and ſhe were a Black-a Moore, 'tis all one to me.

Troy. Say I ſhe is not faire?

Troy. I doe not care whether you doe or no. She's a Foole to ſtay behinde her Father: Let her to the Greeks, and ſo Ile tell her the next time I ſee her: for my part, Ile meddle nor make no more i'th'matter

Troy. Pandarus! Pan. Not I.

Troy. Sweete Pandarus.

Pan. Pray you ſpeake no more to me, I will leaue all as I found it, and there an end. Exit Pand.

Sound Alarum

Tro. Peace you vngracious Clamors, peace rude ſounds.
Fooles on both ſides, Helen muſt needs be faire,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight vpon this Argument:

t for my Sword,

Menelaus.

Enter Pandarus.
Cre. Who comes here?
Man. Madam your Vncle Pandarus.
Cre. Hectors a gallant man.
Man. As may be in the world Lady.
Pan. What's that, what's that?
Cre. Good morrow Vncle Pandarus.
Pan. Good morrow Cozen Creſſid: what do you talke of? good morrow Alexander. how do you Cozen? when were you at Illium?
Cre. This morning Vncle.
Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector arm'd and gone ere yea came to Illium? Helen was not vp? was ſhe?
Cre. Hector was gone but Helen was not vp?
Pan. E'ene ſo; Hector was ſtirring early.
Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger.
Pan. Was he angry?
Cre. So he ſaies here.
Pan True he was ſo; I know the cauſe too, heele lay about him to day I can tell them that, and there's Troylus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of Troylus, I can tell them that too.
Cre. What is he angry too?
Pan. Who Troylus? Troylus is the better man of the two.
Cre. Oh Iupiter; there's no compariſon.
Pan. What not betweene Troylus and Hector? do you know a man if you ſee him?
Cre. I if I euer ſaw him before and knew him.
Pan Well I ſay Troylus is Troylus.
Cre. Then you ſay as I ſay,
For I am ſure he is not Hector.
Pan. No not Hector is not Troylus in ſome degrees.
Cre. 'Tis ſtuff, to each of them he is himſelfe.
Pan. Himſelfe? alas poore Troylus I would he were.
Cre. So he is.
Pan. Condition I had gone bare-foote to Indie.
Cre. He is not Hector
Pan. Himſelfe? no? not hee's not himſelfe, would a were himſelfe: well, the Gods are aboue, time muſt friend or end: well Troylus well, I would my heart were in her body; no, Hector is not a better man then Troylus.
Cre. Excuſe me.
Pan. He is elder.
Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.
Pan. Th'others not come too't, you ſhall tell me another tale when th'others come too't: Hector ſhall not haue his will this yeare.
Cre. He ſhall not need it if he haue his owne.
Pan. Not his qualities.
Cre. No matter.
Pan. Not his beautie.
Cre. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.
Pan. You haue no iudgement Neece; Helen her ſelfe ſwore th'other day that Troylus for a browne fauour (for ſo 'tis I muſt confeſſe) not browne neither.
Cre. No, but browne.
Pan. Faith to ſay truth, browne and not browne.
Cre. To ſay the truth, true and not true.
Pan. She prais'd his complexion aboue Paris.
Cre. Why Paris hath colour inough.
Pan So he has.
Cre. Then Troylus ſhould haue too much, if ſhe prais'd him aboue, his complexion is higher then his, he hauing colour

colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praiſe for a good complexion, I had as lieue Hellens golden tongue had commended Troylus for a copper noſe.

Pan. I ſweare to you,
I thinke Helen loues him better then Paris.

Cre. Then ſhee's a merry Greeke indeed.

Pan. Nay I am ſure ſhe does, ſhe came to him th'other day into the compaſt window, and you know he has not paſt three or foure haires on his chinne.

Creſ. Indeed a Tapſters Arithmetique may ſoone bring his particulars therein to a totall.

Pand. Why he is very yong, and yet will he within three pound lift as much as his brother Hellor.

Creſ. Is he is ſo young a man, and ſo old a liſter?

Pan. But to prooue to you that Helen loues him, ſhe came and puts me her white hand to his clouen chin.

Creſ. Iuno haue mercy, how came it clouen?

Pan. Why, you know 'tis dimpled,
I thinke his ſmyling becomes him better then any man in all Phrigia.

Cre. Oh he ſmiles valiantly.

Pan. Does hee not?

Cre. Oh yes, and 'twere a clow'd in Autumne.

Pan. Why go to then, but to proue to you that Helen loues Troylus.

Cre. Troylus will ſtand to thee
Proofe, if youle prooue it ſo.

Pan. Troylus? why he eſteemes her no more then I eſtreeme an addle egge.

Cre. If you loue an addle egge as well as you loue an idle head, you would eate chickens i'th'ſhell.

Pan. I cannot choſe but laugh to thinke how ſhe tickled his chin, indeed ſhee has a maruell's white hand I muſt needs confeſſe.

Cre. Without the racke.

Pan. And ſhee takes vpon her to ſpie a white haire on his chinne.

Cre. Alas poore chin? many a wart is richer.

Pand. But there was ſuch laughing, Queene Hecuba laught that her eyes ran ore.

Cre. With Millſtones.

Pan. And Caſſandra laught.

Cre. But there was more temperate fire vnder the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run ore too?

Pan. And Hellor laught.

Cre. At what was all this laughing?

Pand. Marry at the white haire that Hellor ſpied on Troylus chin.

Creſ. And t'had beene a greene haire, I ſhould haue laught too.

Pand. They laught not ſo much at the haire, as at his pretty anſwere.

Cre. What was his anſwere?

Pan. Quoth ſhee, here's but two and fifty haires on your chinne; and one of them is white.

Cre. This is her queſtion.

Pand That's true, make no queſtion of that, two and fiftie haires quoth hee, and one white, that white haire is my Father, and all the reſt are his Sonnes. Iupiter quoth ſhe, which of theſe haires is Paris my husband? The forked one quoth he, pluck out and giue it him: but there was ſuch laughing, and Hellen ſo blusht, and Paris ſo chaſt, and all the reſt ſo laught, that it paſt.

Cre. So let it now,
For it has beene a great while going by.

Pan. Well Cozen,
I told you a thing yeſterday, think on't.

Cre. So I does.

Pand. Ile be ſworne 'tis true, he will weepe you an't were a man borne in Aprill. Sound a reuerue.

Creſ. And Ile ſpring vp in his teares, an't were a nettle againſt May.

Pan. Harke they are comming from the field, ſhall we ſtand vp here and ſee them, as they paſſe toward Ilium, good Neece do, ſweet Neece Creſſida.

Cre. At your pleaſure.

Pan. Heere, heere, here's an excellent place, heere we may ſee moſt bravely, Ile tel you them all by their names, as they paſſe by, but marke Troylus aboue the reſt.

Enter Æneas.

Cre. Speake not ſo low'd.

Pan. That's Æneas, is not that a braue man, hee's one of the flowers of Troy I can you, but marke Troylus, you ſhal ſee anon.

Cre. Who's that?

Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a ſhrow'd wit I can tell you, and he's a man good inough, hee's one o'th ſoundeſt iudgement in Troy whoſoeuer, and a proper man of perſon: when comes Troylus? Ile ſhew you Troylus anon, if hee ſee me, you ſhall ſee him nod at me.

Cre. Will he giue you the nod?

Pan. You ſhall ſee.

Cre. If he do, the rich ſhall haue more.

Enter Hellor.

Pan. That's Hellor, that, that, looke you, that there's a fellow. Goe thy way Hellor, there's a braue man Neece, O braue Hellor! Looke how hee lookes? there's a countenance; iſt not a braue man?

Cre. Obraue man!

Pan. Is a not? It doores mans heart good, looke you what hacks are on his Helmet, looke you yonder, do you ſee? Looke you there? There's no ſetting, layong on, take't off, who ill as they ſay, there be hacks.

Cre. Be thoſe with Swords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, any thing he cares not, and the diuell come to him, it's all one, by Gods lid it doores mens heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: looke yee yonder Neece, iſt not a gallant man to, iſt not? Why this is braue now: who ſaid he came hurt home to day? Hee's not hurt, why this will do Hellens heart good now, ha? Would I could ſee Troylus now, you ſhall Troylus anon.

Cre. Whoſe that?

Enter Helenus.

Pan. That's Helenus, I marueil where Troylus is, that's Helenus, I thinke he went not forth to day: that's Helenus.

Cre. Can Helenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Helenus no: yes heele fight indifferent, well: I marueil where Troylus is; harke, do you not heare the people crie Troylus? Helenus is a Prieſt.

Cre. What ſneaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter Troylus

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troylus! There's a man Neece, hem; Braue Troylus, the Prince of Chiualrie.

Cre. Peace, for ſhame peace.

Pand. Marke him, not him: O braue Troylus: looke well vpon him Neece, looke you how his Sword is bloodied, and his Helme more hackt then Hectors, and how he looks, lookes, and how he goes. O admirable youth! he ne're ſaw three and twenty. Go thy way Troylus, go thy way, had I a ſiſter were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddeſſe, hee ſhould take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him, and I warrant, Helen to change, would giue money to boot.

Enter common Souldiers.

Creſ. Heere come more.

Pan. Aſſes, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; porredge after meat. I could tue and dye th'eyes of Troylus. Ne're looke, ne're looke: the Eagles are gon, Crowes and Dawes, Crowes and Dawes: I had rather be ſuch a man as Troylus, then Agamemnon and all Greece.

Creſ. There is among the Greekes Achilles, a better man then Troylus.

Pan. Achilles? a Drey-man, a Porter, a very Camell.

Creſ. Well well.

Pan. Well, well? Why haue you any diſcretion? haue you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good ſhape, diſcourſe, manhood, learning, gentleneſſe, vertue, youth, liberality, and ſo forth: the Spice, and ſalt that ſeaſons a man?

Creſ. I, a minc'd man and then to be bak'd with no Date in the pye, for then the mans dates out.

Pan. You are ſuch another woman, one knowes not at what ward you lye.

Creſ. Vpon my backe, to defend my belly; vpon my wit, to defend my wiles; vppon my ſecrecy, to defend mine honeſty; my Maske, to defend my beauty, and you to defend all theſe: and at all theſe wardes I lye at, at a thouſand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Creſ. Nay Ile watch you for that, and that's one of the cheereſeſt of them too. If I cannot ward what I would not haue hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow, vnleſſe it ſwell paſt hiding, and then it's paſt watching.

Enter Boy.

Pan. You are ſuch another.

Boy. Sir, my Lord would inſtantly ſpeake with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your owne houſe.

Pan. Good Boy tell him I come, I doubt he be hurt. Fare ye well good Neece.

Creſ. Adieu Vnkle.

Pan. Ile be with you Neece by and by.

Creſ. To bring Vnkle.

Pan. I, a token from Troylus.

Creſ. By the ſame token, you are a Bawd. Exit Pand. Words, vowes, gifts, teares, & loues full ſacrifice, He offers in another enterprize: But more in Troylus thouſand fold I ſee, Then in the glaſſe of Pandor's praiſe may be; Yet hold I off. Women are Angels wooing, Things won are done, ioyes ſoule lyes in the doing: That ſhe belou'd, knowes nought, that knowes not this; Men prize the thing ungain'd, more then it is That ſhe was neuer yet, that euer knew Loue got ſo ſweet, as when deſire did ſue: Therefore this maxime out of loue I teach; Atchiuement, is command; vngain'd, beſeech. That though my hearts Contents firme loue doth beare, Nothing of that ſhall from mine eyes appeare. Exit.

Sonet. Enter Agamemnon, Neſtor, Vliſſes, Diomedes, Menelaus, with others.

Agam. Princes:
What greeſe hath ſet the Iaundies on your cheekes?
The ample propoſition that hope makes
In all deſignes, begun on earth below
Fayles in the promiſt largeneſſe: checkes and diſaſters
Grow in the veines of actions higheſt rear'd.
As knots by the conflux of meeting ſap,
Infect the ſound Pine, and diuerts his Graine
Tortiue and erant from his courſe of growth.
Nor Princes, is it matter new to vs,
That we come ſhort of our ſuppoſe ſo farre,
That after ſeuen yeares ſiege, yet Troy walles ſtand,
Sith euery action that hath gone before,
Whereof we haue Record, Triall did draw
Bias and thwart, not anſwering the ayme:
And that vnbodied figure of the thought
That gaue't ſurmiſed ſhape. Why then (you Princes)
Do you with cheekes abaſh'd, behold our workes,
And thinke them ſhame, which are (indeed) nought elſe
But the protractiue triall of great Ioue,
To finde perſiſtiue conſtancie in men?
The fineneſſe of which Metteall is not found
In Fortunes loue: for then, the Bold and Coward,
The Wiſe and Foole, the Artiſt and vn-read,
The hard and ſoft, ſeeme all affin'd, and kin.
But in the Winde and Tempeſt of her frowne,
Diſtinction with a lowd and powreſull fan,
Puffing at all, winnowes the light away;
And what hath maſſe, or matter by it ſelfe,
Lies rich in Vertue, and vnmingled.

Neſtor. With due Obſeruance of thy godly ſeat,
Great Agamemnon, Neſtor ſhall apply
Thy lateſt words.
In the reproofe of Chance,
Lies the true proofe of men: The Sea being ſmooth,
How many ſhallow bauble Boates dare ſaile
Vpon her patient breſt, making their way
With thoſe of Noblex bulke?
But let the Ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and anon behold
The ſtrong ribb'd Barke through liquid Mountaines cut,
Bounding betweene the two moyſt Elements
Like Perſeus Horſe. Where's then the ſawcy Boate, Whoſe weake vntimber'd ſides but euen now
Co-riual'd Greatneſſe? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a Toſte for Neptune. Euen ſo,
Doth valours ſhew, and valours worth diuide
In ſtormes of Fortune.
For, in her ray and brightneſſe,
The Heard hath more annoyance by the Brieze
Then by the Tyger: But, when the ſplitting winde
Makes flexible the knees of knotted Oakes,
And Flies fled vnder ſhade, why then
The thing of Courage,
As rouz'd with rage, with rage doth ſympathize,
And with an accent tun'd in ſelfe-ſame key,
Retyres to chiding Fortune.

Vliſſ. Agamemnon.
Thou great Commander, Nerue, and Bone of Greece,
Heart of our Numbers, ſoule, and onely ſpirit,
In whom the tempers, and the minders of all
Should be ſhut vp: Heare what Vliſſes ſpeakes,
Beſides the applauſe and approbation
The which moſt mighty for thy place and ſway,

And thou moſt reuerend for thy ſtretcht-out life,
I giue to both your ſpeeches: which were ſuch,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold vp high in Braſſe: and ſuch againe
As venerable Neſtor (hatch'd in Siluer)
Should with a bond of ayre, ſtrong as the Axletree
On which the Heauens ride, knit all Greekes eares
To his experienc'd tongue: yet let it pleaſe both (Thou Great, and Wiſe) to heare Vliſſes ſpeake.

Aga. Speak Prince of Ithaca, and be't of leſſe expect:
That matter needleſſe of importleſſe burthen
Deuide thy lips; than we are confident
When ranke Therſites opes his Maſticke iawes,
We ſhall heare Muſicke, Wit, and Oracle.

Vliſſ. Troy yet vpon his baſis had bene downe,
And the great Hectors ſword had lack'd a Maſter
But for theſe inſtances.
The ſpecialty of Rule hath beene neglected;
And looke how many Grecian Tents do ſtand
Hollow vpon this Plaine, ſo many hollow Factions.
When that the Generall is not like the Hiue,
To whom the Forragers ſhall all repaire,
What Hony is expected? Degree being vizarded,
Th'vnworthieſt ſhewes as fairely in the Maske.
The Heauens themſelues, the Planets, and this Center,
Obſerue degree, priority, and place,
Inſiſture, courſe, proportion, ſeaſon, forme,
Office, and cuſtome, in all line of Order:
And therefore is the glorious Planet Sol
In noble eminence, enthron'd and ſphear'd
Amid'ſt the other, whoſe med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill Aſpects of Planets euill,
And poſtes like the Command'ments of a King,
Sans checke, to good and bad. But when the Planets
In euill mixture to diſorder wander,
What Plagues, and what portents, what mutiny?
What raging of the Sea? ſhaking of Earth?
Commotion in the Winds? Frights, changes, horrors,
Diuert, and crarke, rend and deracinate
The vnity, and married calme of States
Quite from their fixture? O, when Degree is ſhak'd,
(Which is the Ladder to all high deſignes)
The enterprize is ſicke. How could Communities,
Degrees in Schooles, and Brother-hoods in Cities,
Peaceſull Commerce from diuidable ſhores,
The primogenitiue, and due of Byrth,
Prerogatiue of Age, Crowner, Scepters, Lawrels,
(But by Degree) ſtand in Authentique place?
Take but Degree away, vntune that ſtring,
And heare the what Diſcord ſollowes: each thing meetes
In meere oppugnancie. The bounded Waters,
Should lift their boſomes higher then the Shores,
And make a ſoppe of all this ſolid Globe:
Strength ſhould be Lord of imbecility,
And the rude Sonne ſhould ſtrike his Father dead:
Force ſhould be right, or rather, right and wrong,
(Betweene whoſe endleſſe iarre, Iuſtice recides)
Should looſe her names, and ſo ſhould Iuſtice too.
Then euery thing includes it ſelfe in Power.
Power into Will, Will into Appetite,
And Appetite (an vniuerſall Wolfe,
So doubly ſeconded with Will, and Power)
Muſt make perforce an vniuerſall prey,
And laſt, eate vp himſelfe.
Great Agamemnon:
This Chaos, when Degree is ſuffocate,
Followes the choaking:
And this neglection of Degree, is it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpoſe
It hath to climbe. The Generall's diſdain'd
By him one ſtep below; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath: ſo euery ſtep
Exampled by the firſt pace that is ſicke
Of his Superiour, growes to an enuious Feauer
Of pale, and bloodleſſe Emulation.
And 'tis this Feauer that keepes Troy on foote,
Not her owne ſinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakneſſe liues, not in her ſtrength.

Neſt. Moſt wiſely hath Vliſſes heere diſcouer'd
The Feauer, whereof all our power is ſicke.

Aga. The Nature of the ſickneſſe found (Vliſſes)
What is the remedie?

Vliſſ. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crowners,
The ſinew, and the fore-hand of our Hoſte,
Hauing his eare full of his ayery Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and in his Tent
Lyes mocking our deſignes. With him, Patroclus, Vpon a lazie Bed, the liue-long day
Breakes ſcurrill Ieſts,
And with ridiculous and ſukward action,
(Which Slanderer, he imitation call's)
He Pageants vs. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topleſſe deputation he puts on;
And like a ſtrutting Player, whoſe conceit
Lies in his Ham-ſtring, and doth thinke it rich
To heare the wooden Dialogue and ſound
'Twixt his ſtretcht footing, and the Scaffolage,
Such to be pittied, and o're-reſted ſeeming
He acts thy Greatneſſe in: and when he ſpeakes,
'Tis like a Chime a mending. With termes vnſquar'd,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon drops,
Would ſeemes Hyperboles. At this fuſty ſtuffe,
The large Achilles (on his preſt-bed lolling)
From his deepe Cheſt, laughes out a loued applauſe,
Cries excellent, 'tis Agamemnon iuſt.
Now play me Neſtor; hum, and ſtroke thy Beard
As he, being dreſt to ſome Oration.
That's done, as neere as the extremeſt ends
Of parralels; as like, as Vulcan and his wife,
Yet god Achilles ſtill cries excellent,
'Tis Neſtor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to anſwer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forſooth) the faint defects of Age
Muſt be the Scene of myrth, to cough, and ſpit,
And with a palſie fumbling on his Gorget,
Shake in and out the Riuet: and at this ſport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or, giue me ribs of Steele, I ſhall ſplit all
In pleaſure of my Spleene. And in this faſhion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, ſhapes,
Seuerals and generals of grace exact,
Atchieuements, plots, orders, preuentions,
Excitements to the field, or ſpeech for truce,
Succeſſe or looſe, what is, or is not, ſerues
As ſtuffe for theſe two, to make paradoxes.

Neſt. And in the imitation of theſe twaine,
Who (as Vliſſes ſayes) Opinion crowners
With an Imperiall voyce, many are infect:
Aiax is growne ſelfe-wil'd, and beares his head
In ſuch a reyne, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles, and keepes her Tent like him;
Makes factious Feaſts, raiſes on our ſtate of Warre

Bold

Bold as eo Oracle, and ſets Therſites
A ſlaue, whoſe Gall coines ſlanders like a Mint,
To match vs in compariſons with dirt,
To weaken and diſcredit our expoſure,
How ranke ſoeuer rounded in with danger.
Vlyſ. They taxe our policy, and call it Cowardice,
Count Wiſedome as no member of the Warre,
Fore-caſt inſcience, and eſteeme no act
But that of hand. The ſtill and mentall parts,
That do contriue how many hands ſhall ſtrike
When fitneſſe call them on, and know by meaſure
Of their obſeruant toyle, the Enemies weight,
Why this hath not a fingers dignity:
They call this Bed-worke, Mappery, Cloſet-Warre:
So that the Ramme that batters downe the wall,
For the great ſwing and rudeneſſe of his poize,
They place before his hand that made the Engine,
Or thoſe that with the fineneſſe of their ſoules,
By Reaſon guide his execution.
Neſt. Let this be granted, and Achilles horſe
Makes many Thetis ſonnes. Tucket
Aga. What Trumpet? Looke Menelaus.
Men. From Troy. Enter Æneas.
Aga. What would you 'fore our Tent?
Æne. Is this great Agamemnons Tent, I pray you?
Aga. Euen this.
Æne. May one that is a Herald, and a Prince,
Do a fayre meſſage to his Kingly eares?
Aga. With ſurety ſtronger then Achilles arme,
'Fore all the Greekiſh heads, which with one voyce
Call Agamemnon Head and Generall.
Æne. Faire leaue, and large ſecurity. How may
A ſtranger to thoſe moſt Imperial lookes
Know them from eyes of other Mortals?
Aga. How?
Æne. I: I aſke, that I might waken reuerence,
And on the cheeke be ready with a bluſh
Modeſt as morning, when ſhe coldly eyes
The youthfull Phœbus:
Which is that God in office guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?
Aga. This Troyan ſcornes vs, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious Courtiers.
Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonnaire; vnarm'd,
As bending Angels: that's their Fame, in peace:
But when they would ſeeme Souldiers, they haue galles,
Good armes, ſtrong ioynts, true ſwords, & Ioues accord,
Nothing ſo full of heart. But peace Æneas,
Peace Troyan, lay thy finger on thy lips,
The worthineſſe of praiſe diſtaines his worth:
If that he praiſ'd himſelfe, bring the praiſe forth.
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath Fame blowes, that praiſe ſole pure tranſcends.
Aga. Sir, you of Troy, call you your ſelfe Æneas?
Æne. I Greeke, that is my name.
Aga. What's your affayre I pray you?
Æne. Sir pardon, 'tis for Agamemnons eares.
Aga. He heares naught priuately
That comes from Troy.
Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whiſper him,
I bring a Trumpet to awake his eare,
To ſet his ſence on the attentiue bent,
And then to ſpeake.
Aga. Speake frankely as the winde,
It is not Agamemnons ſleeping hower;
That thou ſhalt know Troyan he is awake,
He tells thee ſo himſelfe.
Æne. Trumpet blow loud,
Send thy Braſſe voyce through all theſe lazie Tents,
And euery Greeke of mettle, let him know,
What Troy meanes fairely, ſhall be ſpoke aloud.
The Trumpets ſound.
We haue great Agamemnon heere in Troy,
A Prince call'd Hector, Priams is his Father:
Who in this dull and long-continued Truce
Is ruſty growne. He bad me take a Trumpet,
And to this purpoſe ſpeake: Kings, Princes, Lords,
If there be one among'ſt the fayr'ſt of Greece,
That holds his Honor higher then his eaſe,
That ſeekes his praiſe, more then he feares his perill,
That knowes his Valour, and knowes not his feare,
That loues his Miſtris more then in confeſſion,
(With truant vowes to her owne lips he loues)
And dare avow her Beauty, and her Worth,
In other armes then hers: to him this Challenge.
Hector, in view of Troyans, and of Greekes,
Shall make it good, or do his beſt to do it.
He hath a Lady, wiſer, fairer, truer,
Then euer Greeke did compaſſe in his armes,
And will to morrow with his Trumpet call,
Midway betweene your Tents, and walles of Troy,
To rowze a Grecian that is true in loue.
If any come, Hector ſhall honour him:
If none, he'l ſay in Troy when he retyres,
The Grecian Dames are ſun-burnt, and not worth
The ſplinter of a Lance: Euen ſo much.
Aga. This ſhall be told our Louers Lord Æneas,
If none of them haue ſoule in ſuch a kinde,
We left them all at home: But we are Souldiers,
And may that Souldier a meere recreant prone,
That meanes not, hath not, or is not in loue:
If then one is, or hath, or meanes to be,
That one meets Hector; if none elſe, he be he.
Neſt. Tell him of Neſtor, one that was a man
When Hectors Grandſire ſuckt: he is old now,
But if there be not in our Grecian mould,
One Noble man, that hath one ſpark of fire
To anſwer for his Loue; tell him from me,
Ile hide my Siluer beard in a Gold Beuer,
And in my Vambrace put this withered brawne,
And meeting him, will tell him, that my Lady
Was fayrer then his Grandame, and as chaſte
As may be in the world: his youth in blood,
Ile pawne this truth with my three drops of blood.
Æne. Now heauens forbid ſuch ſcarſitie of youth.
Vlyſ. Amen.
Aga. Faire Lord Æneas,
Let me touch your hand:
To our Pauillion ſhall I leade you firſt:
Achilles ſhall haue word of this intent,
So ſhall each Lord of Greece from Tent to Tent:
Your ſelfe ſhall Feaſt with vs before you goe,
And finde the welcome of a Noble Foe. Exeunt.
Manet Vlyſſes and Neſtor.
Vlyſ. Neſtor.
Neſt. What ſayes Vlyſſes?
Vlyſ. I haue a young conception in my braine,
Be you my time to bring it to ſome ſhape.
Neſt. What's it?
Vlyſſes. This 'tis:
Blunt wedges riue hard knots: the ſeeded Pride
That hath to this maturity blowne vp

In ranke Achilles, muſt or now be ſtept,
Or ſhedding breed a Nurſery of like evil
To euer-bulke vs all.
Neſt. Well, and how?
Vlyſ. This challenge that the gallant Hector ſends,
How euer it is ſpred in generall name,
Relates in purpoſe onely to Achilles.
Neſt. The purpoſe is perſpicuous euen as ſubſtance,
Whoſe groſſeneſſe little characters ſumme vp,
And in the publication make no ſtraine,
But that Achilles, were his braine as barren
As bankes of Lybia, though (Apollo knowes)
'Tis dry enough, will with great ſpeede of iudgement,
I, with celerity, finde Hectors purpoſe
Pointing on him.
Vlyſ. And wake him to the anſwer, thinke you?
Neſt. Yes, 'tis moſt meet; who may you elſe oppoſe
That can from Hector bring his Honor off,
If not Achilles; though't be a ſportfull Combate,
Yet in this triall, much opinion dwels.
For heere the Troyans taſte our deer'ſt repute
With their fin'ſt Palate: and truſt to me Vlyſſes,
Our imputation ſhall be oddely poiz'd
In this wilde action. For the ſucceſſe
(Although particular) ſhall giue a ſcantling
Of good or bad, vnto the Generall:
And in ſuch Indexes, although ſmall pricker
To their ſubſequent Volumes, there is ſeene
The baby figure of the Gyant-maſſe
Of things to come at large. It is ſuppoſ'd,
He that meets Hector, iſſues from our choyſe;
And choiſe being mutuall acte of all our ſoules,
Makes Merit her election, and doth boyle
As 'twere, from forth vs all: a man diſtill'd
Out of our Vertues; who miſcarrying,
What heart from hence receyues the conqu'ring part
To ſteele a ſtrong opinion to themſelues,
Which entertain'd, Limbes are in his inſtruments,
In no leſſe working, then are Swords and Bowes
Directiue by the Limbes.
Vlyſ. Giue pardon to my ſpeech.
Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector:
Let vs (like Merchants) ſhew our fowleſt Wares,
And thinke perchance they'l ſell: If not,
The luſter of the better yet to ſhew,
Shall ſhew the better. Do not conſent,
That euer Hector and Achilles meete:
For both our Honour, and our Shame in this,
Are dogg'd with two ſtrange Followers.
Neſt. I ſee them not with my old eies: what are they?
Vlyſ. What glory our Achilles ſhares from Hector,
(Were he not proud) we all ſhould weare with him:
But he already 'is too inſolent,
And we were better parch in Affricke Sunne,
Then in the pride and ſalt ſcorne of his eyes
Should he ſcape Hector faire. If he were foyld,
Why then we did our maine opinion croſſe
In taint of our beſt man. No, make a Lott'ry,
And by deuice let blockiſh Aiax draw
The ſort to fight with Hector: Among our ſelues,
Giue him allowance as the worthier man,
For that will phyſicke the great Myrmidon
Who broyles in lowd applauſe, and make him fall
His Creſt, that prouder then blew Iris bends.
If the dull brainleſſe Aiax come ſafe off,
We'l dreſſe him vp in voyces: if he faile,
Yet go we vnder our opinion ſtill,
That we haue better men. But hit or miſſe,
Our proiects life this ſhape of ſenſe aſſumes,
Aiax employ'd, plucks downe Achilles Plumes.
Neſt. Now Vlyſſes, I begin to reliſh thy aduice,
And I will giue a taſte of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, go we to him ſtraight:
Two Curres ſhal tame each other, Pride alone
Muſt tarre the Maſtiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt

Enter Aiax, and Therſites.

Aia. Therſites?
Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (ful) all ouer generally.
Aia. Therſites?
Ther. And thoſe Byles did runne, ſay ſo; did not the General run, were not that a botchy core?
Aia. Dogge.
Ther. Then there would come ſome matter from him I ſee none now.
Aia. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canſt y not heare? Feele then. Strikes him.
Ther. The plague of Greece vpon thee thou Mungril beefe-witted Lord.
Aia. Speake then you whinid'ſt leaueu ſpeake, I will beate thee into handſomneſſe.
Ther. I ſhal ſooner rayle thee into wit and holineſſe but I thinke thy Horſe wil ſooner con an Oration, then I learne a prayer without booke: Thou canſt ſtrike, canſt thou? A red Murren o'th thy Iades trickes.
Aia. Toads ſtoole, learne me the Proclamation.
Ther. Doeſt thou thinke I haue no ſenſe thou ſtrik'ſt me thus?
Aia. The Proclamation. (me thus)
Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a foole, I thinke.
Aia. Do not Porpentine, do not, my fingers itch.
Ther. I would thou didſt itch from head to foot, and I had the ſcratching of thee, I would make thee the loathſom'ſt ſcab in Greece.
Aia. I ſay the Proclamation.
Ther. Thou grumbleſt & raileſt euery houre on Achilles, and thou art as full of enuy at his greatneſſe, as Cerberus is at Proſerpine's beauty. I, that thou bark'ſt at him.
Aia. Miſtreſſe Therſites.
Ther. Thou ſhould'ſt ſtrike him.
Aia. Cobloſe.
Ther. He would pun thee into ſhiuers with his fiſt, as a Sailor breakes a biſket.
Aia. You horſon Curre. Ther. Do,do.
Aia. Thou ſtoole for a Witch.
Ther. I, do,do, thou ſodden-witted Lord: thou haſt no more braine then I haue in mine elbowes: An Aſſinico may tutor thee. Thou ſcurvy valiant Aſſe, thou art hurt but to threſh Troyans, and thou art bought and ſold among thoſe of any wit, like a Barbarian ſlaue. If thou vſe to beat me, I will begin at thy heele and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.
Aia. You dogge.
Ther. You ſcurvy Lord.
Aia. You Curre.
Ther. Mars his Idiot: do rudeneſs, do Camell, do,do.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Why how now Aiax? wherefore do you this? How now Therſites? what's the matter man?
Ther. You ſee him there, do you?
Achil. I, what's the matter.
Ther. Nay looke vpon him.
Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther.

Ther. Nay but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I do ſo.

Ther. But yet you looke not well vpon him: for who ſome euer you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that foole.

Ther. I, but that foole knowes not himſelfe.

Ajax. Therefore I beate thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modeſtie of wit he vtters: his ſuellons haue eares thats long. I haue bobb'd his Braine more then he has beate my bones: I will buy nine Sparrowes for a peny, and his Pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a Sparrow. This Lord (Achilles) Ajax who wears his wit in his belly, and his guttes in his head, Ile tell you what I ſay of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I ſay this Ajax ——

Achil. Nay good Ajax.

Ther. Has not ſo much wit.

Achil. Nay, I muſt hold you.

Ther. As will ſtop the eye of Helens Needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace ſoole.

Ther. I would haue peace and quietnes, but the foole will not: he there, that he, looke you there.

Ajax. O thou damn'd Curre, I ſhall——

Achil. Will you ſet your wit to a Fooles.

Ther. No I warrant you, for a fooles will ſhame it.

Pat. Good words Therſites.

Achil. What's the quarrell?

Ajax. I bad thee vile Owle, goe learne me the tenure of the Proclamation, and he rayles vpon me.

Ther. I ſerue thee not.

Ajax. Well, go too, go too.

Ther. I ſerue heere voluntary.

Achil. Your laſt ſeruice was ſufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was heere the voluntary, and you as vnder an Impreſſe.

Ther. E'ne ſo, a great deale of your wit too lies in your ſinewes, or elſe there be Liers. Hector ſhall haue a great catch, if he knocke out either of your braines, he were as good crack a fuſtie nut with no kernell.

Achil. What with me to Therſites?

Ther. There's Peleus, and old Neſtor, whoſe Wit was mouldy ere their Grandſires had nailes on their toes, yoke you like draft-Oxen, and make you plough vp the warre.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes good ſooth, to Achilles, to Ajax, to—— Ajax. I ſhall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter, I ſhall ſpeake as much as thou afterwards.

Pat. No more words Therſites.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles Brooch bids me, ſhall I?

Achil. There's for you Patroclus.

Ther. I will ſee you hang'd like Clotpoles ere I come any more to your Tents; I will keepe where there is wit and leaue the faction of fooles. Exit.

Pat. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry this Sir is proclaim'd through all our hoſt, That Priam by the firſt houre of the Sunne,

Will with a Trumpet, 'twixt our Tents and Troy

To morrow call ſome Knight to Armes,

That hath a ſtomacke, and ſuch a one that dare

Maintaine I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell? who ſhall anſwer him?

Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lottery: otherwiſe

He knew his man.

Ajax. O meaning you, I will go learne more of it. Exit.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troylus, Paris and Helenus.

Pri. Aſeet to many hatreds, Iues, ſpeeches ſpent,

Thus once againe ſayes Neſtor from the Greekes,

Deliuer Helen, and all damage elſe

(As honour, loſſe of time, trauaile, expence,

Wounds, friends, and what-els deere that is conſum'd

In hot digeſtion of this cormorant Warre)

Shall be ſtroke off. Hector, what ſay you too?

Hect. Though no man leſſer feares the Greeks than I,

As farre as touches my particular: yet dread Priam,

There is no Lady of more ſofter bowels,

More ſpungie, to ſucke in the ſenſe of feare,

More ready to cry out, who knowes what followes

Than Hector is: the wound of peace is ſurety,

Surety ſecure: but modeſt Doubt is cal'd

The Beacon of the wiſe: the eent that ſearches

To'th'bottome of the worſt. Let Helen go,

Since the firſt ſword was drawne about this queſtion,

Euery tythe ſoule 'mongſt many thouſand diſmes,

Hath bin as deere as Helen: I meane of ours:

If we haue loſt ſo many tenths of ours

To guard a thing not ours, not worth to vs

(Had it out name) the valew of one ten;

What merit's in that reaſon which denies

The yeelding of her vp.

Troy. Fie, fie, my Brother;

Weigh you the worth and honour of a King

(So great as our dread Father) in a Scale

Of common Ounces? Wil you with Counters ſumme

The paſt proportion of his infinite,

And buckle in a waiſte moſt ſathomleſſe,

With ſpannes and inches ſo diminutiue,

As feares and reaſons? Fie for godly ſhame?

Hel. No marueil though you bite ſo ſharp at reaſons,

You are ſo empty of them, ſhould not our Father

Beare the great ſway of his affayres with reaſons,

Becauſe your ſpeech hath none that tels him ſo.

Troy. You are for dreames & ſlumbers brother Prieſt

You ſutter your gloues with reaſon: here are your reaſons

You know an enemy intends you harme,

You know, a ſword imploy'd is perillous,

And reaſon flyes the obiect of all harme.

Who marueils then when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his ſword, if he do ſet

The very wings of reaſon to his heeles:

Or like a Starre diſarb'd. Nay, if we talke of Reaſon,

And flye like chidden Mercurie from Ioue,

Let's ſhut our gates and ſleepe: Manhood and Honor

Should haue hard hearts, would they but fat their thoghts

With this craſſinesſ reaſon: reaſon and reſpect,

Makes Liuers pale, and luſtyhood deiect.

Hect. Brother, ſhe is not worth

What ſhe doth coſt the holding.

Troy. What's aught, but as 'tis valew'd?

Hect. But value dwels not in particular will,

It holds his eſtimate and dignitie

As well, wherein 'tis precious of it ſelfe,

As in the prizer: 'Tis made Idolatrie,

To make the ſeruice greater than the God,

And the will dotes that is inclineable

To what infectiouſly it ſelfe affects,

Without ſome image of th'affected merit.

Troy. I take to day a Wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my Will;

My Will enkindled by mine eyes and eares,
Two traded Pylots 'twixt the dangerous ſhores
Of Will, and Iudgement. How may I auoyde
(Although my will diſtaſte what it elected)
The Wife I choſe, there can be no euaſion
To blench from this, and to ſtand firme by honour.
We turne not backe the Silkes vpon the Merchant
When we haue ſpoyl'd them; nor the remainder Viands
We do not throw in vnreſpective ſcorne,
Becauſe we now are full. It was thought meere
Paris ſhould do ſome vengeance on the Greekes;
Your breach of full conſent bellied his Sailes,
The Seas and Windes (old Wranglers) tooke a Truce,
And did him ſeruice; he touch'd the Ports deſir'd,
And for an old Aunt whom the Greekes held Captiue,
He brought a Grecian Queen, whoſe youth & freſhneſſe
Wrinkles Apollos, and makes ſtale the morning.
Why keepe we her? the Grecians keepe our Aunt:
Is ſhe worth keeping? Why ſhe is a Pearle,
Whoſe price hath launch'd aboue a thouſand Ships,
And turn'd Crown'd Kings to Merchants.
If you'l auouch, 'twas wiſedome Paris went,
(As you muſt needs, for you all cride, Go, go:)
If you'l confeſſe, he brought home Noble prize,
(As you muſt needs) for you all clapt your hands,
And cride ineſtimable; why do you now
The iſſue of your propet Wiſedomes rate,
And do a deed that Fortune never did?
Beggar the eſtimation which you prin'd,
Richer then Sea and Land? O Theft moſt baſe!
That we haue ſtolne what we do feare to keepe
But Theeues vnworthy of a thing ſo ſtolne,
That in their Country did them that diſgrace,
We feare to warrant in our Natiue place.

Enter Caſſandra with her haire about her eares

Caſ Cry Troyans, cry.

Priam What noyſe? what ſhreeke is this?

Troy. 'Tis our mad ſiſter, I do know her voyce.

Caſ. Cry Troyans.

Hect. It is Caſſandra.

Caſ. Cry Troyans cry; lend me ten thouſand eyes,
And I will fill them with Prophetick teares.

Hect. Peace ſiſter, peace.

Caſ. Virgins, and Boyes; mid-age & wrinkled old,
Soft infancie, that nothing can but cry,
Adde to my clamour: let vs pay betimes
A moity of that maſſe of moane to come.
Cry Troyans cry, preſtiſe your eyes with teares,
Troy muſt not be, nor goodly Illion ſtand,
Our fire-brand Brother Paris burnes vs all.
Cry Troyans cry, a Helen and a woe;
Cry, cry, Troy burnes, or elſe let Helen goe. Exit.

Hect. Now youthfull Troylus, do not theſe high ſtrains
Of diuination in our Siſter, worke
Some touches of remorſe? Or is your blood
So madly hot, that no diſcourſe of reaſon,
Nor feare of bad ſucceſſe in a bad cauſe,
Can qualifie the ſame?

Troy Why Brother Hector,
We may not thinke the iuſtneſſe of each act
Such, and no other then event doth forme it,
Nor once detect the courage of our minds;
Becauſe Caſſandra's mad, her braineſicke raptures
Cannot diſtaſte the goodneſſe of a quarrell,
Which hath our ſeuerall Honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my priuate part,
I am no more touch'd, then all Priams ſonnes,
And Ioue forbid there ſhould be done amongſt vs
Such things as might offend the weakeſt ſpleene,
To fight for, and maintaine.

Par. Elſe might the world cenſurace of leuitie,
As well my vnder-takings as your counſels:
But I atteſt the gods, your full conſent
Gaue wings to my propenſion, and cut off
All feares attending on ſo dire a proiect.
For what (alas) can theſe my ſingle armes?
What propugnation is in one mans valour
To ſtand the puſh and enmity of thoſe
This quarrell would excite? Yet I proteſt,
Were I alone to paſſe the difficulties,
And had as ample power, as I haue will,
Paris ſhould ne're retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the purſuite.

Pri. Paris, you ſpeake
Like one be-ſotted on your ſweet delights:
You haue the Hony ſtill, but theſe the Gall,
So to be valiant, is no praiſe at all.

Par. Sir, I propoſe not merely to my ſelfe,
The pleaſures ſuch a beauty brings with it:
But I would haue the ſoyle of her faire Rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What Treaſon were it to the rauiſh'd Queene,
Diſgrace to your great worths, and ſhame to me,
Now to deliuer her poſſeſſion vp
On termes of baſe compulſion? Can it be,
That ſo degenerate a ſtraine as this,
Should once ſet looting in your generous boſomes?
There's not the meaneſt ſpirit on our partie,
Without a heart to dare, or ſword to draw,
When Helen is defended: nor none ſo Noble,
Whoſe life were ill beſtow'd, or death vnfam'd,
Where Helen is the ſubiect. Then (I ſay)
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well
The worlds large ſpaces cannot parallell.

Hect. Paris and Troylus, you haue both ſaid well:
And on the cauſe and queſtion now in hand,
Haue glos'd, but ſuperficially; not much
Vnlike young men, whom Ariſtotle thought
Vnfit to heare Morall Philoſophie.
The Reaſons you alledge, do more conduce
To the hot paſſion of diſtemp'red blood,
Then to make vp a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong: For pleaſure, and reuenge,
Haue eares more deafe then Adders, to the voyce
Of any true deciſion. Nature craues
All dues be rendred to their Owners: now
What neerer debt in all humanity,
Then Wife is to the Husband? If this law
Of Nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great mindes of partiall indulgence,
To their benumbed wills reſiſt the ſame,
There is a Law in each well-ordred Nation,
To curbe thoſe raging appetites that are
Moſt diſobedient and refractarie.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's King
(As it is knowne ſhe is) theſe Morall Lawes
Of Nature, and of Nation, ſpeake aloud
To haue her backe return'd. Thus to perſiſt
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heauie. Hectors opinion

Is this in way of truth: yet nere the leſſe,
My ſpritely brethren, I propend to you
In reſolution to keepe Helen ſtill:
For 'tis a cauſe that hath no meane dependance,
Vpon our ioynt and ſeuerall dignities.

Tro. Why? there you touche the life of our deſigne:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our heauing ſpleenes,
I would not with a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honour and renowne,
A ſpurre to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whoſe preſent courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize vs.
For I preſume braue Hector would not looſe
So rich aduantage of a promiſ'd glory,
As ſmiles vpon the fore-head of this action,
For the wide worlds reuenew.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-ſpring of great Priamus,
I haue a roiſting challenge ſent amongſt
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes,
Will ſtrike amazement to their drowſie ſpirits,
I was aduertis'd, their Great generall ſlept,
Whil'ſt emulation in the armie crept:
This I preſume will wake him. Exeunt.

Enter Therſites ſolus.

How now Therſites? what loſt in the Labyrinth of thy furie? ſhall the Elephant Aiax carry it thus? he beates me, and I raile at him: O worthy ſatisfaction, would it were otherwiſe: that I could beate him, whil'ſt he rail'd at me: S'foote, Ile learne to conioure and raiſe Diuels, but Ile ſee ſome iſſue of my ſpitefull execrations. Then there's Achilles, a rare Engineer. If Troy be not taken till theſe two vndermine it, the walls will ſtand till they fall of themſelues. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Ioue the King of gods; and Mercury, looſe all the Serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if thou take not that little little leſſe then little wit from them that they haue, which ſhort-arm'd ignorance it ſelfe knowes, is ſo abundant ſcarſe, it will not in circumuention deliuer a Flye from a Spider, without drawing the maſſie Irons and ſtaring the web: after this, the vengeance on the whole Campe, or rather the bone-ach, for that me thinkes is the curſe dependant on thoſe that warre for a placket. I haue ſaid my prayers and diſpell, Amen, ſay Amen: What ho? my Lord Achilles?

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Therſites. Good Therſites come in and raile.

Ther. If I could haue remembred a gilt counterfeit, thou would'ſt not haue ſlipt out of my contemplation; but it is no matter, thy ſelfe vpon thy ſelfe. The common curſe of mankinde, folly and ignorance be thine in great reuenew; heauen bleſſe thee from a Tutor, and Diſcipline come not neere thee. Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death, then if ſhe that layes thee out ſayes thou art a faire courſe, Ile be ſworne and ſworne vpon't ſhe neuer ſhrowded any but Lazars. Amen. Wher's Achilles?

Patr. What art thou deuout? waſt thou in a prayer?

Ther. I, the heauens heare me.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Therſites, my Lord.

Achil. Where, where, art thou come? why my cheeſe, my digeſtion, why haſt thou not ſeru'd thy ſelfe into my Table, ſo many meales? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy Commander Achilles, then tell me Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy Lord Therſites: then tell me I pray thee, what's thy ſelfe?

Ther. Thy knower Patroclus: then tell me Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou maiſt tell that know'ſt.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. Ile decline the whole queſtion. Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my Lord, I am Patroclus knower, and Patroclus is a foole.

Patr. You rafcall.

Ther. Peace foole, I haue not done.

Achil. He is a priuiledg'd man, proceede Therſites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole, Achilles is a foole, Therſites is a foole, and as aforeſaid, Patroclus is a foole.

Achil. Deriue this? come?

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole to offer to command Achilles. Achilles is a foole to be commanded of Agamemnon, Therſites is a foole to ſerue ſuch a foole: and Patroclus is a foole poſitiue.

Patr. Why am I a foole?

Enter Agamemnon, Vliſſes, Neſtor, Diomedes, Aiax, and Chalcas.

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator, it ſuffiſes me thou art. Looke you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, Ile ſpeake with no body: come in with me Therſites. Exit.

Ther. Here is ſuch patcherie, ſuch iugling, and ſuch knauerie: all the argument is a Cuckold and a Whore, a good quarrel to draw emulations, factions and bleede to death vpon: Now the dry Suppeago on the Subiect, and Warre and Lecherie confound all.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his Tent, but ill diſpoſ'd my Lord.

Agam. Let it be knowne to him that we are here:
He ſent our Meſſengers, and we lay by
Our appertainments, viſiting of him:
Let him be told of, ſo perchance he thinke
We dare not moue the queſtion of our place,
Or know not what we are.

Patr. I ſhall ſo ſay to him.

Vliſ. We ſaw him at the opening of his Tent,
He is not ſicke.

Aia. Yes, Lyon ſicke, ſicke of proud heart; you may call it Melancholly if will fauour the man, but by my head, 'tis pride; but why, why, let him ſhow vs the cauſe? A word my Lord.

Neſt. What moues Aiax thus to bay at him?

Vliſ. Achilles hath inueigled his Foole from him.

Neſt. Who, Therſites?

Vliſ. He.

Neſt. Then will Aiax lacke matter, if he haue loſt his Argument.

Vliſ. No, you ſee he is his argument that has his argument Achilles.

Neſt. All the better, their fraction is more our wiſh then their faction; but it was a ſtrong counſell that a Foole could diſunite.

Vliſ. The amitie that wiſedome knits, not folly may eaſily vntie. Enter Patroclus.

Here

Here comes Patrocles.

Neſt. No Achilles with him?

Vliſ. The Elephant hath ioynts, but none for curteſie: His legge are legs for neceſſitie, not for flight.

Patro. Achilles bids me ſay he is much ſorry: If any thing more then your ſport and pleaſure, Did moue your greatneſſe, and this noble State, To call vpon him: he hopes it is no other, But for your health, and your digeſtion ſake; An after Dinners breath.

Aga. Heare you Patrocles: We are too well acquainted with theſe anſwers: But his excuſion winged thus ſwift with ſcorne, Cannot outflye our apprehenſions. Much attributive he hath, and much the reaſon, Why we aſcribe it to him, yet all his vertues, Not vertuouſly of his owne part beheld, Doe in our eyes, begin to looſe their gloſſe; Yea, like faire Fruit in an vnholdſome diſh, Are like to rot vntaſted: goe and tell him, We came to ſpeake with him; and you ſhall not ſinne, If you doe ſay, we thinke him ouer proud, And vnder honeſt in ſelfe-aſſumption greater Then in the note of iudgement: & worthier then himſelfe Here tends the ſauage ſtrangeneſſe he puts on, Diſguiſe the holy ſtrength of their command: And vnder write in an obſeruing kinde His humorous predominance, yea watch His pettiſh lines, his ebbs, his flowes, as if The paſſage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tyde. Goe tell him this, and adde, That if he ouerhold his price ſo much, Weele none of him; but let him, like an Engin Not portable, lye vnder this report. Bring action hither, this cannot goe to warre: A ſtirring Dwarfe, we doe allowance giue, Before a ſleeping Gyant: tell him ſo.

Pat. I ſhall, and bring his anſwere preſently.

Aga. In ſecond voyce weele not be ſatisfied, We come to ſpeake with him, Vliſſes enter you.

Exit Pliſſes.

Ajax. What is he more then another?

Aga. No more then what he thinkes he is.

Aia. Is he ſo much, doe you not thinke, he thinkes himſelfe a better man then I am?

Ag. No queſtion.

Ajax. Will you ſubſcribe his thought, and ſay he is?

Ag. No, Noble Ajax, you are as ſtrong, as valiant, as wiſe, no leſſe noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why ſhould a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what it is.

Aga. Your minde is the clearer Ajax, and your vertues the fairer; he that is proud, eates vp himſelfe: Pride is his owne Gloſſe, his owne trumper, his owne Chronicle, and what euer praiſes it ſelfe but in the deede, deuoures the deede in the praiſe.

Enter Vliſſes.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the ingendring of Toades.

Neſt. Yet he loues himſelfe: is't not ſtrange?

Vliſ. Achilles will not to the field to morrow.

Ag. What's his excuſe?

Vliſ. He doth relye on none, But carries on the ſtreame of his diſpoſe, Without obſeruance or reſpect of any, In will peculiar, and in ſelfe admiſſion.

Aga. Why, will he not vpon our faire requeſt, Vntent his perſon, and ſhare the ayre with vs?

Vliſ. Things ſmall as nothing, for requeſts ſake onely He makes important: poſſeſt he is with greatneſſe, And ſpeakes not to himſelfe, but with a pride That quarrels at ſelfe-breath. Imagin'd wroth Holds in his blood ſuch ſwolne and hot diſcourſe, That twixt his mentall and his actiue parts, Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages, And batters gainſt it ſelfe: what ſhould I ſay? He is ſo plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it, Cry no recouery.

Ag. Let Ajax goe to him.

Deare Lord, goe you and greete him in his Tent: 'Tis ſaid he holds you well, and will be led At your requeſt a little from himſelfe.

Vliſ. O Agamemnon, let it not be ſo. Weele conſecrate the ſteps that Ajax makes, When they goe from Achilles, ſhall the proud Lord, That baſtes his arrogance with his owne ſeame, And neuer ſuffers matters of the world, Enter his thoughts: ſaue ſuch as doe reuolue And ruminate himſelfe. Shall he be worſhipt, Of that we hold an Idoll, more then hee? No, this thrice worthy and right valiant Lord, Muſt not ſo ſtaule his Palme, nobly acquir'd, Nor by my will aſſubiugate his merit, As ſimply titled to Achilles in: by going to Achilles, That were to enlard his fat already, pride, And adde more Coles to Cancer, when he burnes With entertaining great Hyperion. This Lord, goe to him? Iupiter forbid, And ſay in thunder, Achilles goe to him.

Neſt. O this is well, he rubs the vaine of him.

Dio. And how his ſilence drinkes vp this applauſe.

Aia. If I goe to him, with my armed fiſt, Ile path him ore the face.

Ag. O no, you ſhall not goe.

Aia. And a be proud with me, Ile pheeſe his pride: let me goe to him.

Vliſ. Not for the worth that hangs vpon our quarrel.

Aia. A paultry inſolent fellow.

Neſt. How he deſcribes himſelfe.

Aia. Can he not be ſociable?

Vliſ. The Rauen chides blacknеſſe.

Aia. Ile let his humours blood.

Ag. He will be the Phyſitian that ſhould be the patient.

Aia. And all men were a my minde.

Vliſ. Wit would be out of faſhion.

Aia. A ſhould not beare it ſo, a ſhould eate ſwords firſt: ſhall pride carry it?

Neſt. And 'twould, you'd carry halfe.

Vliſ. A would haue ten ſhares.

Aia. I will kneede him, Ile make him ſupple, he's not yet through warme.

Neſt. Force him with praiſes, poure in, poure in: his ambition is dry.

Vliſ. My L. you feede too much on this diſlike.

Neſt. Our noble Generall, doe not doe ſo.

Dom. You muſt prepare to fight without Achilles.

Vliſ. Why, 'tis this naming of him doth him harme. Here is a man, but 'tis before his face, I will be ſilent.

Neſt. Wherefore ſhould you ſo?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Vlyſ. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Aia. A horſon dog, that ſhal palter thus with vs, would he were a Troian.

Neſt. What a vice were it in Aiax now——

Vlyſ. If he were proud.

Dio. Or coueteous of praiſe

Vlyſ. I, or ſurley borne

Dio. Or ſtrange, or ſelfe affected.

Vl. Thank the heauens Lord, thou art of ſweet compoſure;
Praiſe him that got thee, ſhe that gaue thee ſucke:
Fame be thy Tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice fam'd beyond, beyond all erudition;
But he that diſciplin'd thy armes to fight,
Let Mars deuide Eternity in twaine,
And giue him halfe, and for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yeelde
To ſinowie Aiax. I will not praiſe thy wiſdome,
Which like a bourne, a pale, a ſhore confines
Thy ſpacious and dilated parts; here's Neſtor
Inſtructed by the Antiquary times.
He muſt, he is, he cannot but be wiſe
But pardon Father Neſtor, were your dayes
As greene as Aiax and your braine ſo temper'd,
You ſhould not haue the eminence of him,
But be as Aiax.

Aia. Shall I call you Father?

Vlyſ. I my good Sonne.

Dio. Be rul'd by him Lord Aiax.

Vlyſ. There is no tarrying here, the Hart Achilles
Keepes thicker: pleaſe it our Generall,
To call together all his ſtate of warre,
Freſh Kings are come to Troy; to morrow
We muſt with all our maine of power ſtand faſt.
And here's a Lord, come Knights from Eaſt to Weſt,
And cull their flowre, Aiax ſhall cope the beſt.

Ag. Goe we to Counſaile, let Achilles ſleepe; Light Boates may ſaile ſwift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Muſicke ſounds within.

Enter Pandarus and a Seruant.

Pan. Friend, you, pray you a word: Doe not you follow the yong Lord Paris?

Ser. I ſir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend vpon him I meane?

Ser. Sir, I doe depend vpon the Lord.

Pan. You depend vpon a noble Gentleman: I muſt needes praiſe him.

Ser. The Lord be praiſed.

Pa. You know me, doe you not?

Ser. Faith ſir, ſuperficially.

Pa. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.

Ser. I hope I ſhall know your honour better.

Pa. I doe deſire it.

Ser. You are in the ſtate of Grace?

Pa. Grace, not ſo friend, honor and Lordſhip are my title: What Muſique is this?

Ser. I doe but partly know ſir: it is Muſicke in parts

Pa. Know you the Muſicians.

Ser. Wholly ſir

Pa. Who play they to?

Ser. To the hearers ſir.

Pa. At whoſe pleaſure friend?

Ser. At mine ſir, and theirs that loue Muſicke.

Pa. Command, I meane friend.

Ser. Who ſhall I command ſir?

Pa. Friend, we vnderſtand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whoſe requeſt doe theſe men play?

Ser. That's to't indeede ſir. marry ſir, at the requeſt of Paris my L. who's there in perſon: with him the mortall Venus, the heart bloud of beauty, loues inuiſible ſoule.

Pa. Who? my Coſin Creſsida.

Ser. No ſir, Helen, could you not finde out that by her attributes?

Pa. It ſhould ſeeme fellow, that thou haſt not ſeen the Lady Creſsida. I come to ſpeake with Paris from the Prince Troylus: I will make a complementall aſſault vpon him, for my buſineſſe ſeethes.

Ser. Sodden buſineſſe, there's a ſtewed phraſe indeede

Enter Paris and Helena.

Par. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire company: faire deſires in all faire meaſure fairely guide them, eſpecially to you faire Queene, faire thoughts be your faire pillow.

Hel. Deere L. you are full of faire words.

Par. You ſpeake your faire pleaſure ſweete Queene: faire Prince, here is good broken Muſicke.

Par. You haue broke it cozen: and by my life you ſhall make it whole againe, you ſhall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nel, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truely Lady no.

Hel. O ſir

Par. Rude in ſooth, in good ſooth very rude.

Par. Well ſaid my Lord: well, you ſay ſo in fits.

Par. I haue buſineſſe to my Lord, deere Queene: my Lord will you vouchſafe me a word.

Hel. Nay, this ſhall not bedge vs out, weele heare you ſing certainely.

Par. Well ſweete Queene you are pleaſant with me, but, marry thee my Lord, my deere Lord, and moſt eſteemed friend your brother Troylus

Hel. My Lord Pandarus, hony ſweete Lord.

Par. Go too ſweete Queene, goe to.
Commends himſelfe moſt affectionately to you.

Hel You ſhall not bob vs out of our melody:
If you doe, our melancholly vpon your head.

Par Sweete Queene, ſweete Queene, that's a ſweete Queene I faith——

Hel. And to make a ſweet Lady ſad, is a ſower offence.

Par. Nay, that ſhall not ſerue your turne, that ſhall it not in truth la. Nay, I care not for ſuch words, no, no. And my Lord he deſires you, that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make his excuſe.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus?

Par. What ſaies my ſweete Queene, my very, very ſweete Queene?

Par. What exploit's in hand, where ſups he to night?

Hel. Nay but my Lord?

Par. What ſaies my ſweete Queene? my coſen will fall out with you.

Hel. You muſt not know where he ſups.

Par. With my diſpoſer Creſsida.

Par. No, not no ſuch matter, you are wide, come your diſpoſer is ſicke.

Par. Well, Ile make excuſe.

Par. I good my Lord: why ſhould you ſay Creſsida? no, your poore diſpoſer's ſicke.

Par. I ſpie.

Par You

Pan. You ſpie, what doe you ſpie: come, giue me an inſtrument now ſweete Queene.

Hel. Why this is kindely done?

Pan. My Neece is horrible in loue with a thing you haue ſweete Queene.

Hel. She ſhall haue it my Lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pand. Hee? no, ſheele none of him, they two are twaine.

Hel. Falling in after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, Ile heare no more of this, Ile ſing you a ſong now.

Hel. I, I, prethee now: by my troth ſweet Lord thou haſt a fine forehead.

Pan. I you may, you may.

Hel. Let thy ſong be loue: this loue will vndoe vs all Oh Cupid, Cupid, Cupid.

Pan. Loue? I that it ſhall yfaith.

Par. I, good now loue, loue, no thing but loue.

Pan. In good troth it begins ſo.

Loue, loue, nothing but loue ſtill more:
For O loues Bow,
Shoots Bucke and Doe:
The Shafte confounds not that it wounds,
But tickles ſtill the ſore:
Theſe Louers cry, oh oh they dye;
Yet that which ſeemes the wound to kill,
Doth turne oh he, to ha ha he:
So dying loue liues ſtill.
O oh a while, but ha ha ha,
O heavens out for ha ha ha. — hey ho.

Hel. In loue yfaith to the very tip of the noſe.

Par. He eates nothing but doues loue, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deedes, and hot deedes is loue.

Pan. Is this the generation of loue? Hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deedes, why they are Vipers, is Loue a generation of Vipers?
Sweete Lord whoſe a field to day?

Par. Hellor, Deiphebus, Helenus, Anthenor, and all the gallantry of Troy. I would faine haue arm'd to day, but my Nell would not haue it ſo.
How chance my brother Troylus went not?

Hel. He hangs the lippe at ſomething; you know all Lord Pandarus?

Pan. Not I honey ſweete Queene: I long to heare how they ſped to day:
Youle remember your brothers excuſe?

Par. To a hayre.

Pan. Farewell ſweete Queene.

Hel. Commend me to your Neece.

Pan. I will ſweete Queene Sound a retreat.

Par. They're come from fielde: let vs to Priams Hall
To greete the Warriers. Sweet Hellen, I muſt woe you,
To helpe vnarme our Hellor: his ſtubborne Buckles,
With theſe your white enchanting fingers touche,
Shall more obey then to the edge of Steele,
Or force of Greekiſh ſinewes: you ſhall doe more
Then all the ſtand Kings, diſarme great Hellor.

Hel. 'Twill make vs proud to be his ſeruant Paris:
Yea what he ſhall receiue of vs in duetie,
Giues vs more palme in beautie then we haue:
Yea ouerſhines our ſelfe.
Sweete aboue thought I loue thee. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Troylus Man.

Pan. How now, where's thy Maiſter, at my Coſſens Creſsida?

Man. No ſir, he ſtayes for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troylus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirra walke off,

Pan. Haue you ſeene my Couſin?

Troy. No Pandarus: I walke about her doore
Like a ſtrange ſoule vpon the Stigian banke
Staying for waftage. O be thou my Charon,
And giue me ſwift tranſportance to thoſe fields,
Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds
Propoſ'd for the deſeruer. O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupids ſhoulder plucke his painted wings,
And flye with me to Creſsid.

Pan. Walke here i'th Orchard, Ile bring her ſtraight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round,
Th'imaginary reliſh is ſo ſweete,
That it inchants my ſence: what will it be
When that the watry pallats taſte indeede
Loues thrice reputed Nectar? Death I feare me
Sounding diſtruction, or ſome ioy too fine,
Too ſubtile, potent, and too ſharpe in ſweetneſſe,
For the capacitie of my ruder powers;
I feare it much, and I doe feare beſides,
That I ſhall looſe diſtinction in my ioyes,
As doth a battaile, when they charge on heapes
The enemy flying. Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Shee's making her ready, ſheele come ſtraight: you muſt be witty now, ſhe does ſo bluſh, & fetches her winde ſo ſhort, as if ſhe were fraid with a ſprite: Ile fetch her; it is the prettieſt villaine, ſhe fetches her breath ſo ſhort as a new tane Sparrow. Exit Pand.

Troy. Euen ſuch a paſſion doth imbrace my boſome:
My heart beates thicker then a feauorous poſſe,
And all my powers doe their beſtowing looſe,
Like vaſſalage at vnawares encountring
The eye of Maieſtie.

Enter Pandarus and Creſsida.

Pan. Come, come, what needs you bluſh?
Shames a babie; here ſhe is now, ſweare the oathes now to her, that you haue ſwome to me. What are you gaine, you muſt be watcht ere you be made tame, muſt you? come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw backward weele put you i'th fils: why doe you not ſpeak to her? Come draw this curraine, & let's ſee your picture. Alaſſe the day, how loath you are to offend day light? and 'twere darke you'ld cloſe ſooner: So, ſo, rub on, and kiſſe the miſtreſſe; how now, a kiſſe in fee-farme? build there Carpenter, the ayre is ſweete. Nay, you ſhall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The Faulcon, as the Tercell, for all the Ducks i'th Riuer: go too, go too.

Troy. You haue bereft me of all words Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts; giue her deedes: but ſhee's bereaue you 'both' deeds too, if ſhee call your activity in queſtion: what billing againe? here's in witneſſe whom of the Parties interchangeably. Come in, come in, Ile get a fire?

Creſ. Will you walke in my Lord?

Troy. O Creſsida, how often haue I wiſht me thus?

Creſ. Wiſht my Lord? the gods grant? O my Lord.

Troy. What ſhould they grant? what makes this pretty abruption: what too curious dreg eſpies my ſweet Lady in the fountaine of our loue?

Creſ. More

Creſ. More dregs then water, if my teares haue eyes.

Troy. Feares make diuels of Cherubins, they neuer ſee truely.

Creſ. Blinde feare, that ſeeing reaſon leads, findes ſafe footing, then blinde reaſon, ſtumbling without feare: to feare the worſt, oft cures the worſe.

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare, In all Cupids Pageant there is preſented no monſter Creſ. Not nothing monſtrous neither?

Troy. Nothing but our vndertakings, when we vowe to weepe ſeas, liue in fire, eate rockes, tame Tygers; thinking it harder for our Miſtreſſe to deuiſe impoſition inough, then for vs to vndergoe any difficultie impoſed. This is the monſtruoſitie in loue Lady, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd; that the deſire is boundleſſe, and the act a ſlaue to limit.

Creſ. They ſay all Louers ſweare more performance then they are able, and yet reſerue an ability that they neuer performe: vowing more then the perfection of ten; and diſcharging leſſe then the tenth part of one. They that haue the voyce of Lyons, and the act of Hares: are they not Monſters?

Troy. Are there ſuch? ſuch are not we: Praiſe vs as we are taſted, allow vs as we proue: our head ſhall goe bare till merit crowne it: no perfection in reuerſion ſhall haue a praiſe in preſent: we will not name deſert before his birth, and being borne his addition ſhall be humble: few words to faire faith. Troylus ſhall be ſuch to Creſſid, as what enuie can ſay worſt, ſhall be a mocke for his truth; and what truth can ſpeake trueſt, not truer then Troylus

Creſ. Will you walke in my Lord?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What bluſhing ſtill? haue you not done talking yet?

Creſ. Well Vnckle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that: if my Lord get a Boy of you, youle giue him me: be true to my Lord, if he ſlinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hoſtages: your Vnckles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, Ile giue my word for her too: our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are conſtant being wonne: they are Burres I can tell you, they'le ſticke where they are throwne.

Creſ. Boldneſſe comes to mee now, and brings mee heart: Prince Troylus, I haue lou'd you night and day, for many weary moneths.

Troy. Why was my Creſsid then ſo hard to win?

Creſ Hard to ſeeme won: but I was won my Lord With the firſt glance; that euer pardon me, If I confeſſe much you will play the tyrant: I loue you now, but not till now ſo much But I might maiſter it; in faith I lye: My thoughts were like vnbridled children grow Too head-ſtrong for their mother: ſee we fooles, Why haue I blab'd: who ſhall be true to vs When we are ſo vnſecret to our ſelues? But though I lou'd you well, I woed you not, And yet good faith I wiſht my ſelfe a man; Or that we women had mens priuiledge Of ſpeaking firſt. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue, For in this rapture I ſhall ſurely ſpeake The thing I ſhall repent: ſee ſee, your ſilence Comming in dumbneſſe, from my weakneſſe drawes My ſoule of counſell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And ſhall, albeit ſweete Muſicke iſſues thence.

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Creſ. My Lord, I doe beſeech you pardon me, 'Twas not my purpoſe thus to beg a kiſſe: I am aſham'd; O Heauens, what haue I done! For this time will I take my leaue my Lord.

Troy. Your leaue ſweete Creſſid?

Pan. Leaue: and you take leaue till to morrow morning.

Creſ. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends yo Lady?

Creſ. Sir, mine owne company.

Troy. You cannot ſhun your ſelfe.

Creſ. Let me goe and try.

I haue a kinde of ſelfe reſides with you: But an vnkinde ſelfe, that it ſelfe will leaue, To be anothers foole. Where is my wit? I would be gone: I ſpeake I know not what.

Troy. Well know they what they ſpeake, that ſpeakes ſo wiſely.

Cre. Perchance my Lord, I ſhew more craft then loue, And fell ſo roundly to a large confeſſion, To Angle for your thoughts: but you are wiſe, Or elſe you loue not: for to be wiſe and loue, Exceedes mans might, that dwels with gods aboue.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman: As if it can, I will preſume in you, To feede for aye her lampe and flames of loue. To keepe her conſtancie in plight and youth, Out-liuing beauties outward, with a minde That doth renew ſwifter then blood decaies: Or that perſwaſion could but thus conuince me, That my integritie and truth to you, Might be affronted with the match and weight Of ſuch a winnowed purititie in loue: How were I then vp-lifted! but alas, I am as true, as truths ſimplicitie, And ſimpler then the infancie of truth.

Creſ. In that Ile warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight, When tight with right wars who ſhall be moſt right: True ſwaines in loue, ſhall in the world to come Approue their truths by Troylus, when their rimes, Full of proteſt, of oath and big compare; Wants ſimiles, truth tir'd with iteration, As true as ſteele, as plantage to the Moone: As Sunne to day: as Turtle to her mate: As Iron to Adamant: as Earth to th'Center: Yet after all compariſons of truth, (As truths authenticke author to be cited) As true as Troylus, ſhall crowne vp the Verſe, And ſanctifie the numbers.

Creſ. Prophet may you be: If I be falſe, or ſwerue a haire from truth, When time is old and hath forgot it ſelfe: When water drops haue worne the Stones of Troy; And blinde oblitionſwallow'd Cities vp; And mightie States characterleſſe are grated To duſtie nothing; yet let memory, From falſe to falſe, among falſe Maids in loue, Vpbraid my falſehood, when they'aue ſaid as falſe, As Aire, as Water, as Winde, as ſandie earth; As Foxe to Lambe; as Wolfe to Heifers Calfe; Pard to the Hinde, or Stepdame to her Sonne; Yea, let them ſay, to ſticke the heart of falſehood,

As

As falſe as Creſſid.

Pand. Go too, a bargaine made: ſeale it, ſeale it, I be the witneſſe here I hold your hand: here my Couſins, if ever you proue falſe one to another, ſince I haue taken ſuch paines to bring you together, let all pittifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name: call them all Pandets; let all conſtant men be Troyluſſes, all falſe women Creſſids, and all brokers betweene, Pandets: ſay, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Creſ. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will ſhew you a Chamber, which bed, becauſe it ſhall not ſpeake of your prettie encounters, preſſe it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tong-tide Maidens here,
Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to prouide this geere. Exeunt.

Enter Vliſſes, Diomedes, Neſtor, Agamemnon, Menelaus and Chalcas Floriſh.

Cal. Now Princes for the ſeruice I haue done you,
Th'aduantage of the time promps me aloud,
To call for recompence: appeare it to your minde,
That through the ſight I beare in things to loue,
I haue abandon'd Troy, left my poſſeſſion,
Incur'd a Traitors name, expoſ'd my ſelfe,
From certaine and poſſeſt conueniences,
To doubtfull fortunes, ſequeſtring from me all
That time, acquaintance, cuſtome and condition,
Made tame, and moſt familiar to my nature:
And here to doe you ſeruice am become,
As new into the world, ſtrange, vnacquainted.
I doe beſeech you, as in way of taſte,
To giue me now a little benefit:
Out of thoſe many regiſtred in promiſe,
Which you ſay, liue to come in my behalfe.

Agam. What would'ſt thou of vs Troian? make demand?

Cal. You haue a Troian priſoner, cal'd Anthenor, Yeſterday tooke: Troy holds him very deere.
Oft haue you (often haue you, thankes therefore)
Deſir'd my Creſſa in right great exchange.
Whom Troy hath ſtill deni'd: but this Anthenor,
I know is ſuch a wreſt in their affaires;
That their negotiations all muſt ſlacke,
Wanting his mannage: and they will almoſt,
Giue vs a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam,
In change of him. Let him be ſent great Princes,
And he ſhall buy my Daughter: and her preſence,
Shall quite ſtrike off all ſeruice I haue done,
In moſt accepted paine.

Aga. Let Diomedes beare him,
And bring vs Creſſid hither: Calcas ſhall haue
What he requeſts of vs: good Diomed
Furniſh you fairely for this enterchange;
Withall bring word, if Hector will to morrow
Be anſwer'd in his challenge. Aiax is ready.

Dio. This ſhall I vndertake, and 'tis a burthen
Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus in their Tent.

Vliſ. Achilles ſtands i'th entrance of his Tent;
Pleaſe it our Generall to paſſe ſtrangely by him,
As if he were forgot: and Princes all,
Lay ſtrict gligtns and looſe regard vpon him;
I will come laſt. 'tis like he'le queſtion me,
Why ſuch vnplauſiue eyes are bent? why turn'd on him?
If ſo, I haue derriſion medicinable,
To vſe betweene your ſtrangeneſſe and his pride,
Which his owne will ſhall haue deſire to drinke;
It may doe good, pride hath no other glaſſe
To ſhow it ſelfe, but pride: for ſupple knees,
Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans fees.

Agam. Weele execute your purpoſe, and put on
A forme of ſtrangeneſſe as we paſſe along,
So doe each Lord, and either greete him not,
Or elſe diſdainfully, which ſhall ſhake him more,
Then if not look't on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to ſpeake with me?
You know my minde, Ile fight no more 'gainſt Troy.

Aga. What ſaies Achilles, would he ought with vs?

Neſ. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall?

Achil. No.

Neſ. Nothing my Lord.

Aga. The better.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you? how doe you?

Achi. What, do's the Cuckold ſcorne me?

Aiax. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Aiax?

Aiax. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Aiax. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane theſe fellowes? know they not Achilles?

Patr. They paſſe by ſtrangely: they were vſ'd to bend
To ſend their ſmiles before them to Achilles:
To come as humbly as they vs'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poore of late?
Tis certaine, greatneſſe once falne out with fortune,
Muſt fall out with men too: what the declin'd is,
He ſhall as ſoone reade in the eyes of others,
As feele in his owne fall: for men like butter-flies,
Shew not their mealie wings, but to the Summer:
And not a man for being ſimply man,
Hath any honour; but honour'd for thoſe honours
That are without him; as place, riches, and fauour,
Prizes of accident, as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being ſlippery ſtanders;
The loue that leand on them as ſlippery too,
Doth one pluckе downe another, and together
Dye in the fall. But 'tis not ſo with me;
Fortune and I are friends, I doe enioy
At ample point, all that I did poſſeſſe,
Saue theſe mens lookes: who do me thinkes finde out
Something not worth in me ſuch rich beholding,
As they haue often giuen. Here is Vliſſes,
Ile interrupt his reading: how now Vliſſes?

Vliſ. Now great Thetis Sonne.

Achil. What are you reading?

Vliſ. A ſtrange fellow here
Writes me, that man, how dearely euer parted,
How much in hauing, or without, or in,
Cannot make boaſt to haue that which he hath;
Nor feeles not what he owes, but by reflection:
As when his vertues ſhining vpon others,
Heate them, and they retort that heate againe
To the firſt giuer.

Achil. This is not ſtrange Vliſſes:
The beautie that is borne here in the face,
The bearer knowes not, but commends it ſelfe,
Not going from it ſelfe: but eye to eye oppoſ'd,

Salutes

Salutes each other with each others forme
For ſpeculation turnes not to it ſelfe,
Till it hath trauail'd, and is married there
Where it may ſee it ſelfe: this is not ſtrange at all.
Vliſ. I doe not ſtraine it at the poſition,
It is familiar; but at the Authors drift,
Who in his circumſtance, expreſſly proues
That no may is the Lord of any thing,
(Though in and of him there is much conſiſting,)
Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himſelfe know them for ought,
Till he behold them formed in th'applauſe,
Where they are extended: who like an arch reuerb'rate
The voyce againe; or like a gate of ſteele,
Fronting the Sunne, receiues and renders backe
His figure, and his heate. I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended here immediately:
The vnknowne Aiax; Heauens what a man is there? a very Horſe, (are
That has he knowes not what. Nature, what things there
Moſt abiect in regard, and deare in vſe.
What things againe moſt deere in the eſteeme,
And poore in worth: now ſhall we ſee to morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw vpon him?
Aiax renown'd? O heauens, what ſome men doe,
While ſome men leaue to doe!
How ſome men creepe in skittiſh fortunes hall,
Whiles others play the Ideots in her eyes:
How one man eates into anothers pride,
While pride is feaſting in his wantonneſſe
To ſee theſe Grecian Lords; why, euen already,
They clap the lubber Aiax on the ſhoulder,
As if his foote were on braue Hectors breſt,
And great Troy ſhrinking.
Achil. I doe beleeue it:
For they paſt by me, as myſers doe by beggars,
Neither gaue to me good word, nor looke:
What are my deedes forgot?
Vliſ. Time hath (my Lord) a wallet at his backe,
Wherein he puts almes for oblivion:
A great ſiz'd monſter of ingratitudes:
Thoſe ſcraps are good deedes paſt,
Which are deuour'd as faſt as they are made,
Forgot as ſoone as done: perſeuerance, deere my Lord,
Keepes honor bright, to haue done, is to hang
Quite out of faſhion, like a ruſtie male,
In monumentall mockrie: take the inſtant way,
For honour trauels in a ſtraight ſo narrow,
Where one but goes a breaſt, keepe then the path:
For emulation hath a thouſand Sonnes,
That one by one purſue; if you giue way,
Or hedge aſide from the direct forth right;
Like to an entred Tyde, they all ruſh by,
And leaue you hindmoſt:
Or like a gallant Horſe falne in firſt ranke,
Lye there for pauement to the abiect, neere
Ore-run and trampled on: then what they doe in preſent,
Though leſſe then yours in paſt, muſt ore-top yours:
For time is like a faſhionable Hoſte,
That ſlightly ſhakes his parting Gueſt by th'hand;
And with his armes out-ſtretcht, as he would flye,
Graſpes in the commer: the welcome euer ſmiles,
And farewels goes out ſighing: O let not vertue ſeeke
Remuneration for the thing it was: for beautie, wit,
High birth, vigor of bone, deſert in ſeruice,
Loue, friendſhip, charity, are ſubiects all
To enuious and calumniating time:
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin:
That all with one conſent praiſe new borne gaudes,
Though they are made and moulded of things paſt,
And goe to duſt, that is a little guilt.
More laud then guilt oredutted.
The preſent eye praiſes the preſent obiect:
Then maruell not thou great and compleat man,
That all the Greekes begin to worſhip Aiax;
Since things in motion begin to catch the eye,
Then what not ſtirs: the cry went out on thee,
And ſtill it might, and yet it may againe,
If thou would'ſt not entombe thy ſelfe aliue,
And caſe thy reputation in thy Tent;
Whoſe glorious deedes, but in theſe fields of late,
Made emulous miſſions 'mongſt the gods themſelues,
And draue great Mars to faction.
Achil. Of this my priuacie,
I haue ſtrong reaſons.
Vliſ. But 'gainſt your priuacie
The reaſons are more potent and heroycall:
'Tis knowne Achilles, that you are in loue
With one of Priams daughters.
Achil. Ha? knowne?
Vliſ. Is that a wonder?
The prouidence that's in a watchfull State,
Knowes almoſt euery graine of Plutoes gold;
Findes bottome in th'vncomprehenſiue deepes;
Keepes place with thought; and almoſt like the gods,
Doe thoughts vnuſile in their dumbe cradles:
There is a myſterie (with whom relation Durſt neuer meddle) in the ſoule of State;
Which hath an operation more diuine,
Then breath or pen can giue expreſſure to:
All the commerſe that you haue had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my Lord,
And better would it fit Achilles much,
To throw downe Hector then Polixena.
But it muſt grieue young Pyrhus now at home,
When fame ſhall in her Hand ſound her trumpe;
And all the Greekiſh Girles ſhall tripping ſing,
Great Hectors ſiſter did Achilles winne;
But our great Aiax brauely beate downe him.
Farewell my Lord: I as your louer ſpeake;
The ſoole ſlides ore the Ice that you ſhould breake.
Patr. To this effect Achilles haue I mou'd you;
A woman impudent and mannish growne,
Is not more loth'd, then an effeminate man,
In time of action: I ſtand condemn'd for this;
They thinke my little ſtomacke to the warre,
And your great loue to me, reſtraines you thus:
Sweete, rouſe your ſelfe; and the weake wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck vnlooſe his amorous fould,
And like a dew drop from the Lyons mane,
Be ſhooke to ayrie ayre.
Achil. Shall Aiax fight with Hector?
Patr. I, and perhaps receiue much honor by him.
Achil. I ſee my reputation is at ſtake,
My fame is ſhrowdly gored.
Patr. O then beware:
Thoſe wounds heale ill, that men doe giue themſelues:
Omiſſion to doe what is neceſſary,
Seales a commiſſion to a blanke of danger,
And danger like an ague ſubtly taints
Euen then when we ſit idely in the funne.
Achil. Goe call Therſites hither ſweet Patrocles,

Ile ſend the foole to Aiax, and deſire him
T'inuite the Troian Lords after the Combat
To ſee vs here vnarm'd: I haue a womans longing,
An appetite that I am ſicke withall,
To ſee great Hector in his weedes of peace; Enter Thersi.
To talke with him, and to behold his viſage,
Euen to my full of view. A labour ſau'd.

Ther. A wonder.

Achil. What?

Ther. Aiax goes vp and downe the field, asking for himſelfe.

Achil. How ſo?

Ther. Hee muſt fight ſingly to morrow with Hector, and is ſo prophetically proud of an heroicall cudgelling, that he raues in ſaying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why he ſtalkes vp and downe like a Peacock, a ſtride and a ſtand: ruminates like an hoſteſſe, that hath no Arithmatique but her braine to caſt downe her reckoning: bites his lip with a politique regard, as who ſhould ſay, there were wit in his head and twoo'd out; and ſo there is: but it lyes as coldly in him, as fire in a flint, which will not ſhew without knocking. The man vndone for euer; for if Hector breake not his neckes'th'combat, heele break't himſelfe in vaine-glory. He knowes not me: I ſaid, good morrow Aiax: And he replyes, thankes Agamemnon. What thinke you of this man, that takes me for the Generall? Hee's growne a very land-fiſh, languageleſſe, a monſter: a plague of opinion, a man may weare it on both ſides like a leather Ierkin.

Achil. Thou muſt be my Ambaſſador to him Therſites.

Ther. Who, I: why, heele anſwer no body: he profeſſes not anſwering; ſpeaking is for beggers: he weares his tongue in's armes: I will put on his preſence; let Patroclus make his demands to me, you ſhall ſee the Pageant of Aiax.

Achil. To him Patroclus: tell him, I humbly deſire the valiant Aiax, to inuite the moſt valorous Hector, to come vnarm'd to my Tent, and to procure ſafe conduct for his perſon, of the magnanimious and moſt illuſtrious, fiue or ſeauen times honour'd Captaine, Generall of the Grecian Armie Agamemnon, &c. doe this.

Patro. Ioue bleſſe great Aiax.

Ther. Hum.

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles.

Ther. Ha?

Patr. Who moſt humbly deſires you to inuite Hector to his Tent.

Ther. Hum.

Patr. And to procure ſafe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. I my Lord.

Ther. Ha?

Patr. What ſay you roo't.

Ther. God buy you with all my heart.

Patr. Your anſwer ſir.

Ther. If ſo morrow be a faire day, by eleuen a clocke it will goe one way or other; howſoeuer, he ſhall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your anſwer ſir.

Ther. Fare you well withall my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out a tune thats: what muſicke will be in him when Hector has knockt out his braines, I know not: but I am ſure none, vnleſſe the Fidler Apollo get his ſinewes to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou ſhalt beare a Letter to him ſtraight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his Horſe, for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My minde is troubled like a Fountaine ſtir'd,
And I my ſelfe ſee not the bottome of it.

Ther. Would the Fountaine of your minde were clere againe, that I might water an Aſſe at it! I had rather be a Ticke in a Sheepe, than ſuch a valiant ignorance.

Enter at one doore Æneas with a Torch, at another Paris, Deiphebus, Antenor, Diomed the Grecian, with Torches.

Par. See hoa, who is that there?

Deiph. It is the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the Prince there in perſon?
Had I ſo good occaſion to lye long
As you Prince Paris, nothing but heauenly buſineſſe,
Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my minde too: good morrow Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greeke Æneas, take his hand,
Witneſſe the proceſſe of your ſpeech within:
You told how Diomed in a whole weeke by dayes
Did haunt you in the Field.

Æne. Health to you valiant ſir,
During all queſtion of the gentle truce:
But when I meete you arm'd, as blacke defiance
As heart can thinke, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.
Our bloods are now in calme; and ſo long health.
But when contention, and occaſion meetes,
By Ioue, Ile play the hunter for thy life,
With all my force, purſuite and policy.

Æne. And thou ſhalt hunt a Lyon that will flye
With his face backward, in humaine gentleneſſe:
Welcome to Troy; now by Anchiſes life,
Welcome indeede: by Venus hand I ſweare,
No man aliue can loue in ſuch a ſort,
The thing he meanes to kill, more excellently.

Dio. We ſympathize. Ioue let Æneas liue
(If to my ſword his fate be not the glory)
A thouſand compleate courſes of the Sunne,
But in mine emulous honor let him dy
With euery ioynt a wound, and that to morrow.

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We doe, and long to know each other worſe.

Par. This is the moſt, deſpightfull'ſt gentle greeting:
The noblеſt hatefull'ſt loue, that ere I heard of.
What buſineſſe Lord ſo early?

Æne. I was ſent for to the King; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpoſe meets you: it was to bring this Greek
To Calchas houſe, and there to render him,
For the enfreed Antenor, the faire Creſſid:
Let's haue your company; or if you pleaſe,
Haſte there before vs: I conſtantly doe thinke
(Or rather call my thought a certaine knowledge)
My brother Troylus lodges there to nighe.
Rouſe him, and giue him note of our approach,
With the whole quality wherefore, I feare
We ſhall be much vnwelcome.

Æne. That I aſſure you:
Troylus had rather Troy were borne to Greece,
Then Creſſid borne from Troy.

Par. There

Par. There is no helpe:
The bitter disposition of the time will haue it so.
On Lord, weele follow you.

Æne. Good morrow all. Exit Æneas

Par. And tell me noble Diomed: faith tell me true,
Euen in the soule of found good fellowship,
Who in your thoughts merits faire Helen most?
My selfe, or Menelaus?

Diom. Both alike.
He merits well to haue her, that doth seeke her,
Not making any scruple of her soylure,
With such a hell of paine, and world of charge.
And you as well to keepe her, that defend her,
Not palating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly losse of wealth and friends:
He like a puling Cuckold, would drinke vp
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed peece:
You like a lecher, out of whorish loynes,
Are pleas'd to breede out your inheritors:
Both merits poys'd, each weighs no lesse nor more,
But he as he, which heauier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country: heare me Paris,
For euery false drop in her baudy veines,
A Grecians life hath sunke: for euery scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Troian hath beene slaine. Since she could speake,
She hath not giuen so many good words breath,
As for her, Greekes and Troians suffred death.

Par. Faire Diomed, you doe as chapmen doe,
Dis praise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this vertue well;
Weele not commend, what we intend to sell.
Here lyes our way. Exeunt.

Enter Troylus and Cressida.

Troy. Deere trouble not your selfe: the morne is cold.

Cres. Then sweet my Lord, Ile call mine Vnckle down;
He shall vnbolt the Gates.

Troy. Trouble him not:
To bed, to bed: sleepe kill those pritty eyes,
And giue as soft attachment to thy sences,
As Infants empty of all thought.

Cres. Good morrow then.

Troy. I prithee now to bed.

Cres. Are you a weary of me?

Troy. O Cressida! but that the busie day
Wak't by the Larke, hath rouz'd the ribauld Crowes,
And dreaming night will hide our eyes no longer:
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath beene too briefe. (slayes,

Troy. Beshrew the witch! with venemous wights she
As hideously as hell; but flies the grasps of loue,
With wings more momentary, swift then thoughts:
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prithee tarry, you men will neuer tarry;
O foolish Cressid, I might haue still held off,
And then you would haue tarried. Harke, ther's one vp?

Pand. within. What's all the doores open here?

Troy. It is your Vnckle. Enter Pandarus.

Cres. A pestilence on him: now will he be mocking:
I shall haue such a life.

Pan. How now, how now? how goe maiden-heads?
Heare you Maide: wher's my cozin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang your self, you naughty mocking Vnckle:
You bring me to doo---- and then you floute me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what? let her say what:
What haue I brought you to doe?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart: youle neere be good, nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha: alas poore wretch: a poore Chipochia, hast not slept to night? would he not (a naughty man) let it sleepe: a bug-beare take him. One knocks.

Cres. Did not I tell you? would he were knockt ith' head. Who's that at doore? good Vnckle goe and see.
My Lord, come you againe into my Chamber:
You smile and mocke me, as if I meant naughtily.

Troy. Ha, ha.

Cre Come you are deceiu'd, I thinke of no such thing.
How earnestly they knocke: pray you come in. Knocke.
I would not for halfe Troy haue you seene here. Exeunt

Pan. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beate downe the doore? How now, what's the matter?

Æne. Good morrow Lord, good morrow

Pan. Who's there my Lord Æneas? by my troth I knew you not: what newes with you so early?

Æne Is not Prince Troylus here?

Pan. Here? what should he doe here?

Æne. Come he is here, my Lord, doe not deny him:
It doth import him much to speake with me.

Pan. Is he here say you? 'tis more then I know, Ile be sworne: For my owne part I came in late: what should he doe here?

Æne. Who, nay then: Come, come, youle doe him wrong, ere y'are ware: youle be so true to him, to be false to him: Doe not you know of him, but yet goe fetch him hither, goe.

Enter Troylus.

Troy. How now, what's the matter?

Æne. My Lord, I scarce haue leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: there is at hand,
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliuer'd to vs, and for him forth-with,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this houre,
We must giue vp to Diomeds hand
The Lady Cressida.

Troy. Is it concluded so?

Æne. By Priam, and the generall state of Troy,
They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Troy. How my atchieuements mocke me;
I will goe meete them: and my Lord Æneas,
We met by chance; you did not finde me here.

Æn. Good, good, my Lord, the secrets of nature
Haue not more gift in taciturnitie. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressid.

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost: the diuell take Antenor; the yong Prince will goe mad: a plague vpon Antenor: I would they had broke's necke.

Cres. How now? what's the matter? who was here?

Pan. Ah, ha!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? wher's my Lord? gone? tell me sweet Vnckle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deepe vnder the earth as I am aboue.

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter?

Pan. Prythee get thee in: would thou had'st neere been borne; I knew thou would'st be his death. O poore Gentleman: a plague vpon Antenor.

Creſ. Good Vnckle I beſeech you, on my knees, I beſeech you what's the matter?

Pan. Thou muſt be gone wench, thou muſt be gone; thou art chang'd for Anthenor: thou muſt to thy Father, and be gone from Troylus: 'twill be his death: 'twill be his baine, he cannot beare it..

Creſ. O you immortall gods! I will not goe.

Pan. Thou muſt.

Creſ. I will not Vnckle: I haue forgot my Father:
I know no touch of conſanguinitie:
No kin, no loue, no bloud, no ſoule, ſo neere me.
As the ſweet Troylus: O you gods diuine!
Make Creſſids name the very crowne of falſhood!
If euer ſhe leaue Troylus: time, orce and death,
Do to this body what extremitie you can;
But the ſtrong baſe and building of my loue,
Is as the very Center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it. I will goe in and weepe.

Pan. Doe, doe.

Creſ. Teare my bright heire, and ſcratch my praiſed cheekes,
Cracke my cleere voyce with ſobs, and breake my heart
With ſounding Troylus. I will not goe from Troy. Exeunt.

Enter Paris, Troylus, Æneas, Deyphebus, Antheuor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the houre prefixt
Of her deliuerie to this valiant Greeke
Comes faſt vpon: good my brother Troylus,
Tell you the Lady what ſhe is to doe,
And haſt her to the purpoſe.

Troy. Walke into her houſe:
Ile bring her to the Grecian preſently;
And to his hand, when I deliuer her,
Thinke it an Altar, and thy brother Troylus
A Prieſt, there offring to it his heart.

Par. I know what 'tis to loue,
And would, as I ſhall pittie, I could helpe.
Pleaſe you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Creſſid.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Creſ. Why tell you me of moderation?
The griefe is true, full perfect that I taſte,
And no leſſe in a ſenſe as ſtrong
As that which cauſeth it. How can I moderate it?
If I could temporiſe with my affection,
Or brew it to a weake and colder pallat,
The like alaiment could I giue my griefe:
My loue admits no qualifying croſſe; Enter Troylus.
No more my griefe, in ſuch a precious loſſe.

Pan. Here, here, here, he comes, a ſweet ducke.

Creſ. O Troylus, Troylus!

Pan. What a paire of ſpectacles is here? let me embrace too: oh hart, as the goodly ſaying is; O heart, heauie heart, why ſigheſt thou without breaking? where he anſwers againe; becauſe thou canſt not eaſe thy ſmart by friendſhip, nor by ſpeaking: there was neuer a truer rime; let vs caſt away nothing, for we may liue to haue needs of ſuch a Verſe: we ſee it, we ſee it: how now Lambs?

Troy. Creſſid: I loue thee in ſo ſtrange a puritie;
That the bleſt gods, as angry with my fancie,
More bright in zeale, then the deuotion which
Cold lips blow to their Deities: take thee from me.

Creſ. Haue the gods enuie?

Pan. I, I, I, 'tis too plaine a caſe.

Creſ. And is it true, that I muſt goe from Troy?

Troy. A hatefull truth.

Creſ. What, and from Troylus too?

Troy. From Troy, and Troylus.

Creſ. Is poſſible?

Troy. And ſodainely, where iniurie of chance Puts backe leaue-taking, iuſtles roughly by
All time of pauſe; rudely beguiles our lips
Of all reioyndure: forcibly preuents
Our lockt embraſures; ſtrangles our deare vowes,
Euen in the birth of our owne laboring breath.
We two, that with ſo many thouſand ſighes
Did buy each other, muſt poorely ſell our ſelues,
With the rude breuitie and diſcharge of our Iniurious time; now with a robbers haſte
Crams his rich theeuerie vp, he knowes not how.
As many farwels as be ſtars in heauen,
With diſtinct breath, and conſign'd kiſſes to them,
He fumbles vp into a looſe adiew;
And ſcants vs with a ſingle famiſht kiſſe,
Diſtaſting with the ſalt of broken teares. Enter Æneas.

Æneas within. My Lord, is the Lady ready?

Troy. Harke, you are call'd: ſome ſay the genius ſo
Cries, come to him that inſtantly muſt dye.
Bid them haue patience: ſhe ſhall come anon.

Pan. Where are my teares? raine, to lay this winde, or my heart will be blowne vp by the root.

Creſ. I muſt then to the Grecians?

Troy. No remedy.

Creſ. A wofull Creſſid 'mong'ſt the merry Greekes.

Troy. When ſhall we ſee againe?

Troy. Here me my loue: be thou but true of heart.

Creſ. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?

Troy. Nay, we muſt vſe expoſtulation kindely,
For it is parting from vs:
I ſpeake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:
For I will throw my Gloue to death himſelfe,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But be thou true, ſay I, to faſhion in
My ſequent proteſtation: be thou true,
And I will ſee thee.

Creſ. O you ſhall be expoſ'd, my Lord to dangers
As infinite, as imminent: but Ile be true.

Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;
Weare this Sleeue.

Creſ. And you this Gloue.
When ſhall I ſee you?

Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centinele,
To giue thee nightly viſitation.
But yet be true.

Creſ. O heauens: be true againe?

Troy. Heare why I ſpeake it, Loue:
The Grecian youths are full of qualitie,
Their louing well compos'd, with guift of nature,
Flowing and ſwelling ore with Arts and exerciſe:
How nouelties may moue, and parts with perſon.
Alas, a kinde of godly iealouſie;
Which I beſeech you call a vertuous ſinne:
Makes me affraid.

Creſ. O heauens, you loue me not!

Troy. Dye I a villaine then:
In this I doe not call your faith in queſtion
So mainely as my merit: I cannot ſing,
Nor heele the high Lauolt; nor ſweeten talke:
Nor play at ſubtill games; faire vertues all;

ch the Grecians are moſt prompt and pregnant:
an tell that in each grace of theſe,
urkes a ſtill and dumb-diſcourſiue diuell,
mpts moſt cunningly: but be not tempted.
. Doe you thinke I will:
No, but ſomething may be done that we will not:
metimes we are diuels to our ſelues,
we will tempt the frailtie of our powers,
ing on their changefull poter ie.
Eneas within. Nay, good my Lord?
. Come kiſſe, and let vs part.
ris within. Brother Troylus?
. Good brother come you hither,
ing Æneas and the Grecian with you,
: My Lord, will you be true? Exit
. Who I? alas it is my vice, my fault:
others fish with craft for great opinion,
great truth, catch meere ſimplicitie;
ſome with cunning guild their copper crownes,
truth and plainneſſe I doe weare mine bare:

Enter the Greekes.

ot my truth; the morrall of my wit
ne and true, ther's all the reach of it.
me ſir Diomed, here is the Lady for Antenor, we deliuer you.
port (Lord) Ile giue her to thy hand, y the way poſſeſſe thee what ſhe is ee her faire; and by my ſoule, faire Grecke, hou ſtand at mercy of my Sword,
Creſſid, and thy life ſhall be as ſafe am is in Illion!
m. Faire Lady Creſſid, eaſe you ſaue the thankes this Prince expects:
ſtre in youreye, heauen in your cheeke,
es your faire viſage, and to Diomed
hall be miſtreſſe, and command him wholly.
. Grecian, thou do'ſt not vſe me curteouſly, me the ſcale of my peſition towards,
ing her. I tell thee Lord of Greece:
as farre high ſoaring o're thy praiſes,
ou vnworthy to be cal'd her ſeruant:
ge thee vſe her well, euen for my charge:
y the dreadfull Pluto, if thou do'ſt not, gh the great bulke Achilles be thy guard)
thy throate.
m. Oh be not mou'd Prince Troylus;
e be priuiledg'd by my place and meſſage,
a ſpeaker free? when I am hence,
ſwer to my luſt: and know my Lord;
thing doe on charge: to her owne worth all be priz'd: but that you ſay, be't ſo;
ake it in my ſpirit and honor, no.
. Come to the Port. Ile tell thee Diomed, braue, ſhall oft make thee to hide thy head:
give me your hand, and as we walke, r owne ſelues bend we our needefull talke.
Sound Trumpet.
. Harke, Hellens Trumpet.
ne. How haue we ſpent this morning
rince muſt thinke me tardy and remiſſe, ſworn to ride before him in the field.
. 'Tis Troylus fault: come, come, to field with him.
Exeunt.
. Let vs make ready ſtraight.
ne. Yea, with a Bridegroomes freſh alacritie

Let vs addreſſe to tend on Hectors heeles:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lye
On his faire worth, and ſingle Chiualrie.

Enter Aiax armed, Achilles, Patroclus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, Vliſſes, Neſtor, Calcas, &c.

Aga. Here art thou in appointment freſh and faire,
Anticipating time. With ſtarting courage,
Giue with thy Trumpet a loud note to Troy
Thou dreadfull Aiax, that the appauled aire
May pierce the head of the great Combatant,
And hale him hither.
Aia. Thou, Trumpet, ther's my purſe;
Now cracke thy lungs, and ſplit thy braſen pipe:
Blow villaine, till thy ſphered Bias cheeke
Out-ſwell the collicke of puft Aquilon:
Come, ſtretch thy cheſt, and let thy eyes ſpout bloud:
Thou blowe'ſt for Hector.
Vliſ. No Trumpet anſwers.
Achil. 'Tis but early dayes.
Aga. Is not yong Diomed with Calcas daughter?
Vliſ. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate,
He riſes on the toe: that ſpirit of his
In aſpiration liſts him from the earth.
Aga. Is this the Lady Creſſid?
Dio. Euen ſhe.
Aga. Moſt deerely welcome to the Greekes, ſweete Lady.
Neſt. Our Generall doth ſalute you with a kiſſe.
Vliſ. Yet is the kindeneſſe but particular; 'twere better ſhe were kiſt in generall.
Neſt. And very courtly counſell: Ile begin. So much for Neſtor.
Achil. Ile take that winter from your lips faire Lady Achilles bids you welcome.
Mene. I had good argument for kiſſing once.
Patro. But that's no argument for kiſſing now;
For thus pop't Paris in his hardiment.
Vliſ. Oh deadly gall, and theame of all our ſcornes,
For which we looſe our heads, to gild his hornes.
Patro. The firſt was Menelaus kiſſe, this mine:
Patroclus kiſſes you.
Mene. Oh this is trim.
Patr. Paris and I kiſſe euermore for him.
Mene. Ile haue my kiſſe ſir: Lady by your leaue.
Creſ. In kiſſing doe you render, or receiue.
Patr. Both take and giue.
Creſ. Ile make my match to liue,
The kiſſe you take is better then you giue: therefore no kiſſe.
Mene. Ile giue you boote, Ile giue you three for one.
Creſ. You are an odde man, giue euen, or giue none.
Mene. An odde man Lady, euery man is odde.
Creſ. No, Paris is not; for you know 'tis true,
That you are odde, and he is euen with you.
Mene. You ſillip me ath' head.
Creſ. No, Ile be ſworne.
Vliſ. It were no match, your naile againſt his horne:
May I ſweete Lady beg a kiſſe of you?
Creſ. You may.
Vliſ. I doe deſire it.
Creſ. Why begge then?
Vliſ. Why then for Venus ſake, giue me a kiſſe:
When Helen is a maide againe, and his——
Creſ. I am your debtor, claime it when 'tis due.

 Vliſ. Neuer's

Vliſ. Neuer's my day, and meu a kiſſe of you.
Dion. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father
Neſt. A woman of quicke ſence.
Vliſ. Fie, fie, vpon her:
Ther's a language in her eye, her cheeke, her lip:
Nay, her foote ſpeakes, her wanton ſpirites looke out
At euery ioynt, and motiue of her body:
Oh theſe encounterers ſo glib of tongue,
That giue a coaſting welcome ere it comes;
And wide vnclaſpe the tables of their thoughts,
To euery tickling reader: ſet them downe,
For ſluttiſh ſpoyles of opportunitie;
And daughters of the game. Exeunt.

Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Æneas, Helenus and Attendants. Florish.

All. The Troians Trumpet.
Aga. Yonder comes the troope.
Æne. Haile all you ſtate of Greece: what ſhalbe done
To him that victory commands? or doe you purpoſe,
A victor ſhall be knowne: will you the Knights
Shall to the edge of all extremitie
Purſue each other; or ſhall be diuided
By any voyce, or order of the field: Hector bad aske?
Aga. Which way would Hector haue it?
Æne. He cares not, he'le obey conditions.
Aga. 'Tis done like Hector, but ſecurely done,
A little proudly, and great deale diſprizing
The Knight oppos'd.
Æne. If not Achilles ſir, what is your name?
Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.
Æne. Therefore Achilles: but what ere, know this,
In the extremity of great and little:
Valour and pride excell themſelues in Hector;
The one almoſt as infinite as all;
The other blanke as nothing: weigh him well:
And that which lookes like pride, is curteſie:
This Aiax is halfe made of Hectors bloud;
In loue whereof, halfe Hector ſtaies at home:
Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to ſeeke
This blended Knight, halfe Troian, and halfe Grecke.
Achil. A maiden battaile then? O I perceiue you.
Aga. Here is ſir, Diomed: goe gentle Knight,
Stand by our Aiax: as you and Lord Æneas
Conſent vpon the order of their fight.
So be it: either to the vttermoſt.
Or elſe a breach: the Combatants being kin,
Halfe ſtints their ſtrife, before their ſtrokes begin.
Vliſ. They are oppos'd already.
Aga. What Troian is that ſame that lookes ſo heauy?
Vliſ. The yongeſt Sonne of Priam;
A true Knight; they call him Troylus;
Not yet mature, yet matcheleſſe, firme of word,
Speaking in deedes, and deedeleſſe in his tongue;
Not ſoone prouok't, nor being prouok't, ſoone calm'd;
His heart and hand both open, and both free:
For what he has, he giues; what thinkes, he ſhewes;
Yet giues he not till iudgement guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impaire thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector in his blaze of wrath ſubſcribes
To tender obiects; but he, in heate of action,
Is more vindicatiue then iealous loue,
They call him Troylus; and on him erect,
A ſecond hope, as fairely built as Hector.
Thus ſaies Æneas, one that knowes the youth,
Euen to his inches: and with priuate ſoule,
Did in great Illion thus tranſlate him to me. Alarum.
Aga. They are in action.
Neſt. Now Aiax hold thine owne.
Troy. Hector, thou ſleep'ſt, awake thee.
Aga. His blowes are well diſpos'd there Aiax. trumpets ceaſe.
Dion. You muſt no more.
Æne. Princes enough, ſo pleaſe you.
Aia. I am not warme yet, let vs fight againe.
Dion. As Hector pleaſes.
Hect. Why then will I no more:
Thou art great Lord, my Fathers ſiſters Sonne;
A couſen german to great Priams ſeede:
The obligation of our bloud forbids
A gorie emulation 'twixt vs twaine:
Were thy commixion, Greeke and Troian ſo,
That thou could'ſt ſay, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Troian: the ſinewes of this Legge,
All Greeke, and this all Troy: my Mothers bloud
Runs on the dexter cheeke, and this ſinifies
Bounds in my fathers: by Ioue multipotent,
Thou ſhould'ſt not beare from me a Greekiſh member Wherein my ſword had not impreſſure made
Of our ranke feud: but the iuſt gods gainſay,
That any drop thou borrow'ſt from thy mother,
My ſacred Aunt, ſhould by my mortall Sword
Be drained. Let me embrace thee Aiax:
By him that thunders, thou haſt luſtie Armes;
Hector would haue them fall vpon him thus.
Cozen, all honor to thee.
Aia. I thanke thee Hector:
Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee Cozen, and beare hence
A great addition, earned in thy death.
Hect. Not Neoptolymus ſo mirable,
On whoſe bright creſt, fame with her loud'ſt O yes)
Cries, This is he; could'ſt promiſe to himſelfe,
A thought of added honor, torne from Hector.
Æne. There is expectance here from both the ſides,
What further you will doe?
Hect. Weele anſwere it:
The iſſue is embracement: Aiax, farewell.
Aia. If I might in entreaties finde ſucceſſe,
As ſeld I haue the chance: I would deſire
My famous Couſin to our Grecian Tents.
Dion. 'Tis Agamemnons wiſh, and great Achilles
Doth long to ſee vnarm'd the valiant Hector.
Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troylus to me:
And ſignifie this louing enterview
To the expecters of our Troian part:
Deſire them home. Giue me thy hand, my Couſin:
I will goe eate with thee, and ſee your Knights.

Enter Agamemnon and the reſt.

Aia. Great Agamemnon comes to meete vs here.
Hect. The worthieſt of them, tell me name by name:
But for Achilles, mine owne ſearching eyes
Shall finde him by his large and portly ſtaie.
Aga. Worthy of Armes: as welcome as to one
That would be rid of ſuch an enemie.
But that's no welcome: vnderſtand more cleere
What's paſt, and what's to come, is ſtrew'd with huſkes,
And formleſſe ruine of oblitiion:
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias drawing:
Bids thee with moſt diuine integritie,
From heart of very heart, great Hector welcome.
Hect. I thanke thee moſt imperious Agamemnon.

Aga. My

Aga. My well-fam'd Lord of Troy, no leſſe to you.
Men. Let me confirme my Princely brothers greeting,
You brace of warlike Brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Who muſt we anſwer?
Æne. The Noble Menelaus.
Hect. O, you my Lord, by Mars his gauntlet thanks,
Mocke not, that I affect th'untraded Oath,
Your quondam wife ſweares ſtill by Venus Glove
She's well, but bad me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now ſir, ſhe's a deadly Theame.
Hect. O pardon, I offend.
Neſt. I haue (thou gallant Troyan) ſeene thee oft Labouring for deſtiny, make cruell way
Through rankes of Greekiſh youth: and I haue ſeen thee
As hot as Perſeus, ſpurre thy Phrygian Steed,
And ſeene thee ſcorning forfeits and ſubdumenes,
When thou haſt hung thy advanced ſword i'th'ayre,
Not letting it decline, on the declined:
That I haue ſaid vnto my ſtanders by,
Loe Iupiter is yonder, dealing life.
And I haue ſeene thee pauſe, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greekes haue hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wreſtling. This haue I ſeene,
But this thy countenance (ſtill locks in ſteele)
I never ſaw till now. I knew thy Grandſire,
And once fought with him; he was a Souldier good,
But by great Mars, the Captaine of vs all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee,
And (worthy Warriour) welcome to our Tents.
Æne. 'Tis the old Neſtor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
That haſt ſo long walk'd hand in hand with time:
Moſt reverend Neſtor, I am glad to claſpe thee
Ne. I would my armes could match thee in contention
As they contend with thee in courteſie.
Hect. I would they could.
Neſt. Ha! by this white beard I'ld fight with thee to morrow. Well, welcom, welcome: I haue ſeen the time.
Vlyſ. I wonder now, how yonder City ſtands,
When we haue here her Baſe and pillar by vs.
Hect. I know your ſauour Lord Vlyſſes well.
Ah ſir, there's many a Greeke and Troyan dead,
Since firſt I ſaw your ſelfe, and Diomed
In Illion, on your Greekiſh Embaſſie.
Vlyſ. Sir, I foretold you then what would enſue,
My propheſie is but halfe his iourney yet;
For yonder walls that pertly front your Towne,
Yond Towers, whoſe wanton tops do buſſe the clouds,
Muſt kiſſe their owne feet.
Hect. I muſt not beleeue you:
There they ſtand yet: and modeſtly I thinke,
The fall of every Phrygian ſtone will coſt
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crownes all,
And that old common Arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it
Vlyſ. So to him we leaue it.
Moſt gentle, and moſt valiant Hector, welcome;
After the Generall, I beſeech you next
To Feaſt with me, and ſee me at my Tent.
Achil. I ſhall foreſtall thee Lord Vlyſſes, thou:
Now Hector I haue fed mine eyes on thee.
I haue with exact view perus'd thee Hector,
And quoted ioynt by ioynt.
Hect. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hect. Stand faire I prythee, let me looke on thee.
Achil. Behold thy fill.
Hect. Nay, I haue done already.
Achil. Thou art to breefe, I will the ſecond time,
As I would buy thee, view thee, limbe by limbe.
Hect. O like a Booke of ſport thou'lt reade me o're:
But there's more in me then thou vnderſtand'ſt.
Why doeſt thou ſo oppreſſe me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me you Heauens, in which part of his body
Shall I deſtroy him? Whether there, or there, or there,
That I may giue the local wound a name,
And make diſtinct the very breach, whereout
Hectors great ſpirit flew. Anſwer me heauens.
Hect. It would diſcredit the bleſt Gods, proud man,
To anſwer ſuch a queſtion: Stand againe;
Think'ſt thou to catch my life ſo pleaſantly,
As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?
Achil. I tell thee yea.
Hect. Wert thou the Oracle to tell me ſo,
I'ld not beleeue thee: henceforth guard thee well,
For I'le not kill thee there, nor there, nor there,
But by the forge that ſtythied Mars his helme,
I'le kill thee every where, yea, ore and ore.
You wiſeſt Grecians, pardon me this bragge,
His inſolence drawes folly from my lips,
But I'le endeuour deeds to match theſe words,
Or may I never——
Aiax. Do not chafe thee Coſin:
And you Achilles, let theſe threats alone
Till accident, or purpoſe bring you too't.
You may every day enough of Hector
If you haue ſtomacke. The generall ſtate I feare,
Can ſcarſe intreat you to be odde with him.
Hect. I pray you let vs ſee you in the field,
We haue had pelting Warres ſince you refus'd
The Grecians cauſe.
Achil. Doſt thou intreat me Hector?
To morrow do I meete thee fell as death,
To night, all Friends.
Hect. Thy hand vpon that match.
Aga. Firſt, all you Peeres of Greece go to my Tent,
There in the full conuiue you: Afterwards,
As Hectors leyſure, and your bounties ſhall
Concurre together, ſeuerally intreat him,
Beate lowd the Taborins, let the Trumpets blow,
That this great Souldier may his welcome know. Exeunt
Troy. My Lord Vlyſſes, tell me I beſeech you,
In what place of the Field doth Calchas keepe?
Vlyſ. At Menelaus Tent, moſt Princely Troylus,
There Diomed doth feaſt with him to night,
Who neither lookes on heauen, nor on earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the faire Creſſid.
Troy. Shall I (ſweet Lord) be bound to thee ſo much,
After we part from Agamemnons Tent,
To bring me thither?
Vlyſ. You ſhall command me ſir:
As gentle tell me, of what Honour was
This Creſſida in Troy, had ſhe no Lover there
That wailes her abſence?
Troy. O ſir, to ſuch as boaſting ſhew their ſcarres,
A mocke is due: will you walke on my Lord?
She was belou'd, ſhe lou'd: ſhe is, and doth:
But ſtill ſweet Loue is food for Fortunes tooth. Exeunt.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. Ile heat his blood with Greekiſh wine to night
Which

Which with my Cemitar Ile coole to morrow:
Patroclus, let vs Feaſt him to the hight.
Pat. Heere comes Therſites. Enter Therſites.
Achil. How now, thou core of Enuy?
Thou craſty batch of Nature, what's the newes?
Ther. Why thou picture of what thou ſeem'ſt, & I doll of Ideot-worſhippers, here's a Letter for thee.
Achil. From whence, Fragment?
Ther. Why thou full diſh of Foole, from Troy.
Pat. Who keepes the Tent now?
Ther. The Surgeons box, or the Patients wound.
Patr. Well ſaid aduerſity, and what need theſe tricks?
Ther. Prythee be ſilent boy, I profit not by thy talke, thou art thought to be Achilles male Varlot.
Patro. Male Varlot you Rogue: What's that?
Ther. Why his maſculine Whore. Now the rotten diſeaſes of the South, guts-griping Ruptures, Catarres, Loades a gauell i'th'backe, Lethargies, cold Palſies, and the like, take and take againe, ſuch prepoſtrous diſcoueries.
Pat. Why thou damnable box of enuy thou, what meen'ſt thou to curſe thus?
Ther. Do I curſe thee?
Patr. Why no, you ruinous But, you whorſon indiſtinguiſhable Curre.
Ther. No? why art thou then exaſperate, thou idle, immaterial skiene of Sleyd ſilke; thou greene Sarcenet flap for a ſore eye, thou taffell of a Prodigals purſe thou: Ah how the poore world is peſtred with ſuch water-flies, diminutiues of Nature.
Pat. Out gall.
Ther. Finch Egge.
Ach. My ſweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpoſe in to morrowes battell:
Heere is a Letter from Queene Hecuba,
A token from her daughter, my faire Loue,
Both taxing me, and gaging me to keepe
An Oath that I haue ſworne. I will not breake it,
Fall Greekes, faile Fame, Honor or go, or ſtay,
My maior vow lyes heere; this Ile obay:
Come, come Therſites, helpe to trim my Tent,
This night in banqueting muſt all be ſpent.
Away Patroclus. Exit.
Ther. With too much bloud, and too little Brain, theſe two may run mad: but if with too much braine, and too little bloud, they do, Ile be a curer of madmen. Heere's Agamemnon, an honeſt fellow enough, and one that loues Quailes, but he has not ſo much Braine as eare-wax; and the goodly transformation of Iupiter there his Brother, the Bull, the primatiue Statue, and oblique memorandi of Cuckolds, a thriſty ſhooing-horne in a chaine, hanging at his Brothers legge, to what forme but that he is, ſhould wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turne him too: to an Aſſe were nothing; hee is both Aſſe and Oxe; to an Oxe were nothing, hee is both Oxe and Aſſe: to be a Dogge, a Mule, a Cat, a Fitchew, a Toade, a Lizard, an Owle, a Puttocke, or a Herring without a Roe, I would not care: but to be Menelaus, I would conſpire againſt Deſtiny. Aſke me not what I would be, if I were not Therſites: for I care not to be the lowſe of a Lazar, ſo I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day, ſpirits and fires.
Enter Hector, Aiax, Agamemnon, Vliſſes, Neſtor, Diomed, with Lights.
Aga. We go wrong, we go wrong.
Aiax. No yonder 'tis, there where we ſee the light.
Hect. I trouble you.
Aiax. No, not a whit.
Enter Achilles.
Vliſ. Heere comes himſelfe to guide you?
Achil. Welcome braue Hector, welcome Princes all.
Agam. So now faire Prince of Troy, I bid goodnight, Aiax commands the guard to tend on you.
Hect. Thanks, and goodnight to the Greeks generall.
Nest. Goodnight my Lord.
Hect. Goodnight ſweet Lord Menelaus.
Ther. Sweet draught: ſweet quoth-a? ſweet ſinke, ſweet ſuce.
Achil. Goodnight and welcom, both at once, to thoſe that go, or tarry.
Aga. Goodnight.
Achil. Old Neſtor tarries, and you too Diomed. Keepe Hector company an houre, or two.
Dio. I cannot Lord, I haue important buſineſſe, The tide whereof is now. goodnight great Hector Hect. Giue me your hand.
Vliſ. Follow his Torch, he goes to Chalcas Tent, Ile keepe you company Troy. Sweet ſir, you honour me.
Hect. And ſo good night.
Achil. Come, come, enter my Tent. Exeunt.
Ther. That ſame Diomed's a falſe-hearted Rogue, a moſt ſeiuſt Knaue; I will no more truſt him when he leeres, then I will a Serpent when he hiſſes: he will ſpend his mouth & promiſe, like Brabler the Hound; but when he performes, Aſtronomers foretell it, that is prodigious, there will come ſome change: the Sunne borrowes of the Moone when Diomed keepes his word. I will either leaue to ſee Hector, then not to dogge him: they go, he keepes a Troyan Drab, and vſes the Traitour Chalcas his Tent. Ile after——Nothing but Lechery! All incontinent Varlets. Exeunt
Enter Diomed.
Dio. What are you vp here ho? ſpeake?
Chal. Who calls?
Dio. Diomed, Chalcas (I thinke) where's you Daughter?
Chal. She comes to you.
Enter Troylus and Vliſſes.
Vliſ. Stand where the Torch may not diſcouer vs.
Enter Creſſid.
Troy. Creſſid comes forth to him.
Dio. How now my charge?
Creſ. Now my ſweet gardian: harke a word with you
Troy. Yea, ſo familiar?
Vliſ. She will ſing any man at firſt ſight.
Ther. And any man may finde her, if he can take her life: ſhe's noted.
Dio. Will you remember?
Cal. Remember? yes.
Dio. Nay, but doe then; and let your minde be coupled with your words.
Troy. What ſhould ſhe remember?
Vliſ. Liſt?
Creſ. Sweete hony Greek, tempt me no more to folly.
Ther. Roguery.
Dio. Nay then.
Creſ. Ile tell you what.
Dio. Fo, fo, come tell a pin, you are a forſworne.——
Creſ. In faith I cannot: what would you haue me do?
Ther. A iugling tricke, to be ſecretly open.
Dio. What did you ſweare you would beſtow on me?
Creſ. I prethee do not hold me to mine oath.
Bid me doe not any thing but that ſweete Greeke.
Dio. Good

Dio. Good night.
Troy. Hold, patience.
Vliſ. How now Troian?
Creſ. Diomed.
Dio. No, no, good night: Ile be your foole no more.
Troy. Thy better muſt.
Creſ. Harke one word in your eare.
Troy. O plague and madneſſe!
Vliſ. You are moued Prince, let vs depart I pray you,
Leſt your diſpleaſure ſhould enlarge it ſelfe
To wrathfull termes: this place is dangerous;
The time right deadly: I beſeech you goe.
Troy. Behold, I pray you.
Vliſ. Nay, good my Lord goe off:
You flow to great diſtraction: come my Lord?
Troy. I pray thee ſtay?
Vliſ. You haue not patience, come.
Troy. I pray you ſtay? by hell and hell torments,
I will not ſpeake a word.
Dio. And ſo good night.
Creſ. Nay, but you part in anger.
Troy. Doth that grieue thee? O withered truth!
Vliſ. Why, how now Lord?
Troy. By Ioue I will be patient.
Creſ. Gardian? why Greeke?
Dio. Fo, fo, adew, you palter.
Creſ. In faith I doe not: come hither once againe.
Vliſ. You ſhake my Lord at ſomething, will you goe you will breake out.
Troy. She ſtroakes his cheeke.
Vliſ. Come, come.
Troy. Nay ſtay, by Ioue I will not ſpeake a word.
There is betweene my will, and all offences,
A guard of patience; ſtay a little while.
Ther. How the diuell Luxury with his fat rumpe and potato finger, tickles theſe together: fry lechery, fry.
Dio. But will you then?
Creſ. In faith I will lo; never truſt me elſe.
Dio. Giue me ſome token for the ſurety of it.
Creſ. Ile fetch you one. Exit.
Vliſ. You haue ſworne patience.
Troy. Feare me not ſweete Lord.
I will not be my ſelfe, nor haue cognition
Of what I feele: I am all patience. Enter Creſſid.
Ther. Now the pledge, now, now, now.
Creſ. Here Diomed, keepe this Sleeue.
Troy. O beautie! where is thy Faith?
Vliſ. My Lord.
Troy. I will be patient, outwardly I will.
Creſ. You looke vpon that Sleeue? behold it well:
He lou'd me: O falſe wench: giue't me againe.
Dio. Whoſe was't?
Creſ. It is no matter now I haue't againe.
I will not meete with you to morrow night:
I prythee Diomed viſite me no more.
Ther. Now ſhe ſharpens: well ſaid Whetſtone.
Dio. I ſhall haue it.
Creſ. What, this?
Dio. I that.
Creſ. O all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge;
Thy Maiſter now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and ſighes, and takes my Gloue,
And gives memoriall dainty kiſſes to it;
As I kiſſe thee.
Dio. Nay, doe not ſnatch it from me,
Creſ. He that takes that, takes my heart withall.
Dio. I had your heart before, this followes it.
Troy. I did ſweare patience.
Creſ. You ſhall not haue it Diomed; faith you ſhall not:
Ile giue you ſomething elſe.
Dio. I will haue this: whoſe was it?
Creſ. It is no matter.
Dio. Come tell me whoſe it was?
Creſ. 'Twas one that lou'd me better then you will.
But now you haue it, take it.
Dio. Whoſe was it?
Creſ. By all Dianas waiting women yond:
And by her ſelfe, I will not tell you whoſe.
Dio. To morrow will I weare it on my Helme,
And grieue his ſpirit that dares not challenge it.
Troy. Wert thou the diuell, and wor'ſt it on thy horne,
It ſhould be challeng'd.
Creſ. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis paſt; and yet it is not:
I will not keepe my word.
Dio. Why then farewell,
Thou neuer ſhalt mocke Diomed againe.
Creſ. You ſhall not goe: one cannot ſpeake a word,
But it ſtrait ſtarts you.
Dio. I doe not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I by Pluto: but that that likes not me, pleaſes me beſt.
Dio. What ſhall I come? the houre.
Creſ. I, come: O Ioue! doe, come: I ſhall be plagu'd.
Dio. Farewell till then. Exit.
Creſ. Good night: I prythee come;
Troylus farewell; one eye yet lookes on thee;
But with my heart, the other eye, doth ſee.
Ah poore our ſexe; this fault in vs I finde:
The errour of our eye, directs our minde.
What errour leads, muſt erre: O then conclude,
Minds ſwai'd by eyes, are full of turpitude. Exit.
Ther. A proofe of ſtrength ſhe could not publiſh more,
Vnleſſe ſhe ſay, my minde is now turn'd whore.
Vliſ. All's done my Lord.
Troy. It is.
Vliſ. Why ſtay we then?
Troy. To make a recordation to my ſoule
Of euery ſyllable that here was ſpoke:
But if I tell how theſe two did coaſt;
Shall I not lye, in publiſhing a truth?
Sith yet there is a credence in my heart:
An eſperance ſo obſtinately ſtrong,
That doth inuert that teſt of eyes and eares;
As if thoſe organs had deceptious functions,
Created onely to calumniate.
Was Creſſed here?
Vliſ. I cannot coniure Troian.
Troy. She was not ſure.
Vliſ. Moſt ſure ſhe was.
Troy. Why my negation hath no taſte of madneſſe?
Vliſ. Nor mine my Lord: Creſſid was here but now.
Troy. Let it not be beleeu'd for womanhood:
Thinke we had mothers; doe not giue aduantage
To ſtubborne Critticks, apt without a theame
For depraauation, to ſquare the generall ſex
By Creſſids rule. Rather thinke this not Creſſid.
Vliſ. What hath ſhe done Prince, that can ſoyle our mothers?
Troy. Nothing at all, vnleſſe that this were ſhe.
Ther. Will he ſwagger himſelfe out on's owne eyes?
Troy. This ſhe? no, this is Diomeds Creſſida:
If beautie haue a ſoule, this is not ſhe:

If Soules guide vowes; if vowes are Sanctimonie;
If Sanctimonie be the gods delight:
If there be rule in vnitie it selfe,
This is not she: O madnesse of discourse!
That cause sets vp, with, and against thy selfe
By soule authoritie: where reason can reuolt
Without perdition, and losse assume all reason,
Without reuolt. This is, and is not Cressid
Within my soule, there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature, that a thing inseperate,
Diuides more wider then the skie and earth;
And yet the spacious breadth of this diuision,
Admits no Orifex for a point as subtle,
As Arachnes broken woofe to enter:
Instance, O instance! strong as Plutoes gates:
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heauen:
Instance, O instance, strong as heauen it selfe:
The bonds of heauen are slipt, dissolu'd and loos'd,
And with another knot fiue finger tied,
The fractions of her faith, orts of her loue:
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greazie reliques,
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Vlif. May worthy Troylus be halfe attached
With that which here his passion doth expresse?

Troy. I Greeke: and that shall be diuulged well
In Characters, as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus: neuer did young man fancy
With so eternall, and so fixt a soule.
Harke Greek: as much I doe Cressida loue;
So much by weight, hate I her Diomed,
That Sleeue is mine, that heele beare in his Helme:
Were it a Caske compos'd by Vulcans skill,
My Sword should bite it: Not the dreadfull spout,
Which Shipmen doe the Hurricano call,
Constring'd in masse by the almighty Fenne,
Shall dizzie with more clamour Neptunes eare
In his discent; then shall my prompted sword,
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. Heele tickle it for his concupie.

Troy. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false:
Let all vntruths stand by thy stained name,
And they le seeme glorious.

Vlif. O containe your selfe:
Your passion draws eares hither.

Enter Æneas.

Æne. I haue beene seeking you this houre my Lord:
Hector by this is arming him in Troy.
Ajax your Guard, stayes to conduct you home.

Troy. Haue with you Prince: my courteous Lord adew:
Farewell reuolted faire: and Diomed,
Stand fast and weare a Castle on thy head.

Vli. He bring you to the Gates.

Troy. Accept distracted thankes.

Exeunt Troylus, Æneas, and Ulisses.

Ther. Would I could meete that roague Diomed, I would croke like a Rauen: I would bode, I would bode: Patroclus will giue me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the Parrot will not doe more for an Almond, then he for a commodious drab: Lechery, lechery, still warres and lechery, nothing else holds fashion. A burning diuell take them.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my Lord so much vngently temper'd,
To stop his eares against admonishment?
Vnarme, vnarme, and doe not fight to day.

Hect. You traine me to offend you: get you gone.

By the euerlasting gods, Ile goe.

And. My dreames will sure proue ominous to the day.

Hect. No more I say. Enter Cassandra.

Cassa. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here sister, arm'd, and bloudy in intent;
Consort with me in loud and deere petition:
pursue we him on knees: for I haue dreamt
Of bloudy turbulence; and this whole night
Hath nothing beene but shapes, and formes of slaughter.

Cass. O, 'tis true,

Hect. Ho? bid my Trumpet sound

Cass. No notes of sallie, for the heauens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begon I say: the gods haue heard me sweare.

Cass. The gods are deafe to hot and peruish vowes:
They are polluted offrings, more abhord
Then spotted Liuers in the sacrifice.

And. O be perswaded, doe not count it holy,
To hurt by being iust; it is as lawfull:
For we would count giue much to as violent thefts,
And rob in the behalfe of charitie.

Cass. It is the purpose that makes strong the vowes;
But vowes to every purpose must not hold:
Vnarme sweete Hector.

Hect. Hold you still I say;
Mine honour keepes the weather of my fate:
Life euery man holds deere, but the deere man
Holds honor farre more precious, deere, when life

Enter Troylus.

How now yong man? mean'st thou to fight to day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to perswade.

Exit Cassandra.

Hect. No faith yong Troylus; doffe thy harnesse youth
I am to day i'th'vaine of Chiualrie:
Let grow thy Sinewes till their knots be strong:
And tempt not yet the brushes of the warre.
Vnarme thee, goe; and doubt thou not braue boy,
Ile stand to day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Troy. Brother, you haue a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a Lyon, then a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troylus chide me for it.

Troy. When many times the captiue Grecian falls,
Euen in the fanne and winde of your faire Sword:
You bid them rise, and liue.

Hect. O 'tis fooler play.

Troy. Fooles play, by heauen Hector.

Hect. How now? how now?

Troy. For th'loue of all the gods
Let's leaue the Hermit Pitty with our Mothers;
And when we haue our Armors buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride vpon our swords,
Spur them to ruthfull worke, reine them from ruth.

Hect. Fie sauage, fie.

Troy. Hector, then 'tis warres.

Hect. Troylus, I would not haue you fight to day.

Troy. Who should with-hold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars,
Beckning with fierie trunchion my retire;
Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees;
Their eyes ore-galled with recourse of teares;
Nor you my brother, with your true sword drawne
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way:
But by my ruine

Enter Priam and Cassandra.

Cass. Lay hold vpon him Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou loose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,

ogether.
. Come Hector, come, goe backe:
: hath dreampt: thy mother hath had viſions;
s doth foreſee; and I my ſelfe,
a Prophet ſuddenly enrapt,
ee that this day is ominous:
e come backe.
Æneas is a field,
ſtand engag'd to many Greekes,
he faith of valour, to appeare
ning to them.
. I, but thou ſhalt not goe.
I muſt not breake my faith:
w me dutifull, therefore deare ſir,
ot ſhame reſpect; but giue me leaue hat courſe by your conſent and voice, ou doe here forbid me, Royall Priam.
O Priam, yeelde not to him.
Doe not deere father.
Andromache I am offended with you:
e loue you heare me, get you in.
Exit Andromache.
This fooliſh, dreaming, ſuperſtitious girle,
l theſe bodements.
O farewell, deere Hector:
ow thou dieſt, looke how thy eye turnes pale:
ow thy wounds doth bleede as many vents:
ew Troy roares; how Hecuba cries out;
ere Andromache ſhrils her dolour forth;
ſtraction, frenzie, and amazement,
eſſe Antickes one another meete,
y Hector, Hectors dead: O Hector!
Away, away.
Farewell: yes, ſoft: Hector I take my leaue;
ſt thy ſelfe, and all our Troy deceiue. Exit.
You ſee amaz'd, my Liege, at her exclaime:
nd cheere the Towne, weele forth and fight:
des of praiſe, and tell you them at night.
e. Farewell. the gods with ſafetie ſtand about Alarum.
They are at it, harke: proud Diomed, beleeue
o looſe my arme, or winne my ſleeue.

Enter Pandar.

Doe you heare my Lord? do you heare?
What now?
Here's a Letter come from yond poore girle.
Let me reade.
A whorſon tiſicke, a whorſon raſcally tiſicke.
ſes me; and the fooliſh fortune of this girle, and e thing, what another, that I ſhall leaue you one yes: and I haue a rheume in mine eyes too; and iche in my bones; that vnleſſe a man were curſt,
: tell what to thinke on't. What ſayes ſhee

Words, words, meere words, no matter from he heart;
t doth operate another way.
de to winde, there turne and change together:
with words and errors ſtill ſhe feedes;
ts another with her deedes.
Why, but heare you?
Hence brother lackie; ignomie and ſhame hy life, and liue aye with thy name.
A Larum. Exeunt.

Enter Therſites in exſtaſie.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another, Ile goe looke on: that diſſembling abhominable varlet Diomedes, has got that ſame ſcuruie, doting, fooliſh yong knaue Sleeue of Troy, there in his Helme. I would faine ſee them meet; that, that ſame yong Troian aſſe, that loues the whore there, might ſend that Greekiſh whore-maiſterly villaine, with the Sleeue, backe to the diſſembling luxurious drabbe, of a ſleeueleſſe errant. O'th' tother ſide, the politician of thoſe craftie ſwearing rafcals; that ſtole old Mouſe-eaten dry cheeſe, Neſtor: and that ſame dog-foxe Vliſſes is not proud worth a Black-berry. They ſet me vp in pollicy, that mungrill curre Aiax, againſt that dogge of as bad a kinde, Achilles. And now is the curre Aiax prouder then the curre Achilles, and will not arme to day. Whereupon, the Grecians begin to proclaime barbariſme; and pollicie growes into an ill opinion.

Enter Diomed and Troylus.

Soft, here comes Sleeue, and th'other.
Troy. Flye not: for ſhould'ſt thou take the River Stix,
I would ſwim after.
Dom. Thou do'ſt miſcall retire.
I doe not flye; but aduantagious care
Withdrew me from the odues of multitude:
Haue at thee?
Ther. Hold thy whore Grecian: now for thy whore
Troian: Now the Sleeue, now the Sleeue.

Enter Hector.

Hect. What art thou Greek? art thou for Hectors match.
Art thou of bloud, and honour?
Ther. No, no: I am a raſcall: a ſcuruie railing knaue:
a very filthy rogue.
Hect. I doe beleeue thee, liue.
Ther God a mercy, that thou wilt beleeue me; but a plague breake thy necke---for frighting me: what a become of the wenching rogues? I thinke they haue ſwallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle---yet in a ſort, lecherie eates it ſelfe: Ile ſeeke them.
Exit

Enter Diomed and Seruant.

Dio. Goe, goe, my ſeruant, take thou Troylus Horſe;
Preſent the faire Steede to my Lady Creſſid:
Fellow, commend my ſeruice to her beauty;
Tell her, I haue chaſtiſ'd the amorous Troyan.
And am her Knights by proofe
Ser. I goe my Lord Enter Agamemnon.
Aga. Renew, renew, the fierce Polidamus
Hath beate downe Menon baſtard Margarion
Hath Dorenus priſoner.
And ſtands Calloſſus-wiſe waiting his beame,
Vpon the paſhed courſes of the Kings:
Epiſtrophus and Cedius, Polixines is ſlaine;
Amphimacus, and Thoas deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'ne or ſlaine, and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruiſed; the dreadfull Sagittary
Appalls our numbers, haſte we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we periſh all.

Enter Neſtor.

Neſt. Goe beare Patroclus body to Achilles,
And bid the ſnaile-pac'd Aiax arme for ſhame:
There is a thouſand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathe his Horſe,
And there lacks worke: anon ſhe's there a foote,
And there they flye or dye, like ſcaled ſoules,

Before

before the belching Whale; then is he yonder,
And there the straying Greekes, ripe for his edge,
Fall downe before him, like the mowers swath;
Here, there, and every where, he leaues and takes;
Dexterity so obaying appetite,
That what he will, he does, and does so much,
That proofe is call'd impossibility.

Enter Vlisses.

Vlis. Oh, courage, courage Princes: great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, curfing, vowing vengeance;
Patrocles wounds haue roui'd his drowzie bloud,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noiseleſſe, handleſſe, hackt and chipt, come to him;
Crying on Hector. Aiax hath loſt a friend,
And foames at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it:
Roaring for Troylus; who hath done to day,
Mad and fantaſtick execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himſelfe.
With ſuch a careleſſe force, and forceleſſe care,
As if that luck in very ſpight of cunning, bad him win all.

Enter Aiax.

Aia. Troylus, thou coward Troylus Exit.
Dio. I, there, there.
Neſt. So, ſo, we draw together. Exit.

Enter Achilles

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller, ſhew thy face:
Know what it is to meete Achilles angry.
Hector, whet's Hector? I will none but Hector Exit.

Enter Aiax.

Aia. Troylus, thou coward Troylus, ſhew thy head.

Enter Diomed.

Diom. Troylus, I ſay, wher's Troylus?
Aia. What would'ſt thou?
Diom. I would correct him.
Aia. Were I the Generall,
Thou ſhould'ſt haue my office,
Ere that correction: Troylus I ſay, what Troylus?

Enter Troylus.

Troy. Oh traitour Diomed!
Turne thy falſe face thou traytor,
And pay thy life thou oweſt me for my horſe.
Dio. Ha, art thou there?
Aia. Ile fight with him alone, ſtand Diomed.
Dio. He is my prize, I will not looke vpon.
Troy. Come both you cogging Greekes, haue at you both. Exit Troylus.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea Troylus? O well fought my yongeſt Brother.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now doe I ſee thee; haue at thee Hector.
Hect. Pauſe if thou wilt.
Achil. I doe diſdaine thy curteſie, proud Troian;
Be happy that my armes are out of vſe:
My reſt and negligence befriends thee now,
But thou anon ſhalt heare of me againe;
Till when, goe ſeeke thy fortune. Exit.
Hect. Fare thee well:
I would haue beene much more a freſher man,
Had I expected thee: how now my Brother?

Enter Troylus.

Troy. Aiax hath tane Aeneas; ſhall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heauen,
He ſhall not carry him: Ile be tane too,
Or bring him off: Fate heare me what I ſay:
I vvreake not, though thou end my life to day. Exit

Enter one in Armour.

Hect. Stand ſtand, thou Greeke,
Thou art a goodly marke:
No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,
Ile fruſh it, and vnlocke the riuets all,
But Ile be maiſter of it: wilt thou not be all ſhade?
Why then flye on, Ile hunt thee for thy hide. Exit

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me you my Myrmidons:
Marke what I ſay; attend me where I wheele:
Strike not a ſtraake, but keepe your ſelues in breath,
And when I haue the bloudy Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about:
In fellest manner execute your arme.
Follow me ſirs, and my proceedings eye;
It is decreed, Hector the great muſt dye. Exit.

Enter Therſites, Menelaus, and Paris.

Ther. The Cuckold and the Cuckold maker are at it: now bull, now dogge, loue; Paris loue; now my double hen'd ſparrow; loue Paris, loue; the bull has the game: ware hornes ho?

Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Bastard.

Baſt. Turne ſlaue and fight.
Ther. What art thou?
Baſt. A Baſtard Sonne of Priams
Ther. I am a Baſtard too, I loue Baſtards, I am a Baſtard begot, Baſtard inſtructed, Baſtard in minde, Baſtard in valour, in euery thing illegitimate: one Baſtard will not bite another, and wherefore ſhould one Baſtard? take heede, the quarrel's moſt ominous to vs: if the Sonne of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts iudgement: farewell Baſtard.
Baſt. The diuell take thee coward. Exeunt.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Moſt putrified core ſo faire without:
Thy goodly armour thus hath coſt thy life.
Now is my daies worke done; I'le take good breath:
Reſt Sword, thou haſt thy fill of bloud and death.

Enter Achilles and his Myrmidons.

Achil. Looke Hector how the Sunne begins to ſet;
How vgly night comes breathing at his heeles,
Euen with the vaile and darking of the Sunne,
To cloſe the day vp, Hectors life is done.
Hect. I am vnarm'd, forgot this vantage Greeke.
Achil Strike fellowes, ſtrike, this is the man I ſtrike:
So Illion fall thou: now Troy ſinke downe;
Here lyes thy heart, thy ſinewes, and thy bone.
On Myrmidons, cry you all a maine,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector ſlaine. Retreat.
Harke, a retreat vpon our Grecian part.
Omn. The Troian Trumpets ſounde the like my Lord
Achi. The dragon wing of night ore-ſpreds the earth
And ſtickler-like the Armies ſeperates
My haſſe fupt Sword that frankly would haue fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bed; that goes to bed.
Come, tye his body to my horſes tayle;
Along the field, I will the Troian traile. Exeunt.

Sound Retreat. Shout.

Enter Agamemnon, Aiax, Menelaus, Neſtor, Diomed, and the reſt marching.

Aga. Harke, harke, what ſhout is that?
Neſt. Peace Drums.

Sol. Achilles

chilles, Achilles, Hector's ſlaine Achilles.
he bruite is, Hector's ſlaine, and by Achilles.
it be ſo yet bragleſſe let it be:
ector was a man as good as he.
March preſently along; let one be ſent chilles ſee vs at our Tent.
uch the gods haue vs befriended.
y is ours, and our ſharpe wars are ended. Exeunt

Æneas, Paris, Anthenor and Deiphobus.
Stand hoe, yet are we maiſters of the field,
home; here ſtarue we out the night.
Enter Troylus.
Hector is ſlaine.
Hector? the gods forbid
Hee's dead: and at the murtherers Horſes taile, ſort, drag'd through the shamefull Field.
n you heauens, effect your rage with ſpeede:
pon your thrones, and ſmile at Troy.
ce, let your briefe plagues be mercy,
e not our ſure deſtructions on.
My Lord, you doe diſcomfort all the Hoſte.
You vnderſtand me not, that tell me ſo:
ſpeake of flight, of feare, of death,
ll i'mminence that gods and men,
their dangers in. Hector is gone:
ll tell Priam ſo? or Hecuba?
hat will a ſcreechoule eye be call'd,
Troy, and ſay there, Hector's dead:
word will Priam turne to ſtone;
n, and Niobes of the maides and wiues;
rues of the youth: and in a word,
oy out of n ſelfe. But march away, dead: there is no more to ſay.
Stay yet: you vile abhominable Tents,
Thus proudly pight vpon our Phrygian plaines;
Let Titan riſe as early as he dare,
Ile through, and through you; & thou great ſiz'd coward:
No ſpace of Earth ſhall ſunder our two hates,
Ile haunt thee, like a wicked conſcience ſtill,
That mouldeth goblins ſwift as frenſies thoughts.
Strike a free march to Troy, with comfort goe:
Hope of reuenge, ſhall hide our inward woe.
Enter Pandarus,
Pand. But heare you? heare you?
Troy. Hence broker, lackie, ignomy, and ſhame Purſue thy life and liue aye with thy name, Exeunt.
Pan. A goodly medcine for mine aking bones: oh world, world, world! thus is the poore agent diſpiſde: Oh traitours and bawdes; how earneſtly are you ſet aworke, and how ill requited? why ſhould our indeuour be ſo deſir'd, and the performance ſo loath'd? What Verſe for it? what inſtance for it? let me ſee.
Full merrily the humble Bee doth ſing,
Till he hath loſt his hony, and his ſting.
And being once ſubdu'd in armed taile,
Sweete hony, and ſweete notes together faile.
Good traders in the fleſh, ſet this in your painted cloathes;
As many as be here of Panders hall,
Your eyes halfe out, weepe out at Pandar's fall;
Or if you cannot weepe, yet giue ſome grones;
Though not for me, yet for your aking bones:
Brethren and ſiſters of the hold-dore trade,
Some two months hence, my will ſhall here be made:
It ſhould be now, but that my feare is this:
Some galled Gooſe of Wincheſter would hiſſe;
Till then, Ile ſweate, and ſeeke about for eaſes;
And at that time bequeath you my diſeaſes. Exeunt.

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY · WIDENER LIBRARY

The Tragedy of Coriolanus.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter a Company of Mutinous Citizens, with Staues, Clubs, and other weapons.

1. Citizen.

BEfore we proceed any further, heare me speake.

All. Speake, speake.

1. Cit. You are all resolu'd rather to dy then to famish?

All. Resolu'd, resolu'd.

1. Cit. First you know, Caius Martius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't, we know't.

1. Cit. Let vs kill him, and wee'l haue Corne at our own rate. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't; Let it be done, away, away.

2. Cit. One word, good Citizens.

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority surfets one, would releeue vs: If they would yeelde vs but the superfluitie while it were wholsome, wee might guesse they releeued vs humanely: But they thinke we are too deere, the leanneſſe that afflicts vs, the obiect of our misery, is as an inuentory to particularize their abundance, our ſufferance is a gaine to them. Let vs reuenge this with our Pikes, ere we become Rakes. For the Gods know, I speake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirſt for Reuenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceede especially against Caius Martius.

All. Against him first: He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2. Cit. Conſider you what Seruices he has done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could be content to giue him good report for't, but that he payes himſelfe with being proud.

All. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say vnto you, what he hath done Famouſlie, he did it to that end: though ſoft conſcienc'd men can be content to say it was for his Country, he did it to please his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is, euen to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him: You must in no way say he is couetous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I needs not be barren of Accuſations, he hath faults (with ſurplus) to tyre in repetition.

Shouts within.

What ſhowts are theſe? The other ſide a'th City is riſen: why ſtay we prating heere? To th Capitoll.

All. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alwayes lou'd the people.

1 Cit. He's one honeſt enough, would al the reſt were ſo.

Men. What work's my Countrymen in hand? Where go you with Bats and Clubs? The matter Speake I pray you.

2 Cit. Our buſines is not vnknowne to th Senat, they haue had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, & now wee'l ſhew em in deeds: they ſay poore Suters haue ſtrong breaths, they ſhal know we haue ſtrong arms too.

Menen. Why Maſters, my good Friends, mine honeſt Neighbours, will you vndo your ſelues?

2 Cit. We cannot Sir, we are vndone already.

Men. I tell you Friends, moſt charitable care Haue the Patricians of you for your wants. Your ſuffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the Heauen with your ſtaues, as life them Againſt the Roman State, whoſe courſe will on The way it takes: cracking ten thouſand Curbes Of more ſtrong linke aſſunder, then can euer Appeare in your impediment. For the Dearth, The Gods, not the Patricians make it, and Your knees to them (not armes) muſt helpe. Alacke, You are tranſported by Calamity Thether, where more attends you, and you ſlander The Helmes o'th State, who care for you like Fathers, When you curſe them, as Enemies.

2 Cit. Care for vs? True indeed, they nere car'd for vs yet. Suffer vs to famiſh, and their Store-houſes cramm'd with Graine: Make Edicts for Vſurie, to ſupport Vſurers; repeale daily any wholſome Act eſtabliſhed againſt the rich, and prouide more piercing Statutes daily, to chaine vp and reſtraine the poore. If the Warres eate vs not vppe, they will's and there's allthe loue they beare vs.

Menen. Either you muſt
Confeſſe your ſelues wondrous Malicious,
Or be accus'd of Folly. I ſhall tell you
A pretty Tale, it may be you haue heard it,
But ſince it ſerues my purpoſe, I will venture
To ſcale't a little more.

2 Citizen. Well,
Ile heare it Sir: yet you muſt not thinke
To fobbe off our diſgrace with a tale:
But and't please you deliuer.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodies members
Rebell'd againſt the Belly; thus accus'd it:
That only like a Gulfe it did remaine

Ith midd'ſt a th'body, idle and vnactiue,
Still cubbording the Viand, neuer bearing
Like labour with the reſt, where th'other Inſtruments
Did ſee, and heare, deuiſe, inſtruct, walke, feele,
And mutually participate, did miniſter
Vnto the appetite; and affection common
Of the whole body, the Belly anſwer'd.

2. Cit. Well ſir, what anſwer made the Belly.

Men. Sir, I ſhall tell you with a kinde of Smile,
Which ne're came from the Lungs, but euen thus:
For looke you I may make the belly Smile,
As well as ſpeake, it tayntingly replyed
To th'diſcontented Members, the mutinous parts
That enuied his receite: euen ſo moſt fitly,
As you maligne our Senators, for that
They are not ſuch as you.

2. Cit. Your Bellies anſwer: What
The Kingly crown'd head, the vigilant eye,
The Counſailor Heart, the Arme our Souldier,
Our Steed the Legge, the Tongue our Trumpeter,
With other Muniments and petty helpes
In this our Fabricke, if that they

Men. What then? Fore me, this Fellow ſpeakes.
What then? What then?

2 Cit. Should by the Cormorant belly be reſtrain'd,
Who is the ſinke a th'body.

Men. Well, what then?

2. Cit. The former Agents, if they did complaine,
What could the Belly anſwer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you'l beſtow a ſmall (of what you haue little)
Patience awhile; you'ſt heare the Bellies anſwer.

2. Cit. Y'are long about it.

Men. Note me this good Friend;
Your moſt graue Belly was deliberate,
Not raſh like his Accuſers, and thus anſwered.
True is it my Incorporate Friends (quoth he)
That I receiue the generall Food at firſt
Which you do liue vpon: and fit it is,
Becauſe I am the Store-houſe, and the Shop
Of the whole Body. But, if you do remember,
I ſend it through the Riuers of your blood
Euen to the Court, the Heart, to th'ſeate o th'Braine,
And through the Crankes and Offices of man,
The ſtrongeſt Nerues, and ſmall inferiour Veines
From me receiue that naturall competencie
Whereby they liue. And though that all at once
(You my good Friends, this ſayes the Belly) marke me.

2. Cit. I ſir, well, well.

Men. Though all at once, cannot
See what I do deliuer out to each,
Yet I can make my Awdit vp, that all
From me do backe receiue the Flowre of all,
And leaue me but the Bran. What ſay you too't?

2 Cit. It was an anſwer, how apply you this?

Men. The Senators of Rome, are this good Belly,
And you the mutinous Members: For examine
Their Counſailes, and their Cares, digeſt things rightly,
Touching the Weale a'th Common, you ſhall finde
No publique benefit which you receiue
But it proceeds, or comes from them to you,
And no way from your ſelues. What do you thinke?
You, the great Toe of this Aſſembly?

2. Cit. I the great Toe? Why the great Toe?

Men. For that being one o'th loweſt, baſeſt, pooreſt
Of this moſt wiſe Rebellion, thou goeſt formoſt
Thou Raſcall, that art worſt in blood to run,
Lead'ſt firſt to win ſome vantage.
But make you ready your ſtiffe bats and clubs.
Rome, and her Rats, are at the point of battell,
The one ſide muſt haue baile.

Enter Caius Martius.

Hayle, Noble Martius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you diſſentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your ſelues Scabs.

2. Cit. We haue ener your good word.

Mar. He that will giue good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you haue, you Curres,
That like not Peace, nor Warre? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that truſts to you,
Where he ſhould finde you Lyons, findes you Hares:
Where Foxes, Geeſe you are: No ſurer, no,
Then is the coale of fire vpon the Ice,
Or Hailſtone in the Sun. Your Vertue is,
To make him worthy, whoſe offence ſubdues him,
And curſe that Juſtice did it. Who deſerues Greatneſſe, Deſerues your Hate: and your Affections are
A ſickmans Appetite; who deſires moſt that
Which would encreaſe his euill. He that depends Vpon your fauours, ſwimmes with finnes of Leade,
And hewes downe Oakes, with ruſhes. Hang ye trayterſ
With euery Minute you do change a Minde,
And call him Noble, that was now your Hate:
Him vilde, that was your Garland. What's the matter,
That in theſe ſeuerall places of the Citie,
You cry againſt the Noble Senate, who (Vnder the Gods) keepe you in awe, which elſe
Would feede on one another? What's their ſeeking?

Men. For Corne at their owne rates, whereof they ſay
The Citie is well ſtor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em: They ſay?
They'll ſit by th'fire, and preſume to know
What's done i'th Capitoll: Who's like to riſe,
Who thriues, & who declines: Side factions, & giue out
Conjecturall Marriages, making parties ſtrong,
And feebling ſuch as ſtand not in their liking,
Below their cobled Shoores. They ſay there's grain enough?
Would the Nobility lay aſide their ruth,
And let me vſe my Sword, I'de make a Quarrie
With thouſands of theſe quarter'd ſlaues, as high
As I could picke my Lance.

Menen. Nay theſe are almoſt thoroughly perſwaded:
For though abundantly they lack diſcretion
Yet are they paſſing Cowardly. But I beſeech you,
What ſayes the other Troope?

Mar. They are diſſolu'd: Hang 'em:
They ſaid they were an hungry, ſigh'd forth Proteruſly
That Hunger-broke ſtone walls: that dogges muſt eate
That meate was made for mouths. That the gods ſent not Corne for the Richmen onely: With theſe ſhooes
They vented their Complainings, which being anſwer'd
And a petition granted them, a ſtrange one,
To breake the heart of generoſity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes a'th Moone, Shooting their Emulation.

Menen. What is graunted them?

Mar. Fiue Tribunes to defend their vulgar wiſdoms
Of their owne choice. One's Iunius Brutus, Sicinius Velutus, and I know not. Sdeath,

The

he ſuperfluity. See out beſt Elders

Cominius Volumn., Auguſtus Brutus Cominius, Titus Lartius, with other Senatours.

Martius 'tis true, that you haue lately told vs,

They haue a Leader,
ffidius that will put you too't.
enuying his Nobiliy
e I any thing but what I am,
iſh me onely he.
You haue ſought together?
Were halfe to halfe the world by th'eares, & he partie, I'de reuolt to make y warres with him. He is a Lion n proud to hunt.
Then worthy Martius,
pon Cominius to theſe Warres
It is your former promiſe.
Sir it is,
confident: Titus Lartius, thou me once more ſtrike at Tullus face thou ſhifte? Stand'ſt out?
No Caius Martius, vpon one Crutch, and fight with tother,
behinde't his Buſineſſe.
Oh true-bred.

reſt Friends attend vs.
Lead you on: Follow Cominius, we muſt followe

Hence to your homes, be gone.
Nay let them follow.

Citizens ſteale away. Manet Sicin. & Brutus.
Was euer man ſo proud as is this Martius?
He has no equall.
When we were choſen Tribunes for the people.
Mark'd you his lip and eyes.
Nay, but his taunts.
Being mou'd, he will not ſpare to gird the Gods
Bemocke the modeſt Moone.
The preſent Warres deuoure him, he is growne
ed to be ſo valiant.
Such a Nature, tickled with good ſucceſſe, diſſhadow which he treads on at noone, but I do his inſolence can brooke to be commanded vn-
man?
Fame, at the which he aymes, already he is well grac'd, cannot held, not more attain'd then by
A place below the firſt: for what miſcarries
Shall be the Generals fault, though he performe
To th'vtmoſt of a man, and giddy cenſure
Will then cry out of Martius: Oh, if he Had borne the buſineſſe.
Sicin. Beſides, if things go well,
Opinion that ſo ſtickes on Martius, ſhall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.
Bru. Come: halfe all Cominius Honors are to Martius
Though Martius earn'd them not: and all his faults
To Martius ſhall be Honors, though indeed
In ought he merit not.
Sicin. Let's hence, and heare
How the diſpatch is made, and in what faſhion
More then his ſingularity, he goes
Vpon this preſent Action.
Bru. Let's along. Exeunt

Enter Tullus Auffidius with Senators of Corioles.

1. Sen. So, your opinion is Auffidius,
That they of Rome are entred in our Counſailes,
And know how we proceede,
Auf Is it not yours?
What euer haue bin thought on in this State
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumuention: 'tis not foure dayes gone
Since I heard thence, theſe are the words, I thinke
I haue the Letter heere: yes, heere it is;
They haue preſſt a Power, but it is not knowne
Whether for Eaſt or Weſt: the Dearth is great,
The people Mutinous: And it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Martius your old Enemy
(Who is of Rome worſe hated then of you)
And Titus Lartius, a moſt valiant Roman,
Theſe three leade on this Preparation
Whether 'tis bent: moſt likely, 'tis for you:
Conſider of it.
1. Sen. Our Armie is in the Field:
We neuer yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To anſwer vs.
Auf Nor did you thinke it folly,
To keepe your great pretences vayl'd, till when
They needs muſt ſhew themſelues, which in the hatching
It ſeem'd appear'd to Rome. By the diſcouery,
We ſhalbe ſhortned in our ayme, which was
To take in many Townes, ere (almoſt) Rome
Should know we were a-foot.
2. Sen. Noble Auffidius,
Take your Commiſſion, hye you to your Bands,
Let vs alone to guard Corioles
If they ſet downe before's: for the remoue
Bring vp your Army: but (I thinke) you'l finde
Th'haue not prepar'd for vs.
Auf. O doubt not that,
I ſpeake from Certainties. Nay more,
Some parcels of their Power are forth already,
And onely hitherward. I leaue your Honors.
If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,
'Tis ſworne betweene vs, we ſhall euer ſtrike
Till one can do no more.
All The Gods aſſiſt you.
Auf. And keepe your Honors ſafe.
1 Sen. Farewell.
2. Sen. Farewell.
All. Farewell. Exeunt omnes.

Enter Volumnia and Virgilia, mother and wife to Martius: They set them downe on two low ſtooles and ſew.

Volum. I pray you daughter ſing, or expreſſe your ſelfe in a more comfortable ſort: If my Sonne were my Husband, I ſhould freelier reioyce in that abſence wherein he wonne Honor, then in the embracements of his Bed, where he would ſhew moſt loue. When yet hee was but tender-bodied, and the onely Sonne of my wombe; when youth with comelineſſe pluck'd all gaze his way; when for a day of Kings entreaties, a Mother ſhould not ſell him an houre from her beholding; I conſidering how Honour would become ſuch a perſon, that it was no better then Picture-like to hang by th'wall, if renowne made it not ſtirre, was pleas'd to let him ſeeke danger, where he was like to finde fame: To a cruell Warre I ſent him, from whence he return'd, his browes bound with Oake. I tell thee Daughter, I ſprang not more in ioy at firſt hearing he was a Man-child, then now in firſt ſeeing he had proued himſelfe a man.

Virg. But had he died in the Buſineſſe Madame, how then?

Volum. Then his good report ſhould haue beene my Sonne, I therein would haue found iſſue. Heare me profeſſe ſincerely, had I a dozen ſons each in my loue alike, and none leſſe deere then thine, and my good Martius, I had rather had eleuen dye Nobly for their Country, then one voluptuouſly ſurfeit out of Action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to viſit you.

Virg. Beſeech you giue me leaue to retire my ſelfe.

Volum. Indeed you ſhall not:
Me thinkes, I heare hither your Husbands Drumme:
See him plucke Auffidius downe by th'haire:
(As children from a Beare) the Volces ſhunning him:
Me thinkes I ſee him ſtampe thus, and call thus,
Come on you Cowards, you were got in feare
Though you were borne in Rome: his bloody brow
With his mail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes
Like to a Harueſt man, that task'd to mowe
Or all, or looſe his byre.

Virg. His bloody Brow? Oh Iupiter, no blood.

Volum. Away you Foole; it more becomes a man
Then gilt his Trophe. The breſts of Hecuba
When ſhe did ſuckle Hector, look'd not louelier
Then Hectors forhead, when it ſpit forth blood
At Grecian ſword. Contenning, tell Valeria
We are fit to bid her welcome. Exit Gent.

Virg. Heauens bleſſe my Lord from fell Auffidius.

Vol. Hee'l beat Auffidius head below his knee,
And treade vpon his necke.

Enter Valeria with an Vſher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My Ladies both good day to you.

Vol. Sweet Madam.

Vir. I am glad to ſee your Ladyſhip.

Val. How do you both? You are manifeſt houſe-keepers. What are you ſowing heere? A fine ſpotte in good faith. How does your little Sonne?

Vir I thanke your Lady-ſhip: Well good Madam.

Val. He had rather ſee the ſwords, and heare a Drum, then looke vpon his Schoolmaſter.

Val. A my word the Fathers Sonne: Ile ſweare 'tis a very pretty boy. A my troth, I look'd vpon him a Wenſday halfe an houre together: ha's ſuch a confirm'd countenance. I ſaw him run after a gilded Butterfly, & when he caught it, he let it go againe, and after it againe, and ouer and ouer he comes, and vp againe: catcht it againe: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 'twas, hee did ſo ſet his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammock'd it.

Vol. One on's Fathers moods.

Val. Indeed la, 'tis a Noble childe.

Virg. A Cracke Madam.

Val. Come, lay aſide your ſtitchery. I muſt haue you play the idle Huſwife with me this afternoone.

Virg. No (good Madam)
I will not out of doores.

Val. Not out of doores?

Volum. She ſhall, ſhe ſhall.

Virg. Indeed no, by your patience; Ile not ouer the threſhold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.

Val. Fye, you confine your ſelfe moſt vnreaſonably: Come, you muſt go viſit the good Lady that lies in.

Virg. I will wiſh her ſpeedy ſtrength, and viſit her with my prayers: but I cannot go thither.

Volum. Why I pray you.

Virg. 'Tis not to ſaue labour, nor that I want loue.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet they ſay, all the yearne ſhe ſpun in Vlyſſes abſence, did but fill Ithaca full of Mothes. Come, I would your Cambrick were ſenſible as your finger, that you might leaue pricking it for pitie. Come you ſhall go with vs.

Vir. No good Madam, pardon me, indeed I will not foorth.

Val. In truth la go with me, and Ile tell you excellent newes of your Husband.

Virg. Oh good Madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily I do not ieſt with you: there came newes from him laſt night.

Vir. Indeed Madam.

Val. In earneſt it's true; I heard a Senator ſpeake it. Thus it is: the Volcies haue an Army forth, againſt whō Cominius the Generall is gone, with one part of our Romane power. Your Lord, and Titus Lartius, are ſet down before their Citie Corioles, they nothing doubt proſperous, and to make it breefe Warres. This is true on mine Honor, and ſo I pray go with vs.

Virg. Giue me excuſe good Madame, I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone Ladie, as ſhe is now:
She will but diſeaſe our better mirth.

Valeria. In troth I thinke ſhe would:
Fare you well then. Come good ſweet Ladie.
Prythee Virgilia turne thy ſolemneſſe out a doore,
And go along with vs.

Virgil. No
At a word Madam; Indeed I muſt not,
I wiſh you much mirth.

Val. Well, then farewell. Exeunt Ladies

Enter Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Soldiers, as before the Citty Coriolus: to them a Meſſenger.

Martius. Yonder comes Newes:
A Wager they haue met.

Lar. My horſe to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar.

y, ha's our Generall met the Enemy?
ay lye in view, but haue not ſpoke as yet.
the good Horſe is mine.

en ſhall we heare their Larum, & they Ours.
I prythee make vs quicke in worke, ſmoaking ſwords may match from hence fielded Friends. Come, blow thy blaſt.

a Parley: Enter two Senators with others on the Walles of Coriolus.

ow, is he within your Walles?
No, nor a man that feares you leſſe then he,
hen a little: Drum a farre off.
Drummes
forth our youth: We'l breake our Walles hey ſhall pound vs vp our Gates,
eme ſhut, we haue but pin'd with Roſhes,
of themſelues. Harke you, farre off Alarum farre off.
ſidious. Liſt what worke he makes ur cloven Army.
h they are at it.
ur noiſe be our inſtruction. Ladders hoa.

Enter the Army of the Volces

hey feare vs not, but iſſue forth their Citie.
ar Shields before your hearts, and fight
more proofe then Shields.
ue Titus,
laine vs much beyond our Thoughts, me ſweat with wrath. Come on my fellows es, Ile take him for a Volce, feele mine edge.
rum the Romans are beat back to their Trenches Enter Martius Curſing.
l the contagion of the South, light on you,
of Rome: you Heard of Byles and Plagues o're, that you may be abhorr'd ſeene, and one infect another
Winde a mile: you ſoules of Geeſe,
he ſhapes of men, how haue you run
, that Apes would beare; Pluto and Hell, nde, backes red, and faces pale and agued feare, mend and charge home, es of heauen, Ile leaue the Foe,
y Warres on you: Looke too't: Come on,
ſaſt, wee'l beate them to their Wiues,
our Trenches followes.
Another Alarum, and Martius followes them to gates, and is ſhut in.
gates are ope: now proue good Seconds,
ollowers Fortune, widens them,
lyers: Marke me, and do the like.
Enter the Gate.
ole-hardineſſe, not I.
ot I.
they haue ſhut him in. Alarum continues h'pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius
t is become of Martius?
e (Sir) doubleſſe.
llowing the Flyers at the very heeles,
With them he enters: who vpon the ſodaine
Clapt to their Gates, he is himſelfe alone,
To anſwer all the City.
Lar. Oh Noble Fellow!
Who ſenſibly out-dares his ſenceleſſe Sword,
And when it bowes, ſtand'ſt vp: Thou art left Martius,
A Carbuncle intire: as big as thou art
Weare not ſo rich a Iewell. Thou was't a Souldier
Euen to Calues wiſh, not fierce and terrible Onely in ſtrokes, but with thy grim lookes, and
The Thunder-like percuſſion of thy ſounds
Thou mad'ſt thine enemies ſhake, as if the World
Were Feauorous, and did tremble.

Enter Martius bleeding, aſſaulted by the Enemy.

1 Sol. Looke Sir.
Lar. O 'tis Martius.
Let's fetch him off, or make remaine alike.
They fight, and all enter the City.
Enter certaine Romanes with ſpoiles.
1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.
2 Rom. And I this.
3 Rom. A Murrain on't, I tooke this for Siluer. exeunt.
Alarum continues ſtill a-farre off.
Enter Martius, and Titus with a Trumpet.
Mar. See heere theſe mouers, that do prize their hours
At a crack'd Drachme: Cuſhions, Leaden Spoones, Irons of a Doit, Dublets that Hangmen would Bury with thoſe that wore them. Theſe baſe ſlaues,
Ere yet the fight be done, packe vp, downe with them.
And harke, what noyſe the Generall makes: To him
There is the man of my ſoules hate, Auffidius, Piercing our Romanes: Then Valiant Titus take Conuenient Numbers to make good the City,
Whil'ſt I with thoſe that haue the ſpirit, will haſte
To helpe Cominius.
Lar. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'ſt,
Thy exerciſe hath bin too violent,
For a ſecond courſe of Fight.
Mar. Sir, praiſe me not:
My worke hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well:
The blood I drop, is rather Phyſicall
Then dangerous to me: To Auffidius thus, I will appear Lar. Now the faire Goddeſſe Fortune, (and fight.
Fall deepe in loue with thee, and her great charmes
Miſguide thy Oppoſers ſwords, Bold Gentleman:
Proſperity be thy Page.
Mar. Thy Friend no leſſe,
Then thoſe ſhe placeth higheſt: So farewell.
Lar. Thou worthieſt Martius,
Go ſound thy Trompet in the Market place,
Call thither all the Officers o'th' Towne,
Where they ſhall know our minde. Away. Exeunt
Enter Cominius as it were in retire, with ſoldiers.
Com. Breath you my friends, well fought, we are come off,
Like Romans, neither fooliſh in our ſtands,
Nor Cowardly in retyre: Beleeue me Sirs,
We ſhall be charg'd againe. Whiles we haue ſtrooke
By Interims and conueying guſts, we haue heard
The Charges of our Friends. The Roman Gods,
Leade their ſucceſſes, as we wiſh our owne,
That both our powers, with ſmiling Fronts encountring,
May giue you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes?
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſſ. The Citizens of Coriolus haue yſſued,
And giuen to Lartius and to Martius Battailes

I ſaw our party to their Trenches driuen,
And then I came away.
Com. Though thou ſpeakeſt truth,
Me thinkes thou ſpeak'ſt not well. How long is't ſince?
Meſ. Aboue an houre, my Lord.
Com. 'Tis not a mile: briefely we heard their drummes.
How could'ſt thou in a mile confound an houre,
And bring thy Newes ſo late?
Meſ. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wherle
Three or foure miles about, elſe had I fir
Halfe an houre ſince brought my report.

Enter Martius.

Com. Whoſe yonder.
That do's appeare as he were Flead? O Gods,
He has the ſtampe of Martius, and I haue
Before time ſeene him thus.
Mar. Come I too late?
Com. The Shepherd knowes not Thunder from a Taber,
More then I know the ſound of Martius Tongue
From euery meaner man.
Martius. Come I too late?
Com. I, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your owne.
Mart. Oh! let me clip ye
In Armes as ſound, as when I woo'd in heart;
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to Bedward.
Com. Flower of Warriors, how is't with Titus Lartius?
Mar. As with a man buſied about Decrees:
Condemning ſome to death, and ſome to exile,
Ranſoming him, or pittying, threatning th'other;
Holding Coriolus in the name of Rome,
Euen like a fawning Grey-hound in the Leaſh,
To let him ſlip at will.
Com. Where is that Slaue
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.
Mar. Let him alone,
He did informe the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file, (a plague! Tribunes for them)
The Mouſe ne're ſhunn'd the Cat, as they did budge
From Raſcals worſe then they.
Com. But how preuail'd you?
Mar. Will the time ſerue to tell, I do not thinke:
Where is the enemy? Are you Lords a'th Field?
If not, why ceaſe you till you are ſo?
Com. Martius, we haue at diſaduantage fought,
And did retyre to win our purpoſe.
Mar. How lies their Battell? Know you on which ſide
They haue plac'd their men of truſt?
Com. As I gueſſe Martius,
Their Bands i'th Vaward are the Antients
Of their beſt truſt: O're them Auffidius,
Their very heart of Hope.
Mar. I do beſeech you,
By all the Battailes wherein we haue fought,
By th'Blood we haue ſhed together,
By th'Vowes we haue made
To endure Friends, that you directly ſet me
Againſt Auffidius, and his Antiates,
And that you not delay the preſent (but Filling the aire with Swords aduanc'd) and Darts,
We proue this very houre.
Com. Though I could wiſh,
You were conducted to a gentle Bath,
And Balmes applyed to you, yet dare I neuer
Deny your asking, take your choice of thoſe
That beſt can ayde your action.
Mar. Thoſe are they
That moſt are willing; if any ſuch be here,
(As it were ſinne to doubt) that loue this painting
Wherein you ſee me ſmear'd, if any feare
Leſſer his perſon, then an ill report:
If any thinke, braue death out-weighes bad life,
And that his Countries deerer then himſelfe,
Let him alone: Or ſo many ſo minded,
Waue thus to expreſſe his diſpoſition,
And follow Martius.
They all ſhout and wane their ſwords, take him vp in their Armes, and caſt vp their Caps.
Oh me alone, make you a ſword of me:
If theſe ſhewes be not outward, which of you
But is foure Volces? None of you, but is Able to beare againſt the great Auffidius
A Shield, as hard as his. A certaine number (Though thankes to all) muſt I ſelect from all:
The reſt ſhall beare the buſineſſe in ſome other fight
(As cauſe will be obey'd:) pleaſe you to March,
And foure ſhall quickly draw out my Command,
Which men are beſt inclin'd.
Com. March on my Fellowes:
Make good this oſtentation, and you ſhall
Diuide in all, with vs.

Exeunt

Titus Lartius, having ſet a guard vpon Coriolus, goes with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius, and Caius Martius, Enters with a Lieutenant, other Souldiours, and a Scout

Lar. So, let the Ports be guarded; keepe your Duties
As I haue ſet them downe. If I do ſend, diſpatch
Thoſe Centuries to our ayd, the reſt will ſerue
For a ſhort holding, if we looſe the Field,
We cannot keepe the Towne.
Lieu. Feare not our care Sir.
Lar. Hence; and ſhut your gates vpon's:
Our Guider come, to th'Roman Campe conduct vs.

Exeunt

Enter Martius and Auffidius at ſeuerall doores.

Mar. Ile fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worſe then a Promiſe-breaker.
Auffid. We hate alike:
Not Affricke ownes a Serpent I abhorre
More then thy Fame and Enuy: Fix thy foot.
Mar. Let the firſt Budger dye the others Slaue,
And the Gods doome him after.
Auf. If I flye Martius, hollow me like a Hare.
Mar. Within theſe three houres Tullus
Alone I fought in your Corioles walles,
And made what worke I pleas'd: 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou ſeeſt me maſkt, for thy Reuenge
Wrench vp thy power to th'higheſt.
Auf. Wer't thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,
Thou ſhould'ſt not ſcape me heere.
Heere they fight, and certaine Volces come in the aid of Auff. Martius fights till they be driuen in breathles.
Officious and not valiant, you haue ſham'd me
In your condemned Seconds.

Exeunt.

...rſh. Alarum. A Retreat is ſounded. Enter at one Doore Cominius, with the Romanes: At another Doore Martius, with his Arme in a Scarfe.

...n. If I ſhould tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke,

...ome hath ſuch a Souldier.
...m'ſt thou to a Morſell of this Feaſt,

Enter Titus with his Power, from the Purſuit.

...s Lartius. Oh Generall:

...rtius. Pray now, no more:
...other, who ha's a Charter to extoll her Blood,
...ſhe do'a praiſe me, grieues me:

...e ha's but effected his good will,
...erita'ne mine Act.
...You ſhall not be the Grieue of your deſerving,
...muſt know the value of her owne:
...a Concealement worſe then a Theft,

...d ſeeme but modeſt: therefore I beſeech you,
...e of what you are, not to reward
...you haue done, before our Armie heare me.
...me. I haue ſome Wounds vpon me, and they ſmart
...are themſelues remembred.
...Should they not:

...rtius. I thanke you Generall:
...nnot make my heart conſent to take

...ſhes flourſh. They all cry, Martius, Martius, caſt vp their Caps and Launces: Cominius and Lartius ſtand bare.

May theſe ſame Inſtruments, which you prophane,
...ound more: when Drums and Trumpets ſhall
...d proue flatterers, let Courts and Cities be

...Steele grow ſoft, as the Parraſites Silke,

...e I ſay, for that I haue not waſh'd
My Noſe that bled, or foyl'd ſome debile Wretch,
Which without note, here's many elſe haue done,
You ſhoote me forth in acclamations hyperbolicall,
As if I lou'd my little ſhould be dieted
In praiſes, ſawc'ſt with Lyes.
Com. Too modeſt are you:
More cruell to your good report, then gratefull
To vs, that giue you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainſt your ſelfe you be incens'd, wee'le put you (Like one that meanes his proper harme) in Manacles,
Then reaſon ſafely with you: Therefore be it knowne,
As to vs, to all the World, That Caius Martius
Weares this Warres Garland: in token of the which,
My Noble Steed, knowne to the Campe, I giue him,
With all his trim belonging; and from this time,
For what he did before Corioles, call him,
With all th'applauſe and Clamor of the Hoaſt,
Martius Caius Coriolanus. Beare th'addition Nobly euer!
Flourſh. Trumpets ſound, and Drums.
Omnes. Martius Caius Coriolanus.
Martius. I will goe waſh:
And when my Face is faire, you ſhall perceiue
Whether I bluſh, or no: howbeit, I thanke you,
I meane to ſtride your Steed, and at all times
To vnder-creſt your good Addition,
To th'fayreneſſe of my power.
Com. So, to our Tent:
Where ere we doe repoſe vs, we will write
To Rome of our ſucceſſe: you Titus Lartius
Muſt to Corioles backe, ſend vs to Rome
The beſt, with whom we may articulate,
For their owne good, and ours.
Lartius. I ſhall, my Lord.
Martius. The Gods begin to mocke me:
I that now refus'd moſt Princely gifts,
Am bound to begge of my Lord Generall.
Com. Tak't, 'tis yours: what is't?
Martius. I ſometime lay here in Corioles,
At a poore mans houſe: he vs'd me kindly,
He cry'd to me: I ſaw him Priſoner:
But then Auffidius was within my view,
And Wrath o're-whelm'd my pittie: I requeſt you
To giue my poore Hoſt freedome.
Com. Oh well begg'd:
Were he the Butcher of my Sonne, he ſhould
Be free, as is the Winde: deliuer him, Titus.
Lartius. Martius, his Name.
Martius. By Iupiter forgot:
I am weary, yea, my memorie is tyr'd:
Haue we no Wine here?
Com. Goe we to our Tent:
The bloud vpon your Viſage dryes, 'tis time
It ſhould be looke too: come. Exeunt.

A flourſh. Cornets. Enter Tullus Auffidius bloudie, with two or three Souldiers.

Auff. The Towne is ta'ne.
Sould. 'Twill be deliuer'd backe on good Condition.
Auffid. Condition?
I would I were a Roman, for I cannot,
Being a Volce, be that I am. Condition?
What good Condition can a Treatie finde
I'th'part that is at mercy? Fiue times, Martius,
I haue fought with thee; ſo often haſt thou beat me:
And would'ſt doe ſo, I thinke, ſhould we encounter

As often as we eate. By th'Elements.
If ere againe I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: Mine Emulation
Hath not that Honor in't it had: For where
I thought to crush him in an equall Force,
True Sword to Sword: Ile potche at him some way,
Or Wrath, or Craft may get him.

Sol. He's the diuell.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle: my valors poison'd,
With onely suffring staine by him: for him
Shall fly out of it selfe, nor sleepe, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sicke; nor Phane, nor Capitoll,
The Prayers of Priests, nor times of Sacrifice:
Embarquements all of Fury, shall lift vp
Their rotten Priuiledge, and Custome 'gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I finde him, were it
At home, vpon my Brothers Guard, euen there
Against the hospitable Canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Go you to th'Citie, Learne how 'tis held, and what they are that must Be Hostages for Rome.

Soul. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attended at the Cyprus groue. I pray you
('Tis South the City Mils) bring me word thither
How the world goes: that to the pace of it
I may spurre on my iourney.

Soul. I shall sir.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius & Brutus

Men. The Agurer tels me, wee shall haue Newes to night.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they loue not Martius.

Sicin. Nature teaches Beasts to know their Friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the Wolfe loue?

Sicin. The Lambe.

Men. I, to deuour him, as the hungry Plebeians would the Noble Martius.

Bru. He's a Lambe indeed, that baes like a Beare.

Men. Hee's a Beare indeede, that liues like a Lambe. You two are old men, tell me one thing that I shall aske you.

Both. Well sir.

Men. In what enormity is Martius poore in, that you two haue not in abundance?

Bru. He's poore in no one fault, but stor'd withall.

Sicin. Especially in Pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know, how you are censured heere in the City, I mean of vs a'th'right hand File, do you?

Both. Why? ho wsare we censur'd?

Men. Because you talke of Pride now, will you not be angry.

Both. Well, well sir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter: for a very little theefe of Occasion, will rob you of a great deale of Patience: Giue your dispositions the reines, and bee pleasures (at the least) if you take it as a plea being so: you blame Martius for being pro

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can doe very little a helpes are many, or else your actions woul drous single: your abilities are too Infanc- much alone. You talke of Pride: Oh, that your eyes toward the Napes of your neck but an Interiour surucy of your good selue could.

Both. What then sir?

Men. Why then you should discouer merriting, proud, violent, testie Magistrate as any in Rome.

Sicin. Menenius, you are knowne well

Men. I am knowne to be a humorous one that loues a cup of hot Wine, with not ing Tiber in't: Said, to be something imp- ring the first complaint, hasty and Tinder- riuiall motion: One, that conuerses mor- tocke of the night, then with the forhead o What I think, I vtter, and spend my malic- Meeting two such Weales men as you are you Licurgusses,) if the drinke you giue me sat sduerlily, I make a crooked face at it, I Worshippes haue deliuer'd the matter we the Asse in compound, with the Maior pa- bles. What harme can your beefson ties gleane out of this Charracter, if I be k nough too.

Bru. Come sir come, we know you w

Menen. You know neither mee, your thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaues legges: you weare out a good wholesome hessing a cause betweene an Orendge wife seller, and then reiourne the Controuerse to a second day of Audience. When you matter betweene party and party, if you c pinch'd with the Collicke, you make fa mers, set vp the bloodie Flagge against all in roaring for a Chamber-pot, dismisse th bleeding, the more intangled by your hea peace you make in their Cause, is calling b Knaues. You are a payre of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well vnder perfecter gyber for the Table, then a neces the Capitoll.

Men. Our very Priests must become hu shall encounter such ridiculous Subiects as you speake best vnto the purpose. It is no wagging of your Beards, and your Beards honourable a graue, as to stuffe a Botchers be intomb'd in an Asses Packe-saddle; yet saying, Martius is proud: who in a chearge worth all your predecessors, since Deucalion aduenture some of the best of 'em were hen men. Godden to your Worships, more of sation would infect my Braine, being the the Beastly Plebeans. I will be bold to tal you.

Bru. and Scic.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble) Ladyes, and the Moone were shee Earthly, no Nobler; whither doe you follow your Eyes so fixt?

Volum. Honorable Menenius, my Boy Martius approches: for the loue of Iuno let's goe.

Menen. Ha? Martius comming home?

Volum. I, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Menen. Take my Cappe Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius comming home?

2. Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Volum. Looke, here's a Letter from him, the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reele to night: A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certaine, there's a Letter for you, I saw't.

Menen. A Letter for me? it giues me an Eſtate of seuen yeeres health; in which time, I will make a Lippe at the Phyſician: The most soueraigne Preſcription in Galen, is but Emperick qutique: and to this Preſeruatiue, of no better report then a Horſe-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded?

Virgil. Oh no, no, no.

Volum. O, he is wounded, I thanke the Gods for't.

Menen. So doe I too, if it be not too much: brings a Victorie in his Pocket? the wounds become him.

Volum. On's Browes: Menenius, hee comes the third time home with the Oaken Garland.

Menen. Ha's he diſciplin'd Auffidius ſoundly?

Volum. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Auffidius got off.

Menen. And 'twas time for him too, Ile warrant him that: and he had ſtay'd by him, I would not haue been ſo fiddious'd, for all the Cheſts in Corioles, and the Gold that's in them. Is the Senate poſſeſt of this?

Valum. Good Ladies let's goe. Yes yes, yes: The Senate ha's Letters from the Generall, wherein hee giues my Sonne the whole Name of the Warre: he hath in this action out-done his former deeds doubly.

Valer. In troth, there's wondrous things ſpoke of him.

Menen. Woondrous: I, I warrant you, and not without his true purchaſing.

Virgil. The Gods graunt them true.

Volum. True? pow waw.

Menen. True? Ile be ſworne they are true: where is hee wounded, God ſaue your good Worſhips? Martius is comming home: hee ha's more cauſe to be prowd: where is he wounded?

Volum. Ith' ſhoulder, and ith' left Arme: there will be large Cicatrices to ſhew the People, when hee ſhall ſtand for his place: he receiued in the repulſe of Tarquin ſeuen hurts ith' Body.

Menen. One ith' Neck, and two ith' Thigh, there's nine that I know.

Volum. Hee had, before this laſt Expedition, twentie five Wounds vpon him.

Menen. Now it's twentie ſeuen; euery gaſh was an Enemies Graue. Hearke, the Trumpets.

A Shout, and flourish.

Volum. Theſe are the Vſhers of Martius: Before him, hee carryes Noyſe; And behinde him, hee leaues Teares:
Death, that darke Spirit, in's neruie Arme doth lye, Which being aduanc'd, declines, and then men dye.

A Sennet. Trumpets ſound.

Enter Cominius the Generall, and Titus Lartius: between them Coriolanus, crown'd with an Oaken Garland, with Captaines and Soul-diers, and a Herauld.

Herauld. Know Rome, that all alone Martius did fight Within Corioles Gates; where he hath woone, With Fame, a Name to Martius Caius: Theſe in honor followes Martius Caius Coriolanus. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Sound. Flouriſh.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Coriol. No more of this, it does offend my heart: pray now no more.

Com. Looke, Sir, your Mother.

Coriol. Oh! you haue, I know, petition'd all the Gods for my proſperitie. Kneeles.

Volum. Nay, my good Souldier, vp: My gentle Martius, worthy Caius, And by deed-atchieuing Honor newly nam'd, What is it (Coriolanus) muſt I call thee? But oh, thy Wife.

Coriol. My gracious ſilence, heyle: Would'ſt thou haue laugh'd, had I come Coffin'd home, That weep'ſt to ſee me triumph? Ah my deare, Such eyes the Widowes in Carioles were, And Mothers that lacke Sonnes.

Menen. Now the Gods Crowne thee.

Com. And liue you yet? Oh my ſweet Lady, pardon.

Volum. I know not where to turne. Oh welcome home: and welcome Generall, And y'are welcome all.

Menen. A hundred thouſand Welcomes: I could weepe, and I could laugh, I am light, and heauie; welcome: A Curſe begin at very root on's heart, That is not glad to ſee thee. You are three, that Rome ſhould dote on: Yet by the faith of men, we haue Some old Crab-trees here at home, That will not be grafted to your Raliſh. Yet welcome Warriors: We call a Nettle, but a Nettle; And the faults of fooles, but folly.

Com. Euer right.

Cor. Menenius, euer, euer.

Herauld. Giue way there, and goe on.

Cor. Your Hand, and yours? Ere in our owne houſe I doe ſhade my Head, The good Patricians muſt be viſited, From whom I haue receiu'd not onely greetings, But with them, change of Honors.

Volum. I haue liued, To ſee inherited my very Wiſhes, And the Buildings of my Fancie: Onely there's one thing wanting, Which (I doubt not) but our Rome Will caſt vpon thee.

Cor. Know, good Mother, I had rather be their ſeruant in my way, Then ſway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitall. Flouriſh. Cornets.

Exeunt in State, as before.

Enter

Enter Brutus and Sicinius.

Bru. All tongues speake of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling Nurse
Into a rapture lets her Baby crie,
While she chats him: the Kitchin Malkin pinnes
Her richest Lockram 'bout her reechie neckle,
Clambring the Walls to eye him:
Stalls, Bulkes, Windowes, are smother'd vp,
Leades fill'd, and Ridges hors'd
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earnestnesse to see him: seld-shown Flamins
Doe presse among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar station: our veyl'd Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
In their nicely gawded Cheekes, toth' wanton spoyle
Of Phœbus burning Kisses: such a pooch,
As if that whatsoeuer God, who leades him,
Were slyly crept into his humane powers,
And gaue him gracefull posture.

Sicin. On the suddaine, I warrant him Consull.

Brutus. Then our Office may, during his power, goe sleepe.

Sicin. He cannot temp'rately transport his Honors,
From where he should begin, and end, but will Lose those he hath wonne.

Brutus In that there's comfort

Sicin. Doubt not,
The Commoners, for whom we stand, but they
Vpon their ancient malice, will forget
With the least cause, these his new Honors,
Which that he will giue them, make I as little question,
As he is prowd to doo't.

Brutus. I heard him sweare,
Were he to stand for Consull, neuer would he Appeare th' Market place, nor on him put
The Naples Vesture of Humilitie,
Nor shewing (as the manner is) his Wounds
Toth' People, begge their stinking Breaths.

Sicin. 'Tis right.

Brutus. It was his word:
Oh he would misse it, rather then carry it,
But by the suite of the Gentry to him,
And the desire of the Nobles.

Sicin. I wish no better, then haue him hold that purpose, and to put it in execution.

Brutus. 'Tis most like he will.

Sicin. It shall be to him then, as our good wills; a sure destruction.

Brutus. So it must fall out
To him, or our Authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the People, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that to's power he would Haue made them Mules, silenc'd their Pleaders,
And dispropertied their Freedomes; holding them,
In humane Action, and Capacitie,
Of no more Soule, nor fitnesse for the World,
Then Camels in their Warre, who haue their Prouand
Onely for bearing Burthens, and sore blowes
For sinking vnder them.

Sicin. This (as you say) suggested,
At some time, when his soaring insolence
Shall teach the People, which time shall not want,
If he be put vpon't, and that's as easie,
As to set Dogges on Sheepe, will be his fire
To kindle their dry Stubble: and their blaze
Shall darken him for euer.

Enter a Messenger.

Brutus. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sept for to the Capitoll:
'Tis thought, that Martius shall be Consull:
I haue seene the dumbe men throng to see him,
And the blind to heare him speak. Matrons flung Gloues,
Ladies and Maids their Scarffes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he pass'd: the Nobles bended
As to Ioues Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I never saw the like.

Brutus. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with vs Eares and Eyes for th' time,
But Hearts for the euent.

Sicin. Haue with you. Exeunt

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions in a rome, in the Capitoll.

1. Off. Come, come, they are almost here: how many stand for Consulships?

2. Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of euery one Coriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That's a braue fellow: but he's vengeance prowd, and loues not the common people.

2. Off. Faith, there hath beene many great men that haue flatter'd the people, who ne're lou'd them; and there be many that they haue lou'd, they know not wherefore: so that if they loue they know not why, they hate vpon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neyther to care whether they loue, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his Noble carelesnesse lets them plainly see't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their loue or no, he waued indifferently, 'twixt doing them neyther good, nor harme: but he seekes their hate with greater deuotion, then they can render it him, and leaues nothing vndone, that may fully discouer him their opposite. Now to seeme to affect the malice and displeasure of the People, is as bad, as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their loue.

2. Off. Hee hath deserued worthily of his Country, and his ascent is not by such easie degrees as those, who hauing beene supple and courteous to the People, bonnetted, without any further deed, to haue them at all into their estimation, and report: but hee hath (as it were) beaten his Honors in their Eyes, and his actions in their Hearts, that for their Tongues to be silent, and not confesse so much, were a kinde of ingratefull Iniurie: to report otherwise, were a Malice, that giuing it selfe the Lye, would plucke reproofe and rebuke from euery Eare that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him, he's a worthy man: make way, they are comming.

A Sennet. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Lictors before them: Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius the Consull: Sicinius and Brutus take their places by themselues. Coriolanus stands.

Menen. Hauing determin'd of the Volces,
And to send for Titus Lartius it remaines,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To

uſie his Noble ſeruice, that hath ood for his Country. Therefore pleaſe you, uerend and graue Elders, to deſire
eſent Conſull, and laſt Generall, well-found Succeſſes, to report of that worthy Worke, perform'd Martius Caius Coriolanus: whom
t here, both to thanke, and to remember,
Honors like himſelfe.
m. Speake, good Cominius:
nothing our for length, and make vs thinke
our ſtates defectiue for requitall, e to ſtretch it out. Maſters a'th' People, e requeſt your kindeſt eares: and after ning motion toward the common Body,
ld what paſſes here.
m. We are conuented vpon a pleaſing Treatie, and ares inclinable to honor and aduance the Theame Aſſembly.
m. Which the rather we ſhall be bleſt to doe, if ember a kinder value of the People, then he hath priz'd them at.
m. That's off, that's off: I would you rather had ſent; Pleaſe you to heare Cominius ſpeake?
Mu. Moſt willingly: but yet my Caution was ertinent then the rebuke you giue it.
m. He loues your People, but tye him not to be ed-fellow: Worthie Cominius ſpeake.
Coriolanus riſes, and offers to go away.
eepe your place.
r. Sir Coriolanus: neuer ſhame to heare you haue Nobly done.
d. Your Honors pardon:
rather haue my Wounds to heale againe,
eare ſay how I got them.
ma. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?
d. No Sir: yet oft,
blowes haue made me ſtay, I fled from words.
oth'd not, therefore hurt not: but your People, hem as they weigh—
nen. Pray now ſit downe.
I had rather haue one ſcratch my Head i'th' Sun,
the Alarum were ſtrucke, then idly ſit re my Nothings monſter'd. Exit Coriolanus
nen. Maſters of the People, oultiplying Spawne, how can he flatter?
thouſand to one good one, when you now ſee rather venture all his Limbes for Honor, n ones Eares to heare it. Proceed Cominius.
. I ſhall lacke voyce: the deeds of Coriolanus
not be vtter'd feebly: it is held,
'alour is the chiefeſt Vertue, oſt dignifies the haue: if it be, n I ſpeake of, cannot in the World
y counter-poys'd. At ſixteene yeeres, Tarquin made a Head for Rome, he fought the marke of others: our then Dictator, with all praiſe I point at, ſaw him fight,
with his Amazonian Shinne he droue aled Lippes before him: he beſtrid preſt Roman, and i'th' Conſuls view ree Oppoſers: Tarquins ſelfe he met,
ue'ke him on his Knee: in that dayes feates,
he might act the Woman in the Scene,
d'd beſt man i'th' field, and for his meed ow-bound with the Oake. His Pupill age
Man-entred thus, he waxed like a Sea,
And in the brunt of ſeuenteene Battailes ſince,
He lurcht all Swords of the Garland: for this laſt,
Before, and in Corioles, let me ſay
I cannot ſpeake him home: he ſtopt the flyers,
And by his rare example made the Coward
Turne terror into ſport: as Weeds before
A Veſſell vnder ſayle, ſo men obey'd,
And fell below his Stem: his Sword, Deaths ſtampe,
Where it did marke, it tooke from face to foot
He was a thing of Blood, whoſe euery motion
Was tim'd with dying Cryes: alone he entred
The mortall Gate of th' Citie, which he painted
With ſhunleſſe deſtinie: aydeleſſe came off,
And with a ſudden re-inforcement ſtrucke
Corioles like a Planet: now all's his,
When by and by the dinne of Warre gan pierce
His readie ſence: then ſtraight his doubled ſpirit
Requickned what in flеſh was fatigate,
And to the Battaile came he, where he did
Runne reeking o're the liues of men, as if 'twere
A perpetuall ſpoyle: and till we call'd
Both Field and Citie ours, he neuer ſtood
To eaſe his Breſt with panting.
Menen. Worthy man.
Senat. He cannot but with meaſure fit the Honors which we deuiſe him.
Com. Our ſpoyles he kickt at,
And look'd vpon things precious, as they were
The common Muck of the World: he couets leſſe
Then Miſerie it ſelfe would giue, rewards his deeds
With doing them, and is content
To ſpend the time, to end it.
Menen. He's right Noble, let him be call'd for.
Senat. Call Coriolanus.
Off. He doth appeare.

Enter Coriolanus.

Menen. The Senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd to make thee Conſull
Corio. I doe owe them ſtill my Life, and Seruices.
Menen. It then remaines, that you doe ſpeake to the People.
Corio. I doe beſeech you,
Let me o're-leape that cuſtome: for I cannot Put on the Gowne, ſtand naked, and entreat them
For my Wounds ſake, to giue their ſufferage:
Pleaſe you that I may paſſe this doing.
Sicin. Sir, the People muſt haue their Voyces,
Neyther will they bate one iot of Ceremonie.
Menen. Put them not too't:
Pray you goe fit you to the Cuſtome,
And take to you, as your Predeceſſors haue,
Your Honor with your forme.
Corio. It is a part that I ſhall bluſh in acting,
And might well be taken from the People.
Brutus. Marke you that.
Corio. To brag vnto them, thus I did, and thus Shew them th' vnaking Skarres, which I ſhould hide,
As if I had receiu'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely
Menen. Doe not ſtand vpon't:
We recommend to you Tribunes of the People
Our purpoſe to them, and to our Noble Conſull
Wiſh we all Ioy, and Honor.

Senat. To

Sent. To Coriolanus come all ioy and Honor.

Flourish Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Manet Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. You see how he intends to vse the people.

Sicin. May they perceiue's intent: he will require them
As if he did contemne what he requested,
Should be in them to giue.

Bru. Come, wee'l informe them
Of our proceedings heere on th'Market place,
I know they do attend vs.

Enter seuen or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he do require our voyces, wee ought not to deny him.

2. Cit. We may Sir if we will.

3. Cit. We haue power in our selues to do it, but it is a power that we haue no power to do: For, if hee shew vs his wounds, and tell vs his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speake for them: So if he tell vs his Noble deeds, we must also tell him our Noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingratefull, were to make a Monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring our selues to be monstrous members.

1. Cit. And to make vs no better thought of a little helpe will serue: for once we stood vp about the Corne, he himselfe stucke not to call vs the many-headed Multitude.

3. Cit. We haue beene call'd so of many, not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, some Abram, some bald; but that our wits are so diuersly Coulord; and truely I thinke, if all our wittes were to issue out of one Scull, they would flye East, West, North, South, and their consent of one direct way, should be at once to all the points a'th Compasse.

2. Cit. Thinke you so? Which way do you iudge my wit would flye.

3. Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another mans will, 'tis strongly wedg'd vp in a blocke head: but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure Southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To loose it selfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the fourth would returne for Conscience sake, to helpe to get thee a Wife.

2 Cit. You are neuer without your tricks, you may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolu'd to giue your voyces? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it, I say. If hee would incline to the people, there was neuer a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility, with Menenius.

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behauiour: we are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twoes, & by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein euerie one of vs has a single Honor, in giuing him our own voices with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and Ile direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.

Men. Oh Sir, you are not right: haue you not knowne The worthiest men haue done't?

Corio. What must I say, I pray Sir?
Plague vpon't, I cannot bring
My tougne to such a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds,
I got them in my Countries Seruice, when
Some certaine of your Brethren roar'd, and ranne
From th'noise of our owne Drummes.

Men. Oh me the Gods, you must not speak of that, You must desire them to thinke vpon you.

Coriol. Thinke vpon me? Hang 'em,
I would they would forget me, like the Vertues
Which our Diuines lose by 'em.

Men. You'l marre all.
Ile leaue you: Pray you speake to em, I pray you
In wholsome manner. Exit

Enter three of the Citizens.

Corio. Bid them wash their Faces,
And keepe their teeth cleane: So, heere comes a brace.
You know the cause (Sir) of my standing heere.

3 Cit. We do Sir, tell vs what hath brought you to't.

Corio. Mine owne desert.

2 Cit. Your owne desert.

Corio. I, but mine owne desire.

3 Cit. How not your owne desire?

Corio. No Sir, 'twas neuer my desire yet to trouble the poore with begging.

3 Cit. You must thinke if we giue you any thing, we hope to gaine by you.

Corio. Well then I pray, your price a'th'Consulship.

1 Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly.

Corio. Kindly Sir, I pray let me ha't: I haue wounds to shew you, which shall be yours in priuate. Your good voice Sir, what say you?

2 Cit. You shall ha't worthy Sir.

Corio. A match Sir, there's in all two worthie voyces begg'd: I haue your Almes, Adieu.

3 Cit. But this is something odde.

2 Cit. And 'twere to giue againe: but 'tis no matter. Exeunt. Enter two other Citizens.

Coriol. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be Consull, I haue here the Customarie Gowne.

1. You haue deseru'd Nobly of your Country, and you haue not deseru'd Nobly.

Coriol. Your Ænigma.

1 You haue bin a scourge to her enemies, you haue bin a Rod to her Friends, you haue not indeed loued the Common people.

Coriol. You should account me the more Vertuous that I haue not bin common in my Loue. I will (in hatred of my sworne Brother the people to raise a greater veneration of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle & since the wisedome of their choice, is rather to haue my Hat, then my Heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitly, that is, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and giue it bountifull to the desirers. Therefore beseech you, I may be Consull.

2. Wee hope to finde you our friend: and therefore giue you our voices heartily.

1. You haue receyued many wounds for your Country.

Coriol. I will not Seale your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and so trouble you no farther.

Both. The Gods giue you ioy Sir heartily.

Coriol. Most sweet Voyces!
Better it is to dye, better to starue,
Then craue the hire which first we do deserue.
Why in this Woolnish tongue should I stand heere,
To begge of Hob and Dicke, that doe't appeare

Their

Their needleſſe Vouches: Cuſtome calls me to't.
What Cuſtome wills in all things, ſhould we do't?
The Duſt on antique Time would lye vnſwept,
And mountainous Error be too highly heapt,
For Truth to o're-peere. Rather then foole it ſo,
Let the high Office and the Honor go
To one that would doe thus. I am halfe through,
The one part ſuffered, the other will I doe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe Voyces.
Your Voyces? for your Voyces I haue fought,
Watcht for your Voyces: for your Voyces, beare
Of Wounds, two dozen odde: Battailes thrice ſix
I haue ſeene, and heard of: for your Voyces,
Haue done many things, ſome leſſe, ſome more:
Your Voyces? Indeed I would be Conſull.

1.Cit. Hee ha's done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honeſt mans Voyce.

2.Cit. Therefore let him be Conſull: the Gods giue him ioy, and make him good friend to the People.

All. Amen, Amen. God ſaue thee, Noble Conſull.

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Menen. You haue ſtood your Limitation:
And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,
Remaines, that in th'Officiall Markes inueſted,
You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio. Is this done?

Scicin. The Cuſtome of Requeſt you haue diſcharg'd:
The People doe admit you, and are ſummon'd
To meet anon, vpon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-houſe?

Scicin. There, Coriolanus

Corio. May I change theſe Garments?

Scicin. You may, Sir.

Corio. That Ile ſtraight do: and knowing my ſelfe againe, Repayre to'th' Senate-houſe.

Menen. Ile keepe you company. Will you along?

Brut. We ſtay here for the People.

Scicin. Fare you well. Exeunt Coriol. and Menen.
He ha's it now: and by his Lookes, me thinkes,
'Tis warme at's heart.

Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weede:
Will you diſmiſſe the People?

Enter the Plebeians.

Scicin. How now, my Maſters, haue you choſe this man?

1.Cit. He ha's our Voyces, Sir.

Brut. We pray the Gods, he may deſerue your loues.

2.Cit. Amen, Sir: to my poore vnworthy notice,
He mock'd vs, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3.Cit. Certainely, he flowted vs downe-right.

1.Cit. No, 'tis his kind of ſpeech, he did not mock vs.

2.Cit. Not one amongſt vs, ſaue your ſelfe, but ſayes
He vs'd vs ſcornefully: he ſhould haue ſhew'd vs
His Marks of Merit, Wounds receiu'd for's Countrey.

Scicin. Why ſo he did I am ſure.

All. No, no man ſaw 'em.

3.Cit. Hee ſaid he had Wounds,
Which he could ſhew in priuate:
And with his Hat, thus waying it in ſcorne,
I would be Conſull, ſayes he: aged Cuſtome,
But by your Voyces, will not ſo permit me.
Your Voyces therefore: when we graunted that,
Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you
Your moſt ſweet Voyces: now you haue left your Voyces,
I haue no further with you. Was not this mockerie?

Scicin. Why eyther were you ignorant to ſee't?
Or ſeeing it, of ſuch Childiſh friendlineſſe,
To yeeld your Voyces?

Brut. Could you not haue told him,
As you were leſſon'd: When he had no Power,
But was a petty ſeruant to the State,
He was your Enemie, euer ſpake againſt
Your Liberties, and the Charters that you beare
I'th' Body of the Weale: and now arriuing
A place of Potencie, and ſway o'th' State,
If he ſhould ſtill malignantly remaine
Faſt Foe to th' Plebeys, your Voyces might Be Curſes to your ſelues. You ſhould haue ſaid,
That as his worthy deeds did clayme no leſſe
Then what he ſtood for: ſo his gracious nature
Would thinke vpon you, for your Voyces,
And tranſlate his Malice towards you, into Loue,
Standing your friendly Lord.

Scicin. Thus to haue ſaid,
As you were fore-aduis'd, had touche his Spirit,
And try'd his Inclination: from him plockt
Eyther his gracious Promiſe, which you might
As cauſe had call'd you vp, haue held him to;
Or elſe it would haue gall'd his ſurly nature,
Which eaſily endures not Article,
Tying him to ought, ſo putting him to Rage,
You ſhould haue ta'ne th'aduantage of his Choller,
And paſs'd him vnelected.

Brut. Did you perceiue,
He did ſollicite you in free Contempt,
When he did need your Loues: and doe you thinke,
That his Contempt ſhall not be bruſing to you,
When he hath power to cruſh? Why, had your Bodyes
No Heart among you? Or had you Tongues, to cry
Againſt the Rectorſhip of Iudgement?

Scicin. Haue you, ere now, deny'd the aske:
And now againe, of him that did not aske, but mock,
Beſtow your ſu'd-for Tongues?

3.Cit. Hee's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2.Cit. And will deny him:
Ile haue fiue hundred Voyces of that ſound.

1.Cit. I twice fiue hundred, & their friends, to piece 'em.

Brut. Get you hence inſtantly, and tell thoſe friends,
They haue choſe a Conſull, that will from them take
Their Liberties, make them of no more Voyce
Then Dogges, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to doe ſo.

Scicin. Let them aſſemble: and on a ſafer Iudgement,
All reuoke your ignorant election: Enforce his Pride,
And his old Hate vnto you: beſides, forget not
With what Contempt he wore the humble Weed,
How in his Suit he ſcorn'd you: but your Loues,
Thinking vpon his Seruices, tooke from you
Th'apprehenſion of his preſent portance,
Which moſt gibingly, vngracefully, he did faſhion
After the inueterate Hate he beares you.

Brut. Lay a fault on vs, your Tribunes,
That we labour'd (no impediment betweene)
But that you muſt caſt your Election on him.

Scicin. Say you choſe him, more after our commandment,
Then as guided by your owne true affections, and that
Your Minds pre-occupy'd with what you rather muſt do,
Then what you ſhould, made you againſt the graine
To Voyce him Conſull. Lay the fault on vs.

Brut. I,spare vs not: Say,we read Lectures to you,
How youngly he began to ſerue his Country,
How long continued,and what ſtock he ſprings of,
The Noble Houſe o'th'Martians: from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numaes Daughters Sonne.
Who after great Hoſtilius here was King,
Of the ſame Houſe Publius and Quintus were,
That our beſt Water,brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd,ſo twice being Cenſor,
Was his great Anceſtor.

Scicin. One thus deſcended,
That hath beſide well in his perſon wrought,
To be ſet high in place,we did commend
To your remembrances: but you haue found,
Scaling his preſent bearing with his paſt,
That hee's your fixed enemie; and reuoke
Your ſuddaine approbation.

Brut. Say you ne're bad don't,
(Harpe on that ſtill) but by our putting on:
And preſently,when you haue drawne your number,
Repaire toth' Capitoll.

All. We will ſo: almoſt all repent in their election.
Exeunt Plebeians.

Brut. Let them goe on:
This Mutinie were better put in hazard,
Then ſtay paſt doubt,for greater:
If,as his nature is,he fall in rage
With their refuſall, both obſerue and anſwer
The vantage of his anger.

Scicin. Toth'Capitoll, come:
We will be there before the ſtreame o'th' People:
And this ſhall ſeeme,as partly 'tis,their owne,
Which we haue goaded on-ward. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornett. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry, Cominius, Titus Latius, and other Senators.

Corio. Tullus Auffidius then had made new head.

Latius. He had,my Lord,and that it was which cauſ'd
Our ſwifter Compoſition.

Corio. So then the Volces ſtand but as at firſt,
Readie when time ſhall prompt them,to make roade
Vpon's againe.

Com. They are worne (Lord Conſull) ſo
That we ſhall hardly in our ages ſee
Their Banners waue againe.

Corio. Saw you Auffidius?

Latius. On ſafegard he came to me,and did curſe
Againſt the Volces,for they had ſo vildly
Yeelded the Towne: he is retyred to Antium.

Corio. Spoke he of me?

Latius. He did,my Lord.

Corio. How? what?

Latius. How often he had met you Sword to Sword:
That of all things vpon the Earth,he hated
Your perſon moſt: That he would pawne his fortunes
To hopeleſſe reſtitution,ſo he might Be call'd your Vanquiſher.

Corio. At Antium liues he?

Latius. At Antium.

Corio. I wiſh I had a cauſe to ſeeke him there,
To oppoſe his hatred fully. Welcome home.
Enter Scicinius and Brutus.
Behold,theſe are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th' Common Mouth. I do deſpiſe them:
For they doe pranke them in Authoritie,
Againſt all Noble ſufferance.

Scicin. Paſſe no further.

Cor. Hah? what is that?

Brut. It will be dangerous to goe on--- No further.

Corio. What makes this change?

Menen. The matter?

Com. Hath he not paſs'd the Noble,and the Common?

Brut. Cominius,no.

Corio. Haue I had Childrens Voyces?

Senat. Tribunes giue way,he ſhall to'th'Market place.

Brut. The People are incens'd againſt him.

Scicin. Stop,or all will fall in broyle.

Corio. Are theſe your Herd?
Muſt theſe haue Voyces,that can yeild them now,
And ſtraight diſclaim their tounges? what are your Offices?
You being their Mouthes,why rule you not their Teeth?
Haue you not ſet them on?

Menen. Be calme,be calme.

Corio. It is a purpos'd thing,and growes by Plot,
To curbe the will of the Nobilitie:
Suffer't,and liue with ſuch as cannot rule,
Nor euer will be ruled.

Brut. Call't not a Plot:
The People cry you mockt them: and of late,
When Corne was giuen them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants: for the People, call'd them
Time-pleaſers,flatterers, foes to Nobleneſſe.

Corio. Why this was knowne before.

Brut. Not to them all.

Corio. Haue you informe'd them ſithence?

Brut. How? I informe them?

Com. You are like to doe ſuch buſineſſe.

Brut. Not vnlike each way to better yours.

Corio. Why then ſhould I be Conſull? by yond Clouds
Let me deſerue ſo ill as you,and make me
Your fellow Tribune.

Scicin. You ſhew too much of that,
For which the People ſtirre: if you will paſſe
To where you are bound, you muſt enquire your way,
Which you are out of,with a gentler ſpeare,
Or neuer be ſo Noble as a Conſull,
Nor ioake with him for Tribune.

Menen. Let's be calme.

Com. The People are abus'd: ſet on,this paſting Becomes not Rome: nor has't Coriolanus
Deſeru'd this ſo diſhonor'd Rub, layd falſely
I'th' plaine Way of his Merit.

Corio. Tell me of Corne: this was my ſpeech,
And I will ſpeak't againe.

Menen. Not now, not now.

Senat. Not in this heat,Sir,now.

Corio. Now as I liue, I will.
My Noble friends, I craue their pardons:
For the mutable ranke-ſented Meyney,
Let them regard me,as I doe not flatter,
And therein behold themſelues: I ſay againe,
In ſoothing them,we nouriſh 'gainſt our Senate
The Cockle of Rebellion,Inſolence,Sedition,
Which we our ſelues haue plowed for,ſow'd & ſcatter'd,
By mingling them with vs,the honor'd Number,
Who lack not Vertue, no,nor Power, but that
Which they haue giuen to Beggers.

Menen. Well, no more.

Senat. No more words, we beſeech you.

Corio. How? no more?

As

As for my Country, I haue ſhed my blood,
Not fearing outward force: So ſhall my Lungs
Coine words till their decay, againſt thoſe Meazels
Which we diſdaine ſhould Tetter vs, yet ſought
The very way to catch them.
Bru. You ſpeake o'th people, as if you were a God,
To puniſh; Not a man, of their Infirmity.
Sicin. 'Twere well we let the people know't.
Men. What, what? His Choller?
Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight ſleep,
By Iour, 'would be my minde.
Sicin. It is a minde that ſhall remain a poiſon
Where it is: not poyſon any further.
Cor. Shall remaine?
Heare you this Triton of the Minnoues? Marke you
His abſolute Shall?
Com. 'Twas from the Cannon.
Cor. Shall? O God! but moſt vnwiſe Patricians, why
You grane, but wreakleſſe Senators, haue you thus Giuen Hidra heere to chooſe an Officer,
That with his peremptory Shall, being but
The horne, and noiſe o'th' Monſters, wants not ſpirit
To ſay, he'l turne your Current in a ditch,
And make your Channell his? If he haue power,
Then vale your Ignorance: If none, awake
Your dangerous Lenity: If you are Learn'd,
Be not as common Fooles; if you are not,
Let them haue Cuſhions by you. You are Plebeians,
If they be Senators: and they are no leſſe,
When both your voices blended, the great'ſt taſte
Moſt palliates theirs. They choooſe their Magiſtrate,
And ſuch a one as he, who puts his Shall,
His popular Shall, againſt a grauer Bench
Then euer frown'd in Greece. By Ioue himſelfe,
It makes the Conſuls baſe; and my Soule akes
To know, when two Authorities are vp,
Neither Supreame: How ſoone Confuſion
May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take
The one by th' other.
Com. Well, on to'th Market place.
Cor. Who euer gaue that Counſell, to giue forth
The Corne a'th' Store-houſe gratis, as 'twas vs'd
Sometime in Greece.
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more abſolute powre
I ſay they nouriſht diſobedience: fed, the ruin of the State.
Bru. Why ſhall the people giue
One that ſpeakes thus, their voyce?
Cor. Ile giue my Reaſons,
More worthier then their Voyces. They know the Corne
Was not our recompence, reſting well aſſur'd
They ne're did ſeruice for't, being preſt to'th' Warre,
Euen when the Nauell of the State was touch'd,
They would not thred the Gates. This kinde of Seruice
Did not deſerue Corne gratis. Being i'th Warre,
Their Mutinies and Reuolts, wherein they ſhew'd
Moſt Valour, ſpoke not for them. Th' Accuſation
Which they haue often made againſt the Senate,
All cauſe vnborne, could neuer be the Natiue
Of our ſo franke Donation. Well, what then?
How ſhall this Boſome-multiplied, digeſt
The Senates Courteſie? Let deeds expreſſe
What's like to be their words, We did requeſt it,
We are the greater pole, and in true feare
They gaue vs our demands. Thus we debaſe
The Nature of our Seats, and make the Rabble
Call our Cares, Feares; which will in time
Breake ope the Lockes a'th Senate, and bring in
The Crowes to pecke the Eagles.
Men. Come enough.
Bru. Enough, with ouer meaſure.
Cor. No, take more.
What may be ſworne by, both Diuine and Humane,
Seale what I end withall. This double worſhip,
Where on part do's diſdaine with cauſe, the other
Inſult without all reaſon: where Gentry, Title, wiſedom
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of generall Ignorance, it muſt omit
Reall Neceſſities, and giue way the while
To vnſtable Slightneſſe. Purpoſe ſo barr'd, it followes,
Nothing is done to purpoſe. Therefore beſeech you,
You that will be leſſe featefull, then diſcreet,
That loue the Fundamentall part of State
More then you doubt the change on't: That preferre
A Noble life, before a Long, and Wiſh,
To temper a Body with a dangerous Phyſicke,
That's ſure of death without it: at once plucke out
The Multitudinous Tongue, let them not licke
The ſweet which is their poyſon. Your diſhonor
Mangles true iudgement, and bereaues the State
Of that Integrity which ſhould become't;
Not hauing the power to do the good it would
For th' ill which doth controuli't.
Bru. Has ſaid enough.
Sicin. Ha's ſpoken like a Traitor, and ſhall anſwer
As Traitors do.
Cor. Thou wretch, deſpight ore whelme thee:
What ſhould the people do with theſe bald Tribunes?
On whom depending, their obediences failes
To'th' greater Bench, in a Rebellion:
When what's not meet, but what muſt be, was Law,
Then were they choſen: in a better houre,
Let what is meet, be ſaide it muſt be meet,
And throw their power i'th' duſt.
Bru. Manifeſt Treaſon.
Sicin. This a Conſull? No.
Enter an Ædile.
Bru. The Ediles hoe: Let him be apprehended
Sicin. Go call the people, in whoſe name my Selfe
Attach thee as a Traiterous Innouator:
A Foe to'th publike Weale. Obey I charge thee,
And follow to thine anſwer.
Cor. Hence pid Goat
All. Wee'l Surety him
Com. Ag'd Sir, hands off.
Cor. Hence rotten thing, or I ſhall ſhake thy bones
Out of thy Garments.
Sicin. Helpe ye Citizens.
Enter a rabble of Plebeians with the Ædiles.
Men. On both ſides more reſpect.
Sicin. Heere's he, that would take from you all your power.
Bru. Seize him Ædiles.
All. Downe with him, downe with him
2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons:
They all buſtle about Coriolanus.
Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens: what ho:
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.
All. Peace, peace, peace, ſtay, hold, peace.
Men. What is about to be? I am out of Breath,
Confuſions neere, I cannot ſpeake. You, Tribunes
To'th' people: Coriolanus, patience: Speak good Sicinius.

Scici. Heare me, People peace.

All. Let's here our Tribune: peace, speake, speake, speake.

Scic. You are at point to loſe your Liberties: Martius would haue all from you; Martius, Whom late you haue nam'd for Conſull.

Mene. Fie, fie, fie, this is the way to kindle, not to quench.

Sen. To vnbuild the Citie, and to lay all flat.

Scici. What is the Citie, but the People?

All. True, the People are the Citie.

Brut. By the conſent of all, we were eſtabliſh'd the Peoples Magiſtrates.

All. You ſo remaine.

Mene. And ſo are like to doe.

Com. That is the way to lay the Citie flat, To bring the Rooſe to the Foundation, And burne all, which yet diſtinctly ranges In heapes, and piles of Ruine.

Scici. This deſerues Death.

Brut. Or let vs ſtand to our Authoritie, Or let vs loſe it: we doe here pronounce, Vpon the part o'th' People, in whoſe power We were elected theirs, Martius is worthy Of preſent Death.

Scici. Therefore lay hold of him: Beare him toth' Rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into deſtruction caſt him.

Brut. Ædiles ſeize him.

All Ple. Yeeld Martius, yeeld.

Mene. Heare me one word, beſeech you Tribunes, heare me but a word.

Ædiles. Peace, peace.

Mene. Be that you ſeeme, truly your Countries friend, And temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redreſſe.

Brut. Sir, thoſe cold wayes, That ſeeme like prudent helpes, are very poyſonous, Where the Diſeaſe is violent. Lay hands vpon him, And beare him to the Rock. Corio. drawes his Sword.

Corio. No, Ile die here: There's ſome among you haue beheld me fighting, Come try vpon your ſelues, what you haue ſeene me.

Mene. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw a while.

Brut. Lay hands vpon him.

Mene. Helpe Martius, helpe: you that be noble, helpe him young and old.

All. Downe with him, downe with him. Exeunt. In the Meſcmie, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People are beat in.

Mene. Goe, get you to our Houſe: be gone, away, All will be naught elſe.

2. Sena. Get you gone.

Com. Stand faſt, we haue as many friends as enemies.

Mene. Shall it be put to that?

Sena. The Gods forbid: I prythee noble friend, home to thy Houſe, Leaue vs to cure this Cauſe.

Mene. For 'tis a Sore vpon vs, You cannot Tent your ſelfes: be gone, beſeech you.

Corio. Come Sir, along with vs.

Mene. I would they were Barbarians, as they are, Though in Rome litter'd: not Romans, as they are not, Though calued i'th' Porch o'th' Capitoll.

Be gone, put not your worthy Rage into your Tongue, One time will owe another.

Corio. On faire ground, I could beat forties of them.

Mene. I could my ſelfe take vp a Brace o'th' beſt of them, yea, the two Tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond Arithmetick, And Manhood is call'd Foolerie, when it ſtands Againſt a falling Fabrick. Will you hence, Before the Tagge returne? whoſe Rage doth rend Like interrupted Waters, and o're-beare What they are vs'd to beare.

Mene. Pray you be gone: Ile try whether my old Wit be in requeſt With thoſe that haue but little: this muſt be patcht With Cloth of any Colour.

Com. Nay, come away. Exeunt Corialanus and Cominius.

Patri. This man ha's marr'd his fortune.

Mene. His nature is too noble for the World: He would not flatter Neptune for his Trident, Or Ioue, for's power to Thunder: his Heart's his Mouth: What his Breſt forges, that his Tongue muſt vent, And being angry, does forget that euer He heard the Name of Death. A Noiſe within. Here's goodly worke.

Patri. I would they were a bed.

Mene. I would they were in Tyber. What the vengeance, could he not ſpeake 'em faire? Enter Brutus and Sicinius with the rabble againe.

Sicin. Where is this Viper, That would depopulate the city, & be euery man himſelf?

Mene. You worthy Tribunes.

Sicin. He ſhall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands: he hath reſiſted Law, And therefore Law ſhall ſcorne him further Triall Then the ſeuerity of the publike Power, Which he ſo ſets at nought.

1 Cit. He ſhall well know the Noble Tribunes are The peoples mouths, and we their hands.

All. He ſhall ſure on't.

Mene. Sir, ſir. Sicin. Peace.

Mene. Do not cry hauocke, where you ſhold but hue With modeſt warrant.

Sicin. Sir, how com'ſt that you haue holpe To make this reſcue?

Mene. Heere me ſpeake? As I do know The Conſuls worthineſſe, ſo can I name his Faults.

Sicin. Conſull? what Conſull?

Mene. The Conſull Coriolanus.

Bru. He Conſull.

All. No, no, no, no, no.

Mene. If by the Tribunes leaue, And yours good people, I may be heard, I would craue a word or two, The which ſhall turne you to no further harme, Then ſo much loſſe of time.

Sic. Speake breefely then, For we are peremptory to diſpatch This Viperous Traitor: to elect him heere Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed, He dyes to night.

Mene. Now the good Gods forbid, That our renowned Rome, whoſe gratitude Towards her deſerued Children, is enrold In Iours owne Bookes, like an vnnaturall Dam Should now eate vp her owne.

Sicin.

Scic. He's a Diſeaſe that muſt be cut away.
Mene. Oh he's a Limbe, that ha's but a Diſeaſe
Mortall, to cut it off: to cure it, eaſie.
What ha's he done to Rome, that's worthy death?
Killing our Enemies, the blood he hath loſt
(Which I dare vouch, is more then that he hath
By many an Ounce) he dropp'd it for his Country:
And what is left, to looſe it by his Country,
Were to vs all that doo't, and ſuffer it
A braud to th'end a'th World.
Scic. This is cleane kamme.
Brut. Meerely awry:
When he did loue his Country, it honour'd him.
Mene. The ſeruice of the foote
Being once gangren'd, is not then reſpected
For what before it was.
Bru. We'l heare no more:
Purſue him to his houſe, and pluck him thence,
Leaſt his infection being of catching nature,
Spred further.
Mene. One word more, one word:
This Tiger-footed-rage, when it ſhall find
The harme of vnskan'd ſwiftneſſe, will (too late)
Tye Leaden pounds too's heeles. Proceed by Proceſſe, Leaſt parties (as he is belou'd) breake out,
And ſacke great Rome with Romanes.
Brut. If it were ſo?
Scic. What do ye talke?
Haue we not had a taſte of his Obedience?
Our Ediles ſmot: our ſelues reſiſted: come.
Mene. Conſider this: He ha's bin bred i'th'Warres
Since a could draw a Sword, and is ill-ſchool'd
In boulted Language: Meale and Bran together
He throwes without diſtinction. Giue me leaue,
Ile go to him, and vndertake to bring him in peace,
Where he ſhall anſwer by a lawfull Forme
(In peace) to his vtmoſt peril.
1. Sen. Noble Tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other courſe
Will proue to bloody: and the end of it,
Vnknowne to the Beginning.
Sic. Noble Menenius, be you then as the peoples officer:
Maſters, lay downe your Weapons.
Bru. Go not home.
Sic. Meet on the Market place: wee'l attend you there:
Where if you bring not Martius, wee'l proceede
In our firſt way.
Mene. Ile bring him to you.
Let me deſire your company: he muſt come,
Or what is worſt will follow.
Sena. Pray you let's to him. Exeunt Omnes.

Enter Coriolanus with Nobles.

Corio. Let them pull all about mine eares, preſent me
Death on the Wheele, or at wilde Horſes heeles,
Or pile ten hilles on the Tarpeian Rocke,
That the precipitation might downe ſtretch
Below the beame of ſight; yet will I ſtill
Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

Nobles. You do the Nobles.
Corio. I muſe my Mother
Do's not approue me further, who was wont
To call them Woollen Vaſſailes, things created
To buy and ſell with Groats, to ſhew bare heads
In Congregations, to yawne, be ſtill, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance ſtood vp
To ſpeake of Peace, or Warre. I taſke of you,
Why did you wiſh me milder? Would you haue me
Falſe to my Nature? Rather ſay, I play
The man I am.
Volum. Oh ſir, ſir, ſir,
I would haue had you put your power well on
Before you had worne it out.
Corio. Let go.
Vol. You might haue beene enough the man you are,
With ſtriuing leſſe to be ſo: Leſſer had bin
The things of your diſpoſitions, if
You had not ſhew'd them how ye were diſpos'd
Ere they lack'd power to croſſe you.
Corio. Let them hang.
Volum. I, and burne too.

Enter Menenius with the Senators.

Men. Come, come, you haue bin too rough, ſomthing too rough: you muſt returne, and mend it.
Sen. There's no remedy,
Vnleſſe by not ſo doing, our good Citie
Cleaue in the midd'ſt, and periſh.
Volum. Pray be counſail'd;
I haue a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a braine, that leades my vſe of Anger
To better vantage.
Mene. Well ſaid, Noble woman:
Before he ſhould thus ſtoope to th'heart, but that
The violent fit a'th'time craues it as Phyſicke
For the whole State; I would put mine Armour on,
Which I can ſcarſely beare.
Corio. What muſt I do?
Mene. Returne to th Tribunes.
Corio. Well, what then? what then?
Mene. Repent, what you haue ſpoke.
Corio. For them, I cannot do it to the Gods,
Muſt I then doo't to them?
Volum. You are too abſolute,
Though therein you can neuer be too Noble,
But when extremities ſpeake. I haue heard you ſay,
Honor and Policy, like vnſeuer'd Friends,
I'th'Warre do grow together: Grant that, and tell me
In Peace, what each of them by th'other looſe,
That they combine not there?
Corio. Tuſh, tuſh.
Mene. A good demand.
Volum. If it be Honor in your Warres, to ſeeme
The ſame you are not, which for your beſt ends
You adopt your policy: How is it leſſe or worſe
That it ſhall hold Companionſhip in Peace
With Honour, as in Warre; ſince that to both
It ſtands in like requeſt.
Corio. Why force you this?
Volum. Becauſe, that
Now it lyes you on to ſpeake to th'people:
Not by your owne inſtruction, not by'th'matter
Which your heart prompts you, but with ſuch words
That are but rooted in your Tongue;
Though but Baſtards, and Syllables
Of no allowance, to your boſomes truth.
Now, this no more diſhonors you at all,
Then to take in a Towne with gentle words,
Which elſe would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.
I would diſſemble with my Nature, where
My Fortunes and my Friends at ſtake, requir'd
I ſhould do ſo in Honor. I am in this

Your Wife, your Sonne: Theſe Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather ſhew our generall Lowts,
How you can frowne, then ſpend a fawne vpon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loues, and ſafegard
Of what that want might ruine.
Menen. Noble Lady.
Come goe with vs, ſpeake faire: you may ſalue ſo,
Not what is dangerous preſent, but the loſſe
Of what is paſt.
Volum. I pry thee now, my Sonne,
Goe to them, with this Bonnet in thy hand,
And thus farre having ſtretcht it (here be with them)
Thy Knee buſſing the ſtones: for in ſuch buſineſſe
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th'ignorant
More learned then the eares, wauing thy head,
Which often thus correcting thy ſtout heart,
Now humble as the ripeſt Mulberry,
That will not hold the handling: or ſay to them,
Thou art their Souldier, and being bred in broyles,
Haſt not the ſoft way, which thou do'ſt conſeſſe
Were fit for thee to vſe, as they to claime,
In asking their good loues, but thou wilt frame
Thy ſelfe (forſooth) hereafter theirs ſo ſtarre,
As thou haſt power and perſon.
Menen. This but done,
Euen as ſhe ſpeakes, why their hearts were yours:
For they haue Pardons, being ask'd, as free,
As words to little purpoſe.
Volum. Prythee now,
Goe, and be rul'd: although I know thou hadſt rather Follow thine Enemie in a fierie Gulfe,
Then ſtatter him in a Bower. Enter Cominius.
Here is Cominius.
Com. I haue beene i'th' Market place: and Sir 'tis fit
You make ſtrong partie, or defend your ſelfe
By calmeneſſe, or by abſence: all's in anger.
Menen. Onely faire ſpeech.
Com. I thinke 'twill ſerue, if he can thereto frame his ſpirit.
Volum. He muſt, and will:
Prythee now ſay you will, and goe about it.
Corio. Muſt I goe ſhew them my vnbarb'd Sconce? Muſt I with my baſe Tongue giue to my Noble Heart A Lye, that it muſt beare well? I will doo't:
Yet were there but this ſingle Plot, to looſe
This Mould of Martius, they to duſt ſhould grinde it,
And throw't againſt the Winde. Toth' Market place:
You haue put me now to ſuch a part, which neuer
I ſhall diſcharge toth' Life.
Com. Come, come, wee'le prompt you.
Volum. I prythee now ſweet Son, as thou haſt ſaid
My praiſes made thee firſt a Souldier; ſo
To haue my praiſe for this, performe a part
Thou haſt not done before.
Corio. Well, I muſt doo't:
Away my diſpoſition, and poſſeſſe me
Some Harlots ſpirit: My throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my Drumme into a Pipe,
Small as an Eunuch, or the Virgin voyce
That Babies lull a-ſleepe: The ſmiles of Knaues
Tent in my cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take vp
The Glaſſes of my ſight: A Beggars Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd knees
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiu'd an Almes. I will not doo't, Leaſt I ſurceaſe to honor mine owne truth,
And by my Bodies action, teach my Minde
A moſt inherent Baſeneſſe.
Volum. At thy choice then:
To begge of thee, it is my more diſ-honor,
Then thou of them. Come all to ruine, let Thy Mother rather feele thy Pride, then feare
Thy dangerous Stoutneſſe: for I mocke at death
With as bigge heart as thou. Do as thou liſt,
Thy Valiantneſſe was mine, thou ſuck'ſt it from me:
But owe thy Pride thy ſelfe.
Corio. Pray be content:
Mother, I am going to the Market place
Chide me no more. Ile Mountebanke their Loues,
Cogge their Hearts from them, and come home belou'd
Of all the Trades in Rome. Looke, I am going:
Commend me to my Wife. Ile returne Conſull,
Or neuer truſt to what my Tongue can do
I'th way of Flattery further.
Volum. Do your will. Exit Volum.
Com. Away, the Tribunes do attend you: arme your ſelfe
To anſwer mildely: for they are prepar'd
With Accuſations, as I heare more ſtrong
Then are vpon you yet.
Corio. The word is, Mildely. Pray you let vs go.
Let them accuſe me by inuention: I
Will anſwer in mine Honor.
Menen. I, but mildely.
Corio. Well mildely be it then, Mildely. Exeunt

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannicall power: If he euade vs there,
Inforce him with his enuy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antiats
Was ne're diſtributed. What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.

Edile. Hee's comming.
Bru. How accompanied?
Edile. With old Menenius, and thoſe Senators
That alwayes fauour'd him.
Sicin. Haue you a Catalogue
Of all the Voices that we haue procur'd, ſet downe by'th Edile. I haue: 'tis ready. (Pole?
Sicin. Haue you collected them by Tribes?
Edile. I haue.
Sicin. Aſſemble preſently the people hither:
And when they heare me ſay, it ſhall be ſo,
I'th'right and ſtrength a'th'Commons: be it either
For death, for fine, or Baniſhment, then let them
If I ſay Fine, cry Fine; if Death, cry Death,
Inſiſting on the olde prerogatiue
And power i'th Truth a'th Cauſe.
Edile. I ſhall informe them.
Bru. And when ſuch time they haue begun to cry,
Let them not ceaſe, but with a din confus'd
Inforce the preſent Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.
Edi. Very well.
Sicin. Make them be ſtrong, and ready for this hint
When we ſhall hap to giu't them.
Bru. Go about it.
Put him to Challer ſtraite, he hath been vs'd
Ever to conquer, and to haue his worth
Of contradiction. Being once chaſt, he cannot Be rein'd againe to Temperance, then he ſpeakes

What's

's in his heart, and that is there which lookes vs to breake his necke.
Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius, with others.
e. Well, heere he comes.
r. Calmely, I do beſeech you.
ie. I, as an Hoſtler, that fourth pooreſt peece eare the Knaue by'th Volume:
nor'd Goddes
Rome in ſafety, and the Chaires of Iuſtice
ed with worthy men, plant loue amongs gh our large Temples with ſ shewes of peace ot our ſtreets with Warre.
n. Amen, Amen
m. A Noble wiſh.
Enter the Edile with the Plebeians.
. Draw neere ye' people.
. Liſt to your Tribunes. Audience:
I ſay.
. Firſt heare me ſpeake.
b Tri. Well, ſay: Peace hoe.
. Shall I be charg'd no further then this preſent?
all determine heere?
. I do demand,
ſubmit you to the peoples voices,
r their Officers, and are content fter lawfull Cenſure for ſuch faults ll be prou'd vpon you
n. I am Content.
. Lo Citizens, he ſayes he is Content.
ſtlike Seruice he ha's done, conſider: Thinke
the wounds his body beares, which ſhew
Graues i'th holy Church-yard.
. Scratches with Briars, ſcarres to moue ner onely.
r. Conſider further:
when he ſpeakes not like a Citizen, inde him like a Soldier: do not take ougher Actions for malicious ſounds
I ſay, ſuch as become a Soldier, r then envy you.
. Well, well, no more
n. What is the matter,
eing paſt for Conſull with full voyce:
o diſhonour'd, that the very houre
ake it off againe.
n. Anſwer to vs.
u. Say then: 'tis true, I ought ſo
n. We charge you, that you haue contriu'd to take Rome all ſeaſon'd Office, and to winde ſelfe into a power tyrannicall, hich you are a Traitor to the people.
ie. How? Traytor?
m. Nay temperately: your promiſe.
n. The fires i'th'lowreſt hell. Fould in the people:
e their Traitor, thou impurious Tribune.
in thine eyes ſate twenty thouſand deaths hands clutche: as many Millions in ying tongue, both numbers. I would ſay lyeſt vnto thee, with a voice as free,
do pray the Gods.
n. Marke you this people?
. To'th'Rocke, to'th Rocke with him.
n. Peace:
eede not put new matter to his charge:
you haue ſeene him do, and heard him ſpeake:
Beating your Officers, curſing your ſelues,
Oppoſing Lawes with ſtroakes, and heere defying
Thoſe whoſe great power muſt try him.
Euen this ſo criminall, and in ſuch capitall kinde
Deſerues th'extreameſt death.
Bru. But ſince he hath ſerv'd well for Rome.
Corio. What do you prate of Seruice.
Bru. I talke of that, that know it
Corio. You?
Mene. Is this the promiſe that you made your mother.
Com. Know, I pray you.
Corio. Ile know no further:
Let them pronounce the ſteepe Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, Flaying, pent to linger
But with a graine a day, I would not buy
Their mercie, at the price of one faire word,
Nor checke my Courage for what they can giue,
To haue't with ſaying, Good morrow.
Sicin. For that he ha's
(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Enui'd againſt the people; ſeeking meanes
To plucke away their power: as now at laſt,
Given Hoſtile ſtrokes, and that not in the preſence
Of dreaded Iuſtice, but on the Miniſters
That doth diſtribute it. In the name o'th'people,
And in the power of vs the Tribunes, wee (Eu'n from this inſtant) baniſh him our Citie
In perill of precipitation
From off the Rocke Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. I'th'Peoples name,
I ſay it ſhall bee ſo.
All. It ſhall be ſo, it ſhall be ſo: let him away:
Hee's baniſh'd, and it ſhall be ſo.
Com. Heare me my Maſters, and my common friends.
Sicin. He's ſentenc'd: No more hearing.
Com. Let me ſpeake:
I haue beene Conſull, and can ſhew from Rome
Her Enemies markes vpon me. I do loue
My Countries good, with a reſpect more tender,
More holy, and profound, then mine owne life,
My deere Wiues eſtimate, her wombes encreaſe,
And treaſure of my Loynes: then if I would Speake that.
Sicin. We know your drift. Speake what?
Bru. There's no more to be ſaid, but he is baniſh'd
As Enemy to the people, and his Countrey.
It ſhall bee ſo.
All. It ſhall be ſo, it ſhall be ſo.
Corio. You common cry of Curs, whoſe breath I hate,
As reeke a'th rotten Fennes: whoſe Loues I prize,
As the dead Carkaſſes of vnburied men,
That do corrupt my Ayre: I baniſh you.
And heere remaine with your vncertaintie
Let euery feeble Rumor ſhake your hearts:
Your Enemies, with nodding of their Plumes
Fan you into diſpaire: Haue the power ſtill
To baniſh your Defenders, till at length
Your ignorance (which findes not till it feeles,
Making but reſeruation of your ſelues,
Still your owne Foes) deliuer you
As moſt abated Captiues, to ſome Nation
That wonne you without blowes, deſpiſing
For you the City. Thus I turne my backe:
There is a world elſewhere.
Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with Cumaligr.
They all ſhout, and throw vp their Caps.

Edile

Edile. The peoples Enemy is gone, is gone.
All. Our enemy is banish'd, he is gone: Hoo, oo.
Sicin. Go see him out at Gates, and follow him
As he hath follow'd you, with all despight
Giue him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend vs through the City.
All. Come, come, lets see him out at gates, come:
The Gods preserue our Noble Tribunes, come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Coriolanus Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, with the yong Nobility of Rome.

Corio. Come leaue your teares: a brief farwel: the beast
With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
Where is your ancient Courage? You were vs'd
To say, Extremities was the trier of spirits,
That common chances. Common men could beare,
That when the Sea was calme, all Boats alike
Shew'd Mastership in floating. Fortunes blowes,
When most strooke home, being gentle wounded, craues
A Noble cunning. You were vs'd to load me
With Precepts that would make inuincible
The heart that conn'd them.
Virg. Oh heauens! O heauens!
Corio. Nay, I prythee woman.
Vol. Now the Red Pestilence strike all Trades in Rome,
And Occupations perish.
Corio. What, what, what:
I shall be lou'd when I am lack'd. Nay Mother,
Resume that Spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had beene the Wife of Hercules,
Six of his Labours you'ld haue done, and sau'd
Your Husband so much sweat. Cominius,
Droope not, Adieu: Farewell my Wife, my Mother,
Ile do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy teares are salter then a younger mans,
And venomous to thine eyes. My (sometime) Generall,
I haue seene the Sterne, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hardning spectacles. Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to waile inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My Mother, you wot well
My hazards still haue beene your solace, and Beleeu't not lightly, though I go alone
Like to a lonely Dragon, that his Fenne
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more then seene: your Sonne
Will or exceed the Common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.
Volum. My first sonne,
Whether will thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee awhile: Determine on some course
More then a wilde exposture, to each chance
That start's i'th' way before thee.
Corio. O the Gods!
Com. Ile follow thee a Moneth, deuise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st heare of vs,
And we of thee. So if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy Repeale, we shall not send O're the vast world, to seeke a single man,
And loose aduantage, which doth euer coole
I'th' absence of the needer.
Corio. Fare ye well:
Thou hast yeares vpon thee, and thou art too full
Of the warres surfets, to go rouse with one
That's yet vnbruis'd: bring me but out at gate.
Come my sweet wife, my deerest Mother, and
My Friends of Noble touch: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you come:
While I remaine aboue the ground, you shall Heare from me still, and neuer of me ought
But what is like me formerly.
Menen. That's worthily
As any eare can heare. Come, lets not weepe.
If I could shake off but one seuen yeeres
From these old armes and legges, by the good Gods
I'ld with thee, every foot.
Corio. Giue me thy hand, come. Exeunt
Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus, with the Edile.
Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone: & we'l no further
The Nobility are vexed, whom we see haue sided
In his behalfe.
Brut. Now we haue shewne our power,
Let vs seeme humbler after it is done,
Then when it was a doing.
Sicin. Bid them home: say their great enemy is gone
And they stand in their ancient strength.
Brut. Dismisse them home. Here comes his Mother
Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.
Sicin. Let's not meet her.
Brut. Why?
Sicin. They say she's mad.
Brut. They haue tane note of vs: keepe on your way
Volum. Oh y'are well met:
Th'hoorded plague a'th' Gods requit your loue.
Menen. Peace, peace be not so loud.
Volum. If that I could for weeping, you should heare
Nay, and you shall heare some. Will you be gone?
Virg. You shall stay too. I would I had the power
To say so to my Husband.
Sicin. Are you mark'd of?
Volum. A Foole, is that a shame. Note but this Fool,
Was not a man my Father? Had'st thou Foolship
To banish him that strooke more blowes for Rome
Then thou hast spoken words.
Sicin. Oh blessed Heauens!
Volum. More Noble blowes, then euer wise words.
And for Romes good, Ile tell thee what: yet go:
Nay but thou shalt stay too: I would my Sonne
Were in Arabia, and thy Tribe before him,
His good Sword in his hand.
Sicin. What then?
Virg. What then? Hee'ld make an end of thy posterity Volum. Bastards, and all.
Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!
Menen. Come, come, peace.
Sicin. I would he had continued to his Country
As he began, and not vnknit himselfe
The Noble knot he made.
Brut. I would he had.
Volum. I would he had? 'Twas you incenst the rable.
Cats, that can iudge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those Mysteries which heauen
Will not haue earth to know.
Brut. Pray let's go.
Volum. Now pray sir get you gone.
You haue done a braue deede: Ere you go, heare this:
As far as doth the Capitoll exceede
[illegible] meanest house in Rome; so farre my Sonne

This

This Ladies Husband heere; this (do you see)
Whom you haue banish'd, does exceed you all.
Bru. Well, well, wee'l leaue you.
Sicin. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her Wits. Exit Tribunes.
Volum. Take my Prayers with you.
I would the Gods had nothing else to do,
But to confirme my Curses. Could I meete 'em
But once a day, it would vnclogge my heart
Of what lyes heauy too't.
Mene. You haue told them home.
And by my troth you haue cause: you'l Sup with me.
Volum. Anger's my Meate: I sup'pe vpon my selfe,
And so shall starue with Feeding: Come, let's go.
Leaue this faint-puling, and lament as I do,
In Anger, Iuno-like: Come, come, come. Exeunt
Mene. Fie, fie, fie. Exit.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well sir, and you know mee: your name I thinke is Adrian.
Volce. It is so sir, truly I haue forgot you.
Rom. I am a Roman, and my Seruices are as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet.
Volce. Nicanor: no.
Rom. The same sir.
Volce. You had more Beard when I last saw you, but your Fauour is well appear'd by your Tongue. What's the Newes in Rome: I haue a Note from the Volcian State to finde you out there. You haue well saued me a dayes iourney.
Rom. There hath beene in Rome strange Insurrections: The people, against the Senatours, Patricians, and Nobles.
Vol. Hath bin; is it ended then? Our State thinks not so, they are in a most warlike preparation, & hope to come vpon them in the heate of their diuision
Rom. The maine blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame againe. For the Nobles receyue so to heart, the Banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptnesse, to take all power from the people, and to plucke from them their Tribunes for euer. This lyes glowing I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.
Vol. Coriolanus Banished?
Rom. Banish'd sir.
Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence Nicanor.
Rom. The day serues well for them now. I haue heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a mans Wife, is when her's falne out with her Husband. Your Noble Tullus Auffidius well appeare well in these Warres, his great Opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country.
Volce. He cannot choose: I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You haue ended my Businesse, and I will merrily accompany you home.
Rom. I shall, betweene this and Supper, tell you most strange things from Rome: all tending to the good of their Aduersaries. Haue you an Army ready say you?
Vol. A most Royall one: The Centurions, and their charges distinctly billetted already in th'entertainment, and to be on foot at an houres warning.
Rom. I am ioyfull to heare of their readinesse, and am the man I thinke, that shall set them in present Action. So sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your Company.
Volce. You take my part from me sir, I haue the most cause to be glad of yours.
Rom. Well, let vs go together. Exe

Enter Coriolanus in meane Apparell, Disguis'd, and muffled.

Corio. A goodly City is this Antium. Citty, 'Tis I that made thy Widdowes: Many an heyre Of these faire Edifices fore my Warres Haue I heard groane, and drop: Then know me not, Least that thy Wiues with Spits, and Boyes with stones In puny Battell slay me. Saue you sir.

Enter a Citizen.

Cit. And you.
Corio. Direct me, if it be your will, where great Auffidius lies: Is he in Antium?
Cit. He is, and Feasts the Nobles of the State, at his house this night.
Corio. Which is his house, beseech you?
Cit. This heere before you.
Corio. Thanke you sir, farre well. Exit Citizen
Oh World, thy slippery turnes! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosomes seemes to weare one heart,
Whose Houres, whose Bed, whose Meale and Exercise
Are still together: who Twin (as 'twere) in Loue, Vnseparable, shall within this houre,
On a dissention of a Dott, breake out
To bitterest Enmity: So fellest Foes,
Whose Passions, and whose Plots haue broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some tricke not worth an Egge, shall grow deere friends
And inter-ioyne their yssues. So with me,
My Birth-place haue I, and my loues vpon
This Enemie Towne: Ile enter, if he slay me
He does faire Iustice: if he giue me way,
Ile do his Country Seruice. Exit.

Musicke playes. Enter a Seruingman.

1 Ser. Wine, Wine, Wine: What seruice is heere? I thinke our Fellowes are asleepe.

Enter another Seruingman.

2 Ser. Where's Cotus: my M. cals for him: Cotus. Exit

Enter Coriolanus.

Corio. A goodly House:
The Feast smels well: but I appeare not like a Guest.

Enter the first Seruingman.

1 Ser. What would you haue Friend? whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray go to the doore? Exit Corio. I haue deseru'd no better entertainment, in being Coriolanus. Enter second Seruant.
2 Ser. Whence are you sir? Ha's the Porter his eyes in his head, that he giues entrance to such Companions? Pray get you out.
Corio. Away.
2 Ser. Away? Get you away.
Corio. Now th'art troublesome.
2 Ser. Are you so braue: Ile haue you talkt with anon

Enter 3 Seruingman, the 1 meets him.

3 What Fellowes this?
1 A strange one as ere I look'd on: I cannot get him out o'th'house: Prythee call my Master to him.
3 What haue you to do here fellow? Pray you auoid the house.
Corio. Let me but stand, I will not hurt your Hearth.
3 What are you?
Corio. A Gentleman.
3 A marrulous poore one.
Corio. True, so I am.
3 Pray you poore Gentleman, take vp some other ſtation: Heere's no place for you, pray you auoid: Come.

Corio. Follow your Function, go, and batten on colde bits. Pushes him away from him.

3 What you will not? Prythee tell my Maister what a strange Guest he has's heere.

2 And I shall. Exit second Seruingman.

3 Where dwel'st thou?

Corio. Vnder the Canopy.

3 Vnder the Canopy?

Corio. I.

3 Where's that?

Corio. I'th City of Kites and Crowes.

3 I'th City of Kites and Crowes? What an Asse it is, then thou dwel'st with Dawes too?

Corio. No, I serue not thy Master.

3 How sir? Do you meddle with my Master?

Corio. I, tis an honester seruice, then to meddle with thy Mistris: Thou prat'st, and prat'st, serue with thy trencher: Hence. Beats him away

Enter Auffidius with the Seruingman.

Auf. Where is this Fellow?

2 Here sir, I'de haue beaten him like a dogge, but for disturbing the Lords within.

Auf. Whence com'st thou? What would'st thou? Thy name? Why speak'st not? Speake man: What's thy name?

Corio. If Tullus not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not thinke me for the man I am, necessitie commands me name my selfe.

Auf. What is thy name?

Corio. A name vnmusicall to the Volcians eares, And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a Grim appearance, and thy Face Beares a Command in't: Though thy Tackles torne, Thou shew'st a Noble Vessell: What's thy name?

Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne: know'st 'ym me yet?

Auf. I know thee not? Thy Name?

Corio My name is Caius Martius, who hath done To thee particularly, and to all the Volces Great hurt and Mischiefe: thereto witnesse may My Surname Coriolanus. The painfull Seruice, The extreme Dangers, and the droppes of Blood Shed for my thanklesse Country, are requitted: But with that Surname, a good memorie And witnesse of the Malice and Displeasure Which thou should'st beare me, only that name remains. The Cruelty and Enuy of the people, Permitted by our dastard Nobles, who Haue all forsooke me, hath deuour'd the rest: And suffer'd me by th'voyce of Slaues to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity, Hath brought me to thy Hearth, not out of Hope (Mistake me not) to saue my life: for if I had fear'd death, of all the Men i'th'World I would haue voided thee. But in meere spight To be full quit of those my Banishers, Stand I before thee heere: Then if thou hast A heart of wreake in thee, that wilt reuenge Thine owne particular wrongs, and stop those maimes Of shame seene through thy Country, speed thee straight And make my misery serue thy turne: So vse it, That my reuengefull Services may proue As Benefits to thee. For I will fight Against my Cankred Country, with the Spleene Of all the vnder Fiends. But if so be, Thou dar'st not this, and that to proue more Fortunes Th'art tyr'd, then in a word, I also am Longer to liue most wearie: and present My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice: Which not to cut, would shew thee but a Foole, Since I haue euer followed thee with hate. Drawne Tunnes of Blood out of thy Countries breast, And cannot liue but to thy shame, vnlesse It be to do thee seruice.

Auf. Oh Martius, Martius; Each word thou hast spoke, hath weeded from my heart A roote of Ancient Enuy. If Iupiter. Should from yond clowd speake diuine things, And say 'tis true; I'de not beleeue them more Then thee all-Noble Martius. Let me twine Mine armes about that body, where against My grained Ash an hundred times hath broke, And scar'd the Moone with splinters: heere I clepe The Annile of my Sword, and do coteste As hotly, and as Nobly with thy Loue, As euer in Ambitious strength, I did Contend against thy Valour. Know thou first, I lou'd the Maid I married: neuer man Sigh'd truer breath: But that I see thee heere Thou Noble thing, more dances my rapt heart, Then when I first my wedded Mistris saw Bestride my Threshold. Why, thou Mars I tell thee, We haue a Power on foote: and I had purpose Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne, Or loose mine Arme for't: Thou hast beate me out Twelue seuerall times, and I haue nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy selfe and me: We haue beene downe together in my sleepe, Vnbuckling Helmes, fisting each others Throat, And wak'd halfe dead with nothing. Worthy Martius, Had we no other quarrell else to Rome, but that Thou art thence Banish'd, we would muster all From twelue, to seuentie: and powring Warre Into the bowels of vngratefull Rome, Like a bold Flood o're-beate. Oh come go in, And take our Friendly Senators by'th'hands Who now are heere, taking their leaues of me, Who am prepar'd against your Territories, Though not for Rome it selfe.

Corio. You bleese me Gods.

Auf. Therefore most absolute Sir, if thou wilt haue The leading of thine owne Reuenges, take Th'one halfe of my Commission, and set downe As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st Thy Countries strength and weaknesse, thine owne ways Whether to knocke against the Gates of Rome, Or rudely visit them in parts remote, To fright them, ere destroy. But come in, Let me commend thee first, to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes, And more a Friend, then ere an Enemie, Yet Martius that was much. Your hand: most welcome. Exeunt

Enter two of the Seruingmen.

1 Heere's a strange alteration?

2 By my hand, I had thought to haue strucken him with a Cudgell, and yet my minde gaue me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would set vp a Top.

2 Nay, I know by his face that there was some-thing in him. He had sir, a kinde of face me thought, I cannot ieu how to reaſone it.

2 He had ſo,looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him,then I could think.

2 So did I,Ile be ſworne: He is ſimply the rareſt man i'th'world.

1 I thinke he is: but a greater ſoldier then he, You wot one.

3 Who my Maſter?

1 Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Worth ſix on him.

1 Nay not ſo neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldiour.

2 Faith looke you,one cannot tell how to ſay that:for the Defence of a Towne,our Generall is excellent.

1 I, and for an aſſault too.

Enter the third Seruingman.

3 Oh Slaues, I can tell you Newes,Newes you Raſcals

Both. What,what,what? Let's partake.

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as liue be a condemn'd man.

Both. Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you ſay, thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not ſay thwacke our Generall, but he was alwayes good enough for him

2 Come we are fellowes and friends: he was euer too hard for him, I haue heard him ſay ſo himſelfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly, to ſay the Troth on't before Corioles, he ſcotcht him,and notcht him like a Carbinado.

3 And hee had bin Cannibally giuen, hee might haue boyld and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes.

3 Why he is ſo made on heere within, as if hee were Son and Heire to Mars,ſet at vpper end o'th'Table: No queſtion aſkt him by any of the Senators, but they ſtand bald before him. Our Generall himſelfe makes a Miſtris of him, Sanctifies himſelfe with's hand, and turnes vp the white o'th'eye to his Diſcourſe. But the bottome of the Newes is,our Generall is cut i'th'middle,& but one halfe of what he was yeſterday. For the other has's halfe, by the intreaty and grauntof the whole Table. Hee'l go he ſayes,and ſole the Porter of Rome Gates by th'eares. He will mowe all downe before him, and leaue his paſſage poul'd.

2 And he's as like to do't,as any man I can imagine.

3 Doo't? he will doo't: for look you ſir,he has as many Friends as Enemies: which Friends ſir as it were,durſt not (looke you ſir) ſhew themſelues (as we terme it) his Friends, whileſt he's in Directitude.

1 Directitude? What's that?

3 But when they ſhall ſee ſir,his Creſt vp againe,and the man in blood, they will out of their Burroughes (like Conies after Raine) and reuell all with him.

1 But when goes this forward?

3 To morrow, to day, preſently, you ſhall haue the Drum ſtrooke vp this afternoone: 'Tis as it were a parcell of their Feaſt,and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Why then wee ſhall haue a ſtirring World againe: This peace is nothing, but to ruſt Iron, encreaſe Taylors, and breed Ballad-makers.

1 Let me haue Warre ſay I, it exceeds peace as farre as day do's night: It's ſprightly walking,audible,and full of Vent. Peace, is a very Apoplexy, Lethargie, mull'd, deafe, ſleepe, inſenſible, a getter of more baſtard Children, then warres a deſtroyer of men.

2 'Tis ſo,and as warres in ſome ſort may be ſaide to be a Rauiſher, ſo it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of Cuckolds.

1 I,and it makes men hate one another.

3 Reaſon,becauſe they then leſſe neede one another: The Warres for my money. I hope to ſee Romanes as cheape as Volcians. They are riſing they are riſing.

Both. In, in, in, in. Exeunt

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Sicin. We heare not of him,neither need we fear him, His remedies are tame, the preſent peace, And quietneſſe of the people,which before Were in wilde hurry. Heere do we make his Friends Bluſh, that the world goes well: who rather had, Though they themſelues did ſuffer by't, behold Diſſentious numbers peſtring ſtreets, then ſee Our Tradeſmen ſinging in their ſhops,and going About their Functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Bru. We ſtood too't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sicin. 'Tis he,'tis he: O he is grown moſt kind of late: Haile Sir.

Bot. Haile to you both.

Sicin. Your Coriolanus is not much miſſ, but with his Friends: the Commonwealth doth ſtand, and ſo would do,were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well, and might haue bene much better, if he could haue temporiz'd.

Sicin. Where is he,heare you?

Men. Nay I heare nothing: His Mother and his wife, heare nothing from him.

Enter three or foure Citizens.

All. The Gods preſerue you both.

Sicin. Gooden our Neighbours.

Bru. Gooden to you all,gooden to you all.

1 Our ſelues,our wiues,and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sicin. Liue,and thriue.

Bru. Farewell kinde Neighbours: We wiſht Coriolanus had lou'd you as we did.

All. Now the Gods keepe you.

Both Tri. Farewell,farewell. Exeunt Citizens

Sicin. This is a happier and more comely time, Then when theſe Fellowes ran about the ſtreets, Crying Confuſion.

Bru. Caius Martius was A worthy Officer i'th'Warre, but Inſolent, O'recome with Pride, Ambitious,paſt all thinking Selfe-louing.

Sicin. And affecting one ſole Throne,without aſſiſtant.

Men. I thinke not ſo.

Sicin. We ſhould by this,to all our Lamention, If he had gone forth Conſull,found it ſo.

Bru. The Gods haue well preuented it,and Rome Sits ſafe and ſtill,without him.

Enter an Ædile.

Ædile. Worthy Tribunes, There is a Slaue whom we haue put in priſon, Reports the Volces with two ſeuerall Powers Are entred in the Roman Territories, And with the deepeſt malice of the Warre, Deſtroy, what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Auffidius, Who hearing of our Martius Baniſhment, Thruſts forth his hornes againe into the world Which were In-ſheil'd, when Martius ſtood for Rome,

And

And dare not speak perpetuate.

Sicin. Come, what talke you of Martius.

Bru. Go see this Rumourer whipt, it cannot be,
The Volsces dare breake with vs.

Men. Cannot be?
We haue Record, that very well it can,
And three examples of the like, hath been Within my Age. But reason with the fellow
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Least your shall chance to whip your Information,
And beate the Messenger, who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sicin. Tell not me: I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Nobles in great earnestlesse are going
All to the Senate-house: some newes is comming
That turnes their Countenances.

Sicin. 'Tis this Slaue:
Go whip him fore the peoples eyes: His raising,
Nothing but his report

Mes. Yes worthy Sir,
The Slaues report is seconded, and more
More fearfull is deliuer'd.

Sicin. What more fearefull?

Mes. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Ioyn'd with Auffidius, leads a power gainst Rome,
And vowes Reuenge as spacious, as betweene
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sicin. This is most likely.

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Martius home againe.

Sicin. The very trickes on't.

Men. 'Tis an vnlikely,
He, and Auffidius can no more atone
Then violentest Contrariety.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. You are sent for to the Senate:
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Martius,
Associated with Auffidius, Rages
Vpon our Territories, and haue already
O're-borne their way, consum'd with fire, and tooke
What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O you haue made good worke.

Men. What newes? What, newes?

Com. You haue holp to ransh your owne daughters, &
To melt the City Leades vpon your pates,
To see your Wiues dishonour'd to your Noses.

Men. What's the newes? What's the newes?

Com. Your Temples burned in their Cement, and Your Franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an Augors boare.

Men. Pray now, your Newes:
You haue made faire worke I feare me: pray your newes,
If Martius should be ioyn'd with Volscians.

Com. If? He is their God, he leads them like a thing
Made by some other Deity then Nature,
That shapes man Better: and they follow him
Against vs Brats, with no lesse Confidence,
Then Boyes pursuing Summer Butter-flies,
Or Butchers killing Flyes.

Men. You haue made good worke,
You and your Apron men: you, that stood so much Vpon the voyce of occupation, and
The breath of Garlicke-eaters.

Com. He'l shake your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules did shake downe Mellow Fruite:
You haue made faire worke.

Bru. But is this true Sir?

Com. I, and you'l looke pale
Before you finde it other. All the Regions
Do smilingly Reuolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant Ignorance,
And perish constant Fooles: who is't can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde something in him.

Men. We are all vndone, vnlesse
The Noble man haue mercy.

Com. Who shall aske it?
The Tribunes cannot doo't for shame; the people
Deserue such pitty of him, as the Wolfe
Doe's of the Shepheards: For his best Friends, if they Should say be good to Rome, they charg'd him, euen
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like Enemies.

Men. 'Tis true, if he were putting to my house, the brand
That should consume it, I haue not the face
To say, beseech you cease. You haue made faire hands,
You and your Crafts, you haue crafted faire.

Com. You haue brought
A Trembling vpon Rome, such as was neuer
S'incapeable of helpe.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Men. How? Was't we? We lou'd him,
But like Beasts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gaue way vnto your Clusters, who did hoote
Him out o'th'City.

Com. But I feare
They'l roare him in againe. Tullus Auffidius,
The second name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer: Desperation,
Is all the Policy, Strength, and Defence
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troupe of Citizens.

Men. Heere come the Clusters.
And is Auffidius with him? You are they
That made the Ayre vnwholsome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasie Caps, in hooting
At Coriolanus Exile. Now he's comming,
And not a hayre vpon a Souldiers head
Which will not proue a whip: As many Coxcombs
As you threw Caps vp, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter.
If he could burne vs all into one coale,
We haue deserv'd it.

Citizens. Faith, we heare fearfull Newes.

1 Cit. For mine owne part,
When I said banish him, I said 'twas pitty.

2 And so did I.

3 And so did I: and to say the truth, so did very many of vs, that we did we did for the best, and though we willingly consented to his Banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Y'are goodly things, you Voyces.

Men. You haue made good worke
You and your cry. Shall's to the Capitoll?

Com. Oh I, what else?

Exeunt backe.

Sicin. Go Masters get you home, be not dismaid,
These are a Side, that would be glad to haue
This true, which they so seeme to feare. Go home,
And shew no signe of Feare

1 Cit.

he Gods bee good to vs: Come Masters let's
r ſaid we were i'th wrong, when we baniſh'd

o did we all. But come, let's home. Exit Cit.
o not like this Newes.
for I.
's to the Capitoll: would halfe my wealth
this for a lye.
ray let's go. Exeunt Tribunes.
Enter Auffidius with his Lieutenant.
o they ſtill flye to'th Roman?
lo not know what Witchcraft's in him: but ers vſe him as the Grace 'fore meate, at Table, and their Thankes at end,
e darkned in this action Sir,
ur owne.
annot helpe it now,
fing meanes I lame the foote
gne. He beares himſelfe more proudlier, perſon, then I thought he would
I did embrace him. Yet his Nature Changeling, and I muſt excuſe ot be amended.
'ct I wiſh Sir,
r your particular) you had not ommiſſion with him: but either haue borne of your ſelfe, or elſe to him, had left it ſoly.
nderſtand thee well, and be thou ſure all come to his account, he knowes not rge againſt him, although it ſeemes hinkes, and is no leſſe apparant
r eye, that he beares all things fairely:
good Husbandry for the Volcian State,
gon-like, and does accheeue as ſoone
Sword: yes he hath late vndone ſhall breake his necke, or hazard mine,
e come to our accounts.
r, I beſeech you, think you he'l carry Rome?
ll places yeelds to him ere he ſits downe,
bility of Rome are his:
rs and Patricians loue him too:
es are no Soldiers: and their people
aſh in the repeale, as haſty
m thence. I thinke hee'l be to Rome ſpray to the Fiſh, who takes it gory of Nature. Firſt, he was ruant to them, but he could not nours eeuen: whether 'was Pride of dayly Fortune ever taints man; whether derect of iudgement, he diſpoſing of thoſe chances was Lord of: or whether Nature, ther then one thing, not mooving
ake to th'Cuſhion: but commanding peace
he ſame auſterity and garbe, oll'd the warre. But one of theſe (ſpices of them all) not all,
farre free him, made him fear'd,
d ſo baniſh'd: but he ha's a Merit
t in the vtt'rance: So our Vertue, erpretation of the time,
vnto it ſelfe moſt commendable,
Tombe ſo evident as a Chaire
at it hath done,
ues out one fire: one Naile, one Naile;
ghes fouler, ſtrengths by ſtrengths do faile.
Come let's away: when Caius Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'ſt of all; then ſhortly art thou mine. exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, the two Tribunes, with others.

Menen. No, Ile not goe: you heare what he hath ſaid
Which was ſometime his Generall: who loued him
In a moſt deere particular. He call'd me Father:
But what o'that? Go you that baniſh'd him
A Mile before his Tent, fall downe, and knee
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To heare Cominius ſpeake, Ile keepe at home.
Com. He would not ſeeme to know me.
Menen. Do you heare?
Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I vrg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we haue bled together. Coriolanus
He would not anſwer too: Forbad all Names,
He was a kinde of Nothing, Titleleſſe,
Till he had forg'd himſelfe a name a'th'fire
Of burning Rome.
Menen. Why ſo: you haue made good worke:
A paire of Tribunes, that haue wrack'd for Rome,
To make Coales cheape: A Noble memory.
Com. I minded him, how Royall 'twas to pardon
When it was leſſe expected. He replyed
It was a bare petition of a State
To one whom they had puniſh'd.
Menen. Very well, could he ſay leſſe.
Com. I offered to awaken his regard For's priuate Friends. His anſwer to me was
He could not ſtay to picke them, in a pile
Of noyſome muſty Chaffe. He ſaid, 'twas folly
For one poore graine or two, to leaue vnburnt
And ſtill to noſe th'offence.
Menen. For one poore graine or two?
I am one of thoſe: his Mother, Wife, his Childe,
And this braue Fellow too: we are the Graines.
You are the muſty Chaffe, and you are ſmelt
Aboue the Moone. We muſt be burnt for you.
Sicin. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuſe your ayde
In this ſo never-needed helpe, yet do not Vpbraid's with our diſtreſſe. But ſure if you
Would be your Countries Pleader, your good tongue
More then the inſtant Armie we can make Might ſtop our Countryman.
Menen. No: Ile not meddle.
Sicin. Pray you go to him.
Menen. What ſhould I do?
Bru. Onely make triall what your Loue can do,
For Rome, towards Martius.
Menen. Well, and ſay that Martius returne me,
As Cominius is return'd, vnheard: what then?
But as a diſcontented Friend, greefe-ſhot
With his vnkindneſſe. Say't be ſo?
Sicin. Yet your good will
Muſt haue that thankes from Rome, after the meaſure
As you intended well.
Menen. Ile vndertak't:
I thinke hee'l heare me. Yet to bite his lip,
And humme at good Cominius, much vnhearts mee.

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Veines vnfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt vpon the Morning, are vnapt
To giue or to forgiue; but when we haue ſtuffe
Theſe Pipes, and theſe Conueyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we haue ſuppler Soules
Then in our Prieſt-like Faſts: therefore Ile watch him
Till he be dieted to my requeſt,
And then Ile ſet vpon him.

Bru. You know the very rode into his kindneſſe,
And cannot loſe your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile proue him,
Speed how it will. I ſhall ere long, haue knowledge
Of my ſucceſſe. Exit.

Com. Hee'l neuer heare him.

Sicin. Not.

Com. I tell you, he doe's ſit in Gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burne Rome: and his Iniury
The Gaoler to his pitty. I kneel'd before him,
'Twas very faintly he ſaid Riſe: diſmiſt me
Thus with his ſpeechleſſe hand. What he would do
He ſent in writing after me: what he would not,
Bound with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, vnleſſe his Noble Mother,
And his Wife, who (as I heare) meane to ſolicite him
For mercy to his Countrey. therefore let's hence,
And with our faire intreaties haſt them on. Exeunt

Enter Menenius to the Watch or Guard.

1 Wat. Stay: whence are you.

2 Wat. Stand, and go backe.

Men. You guard like men, 'tis well. But by your leaue,
I am an Officer of State, & come to ſpeak with Coriolanus

1 From whence? Mene. From Rome.

1 You may not paſſe, you muſt returne: our Generall will no more heare from thence.

2 You'l ſee your Rome embrac'd with fire, before
You'l ſpeake with Coriolanus.

Mene. Good my Friends,
If you haue heard your Generall talke of Rome,
And of his Friends there, it is Lots to Blankes,
My name hath touch't your eares: it is Menenius.

1 Be it ſo, go back: the vertue of your name,
Is not heere paſſable.

Mene. I tell thee Fellow,
Thy Generall is my Louer: I haue beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men haue read
His Fame vnparalell'd, happely amplified:
For I haue euer verified my Friends,
(Of whom hee's cheefe) with all the ſize that verity
Would without lapſing ſuffer. Nay, ſometimes,
Like to a Bowle vpon a ſubtle ground
I haue tumbled paſt the throw: and in his praiſe
Haue (almoſt) ſtampt the Leaſing. Therefore Fellow,
I muſt haue leaue to paſſe.

1 Faith Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you haue vttered words in your owne, you ſhould not paſſe heere: no, though it were as vertuous to lye, as to liue chaſtly. Therefore go backe.

Men. Prythee fellow, remember my name is Menenius, alwayes factionary on the party of your Generall.

2 Howſoeuer you haue bin his Liar, as you ſay you haue, I am one that telling true vnder him, muſt ſay you cannot paſſe. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Ha's he din'd can'ſt thou tell? For I would not ſpeake with him, till after dinner.

1 You are a Roman, are you?

Mene. I am as thy Generall is.

1 Then you ſhould hate Rome, as he do's. Can you, when you haue puſht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a violent popular ignorance, giue your enemy your ſhield, thinke to front his reuenges with the eaſie groanes of old women, the Virginall Palmes of your daughters, or with the palſied interceſſion of ſuch a decay'd Dotant as you ſeeme to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with ſuch weake breath as this? No, you are deceiu'd, therefore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has ſworne you out of reprieue and pardon.

2 Mene. Sirra, if thy Captaine knew I were heere,
He would vſe me with eſtimation.

1 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.

Mene. I meane thy Generall.

1 My Generall cares not for you. Back I ſay, go: leſt
I let forth your halfe pinte of blood. Backe, that's the moſt of your having, backe.

Mene. Nay but Fellow, Fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Auffidius.

Corio. What's the matter?

Mene. Now you Companion: Ile ſay an errant for you:
you ſhall know now that I am in eſtimation: you ſhall perceiue, that a Iacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, gueſſe but my entertainment with him: if thou ſtand'ſt not i'th ſtate of hanging, or of ſome death more long in Spectatorſhip, and crueller in ſuffering, behold now preſently, and ſwoond for what's to come vpon thee. The glorious Gods ſit in hourely Synod about thy particular proſperity, and loue thee no worſe then thy old Father Menenius do's. O my Son, my Son! thou art preparing fire for vs: looke thee, heere's water to quench it.
I was hardly moued to come to thee: but being aſſured none but my ſelfe could moue thee, I haue been blowne out of your Gates with ſighes: and conclude thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary Countrimen. The good Gods aſſwage thy wrath, and turne the dregs of it, vpon this Varlet heere: This, who like a blocke hath denied my acceſſe to thee.

Corio. Away.

Mene. How? Away?

Corio. Wife, Mother, Child I know not. My affaires
Are Seruanted to others: Though I owe
My Reuenge properly, my remiſſion lies
In Volcean breſts. That we haue beene familiar, Ingrate forgetfulneſſe ſhall poiſon rather
Then pitty: Note how much, therefore be gone.
Mine eares againſt your ſuites, are ſtronger then
Your gates againſt my force. Yet for I lou'd thee,
Take this along, I writ it for thy ſake,
And would haue ſent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee ſpeake. This man Auffidius
Was my belou'd in Rome: yet thou behold'ſt.

Auffid. You keepe a conſtant temper. Exeunt

Manet the Guard and Menenius.

1 Now ſir, is your name Menenius?

2 'Tis a ſpell you ſee of much power:
You know the way home againe.

1 Do you heare how wee are ſhent for keeping your greatneſſe backe?

2 What cauſe do you think I haue to ſwoond?

Menen. I neither care for th'world, nor your Generall:
for ſuch things as you, I can ſcarſe thinke there's any ye'are ſo ſlight. He that hath a will to die by himſelfe, fears it not

[illegible]

not from another. Let your Generall do his worſt. For you, bee that you are, long; and your miſery encreaſe with your age. I ſay to you, as I was ſaid to, Away. Exit

1 A Noble Fellow I warrant him.

2 The worthy Fellow is our General. He's the Rock, The Oake not to be winde-ſhaken. Exit Watch.

Enter Coriolanus and Auffidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow Set downe our Hoaſt. My partner in this Action, You muſt report to th'Volcian Lords, how plainly I haue borne this Buſineſſe.

Auf. Onely their ends you haue reſpected, Stopt your eares againſt the generall ſuite of Rome: Neuer admitted a priuat whiſper, no not with ſuch friends That thought them ſure of you.

Corio. This laſt old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I haue ſent to Rome, Lou'd me, aboue the meaſure of a Father, Nay godded me indeed. Their latteſt refuge Was to ſend him: for whoſe old Loue I haue (Though I ſhew'd ſowrely to him) once more offer'd The firſt Conditions which they did refuſe, And cannot now accept, to grace him onely, That thought he could do more: A very little I haue yeelded too. Freſh Embaſſes, and Suites, Nor from the State, nor priuate friends hereafter Will I lend eare to. Ha? what ſhout is this? Shout within Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the ſame time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter Virgilia, Volumnia, Valeria, yong Martius with Attendants.

My wife comes formoſt, then the honour'd mould Wherein this Trunke was fram'd, and in her hand The Grandchilde to her blood. But out affection, All bond and priuiledge of Nature breake; Let it be Vertuous to be Obſtinate. What is that Curt'ſie worth? Or thoſe Doues eyes, Which can make Gods forſworne? I melt, and am not Of ſtronger earth then others: my Mother bowes, As if Olympus to a Mole-hill ſhould In ſupplication Nod: and my yong Boy Hath an Aſpect of intercеſſion, which Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, Ile never Be ſuch a Goſling to obey inſtinct; but ſtand As if a man were Author of himſelf, & knew no other kin

Virgil. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. Theſe eyes are not the ſame I wore in Rome.

Virg. The ſorrow that deliuers vs thus chang'd, Makes you thinke ſo.

Corio Like a dull Actor now, I haue forgot my part, And I am out, euen to a full Diſgrace. Beſt of my Fleſh, Forgiue my Tyranny: but do not ſay, For that forgiue our Romanes. O a kiſſe Long as my Exile, ſweet as my Reuenge! Now by the ielous Queene of Heauen, that kiſſe I carried from thee deare; and my true Lippe Hath Virgin'd it ere ſince. You Gods, I pray, And the moſt noble Mother of the world Leaue vnſaluted: Sinke my knee i'th'earth, Kneeles Of thy deepe duty, more impreſſion ſhew Then that of common Sonnes.

Volum. Oh ſtand vp bleſt! Whil'ſt with no ſofter Cuſhion then the Flint I kneele before thee, and vnproperly Shew duty as miſtaken, all this while, Betweene the Childe, and Parent.

Corio. What's this? your knees to me? To your Corrected Sonne? Then let the Pibbles on the hungry beach Fillop the Starres: Then, let the mutinous windes Strike the proud Cedars 'gainſt the fiery Sun: Murd'ring Impoſſibility, to make What cannot be, ſlight worke.

Volum. Thou art my Warriour, I hope to frame thee Do you know this Lady?

Corio. The Noble Siſter of Publicola; The Moone of Rome: Chaſte as the Icicle That's curdied by the Froſt, from pureſt Snow, And hangs on Dians Temple: Deere Valeria.

Volum. This is a poore Epitome of yours, Which by th'interpretation of full time, May ſhew like all your ſelfe.

Corio. The God of Souldiers: With the conſent of ſupreame Ioue, informe Thy thoughts with Nobleneſſe, that thou mayſt proue To ſhame vnuulnerable, and ſticke i'th Warres Like a great Sea-marke ſtanding euery flaw, And ſauing thoſe that eye thee.

Volum. Your knee, Sirrah.

Corio. That's my braue Boy.

Volum. Euen he, your wife, this Ladie, and my ſelfe, Are Suitors to you.

Corio. I beſeech you peace: Or if you'ld aske, remember this before; The thing I haue forſworne to graunt, may neuer Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Diſmiſſe my Soldiers, or capitulate Againe, with Romes Mechanickes. Tell me not Wherein I ſeeme vnnaturall: Deſire not t'allay My Rages and Reuenges, with your colder reaſons.

Volum. Oh no more, no more: You haue ſaid you will not grant vs any thing: For we haue nothing elſe to aske, but that Which you deny already: yet we will aske, That if you faile in our requeſt, the blame May hang vpon your hardneſſe, therefore heare vs.

Corio. Auffidius, and you Volces marke, for we'l Heare nought from Rome in priuate. Your requeſt?

Volum. Should we be ſilent & not ſpeak, our Raiment And ſtate of Bodies would bewray what life We haue led ſince thy Exile. Thinke with thy ſelfe, How more vnfortunate then all liuing women Are we come hither: ſince that thy ſight, which ſhould Make our eies flow with ioy, harts dance with comforts, Conſtraines them weepe, and ſhake with feare & ſorow, Making the Mother, wife, and Childe to ſee, The Sonne, the Husband, and the Father tearing His Countries Bowels out; and to poore we Thine enmities moſt capitall: Thou barr'ſt vs Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort That all but we enioy. For how can we? Alas! how can we, for our Country pray? Whereto we are bound, together with thy victory: Whereto we are bound: Alacke, or we muſt looſe The Countrie our deere Nurſe, or elſe thy perſon Our comfort in the Country. We muſt finde An euident Calamity, though we had Our wiſh, which ſide ſhould win. For either thou Muſt as a Forraine Recreant be led With Manacles through our ſtreets, or elſe Triumphantly tread on thy Countries ruine,

And beare the Palme, for hauing bravely ſhed
Thy Wife and Childrens blood: For my ſelfe, Sonne,
I purpoſe not to waite on Fortune, till
Theſe warres determine: If I cannot perſwade thee,
Rather to ſhew a Noble grace to both parts,
Then ſeeke the end of one; thou ſhalt no ſooner
March to aſſault thy Country, then to treade
(Truſt too't, thou ſhalt not) on thy Mothers wombe
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. I, and mine, that brought you forth this boy,
To keepe your name liuing to time.

Boy. A ſhall not tread on me: Ile run away
Till I am bigger, but then Ile fight.

Corio. Not of a womans tenderneſſe to be,
Requires not Childe, nor womans face to ſee:
I haue ſtaid too long.

Volum. Nay, go not from vs thus:
If it were ſo, that our requeſt did tend
To ſaue the Romanes, thereby to deſtroy
The Volces whom you ſerue, you might condemne vs
As poyſonous of your Honour. No, our ſuite
Is that you reconcile them: While the Volces
May ſay, this mercy we haue ſhew'd; the Romanes,
This we receiu'd, and each in either ſide
Giue the All-haile to thee, and cry be Bleſt
For making vp this peace. Thou know'ſt (great Sonne)
The end of Warres vncertaine: but this certaine,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou ſhalt thereby reape, is ſuch a name
Whoſe repetition will be dogg'd with Curſes:
Whoſe Chronicle thus writ, The man was Noble,
But with his laſt Attempt, he wip'd it out:
Deſtroy'd his Country, and his name remaines
To th'inſuing Age, abhorr'd. Speake to me Son:
Thou haſt affected the fine ſtraines of Honor,
To imitate the graces of the Gods.
To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes a'th'Ayre,
And yet to change thy Sulphure with a Boult
That ſhould but riue an Oake. Why do'ſt not ſpeake?
Think'ſt thou it Honourable for a Nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, ſpeake you
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,
Perhaps thy childiſhneſſe will moue him more
Then can our Reaſons. There's no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet heere he lets me prate
Like one i'th'Stockes. Thou haſt neuer in thy life,
Shew'd thy deere Mother any curteſie,
When ſhe (poore Hen) fond of no ſecond brood,
Has't clock'd thee to the Warres: and ſafelie home
Loden with Honor. Say my Requeſt's vniuſt,
And ſpurne me backe: But, if it be not ſo
Thou art not honeſt, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou reſtrain'ſt from me the Duty, which
To a Mothers part belongs. He turnes away:
Down Ladies: let vs ſhame him with him with our knees
To his ſur-name Coriolanus longs more pride
Then pitty to our Prayers. Downe: an end,
This is the laſt. So, we will home to Rome,
And dye among our Neighbours: Nay, behold's,
This Boy that cannot tell what he would haue,
But kneeles, and holds vp hands for fellowſhip,
Do't reaſon our Petition with more ſtrength
Then thou haſt to deny't. Come, let vs go:
This Fellow had a Volcean to his Mother:
His Wife is to Coriolus, and his Childe
Like him by chance: yet giue vs our diſpatch:
I am huſht vntill our City be afire, & then Ile ſpeak a little.

Holds her by the hand ſilent.

Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What haue you done? Behold, the Heauens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this vnnaturall Scene
They laugh at. Oh my Mother, Mother: Oh!
You haue wonne a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, beleeue it: Oh beleeue it,
Moſt dangerouſly you haue with him preuail'd.
If not moſt mortall to him. But let it come:
Auffidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
Ile frame conuenient peace. Now good Auffidius,
Were you in my ſteed, would you haue heard
A Mother leſſe? or granted leſſe Auffidius?

Auf. I was mou'd withall.

Corio. I dare be ſworne you were:
And ſir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to ſweat compaſſion. But (good ſir)
What peace you'l make, aduiſe me: For my part,
Ile not to Rome, Ile backe with you, and pray you Stand to me in this cauſe. Oh Mother! Wife!

Auf. I am glad thou haſt ſet thy mercy, & thy Honor
At diſference in thee: Out of that Ile worke
My ſelfe a former Fortune.

Corio. I by and by; But we will drinke together.
And you ſhall beare
A better witneſſe backe then words, which we
On like conditions, will haue Counter-ſeal'd.
Come enter with vs: Ladies you deſerue
To haue a Temple built you: All the Swords
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes,
Could not haue made this peace. Exeunt.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius. Rome.

Mene. See you yond'e Coin a'th Capitol, yond'e cane.

Sicin. Why what of that?

Mene. If it be poſſible for you to diſplace it with your little finger, there is ſome hope the Ladies of Rome, eſpecially his Mother, may preuaile with him. But I ſay, there is no hope in't, our throats are ſentenc'd, and ſtay vpon execution.

Sicin. Is't poſſible, that ſo ſhort a time can alter the condition of a man.

Mene. There is differency between a Grub & a Butterfly, yet your Butterfly was a Grub: this Martius is growne from Man to Dragon: He has wings, he's more then a creeping thing.

Sicin. He lou'd his Mother deerely.

Mene So did he mee: and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare old horſe. The tartneſſe of his face, ſowres ripe Grapes. When he walkes, he moues like an Engine, and the ground ſhrinkes before his Treading. He is able to pierce a Corſlet with his eye: Talkes like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He ſits in his State, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finiſht with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternity, and a Heauen to Throne in.

Sicin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Mene. I paint him in the Character. Marke what mercy his Mother ſhall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male-Tyger, that ſhall our poore City finde: and all this is long of you.

Sicin. The Gods be good vnto vs.

Mene. No, in ſuch a caſe the Gods will not be good vnto vs. When we baniſh'd him, we reſpected not them: and he returning to breake our necks, they reſpect not vs.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ.

Meſ. Sir, if you'ld ſaue your life, flye to your Houſe,
The Plebeians haue got your Fellow Tribune,
And hale him vp and downe; all ſwearing, if
The Romane Ladies bring not comfort home,
They'l giue him death by Inches.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Scen. What's the Newes? (preuayl'd,

Meſſ. Good Newes, good newes, the Ladies haue
The Volcians are diſlodg'd, and Martius gone:
A merrier day did neuer yet greet Rome,
No, not th'expulſion of the Tarquins

Scen. Friend, art thou certaine this is true?
Is't moſt certaine.

Meſ. As certaine as I know the Sun is fire:
Where haue you lurk'd that you make doubt of it:
Ne're through an Arch ſo hurried the blowne Tide,
As the recomforted through th'gates. Why harke you:

Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drums beate, altogether.

The Trumpets, Sack-buts, Pſalteries, and Fifes,
Tabors, and Symboles, and the ſhowting Romans
Make the Sunne dance. Harke you. A ſhout within

Meſſ. This is good Newes:
I will go meete the Ladies. This Volumnia,
Is worth of Conſuls, Senators, Patricians,
A City full: Of Tribunes ſuch as you,
A Sea and Land full: you haue pray'd well to day:
This Morning, for ten thouſand of your throates,
I'de not haue giuen a doit. Harke, how they ioy.

Sound ſtill with the Shouts.

Scen. Firſt, the Gods bleſſe you for your tydings:
Next, accept my thankefulneſſe.

Meſſ. Sir, we haue all great cauſe to giue great thanks.

Scen. They are neere the City.

Meſ. Almoſt at point to enter.

Scen. Wee'l meet them, and helpe the ioy. Exeunt.

Enter two Senators, with Ladies, paſſing ouer the Stage, with other Lords.

Sen. Behold our Patronneſſe, the life of Rome:
Call all your Tribes together, praiſe the Gods,
And make triumphant fires, ſtrew Flowers before them:
Vnſhoot the noiſe that Baniſh'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.

All. Welcome Ladies, welcome.

A Flouriſh with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Tullus Auffidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords a'th'City, I am heere:
Deliuer them this Paper: hauing read it,
Bid them repayre to th'Market place, where I
Euen in theirs, and in the Commons eares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuſe:
The City Ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends t'appeare before the People, hoping
To purge himſelfe with words. Diſpatch.

Exeunt ſome of Auffidius Fallion.

Moſt Welcome.

1. Con. How is it with our Generall?

Auf. Euen ſo, as with a man by his owne Almes impoyſon'd, and with his Charity ſlaine.

2. Con. Moſt Noble Sir, If you do hold the ſame intent
Wherein you wiſht vs parties: Wee'l deliuer you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell,
We muſt proceed as we do finde the People.

3. Con. The People will remaine vncertaine, whil'ſt
'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the Suruiuor heyre of all.

Auf. I know it:
And my pretext to ſtrike at him, admits
A good conſtruction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine Honor for his truſt: who being ſo heighten'd,
He watered his new Plants with dewes of Flattery,
Seducing ſo my Friends: and to this end,
He bow'd his Nature, neuer knowne before,
But to be rough, vnſwayable, and free.

3. Conſp. Sir, his ſtoutneſſe
When he did ſtand for Conſull, which he loſt
By lacke of ſtooping.

Auf. That I would haue ſpoke of:
Being baniſh'd for't, he came vnto my Hearth,
Preſented to my knife his Throat: I tooke him,
Made him ioynt-ſeruant with me: Gaue him way
In all his owne deſires: Nay, let him chooſe
Out of my Files, his proiects, to accompliſh
My beſt and freſheſt men, ſeru'd his deſignements
In mine owne perſon: holpe to reape the Fame
Which he did end all his; and tooke ſome pride
To do my ſelfe this wrong: Till at the laſt
I ſeem'd his Follower, not Partner; and
He wadg'd me with his Countenance, as if I had bin Mercenary.

1. Con. So he did my Lord:
The Army marueyl'd at it, and in the laſt,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd
For no leſſe Spoile, then Glory.

Auf. There was it:
For which my ſinewes ſhall be ſtretcht vpon him,
At a few drops of Women's rheume, which are
As cheape as Lies; he ſold the Blood and Labour
Of our great Action; therefore ſhall he dye,
And I'le renew me in his fall. But hearke

Drummes and Trumpets ſounds, with great ſhowts of the people.

1. Con. Your Native Towne you enter'd like a Poſte,
And had no welcomes home, but he returnes
Splitting the Ayre with noyſe.

2. Con. And patient Fooles,
Whoſe children he hath ſlaine, their baſe throats teare
With giuing him glory.

3. Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expreſſe himſelfe, or moue the people
With what he would ſay, let him feele your Swords
Which we will ſecond, when he lies along After your way. His Tale pronounc'd, ſhall bury
His Reaſons, with his Body.

Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

All Lords. You are moſt welcome home.

Auf. I haue not deſeru'd it.
But worthy Lords, haue you with heede peruſed
What I haue written to you?

All. We haue.

1. Lord. And greeue to heare't:
What faults he made before the laſt, I thinke
Might haue found eaſie Fines: But there to end
Where he was to begin, and giue away
The benefit of our Leuies, anſwering vs
With our owne charge: making a Treatie, where
There was a yeelding; this admits no excuſe.

Auf. He approaches, you ſhall heare him.

Enter Coriolanus marching with Drumme and Colours. The Commoners being with him.

Corio. Haile Lords, I am return'd your Souldier:
No more infected with my Countries loue
Then when I parted hence: but ſtill ſubſiſting
Vnder your great Command. You are to know,
That proſperouſly I haue attempted, and
With bloody paſſage led your Warres, euen to
The gates of Rome: Our ſpoiles we haue brought home
Doth more then counterpoize a full third part
The charges of the Action. We haue made peace
With no leſſe Honor to the Antiates
Then ſhame to th'Romaines. And we heere deliuer
Subſcrib'd by'th'Conſuls, and Patricians,
Together with the Seale a'th Senat, what
We haue compounded on.

Auf. Read it not Noble Lords,
But tell the Traitor in the higheſt degree
He hath abus'd your Powers.

Corio. Traitor? How now?

Auf. I Traitor, Martius.

Corio. Martius?

Auf. I Martius, Caius Martius: Do'ſt thou thinke
Ile grace thee with that Robbery, thy ſtolne name
Coriolanus in Corioles?
You Lords and Heads a'th'State, perfidiouſly
He ha's betray'd your buſineſſe, and giuen vp
For certaine drops of Salt, your City Rome:
I ſay your City to his Wife and Mother,
Breaking his Oath and Reſolution, like
A twiſt of rotten Silke, neuer admitting Counſaile a'th'warre: But at his Nurſes teares
He whin'd and roar'd away your Victory,
That Pages bluſh'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.

Corio. Heat'ſt thou Mars?

Auf. Name not the God, thou boy of Teares.

Corio. Ha?

Auſid. No more.

Corio. Meaſureleſſe Lyar, thou haſt made my heart
Too great for what containes it. Boy? Oh Slaue,
Pardon me Lords, 'tis the firſt time that euer
I was forc'd to ſcould. Your iudgments my graue Lords
Muſt giue this Curre the Lye: and his owne Notion,
Who weares my ſtripes impreſt vpon him, that Muſt beare my beating to his Graue, ſhall ioyne
To thruſt the Lye vnto him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and heare me ſpeake.

Corio. Cut me to peeces Volces men and Lads,
Staine all your edges on me. Boy, falſe Hound:
If you haue writ your Annales true, 'tis there,
That like an Eagle in a Doue-coat, I
Fluttr'd your Volcians in Corioles.
Alone I did it, Boy.

Auf. Why Noble Lords,
Will you be put in minde of his blinde Fortune,
Which was your ſhame, by this vnholy Braggart?
'Fore your owne eyes, and eares?

All Conſp. Let him dye for't.

All People. Teare him to peeces, do it preſently:
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, he kill'd my Cozen
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.

2 Lord. Peace hoe: no outrage, peace:
The man is Noble, and his Fame folds in
This Orbe o'th'earth: His laſt offences to vs
Shall haue Iudicious hearing. Stand Auffidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Corio. O that I had him, with ſix Auffidiuſſes, &c.
His Tribe, to vſe my lawfull Sword.

Auf. Inſolent Villaine.

All Conſp. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

Draw both the Conſpirators, and kills Martius, who falles, Auffidius ſtands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Auf. My Noble Maſters, heare me ſpeake.

1 Lord. O Tullus.

2 Lord. Thou haſt done a deed, wherein Valour will weepe.

3 Lord. Tread not vpon him Maſters, all be quiet,
Put vp your Swords.

Auf. My Lords,
When you ſhall know (as in this Rage
Prouok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this mans life did owe you, you'l reioyce
That he is thus cut off. Pleaſe it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, Ile deliuer
My ſelfe your loyall Seruant, or endure
Your heau'ieſt Cenſure.

1 Lord. Beare from hence his body,
And mourne you for him. Let him be regarded As the moſt Noble Coarſe, that euer Herald
Did follow to his Vrne.

2 Lord. His owne impatience,
Takes from Auffidius a great part of blame:
Let's make the Beſt of it.

Auf. My Rage is gone,
And I am ſtrucke with ſorrow. Take him vp:
Helpe three a'th'cheefeſt Souldiers, Ile be one.
Beate thou the Drumme that it ſpeake mournfully:
Traile your ſteele Pikes. Though in this City he Hath widdowed and vnchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the Iniury,
Yet he ſhall haue a Noble Memory. Aſſiſt.

Exeunt bearing the Body of Martius. A dead March Sounded.

FINIS.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloft. And then enter Saturninus and his Followers at one doore, and Bassianus and his Followers at the other, with Drum & Colours.

Let vs intreat, by Honour of his Name,
Whom (worthily) you would haue now succeede,
And in the Capitoll and Senates right,
Whom you pretend to Honour and Adore,
That you withdraw you, and abate your Strength,
Dismisse your Followers, and as Suters should,
Pleade your Deserts in Peace and Humblenesse.

Saturnine. How fayre the Tribune speakes,
To calme my thoughts.

Bassia. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affie
In thy vprightnesse and Integrity:
And so I Loue and Honor thee, and thine,
Thy Noble Brother Titus, and his Sonnes,
And Her (to whom my thoughts are humbled all)
Gracious Lauinia, Romes rich Ornament,
That I will heere dismisse my louing Friends:
And to my Fortunes, and the Peoples Fauour,
Commit my Cause in ballance to be weigh'd.

Exit Souldiours.

Saturnine. Friends, that haue beene

As I am confident and kinde to thee.
Open the Gates, and let me in.

Bassia. Tribunes, and me, a poore Competitor.

Flourish. They go vp into the Senat house.

Enter a Captaine.

Cap. Romanes make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of Vertue, Romes best Champion,
Successefull in the Battailes that he fights,
With Honour and with Fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumscribed with his Sword,
And brought to yoke the Enemies of Rome.

Sound Drummes and Trumpets. And then enter two of Titus Sonnes; After them, two men bearing a Coffin couered with blacke, then two other Sonnes. After them, Titus Andronicus, and then Tamora the Queene of Gothes, & her two Sonnes: Chiron and Demetrius, with Aaron the Moore, and others, as many as can be. They set downe the Coffin, and Titus speakes.

Andronicus. Haile Rome:
Victorious in thy Mourning Weedes:

Loe,

Loe as the Barke that hath diſcharg'd his fraught,
Returnes with precious lading to the Bay,
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her Anchorage:
Commeth Andronicus bound with Lawrell bowes,
To reſalute his Country with his teares,
Teares of true ioy for his returne to Rome,
Thou great defender of this Capitoll,
Stand gracious to the Rites that we intend.
Romaines, of fiue and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Halfe of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poore remaines aliue and dead!
Theſe that Suruiue, let Rome reward with Loue:
Theſe that I bring vnto their laſteſt home,
With buriall amongſt their Anceſtors.
Heere Gothes haue giuen me leaue to ſheath my Sword:
Titus vnkinde, and carelleſſe of thine owne,
Why ſuffer'ſt thou thy Sonnes vnburied yet,
To houer on the dreadfull ſhore of Stix?
Make way to lay them by their Bretheren.

They open the Tombe.

There greete in ſilence as the dead are wont,
And ſleepe in peace, ſlaine in your Countries warres:
O ſacred receptacle of my ioyes,
Sweet Cell of vertue and Nobilitie,
How many Sonnes of mine haſt thou in ſtore,
That thou wilt neuer render to me more?

Luc. Giue vs the proudeſt priſoner of the Gothes,
That we may hew his limbes, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum, ſacrifice his fleſh:
Before this earthly priſon of their bones,
That ſo the ſhadowes be not vnappeas'd
Nor we diſturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I giue him you, the Nobleſt that Suruiues,
The eldeſt Son of this diſtreſſed Queene.

Tam. Stay Romaine Bretheren, gracious Conqueror,
Victorious Titus, rue the teares I ſhed,
A Mothers teares in paſſion for her ſonne:
And if thy Sonnes were euer deere to thee,
Oh thinke my ſonnes to be as deere to mee.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
To beautifie thy Triumphs, and returne
Captiue to thee, and to thy Romaine yoake,
But muſt my Sonnes be ſlaughtred in the ſtreetes,
For Valiant doings in their Countries cauſe?
O if to fight for King and Common-weale,
Were pietie in thine, it is in theſe:
Andronicus, ſtaine not thy Tombe with blood.
Wilt thou draw neere the nature of the Gods?
Draw neere them then in being merciſull.
Sweet mercy is Nobilities true badge,
Thrice Noble Titus, ſpare my firſt borne ſonne.

Tit. Patient your ſelfe Madam, and pardon me.
Theſe are the Brethren, whom you Gothes beheld
Aliue and dead, and for their Bretheren ſlaine,
Religiouſly they aske a ſacrifice:
To this your ſonne is markt, and die he muſt,
T'appeaſe their groaning ſhadowes that are gone.

Luc. Away with him, and make a fire ſtraight,
And with our Swords vpon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbes till they be clenſe conſum'd.

Exit Sonnes with Alarbus.

Tamo. O cruell irreligious piety.

Chi. Was euer Scythia halfe ſo barbarous?

Dem. Oppoſe me Scythia to ambitious Rome,
Alarbus goes to reſt, and we ſuruiue,
To tremble vnder Titus threatning lookes.
Then Madam ſtand reſolu'd, but hope withall,
The ſelfe ſame Gods that arm'd the Queene of Troy
With opportunitie of ſharpe reuenge
Vpon the Thracian Tyrant in his Tent,
May fauour Tamora the Queene of Gothes,
(When Gothes were Gothes, and Tamora was Queene)
To quit the bloody wrongs vpon her foes.

Enter the Sonnes of Andronicus againe.

Luc. See Lord and Father, how we haue perfom'd
Our Romaine rights, Alarbus limbes are lopt,
And intrails feede the ſacrificing fire,
Whoſe ſmoke like incenſe doth perfume the skie.
Remaineth nought but to interre our Brethren,
And with low'd Larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be ſo, and let Andronicus
Make this his laſteſt farewell to their ſoules.

Flourish.

Then Sound Trumpets, and lay the Coffins in the Tomb.

In peace and Honour reſt you heere my Sonnes,
Romes readieſt Champions, repoſe you heere in reſt,
Secure from worldly chaunces and miſhaps:
Heere lurks no Treaſon, heere no enuie ſwels,
Heere grow no damned grudges, heere are no ſtormes,
No noyſe, but ſilence and Eternall ſleepe,
In peace and Honour reſt you heere my Sonnes.

Enter Lauinia.

Laui. In peace and Honour, liue Lord Titus long,
My Noble Lord and Father, liue in Fame:
Loe at this Tombe my tributarie teares,
I render for my Bretheren's Obſequies.
And at thy feete I kneele, with teares of ioy
Shed on the earth for thy returne to Rome.
O bleſſe me heere with thy victorious hand,
Whoſe Fortune Romes beſt Citizens applau'd.

Tit. Kind Rome,
That haſt thus louingly reſerv'd
The Cordiall of mine age to glad my hart,
Lauinia liue, out-liue thy Fathers dayes:
And Fames eternall date for vertues praiſe.

Marc. Long liue Lord Titus, my beloued brother,
Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome.

Tit. Thankes Gentle Tribune,
Noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome Nephewes from ſucceſſull wars,
You that ſuruiue and you that ſleepe in Fame:
Faire Lords your Fortunes are all alike in all,
That in your Countries ſeruice drew your Swords.
But ſafer Triumph is this Funerall Pompe,
That hath aſpir'd to Solons Happineſs,
And Triumphs ouer chaunce in honours bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whoſe friend in iuſtice thou haſt euer bene,
Send thee by me their Tribune and this truſt,
This Palliament of white and ſpotleſſe Hue,
And name thee in Election for the Empire,
With theſe our late deceaſſed Emperours Sonnes:
Be Candidatus then and put it on,
And helpe to ſet a head on headleſſe Rome.

Tit. A better head her Glorious body fits,
Then his that ſhakes for age and feebleneſſe.

Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord:

rs Ensignes humbled at my feete.

Satu. Thankes Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these vnspeakable Deserts,
Romans forget your Fealtie to me.
Tit. Now Madam are your prisoner to an Emperour,
To him that for you Honour and your State,
Will vse you Nobly and your followers.
Satu. A goodly Lady, trust me of the Hue
That I would choose, were I to choose a new:
Cleere vp Faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre
Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorne in Rome:
Princely shall be thy vsage every way.
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam he comforts you,
Can make your Greater then the Queene of Gothes?
Lauinia you are not displeas'd with this?
Lau. Not I my Lord, sith true Nobilitie,
Warrants these words in Princely curtesie.
Sat. Thankes sweete Lauinia Romans let vs goe:
Ransomlesse heere we set our Prisoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpe and Drum.
Bass. Lord Titus by your leaue, this Maid is mine.
Tit. How sir? Are you in earnest then my Lord?
Bass. I Noble Titus, and resolu'd withall,
To doe my selfe this reason, and this right.
Marc. Suum cuique, is our Romane Iustice,
This Prince in Iustice seizeth but his owne.
Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius liue.
Tit. Traytors auaunt, where is the Emperours Guarde?
Treason my Lord, Lauinia is surpris'd.
Sat. Surpris'd, by whom?
Bass. By him that iustly may
Beare his Betroth'd, from all the world away.
Mutij. Brothers helpe to conuey her hence away,
And with my Sword Ile keepe this doore safe.
Tit Follow my Lord, and Ile soone bring her backe.
Mut. My Lord you passe not heere.
Tit. What villaine Boy, bar'st me my way in Rome?
Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe. He kils him.
Luc. My Lord you are vniust, and more then so,
In wrongfull quarrell, you haue slaine your son.
Tit. Nor thou, nor he are any sonnes of mine,
My sonnes would never so dishonour me.
Traytor restore Lauinia to the Emperour.
Luc. Dead if you will, but not to be his wife,
That is anothers lawfull promist Loue.

Enter aloft the Emperour with Tamora and her two sonnes, and Aaron the Moore.

Empe. No Titus, no, the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stocke:
Ile trust by Leisure him that mocks me once.
Thee neuer: nor thy Traiterous haughty sonnes,
Confederates all, thus to dishonour me.
Was none in Rome to make a stale
But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus
Agree these Deeds, with that proud bragge of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the Empire at thy hands.
Tit. O monstrous, what reproachfull words are these?
Sat. But goe thy wayes, goe giue that changing peece,
To him that flourishs for her with his Sword:
A Valliant sonne in-law thou shalt enioy a
One, fit to bandy with thy lawlesse Sonnes,

To

To ruffle in the Common-wealth of Rome.
Tit. These words are Razors to my wounded hart.
Sat. And therefore lovely Tamora Queene of Gothes,
That like the ſtately Thebe mong'ſt her Nimphs
Doſt ouer-ſhine the Gallant'ſt Dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my ſodaine choyſe,
Behold I chooſe thee Tamora for my Bride,
And will Create thee Empreſſe of Rome.
Speake Queene of Goths doſt thou applau'd my choyſe?
And heere I ſweare by all the Romaine Gods,
Sith Prieſt and Holy-water are ſo neere,
And Tapers burne ſo bright, and every thing
In readines for Hymeneus ſtand,
I will not reſalute the ſtreets of Rome,
Or clime my Pallace, till from forth this place,
I leade eſpous'd my Bride along with me.
Tamo. And heere in ſight of heauen to Rome I ſweare,
If Saturnine aduance the Queen of Gothes,
Shee will a Hand-maid be to his deſires,
A louing Nurſe, a Mother to his youth.
Satur. Aſcend Faire Queene,
Panthean Lords, accompany
Your Noble Emperour and his louely Brid, e
Sent by the heauens for Prince Saturnine,
Whoſe wiſedome hath her Fortune Conquered,
There ſhall we Conſummate our Spouſall rites.
Exeunt omnes.
Tit. I am not bid to waite vpon this Bride:
Titus when wer't thou wont to walke alone,
Diſhonoured thus and Challenged of wrongs?

Enter Marcus and Titus Sonnes.

Mar. O Titus ſee! O ſee what thou haſt done!
In a bad quarrell ſlaine a Vertuous ſonne.
Tit. No ſooliſh Tribune, no: No ſonne of mine,
Nor thou, nor theſe Confederates in the deed,
That hath diſhonoured all our Family,
Vnworthy brother, and vnworthy Sonnes.
Luci. But let vs giue him burial as becomes:
Giue Mutius burial with our Bretheren.
Tit. Traytors away, he reſt's not in this Tombe:
This Monument five hundreth yeares hath ſtood,
Which I haue Sumptuouſly re-edified:
Heere none but Souldiers, and Romes Seruitors,
Repoſe in Fame: None baſely ſlaine in braules,
Bury him where you can, he comes not heere.
Mar. My Lord this is impiety in you,
My Nephew Mutius deeds do plead for him,
He muſt be buried with his bretheren.
Titus two Sonnes ſpeakes.
And ſhall, or him we will accompany.
Ti. And ſhall! What villaine was it ſpake that word?
Titus ſonne ſpeakes.
He that would vouch'd it in any place but heere.
Tit. What would you bury him in my deſpight?
Mar. No Noble Titus, but intreat of ther,
To pardon Marius, and to bury him.
Tit. Marcus, Euen thou haſt ſtroke vpon my Creſt,
And with theſe Boyes mine Honour thou haſt wounded,
My foes I doe repute you every one.
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.
2. Sonne. He is not himſelfe, let vs withdraw.
1. Sonne. Not I till Mutius bones be buried.
The Brother and the ſonnes kneele.
Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature pleas'd.
2. Sonne. Father, and in that name doth nature ſpeake,
Tit. Speake thou no more if all the reſt will ſpeede.
Mar. Renowned Titus more then halfe my ſoules.
Luc. Deare Father, ſoule and ſubſtance of vs all.
Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to interre
His Noble Nephew heere in vertues neſt,
That died in Honour and Lauinia's cauſe.
Thou art a Romaine, be not barbarous:
The Greekes vpon aduiſe did bury Aiax
That flew himſelfe: And Laertes ſonne,
Did graciouſly plead for his Funerals:
Let not young Mutius then that was thy ioy,
Be bar'd his entrance heere.
Tit. Riſe Marcus, riſe,
The diſmall'ſt day is this that ere I ſaw,
To be diſhonored by my Sonnes in Rome:
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.
They put him in the Tombe.
Luc. There lie thy bones ſweet Mutius with thy Till we with Trophees do adorne thy Tombe. (friends
They all kneele and ſay.
No man ſhed teares for Noble Mutius,
He liues in Fame, that di'd in vertues cauſe. Exit.
Mar. My Lord to ſtep out of theſe ſodden dumps,
How comes it that the ſubtile Queene of Gothes,
Is of a ſodaine thus aduanc'd in Rome?
Ti. I know not Marcus: but I know it is,
(Whether by deuiſe or no) the heauens can tell,
Is ſhe not then beholding to the man,
That brought her for this high good turne ſo farre?
Yes, and will Nobly him remunerate.

Flouriſh.
Enter the Emperor, Tamora, and her two ſonnes, with the Moore at one doore. Enter at the other doore Baſſianus and Lauinia with others.
Sat. So Baſſianus, you haue plaid your prize,
God giue you ioy ſir of your Gallant Bride.
Baſſ. And you of yours my Lord: I ſay no more,
Nor wiſh no leſſe, and ſo I take my leaue.
Sat. Traytor, if Rome haue law, or we haue power,
Thou and thy Faction ſhall repent this Rape.
Baſſ. Rape call you it my Lord, to ceaſe my owne,
My true betrothed Loue, and now my wife?
But let the lawes of Rome determine all,
Meane while I am poſſeſt of that is mine
Sat. 'Tis good ſir: you are very ſhort with vs,
But if we liue, weele be as ſharpe with you.
Baſſ. My Lord, what I haue done as beſt I may,
Anſwere I muſt, and ſhall do with my life,
Onely thus much I giue your Grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This Noble Gentleman Lord Titus heere,
Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,
That in the reſcue of Lauinia,
With his owne hand did ſlay his youngeſt Son,
In zeale to you, and highly mou'd to wrath.
To be controul'd in that he frankly gaue:
Receiue him then to fauour Saturnine,
That hath expreſt himſelfe in all his deeds,
A Father and a friend to thee, and Rome.
Ti. Prince Baſſianus leaue to plead my Deeds,
'Tis thou, and thoſe, that haue diſhonoured me.
Rome and the righteous heauens be my iudge,
How I haue lou'd and Honour'd Saturnine.
Tam. My worthy Lord if euer Tamora,

Were

in those Princely eyes of thine, ſpeake indifferently for all:
(ſweet) pardon what is paſt.
Madam, be diſhonoured openly,
it vp without reuenge?
ſo my Lord,
ome for-fend,
thour to diſhonour you.
mont dare, I vndertake
Titus innocence in all:
diſſembled ſpeakes his griefes:
e looke graciouſly on him,
oble a friend on vaine ſuppoſe,
e lookes afflict his gentle heart,
I'd by me, be wonne at laſt,
our griefes and diſcontents,
wly planted in your Throne,
people, and Patricians too,
ery take Titus part,
it vs for ingratitude,
reputes to be a hainous ſin ne.
ts, and then let me alone:
to maſſacre them all,
faction, and their familie,
her, and his trayterous ſonnes,
ed for my deare ſonnes life.
in know what 'tis to let a Queene.
reeches, and beg for grace in vaine.
weet Emperour, (come Andronicus)
ood old man, and cheere the heart, mpeſt of thy angry frowne.
Titus, rile,
ath prevail'd.
anke your Maieſtie,
ords.
heſe lookes,
t in me.
w, I am incorparate in Rome,
adopted happily.
ſe the Emperour for his good,
nan elſe die Andronicus.
ine honour good my Lord,
concil'd your friends and you.
e Baſſianus, I haue paſt promiſe to the Emperour, be more milde and tractable.
Lords:
ma.
all humbled on your knees,
pardon of his Maieſtie.
loe,
ſeuen, and to his Highnes,
did, was mildly, as we might,
fitters honour and our owne.
on mine honour heere I do proteſt.
ay and talke not, trouble vs no more.
Nay, nay,
our, we muſt all be friends,
and his Nephews kneele for grace,
ſemed, ſweet hart looke back.
rew,
and thy brothers beere,
ely Tamora's intreats,
eſe young mens haynous faults.
ame, though you left me like a churle,
id, and ſure as death I ſware,
I would not part a Batchellour from the Priеſt.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feaſt two Brides,
You are my gueſt Lauinia, and your friends:
This day ſhall be a Loue-day Tamora.
Tit. To morrow and it pleaſe your Maieſtie,
To hunt the Panther and the Hart with me,
With horne and Hound,
Weele giue your Grace Bon iour.
Satur. Be it ſo Titus, and Gramercy to. Exeunt.

Actus Secunda.

Flouriſh. Enter Aaron alone.

Aron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus toppe,
Safe out of Fortunes ſhot, and ſits aloft,
Secure of Thunders cracke or lightning flaſh,
Aduanc'd above pale enuies threatning reach:
As when the golden Sunne ſalutes the morne,
And having gilt the Ocean with his beames,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his gliſtering Coach,
And ouer-lookes the higheſt peering hills:
So Tamora:
Vpon her wit doth earthly honour waite,
And vertue ſtoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aaron arme thy hart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy Emperiall Miſtris,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Haſt priſoner held, fettred in amorous chaines,
And taſter bound to Aarons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus ti'de to Caucaſus.
Away with ſlauiſh weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and ſhine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite vpon this new made Empreſſe
To waite ſaid I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddeſſe, this Semiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturnine,
And ſee his ſhipwracke, and his Common weales.
Hollo, what ſtorme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius braving.

Dem. Chiron thy yeres wants wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intru'd where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know'ſt affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou doo'ſt ouer-weene in all,
And ſo in this, to beare me downe with braues,
Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me leſſe gracious, or thee more fortunate:
I am as able and as fit, as thou,
To ſerue, and to deſerue my Miſtris grace,
And that my ſword vpon thee ſhall approue,
And plead my paſſions for Lauinia's loue.
Aron. Clubs, clubs, theſe louers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (vnaduiſed)
Giue you a dauncing Rapier by your ſide,
Are you ſo deſperate growne to threat your friends?
Goe too: haue your Lath glued within your ſheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.
Chi. Meane while ſir, with the little ſkill I haue,
Full well ſhale thou perceiue how much I dare.
Dem. I Boy, grow ye ſo braue? They draw.
Aron. Why how now Lords?
So neere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw,

And

And maintaine such a quarrell openly?
Full well I wote, the ground of all this grudge.
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cause were knowne to them it most concernes.
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonored in the Court of Rome:
For shame put vp.
Dem. Not I, till I haue sheath'd
My rapier in his bosome, and withall
Thrust these reprochfull speeches downe his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour heere.
Chi. For that I am prepar'd, and full resolu'd,
Foule spoken Coward,
That thundrest with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st performe.
Aron. A way I say.
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brabble will vndoo vs all:
Why Lords, and thinke you not how dangerous
It is to set vpon a Princes right?
What is Lauinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her loue such quarrels may be broacht,
Without controulement, Iustice, or reuenge?
Young Lords beware, and should the Empresse know,
This discord ground, the musicke would not please.
Chi. I care not I, knew she and all the world,
I loue Lauinia more then all the world.
Demet. Youngling,
Learne thou to make some meaner choise,
Lauinia is thine elder brothers hope.
Aron. Why are ye mad? Or know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in loue?
I tell you Lords, you doe but plot your deaths,
By this deuise.
Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To atchieue her whom I do loue.
Aron. To atchieue her, how?
Demet. Why, mak'st thou it so strange?
Shee is a woman, therefore may be woo'd,
Shee is a woman, therefore may be wonne,
Shee is Lauinia therefore must be lou'd.
What man, more water glideth by the Mill
Then wots the Miller of, and easie it is
Of a cut loafe to steale a shiue we know:
Though Bassianus be the Emperours brother,
Better then he haue worne Vulcans badge.
Aron. I, and as good as Saturnine may.
Demet. Then why should he dispaire that knowes to
With words, faire lookes, and liberality: (court it
What hast not thou full often strucke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers nose?
Aron. Why then it seemes some certaine snatch or so
Would serue your turnes.
Chi. I so the turne were serued.
Demet. Aaron thou hast hit it.
Aron. Would you had hit it too,
Then should not we be tir'd with this adoo:
Why harke yee, harke yee, and are you such fooles,
To square for this? Would it offend you then?
Chi. Faith not me.
Demet. Nor me, so I were one.
Aron. For shame be friends, & loyne for that you iarr:
'Tis policie and stratagem must doe
That you affect, and so must you resolue,
That what you cannot as you would atchieue,
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chast
Then this Lauinia, Bassianus loue,
A speedier course this lingring languishment
Must we pursue, and I haue found the path:
My Lords, a solemne hunting is in hand.
There will the louely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forrest walkes are wide and spacious,
And many vnfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villanie:
Single you thither then this dainty Doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our Empresse with her sacred wit
To villainie and vengance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And she shall file our engines with aduise,
That will not suffer you to square your selues,
But to your wishes height aduance you both.
The Emperours Court is like the house of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues, of eyes, of eares:
The Woods are ruthlesse, dreadfull, deafe, and dull:
There speake, and strike braue Boyes, & take your turne.
There serue your lusts, shadow'd from heauen eye,
And reuell in Lauinia's Treasurie.
Chi. Thy counsell Lad smells of no cowardize.
Demet. Sy fas aut nefas, till I finde the streame,
To coole this heat, a Charme to calme these fits,
Per Stygia per manes Vehor. Exeunt

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three Sonnes, making ready with hounds and horses, and Marcus.

Tit. The hunt is vp, the morne is bright and grey,
The fields are fragrant, and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere, and let vs make a bay,
And wake the Emperour, and his louely Bride,
And rouze the Prince, and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noyse.
Sonnes let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours person carefully:
I haue beene troubled in my sleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Winde Hornes.

Heere a cry of hounds, and winde hornes in a peale: then Enter Saturnine, Tamora, Bassianus, Lauinia, Chiron, Demetrius, and their Attendants.

Ti. Many good morrowes to your Maiestie,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promised your Grace, a Hunters peale.
Satur. And you haue rung it lustily my Lords,
Somewhat too earely for new married Ladies.
Bass. Lauinia, how say you?
Lau. I say no:
I haue beene awake two houres and more.
Satur. Come on then, horse and Chariots let vs haue,
And to our sport: Madam, now shall ye see,
Our Romaine hunting.
Mar. I haue dogges my Lord,
Will rouze the proudest Panther in the Chaire,
And clime the highest Promontary top.
Tit. And I haue horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and runnes like Swallowes ore the plaine.
Demet. Chi.

me. Chiron we hunt not we, with Horſe nor Hound
ope to pluck a dainty Doe to ground. Exeunt

Enter Aaron alone.

m. He that had wit, would thinke that I had none,
y ſo much Gold vnder a Tree,
ever after to inherit it.
m that thinks of me ſo abiectly,
that this Gold muſt come a ſtratageme,
h cunningly effected, will beget
excellent peece of villany:
repoſe ſweet Gold for their vnreſt,
aue their Almes out of the Empreſſe Cheſt.

Enter Tamora to the Moore.

re. My louely Aaron,
efore look'ſt thou ſad,
every thing doth make a Gleefull boaſt?
rds chaunt melody on euery buſh,
ake lies tolled in the chearefull Sunne,
reene leaues quiuer with the cooling winde,
ake a cheker'd ſhadow on the ground:
their ſweete ſhade, Aaron let vs ſit,
hil'ſt the babling Eccho mock's the Hounds,
ng ſhrilly to the well tun'd Hornes, double hunt were heard at once,
ſit downe, and marke their yelping noyſe:
ſtier conflict, ſuch as was ſuppos'd.
anding Prince and Dido once enioy'd,
with a happy ſtorme they were ſurpris'd,
ertain'd with a Counſaile-keeping Caue,
y each wreathed in the others armes, aſtimes done) poſſeſſe a Golden ſlumber,
s Hounds and Hornes, and ſweet Melodious Birds
o ſer, as is a Nurſes Song
labie, to bring her Babe aſleepe.
w. Madame,
th Venus gouerne your deſires,
e is Dominator ouer mine:
ſignifies my deadly ſtanding eye,
ence, and my Cloudy Melancholie,
ree of Woolly haire, that now vncurles,
s an Addes: when ſhe doth vnrowle
ſome fatall execution?
adam, theſe are no Veneriall ſignes,
rance is in my heart, death in my hand,
, and reuenge, are Hammering in my head.
Tamora, the Empreſſe of my Soule,
h never hopes more heauen, then reſts in thee,
the day of Doome for Baſſianus:
Lauinia muſt looſe her tongue to day,
oones make Pillage of her Chaſtity, ſh their hands in Baſſian blood.
hou this Letter, take it vp I pray thee,
iue the King this fatall plotted Scrowle, queſtion me no more, we are eſpied,
comes a parcell of our hopefull Booty,
h dreads not yet their liues deſtruction.

Enter Baſſianus and Lauinia.

w. Ah my ſweet Moore:
er to me then life.
m. No more great Empreſſe, Baſſianus comes,
ſſe with him, and Ile goe fetch thy Sonnes cke thy quarrell what ſo ere they be.
ſ. Whom haue we heere?
Royall Empreſſe,
Vnfurniſht of our well beſeeming troope?
Or is it Dian habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy Groues,
To ſee the generall Hunting in this Forreſt?
Tamo. Sawcie controuler of our priuate ſteps:
Had I the power, that ſome ſay Dian had,
Thy Temples ſhould be planted preſently.
With Hornes, as was Actæons, and the Hounds
Should driue vpon his new transformed limbes,
Vnmannerly Intruder as thou art.
Laui. Vnder your patience gentle Empreſſe,
'Tis thought you haue a goodly gift in Horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moore and you
Are ſingled forth to try experiments:
Ioue ſheild your husband from his Hounds to day,
'Tis pitty they ſhould take him for a Stag.
Baſſ. Beleeue me Queene, your ſwarth Cymerion,
Doth make your Honour of his bodies Hue,
Spotted, detected, and abhominable.
Why are you ſequeſtred from all your traine?
Diſmounted from your Snow-white goodly Steed,
And wandred hither to an obſcure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moore,
If foule deſire had not conducted you?
Laui. And being intercepted in your ſport,
Great reaſon that my Noble Lord, be rated
For Sauceneſſe, I pray you let vs hence,
And let her ioy her Rauen coloured loue,
This valley fits the purpoſe paſſing well.
Baſſ. The King my Brother ſhall haue notice of this.
Laui. I, for theſe ſlips haue made him noted long.
Good King, to be ſo mightily abuſed.
Tamora. Why I haue patience to endure all this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Dem. How now deere Soueraigne
And our gracious Mother,
Why doth your Highnes looke ſo pale and wan?
Tamo. Haue I not reaſon thinke you to looke pale.
Theſe two haue tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren, deteſted vale you ſee it is.
The Trees though Sommer, yet forlorne and leane,
Ore-come with Moſſe, and baleſull Miſſelto.
Heere neuer ſhines the Sunne, heere nothing breeds,
Vnleſſe the nightly Owle, or fatall Rauen:
And when they ſhew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me heere at dead time of the night,
A thouſand Fiends, a thouſand hiſſing Snakes,
Ten thouſand ſwelling Toades, as many Vrchins,
Would make ſuch fearefull and confuſed cries,
As any mortall body hearing it,
Should ſtraite fall mad, or elſe die ſuddenly.
No ſooner had they told this helliſh tale,
But ſtraite they told me they would binde me heere,
Vnto the body of a dismall yew,
And leaue me to this miſerable death.
And then they call'd me foule Adultereſſe,
Laſciuious Goth, and all the bittereſt tearmes
That euer eare did heare to ſuch effect.
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Reuenge it, as you loue your Mothers life,
Or be ye not henceforth cal'd my Children.
Dem. This is a witneſſe that I am thy Sonne. ſtab him.
Chi. And this for me,
Strook home to ſhew my ſtrength.
Laui I come Semiramis, nay Barbarous Tamora.

For to name fits thy nature but thy owne.
Tam. Giue me thy poyniard, you ſhal know my boyes
Your Mothers hand ſhall right your Mothers wrong.
Deme. Stay Madam heere is more belongs to her,
Firſt thraſh the Corne, then after burne the ſtraw:
This Minion ſtood vpon her chaſtity,
Vpon her Nuptiall vow, her loyaltie.
And with that painted hope, braues your Mightineſſe,
And ſhall ſhe carry this vnto her graue?
Chi. And if ſhe doe.
I would I were an Eunuch,
Drag hence her husband to ſome ſecret hole,
And make his dead Trunke-Pillow to our luſt.
Tam. But when ye haue the hony we deſire,
Let not this Waſpe out-liue vs both to ſting.
Chi. I warrant you Madam we will make that ſure:
Come Miſtris, now perforce we will enioy,
That nice-preſerued honeſty of yours.
Lau. Oh Tamora, thou bear'ſt a woman face.
Tam. I will not heare her ſpeake, away with her.
Lau. Sweet Lords intreat her heare me but a word
Deme. Liſten faire Madam, let it be your glory
To ſee her teares, but be your hart to them,
As vnrelenting flint to drops of raine.
Lau. When did the Tigers young-ones teach the dam?
O doe not learne her wrath, ſhe taught it thee.
The milke thou ſuck'ſt from her did turne to Marble,
Euen at thy Teat thou had'ſt thy Tyranny.
Yet euery Mother breeds not Sonnes alike,
Do thou intreat her ſhew a woman pitty.
Chiro. What,
Would'ſt thou haue me proue my ſelfe a baſtard?
Lau. 'Tis true,
The Rauen doth not hatch a Larke,
Yet haue I heard, Oh could I finde it now,
The Lion mou'd with pitty, did indure
To haue his Princely pawes par'd all away.
Some ſay, that Rauens ſofter forlorne children,
The whil'ſt their owne birds famiſh in their neſts:
Oh be to me though thy hard hart ſay no,
Nothing ſo kind but ſomething pitifull.
Tamo. I know not what it meanes, away with her.
Lauia. Oh let me teach thee for my Fathers ſake,
That gaue thee life when well he might haue ſlaine thee:
Be not obdurate, open thy deafe eares.
Tamo. Had'ſt thou in perſon ne're offended me,
Euen for his ſake am I pittileſſe:
Remember Boyes I powr'd forth teares in vaine,
To ſaue your brother from the ſacrifice,
But fierce Andronicus would not relent,
Therefore away with her, and vſe her as you will,
The worſe to her, the better lou'd of me.
Lauia. Oh Tamora,
Be call'd a gentle Queene,
And with thine owne hands kill me in this place,
For 'tis not life that I haue beg'd ſo long,
Poore I was ſlaine, when Baſſianus dy'd.
Tam. What beg'ſt thou then? fond woman let me go?
Lauia. 'Tis preſent death I beg, and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
Oh keepe me from their worſe then killing luſt,
And tumble me into ſome loathſome pit,
Where neuer mans eye may behold my body,
Doe this, and be a charitable murderer.
Tam. So ſhould I rob my ſweet Sonnes of their fee,
No let them ſatiſfie their luſt on thee.
Deme. Away,
For thou haſt ſtaid vs heere too long.
Lauinia. No Gerace,
No womanhood? Ah beaſtly creature,
The blot and enemy to our generall name,
Confuſion fall—
Chi. Nay then Ile ſtop your mouth
Bring thou her husband,
This is the Hole where Aaron bid vs hide him.
Tam. Farewell my Sonnes, ſee that you make her ſure.
Nere let my heart know merry cheere indeed,
Till all the Andronici be made away:
Now will I hence to ſeeke my louely Moore,
And let my ſpleeneſull Sonnes this Trull deflowre. Exit

Enter Aaron with two of Titus Sonnes.

Aron. Come on my Lords, the better ſooner better,
Straight will I bring you to the loathſome pit,
Where I eſpied the Panthes faſt aſleepe.
Quin. My ſight is very dull what ere it bodes.
Mart. And mine I promiſe you, were it not for ſhame,
Well could I leaue our ſport to ſleepe a while.
Quin. What art thou fallen?
What ſubtile Hole is this,
Whoſe mouth is couered with Rude growing Briers,
Vpon whoſe leaues are drops of new-ſhed-blood,
As freſh as mornings dew diſtil'd on flowers,
A very fatall place it ſeemes to me
Speake Brother, haſt thou hurt thee with the fall?
Martius. Oh Brother,
With the diſmal'ſt obiect
That euer eye with ſight made heart lamente.
Aron. Now will I fetch the King to finde them here
That he thereby may haue a likely geſſe,
How theſe were they that made away his Brother.
Exit Aaron
Mart. Why doſt not comfort me and helpe me out
From this vnhallow'd and blood-ſtained Hole?
Quintus. I am ſurpriſed with an vncouth feare,
A chilling ſweat ore-runs my trembling ioynts,
My heart ſuſpects more then mine eye can ſee.
Mart. To proue thou haſt a true diſcerning heart,
Aaron and thou looke downe into this den,
And ſee a fearefull ſight of blood and death.
Quintus. Aaron is gone,
And my compaſſionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing whereat it trembles by ſurmiſe:
Oh tell me how it is, for nere till now
Was I a child, to feare I know not what.
Mart. Lord Baſſianus lies embrewed heere,
All on a heape like to the ſlaughtred Lambe,
In this deteſted, darke, blood-drinking pit.
Quin. If it be darke, how doſt thou know 'tis he?
Mart. Vpon his bloody finger he doth weare
A precious Ring, that lightens all the Hole:
Which like a Taper in ſome Monument,
Doth ſhine vpon the dead mans earthly cheekes,
And ſhewes the ragged entrailes of the pit:
So pale did ſhine the Moone on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in Maidens blood:
O Brother helpe me with thy fainting hand.
If feare hath made thee faint as mee it hath,
Out of this fell deuouring receptacle,
As hatefull as Cocitus miſtie mouth
Quint. Reach me thy hand, that I may helpe thee out Or

Or wanting ſtrength to doe thee ſo much good,
I may be pluckt into the ſwallowing wombe,
Of this deepe pit, poore Baſſianus graue:
I haue no ſtrength to plucke thee to the brinke.
Mart. Nor I no ſtrength to clime without thy help.
Quin. Thy hand once more, I will not looſe againe,
Till thou art heere aloft, or I below,
Thou can'ſt not come to me, I come to thee. Both fall in.

Enter the Emperour, Aaron the Moore.

Sator. Along with me, Ile ſee what hole is he
And what he is that now is leapt into it.
Say, who art thou that lately did'ſt deſcend,
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Mart. The vnhappie ſonne of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a moſt vnluckie houre,
To finde thy brother Baſſianus dead.
Sator. My brother dead? I know thou doſt but ieſt,
He and his Lady both are at the Lodge,
Vpon the North-ſide of this pleaſant Chaſe,
'Tis not an houre ſince I left him there.
Mart. We know not where you left him all aliue,
But out alas, heere haue we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus, and Lauinia.

Tamo. Where is my Lord the King?
King. Heere Tamora, though griev'd with killing griefe.
Tam. Where is thy brother Baſſianus?
King. Now to the bottome doſt thou ſearch my wound,
Poore Baſſianus heere lies murthered.
Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatall writ,
The compact of this timeleſſe Tragedie,
And wonder greatly that mans face can fold,
In pleaſing ſmiles ſuch murderous Tyrannie.
She giueth Saturnine a Letter.

Saturninus reads the Letter.

And if we miſſe to meete him handſomely,
Sweet huntſman, Baſſianus 'tis we meane,
Doe thou ſo much as dig the graue for him,
Thou know'ſt our meaning looke for thy reward
Among the Nettles at the Elder tree:
Which ouer-ſhades the mouth of that ſame pit:
Where we decreed to bury Baſſianus
Doe this and purchaſe vs thy laſting friends.

King. Oh Tamora, was euer heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,
Looke ſirs, if you can finde the huntſman out,
That ſhould haue murthered Baſſianus heere.
Aron. My gracious Lord heere is the bag of Gold.
King. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curs of bloody kind
Haue heere bereft my brother of his life:
Sirs drag them from the pit vnto the priſon,
There let them bide vntill we haue deuis'd
Some neuer heard-of-torturing paine for them.
Tamo. What are they in this pit,
Oh wondrous thing!
How eaſily murder is diſcouered?
Tit. High Emperour, vpon my feeble knee,
I beg this boone, with teares, not lightly ſhed,
That this fell fault of my accurſed Sonnes,
Accurſed, if the fault be prou'd in them.
King. If it be prou'd? you ſee it is apparant.
Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?
Tamora. Andronicus himſelfe did take it vp.
Tit. I did my Lord,
Yet let me be their baile,
For by my Fathers reuerent Tombe I vow
They ſhall be ready at your Highnes will,
To anſwere their ſuſpition with their liues.
King. Thou ſhalt not baile them, ſee thou follow me.
Some bring the murthered body, ſome the murtherers,
Let them not ſpeake a word, the guilt is plaine,
For by my ſoule, were there worſe end then death,
That end vpon them ſhould be executed.
Tamo. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they ſhall do well enough.
Tit. Come Lauinia come,
Stay not to talke with them. Exeunt.

Enter the Empreſſe Sonnes, with Lauinia, her hands cut off and her tongue cut out, and rauiſht.

Demo. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can ſpeake,
Who't was that cut thy tongue and rauiſht thee.
Chi. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning ſo,
And if thy ſtumpes will let thee play the Scribe.
Dem. See how with ſignes and tokens ſhe can ſcowle.
Chi. Goe home,
Call for ſweet water, waſh thy hands.
Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to waſh.
And ſo let's leaue her to her ſilent walkes.
Chi. And't were my cauſe, I ſhould goe hang my ſelfe.
Dem. If thou had'ſt hands to helpe thee knit the cord.
Exeunt.

Winde Hornes.

Enter Marcus from hunting to Lauinia.

Who is this, my Neece that flies away ſo faſt?
Coſen a word, where is your husband?
If I do dreame, would all my wealth would wake me;
If I doe wake, ſome Planet ſtrike me downe,
That I may ſlumber in eternall ſleepe.
Speake gentle Neece, what ſterne ingentle hands
Hath lopt, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two braunches, thoſe ſweet Ornaments
Whoſe circkling ſhadowes, Kings haue ſought to ſleepe in
And might not gaine ſo great a happines
As haliſe thy Loue: Why dooſt not ſpeake to me?
Alas, a Crimſon riuer of warme blood,
Like a bubling fountaine ſtir'd with wiode,
Doth riſe and fall betweene thy Roſed lips.
Comming and going with thy hony breath.
But ſure ſome Tereus hath defloured thee,
And leaſt thou ſhould'ſt detect them, cut thy tongue.
Ah, now thou turn'ſt away thy face for ſhame:
And notwithſtanding all this loſſe of blood,
As from a Conduit with their iſſuing Spouts,
Yet doe thy cheekes looke red as Titans face,
Bluſhing to be encountred with a Cloud,
Shall I ſpeake for thee? ſhall I ſay 'tis ſo?
Oh that I knew thy hart, and knew the beaſt
That I might raile at him to eaſe my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an Ouen ſtopt,
Doth burne the hart to Cinders where it is.
Faire Philomela ſhe but loſt her tongue,
And in a tedious Sampler ſowed her minde.
But louely Neece, that meane is cut from thee,
A craftier Tereus haſt thou met withall,
And he hath cut thoſe pretty fingers off,

That could haue better sowed then Philomel.
Oh had the monster seene those Lilly hands,
Tremble like Aspen leaues vpon a Lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kisse them,
He would not then haue touch'd them for his life.
Or had he heard the heauenly Harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made:
He would haue dropt his knife and fell asleepe,
As Cerberus at the Thracian Poets feete.
Come, let vs goe, and make thy father blinde,
For such a sight will blinde a fathers eye.
One houres storme will drowne the fragrant meades,
What, will whole months of teares thy Fathers eyes?
Doe not draw backe, for we will mourne with thee:
Oh could our mourning ease thy misery. Exeunt

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Iudges and Senatours with Titus two sonnes bound, passing on the Stage to the place of execution, and Titus going before pleading.

Ti. Heare me graue fathers, noble Tribunes stay,
For pitty of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous warres, whilst you securely slept:
For all my blood in Romes great quarrell shed,
For all the frosty nights that I haue watcht,
And for these bitter teares, which now you see,
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheekes,
Be pittifull to my condemned Sonnes,
Whose soules is not corrupted as 'tis thought:
For two and twenty sonnes I neuer wept,
Because they died in honours lofty bed.
Andronicus lyeth downe, and the Iudges passe by him.
For these, Tribunes, in the dust I write
My harts deepe languor, and my soules sad teares:
Let my teares stanch the earths dry appetite.
My sonnes sweet blood will make it shame and blush:
O earth! I will be friend thee more with raine Exeunt
That shall distill from these two ancient ruines,
Then youthfull Aprill shall with all his showres
In summers drought: Ile drop vpon thee still,
In Winter with warme teares Ile melt the snow,
And keepe eternall spring time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drinke my deare sonnes blood.

Enter Lucius, with his weapon drawne.

Oh reuerent Tribunes, oh gentle aged men,
Vnbinde my sonnes, reuerse the doome of death,
And let me say (that neuer wept before)
My teares are now preuailing Orators.
Lu. Oh noble father, you lament in vaine,
The Tribunes heare not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrowes to a stone.
Ti. Ah Lucius for thy brothers let me plead,
Graue Tribunes, once more I intreat of you.
Lu. My gracious Lord, no Tribune heares you speake.
Ti. Why 'tis no matter man, if they did heare
They would not marke me: oh if they did heare
They would not pitty me.
Therefore I tell my sorrowes bootles to the stones.
Who though they cannot answere my distresse,
Yet in some sort they are better then the Tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I doe weepe, they humbly at my feete
Receiue my teares, and seeme to weepe with me,
And were they but attired in graue weedes,
Rome could afford no Tribune like to these.
A stone is soft waxe,
Tribunes more hard then stones:
A stone is silent, and offendeth not,
And Tribunes with their tongues doome men to death.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawne?
Lu. To rescue my two brothers from their death,
For which attempt the Iudges haue pronounc'd
My everlasting doome of banishment.
Ti. O happy man, they haue befriended thee:
Why foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceiue
That Rome is but a wildernes of Tigers?
Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these deuourers to be banished?
But who comes with our brother Marcus heere?

Enter Marcus and Lauinia.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weepe,
Or if not so, thy noble heart to breake:
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.
Ti. Will it consume me? Let me see it then.
Mar This was thy daughter.
Ti. Why Marcus so she is.
Lu. Ay me this obiect kils me.
Ti. Faint-harted boy, arise and looke vpon her.
Speake Lauinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handlesse in thy Fathers sight?
What foole hath added water to the Sea?
Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
My griefe was at the height before thou camst,
And now like Nylus it disdaineth bounds:
Giue me a sword, Ile chop off my hands too,
For they haue fought for Rome, and all in vaine:
And they haue nurs'd this woe,
In feeding life:
In bootelesse prayer haue they bene held vp,
And they haue seru'd me to effectlesse vse.
Now all the seruice I require of them,
Is that the one will helpe to cut the other:
'Tis well Lauinia, that thou hast no hands,
For hands to do Rome seruice, is but vaine.
Lucl. Speake gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?
Mar. O that delightfull engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torne from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where like a sweet melodious bird it sung,
Sweet varied notes inchanting every eare.
Luci. Oh say thou for her,
Who hath done this deed?
Mar. Oh thus I found her straying in the Parke,
Seeking to hide herselfe as doth the Deare
That hath receiude some vnrecuring wound.
Ti. It was my Deare,
And he that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more, then had he kild me dead:
For now I stand as one vpon a Rocke,
Inuiron'd with a wildernesse of Sea.
Who markes the waxing tide,
Grow wave by wave,

Expecting

ling euer when ſome enuious ſurge,
n his brimiſh bowels ſwallow him.
ray to death my wretched ſonnes are gone:
ſtands my other ſonne, a baniſht man,
eere my brother weeping at my woes.
t which giues my ſoule the greateſt ſpurne,
r Lauinia, deerer then my ſoule.
but ſeene thy picture in this plight,
ld haue madded me. What ſhall I doe?
I behold thy liuely body ſo?
haſt no hands to wipe away thy teares,
ngue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
uſband he is dead, and for his death
rothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
: Marcus, ah ſonne Lucius looke on her:
I did name her brothers, then freſh teares on her cheekes, as doth the hony dew,
a gathred Lillie almoſt withered.
r. Perchance ſhe weepes becauſe they kil'd her nd,
ance becauſe ſhe knowes him innocent.
If they did kill thy huſband then be ioyfull
ſe the law hath tane reuenge on them.
, they would not doe ſo foule a deede,
s the ſorrow that their ſiſter makes.
r Lauinia let me kiſſe thy lipt,
ke ſome ſigne how I may do thee eaſe:
hy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
how and I ſit round about ſome Fountaine,
ing all downewards to behold our cheekes hey are ſtain'd in meadowes, yet not dry nuery ſhine left on them by a flood:
n the Fountaine ſhall we gaze ſo long,
e freſh taſſe be taken from that cleerenes,
nade a briue pit with our bitter teares?
ll we cut away our hands like thine?
all we bite out tongues, and in dumbe ſhewes
the remainder of our hatefull dayes?
ſhall we doe? Let vs that haue our tongues ome deuiſe of further miſeries ake vs wondred at in time to come.
. Sweet Father ceaſe your teares, for at your griefe ow my wretched ſiſter ſobs and weeps.
r. Patience deere Neece, good Titus drie thine

Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wot, apkin cannot drinke a teare of mine,
oo poore man haſt drown'd it with thine owne.
. Ah my Lauinia I will wipe thy cheekes.
Marke Marcus marke, I vnderſtand her ſignes,
he a tongue to ſpeake, now would ſhe ſay
to her brother which I ſaid to thee.
apkin with her true teares all bewet,
lo no ſeruice on her ſorrowfull cheekes.
hat a ſimpathy of woe is this!
re from helpe as Limbo is from bliſſe,

Enter Aron the Moore alone.

ore. Titus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour, thee this word, that if thou loue thy ſonnes,
Marcus, Lucius, or thy ſelfe old Titus,
y one of you, chop off your hand,
end it to the King: he for the ſame,
ſend thee hither both thy ſonnes aliue,
hat ſhall be the ranſome for their fault.

Ti. Oh gracious Emperour, oh gentle Aron,
Did euer Rauen ſing ſo like a Lacke,
That giues ſweet tydings of the Sunnes vprize?
With all my heart, I'le ſend the Emperour my hand,
Good Aron wilt thou help to chop it off?
Lu. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine,
That hath throwne downe ſo many enemies,
Shall not be ſent: my hand will ſerue the turne,
My youth can better ſpare my blood then you,
And therfore mine ſhall ſaue my brothers liues.
Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome
And rear'd aloft the bloody Battleaxe,
Writing deſtruction on the enemies Caſtle?
Oh none of both but are of high deſert:
My hand hath bin but idle, let it ſerue
To ranſome my two nephewes from their death,
Then haue I kept it to a worthy end.
Moore. Nay come agree, whoſe hand ſhall goe along
For feare they die before their pardon come.
Mar. My hand ſhall goe.
Lu. By heauen it ſhall not goe.
Ti. Sirs ſtriue no more, ſuch withered herbs as theſe
Are meete for plucking vp, and therefore mine.
Lu. Sweet Father, if I ſhall be thought thy ſonne,
Let me redeeme my brothers both from death.
Mar. And for our fathers ſake, and mothers care,
Now let me ſhew a brothers loue to thee.
Ti. Agree betweene you, I will ſpare my hand.
Lu. Then Ile goe fetch an Axe.
Mar. But I will vſe the Axe. Exeunt
Ti. Come hither Aron, Ile deceiue them both,
Lend me thy hand, and I will giue thee mine.
Moore. If that be cal'd deceit, I will be honeſt,
And neuer whil'ſt I liue deceiue men ſo:
But Ile deceiue you in another ſort,
And that you'l ſay ere halfe an houre paſſe.

He cuts off Titus hand.

Enter Lucius and Marcus againe.

Ti. Now ſtay you ſtriſe, what ſhall be, is diſpatcht:
Good Aron giue his Maieſtie my hand,
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thouſand dangers: bid him bury it:
More hath it merited: That let it haue.
As for my ſonnes, ſay I account of them,
As iewels purchaſt at an eaſie price,
And yet deere too, becauſe I bought mine owne.
Aron. I goe Andronicus, and for thy hand,
Looke by and by to haue thy ſonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane: Oh how this villany
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it.
Let fooles doe good, and faire men call for grace,
Aron will haue his ſoule blacke like his face. Exit.
Ti. O heere I lift this one hand vp to heauen,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pitties wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Doe then deare heart, for heauen ſhall heare our prayers,
Or with our ſighs weele breath the welkin dimme,
And ſtaine the Sun with fogge as ſometime cloudes,
When they do hug him in their melting boſomes.
Mar. Oh brother ſpeake with poſſibilities,
And do not breake into theſe deepe extremes.
Ti. Is not my ſorrow deepe, hauing no bottome?

Then be my passions bottomlesse with them.
Mar. But yet let reason gouerne thy lament.
Titus. If there were reason for these miseries.
Then into limits could I binde my woes:
When heauen doth weepe, doth not the earth oreflow?
If the windes rage, doth not the Sea wax mad,
Threatning the welkin with his big-swolne face?
And wilt thou haue a reason for this coile?
I am the Sea. Harke how her sighes doe flow:
Shee is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then must my Sea be moued with her sighes,
Then must my earth with her continuall teares,
Become a deluge: ouerflow'd and drown'd:
For why, my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them:
Then giue me leaue, for loosers will haue leaue,
To ease their stomackes with their bitter tongues,

Enter a messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid,
For that good hand thou sentst the Emperour:
Heere are the heads of thy two noble sonnes.
And heeres thy hand in scorne to thee sent backe:
Thy griefes, their sports: Thy resolution mockt,
That woe is me to thinke vpon thy woes,
More then remembrance of my fathers death. Exit.
Mar. Now let hot Æetna coole in Cicilie,
And be my heart an euer-burning hell:
These miseries are more then may be borne
To weepe with them that weepe, doth ease some deale,
But sorrow flouted at, is double death.
Luci. Ah that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet detested life not shrinke thereat:
That euer death should let life beare his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breath.
Mar. Alas poore hart that kisse is comfortlesse,
As frozen water to a starued snake.
Titus. When will this fearefull slumber haue an end?
Mar. Now farwell flatterie, die Andronicus,
Thou dost not slumber, see thy two sons heads,
Thy warlike hands, thy mangled daughter here:
Thy other banisht sonnes with this deere sight
Strucke pale and bloodlesse, and thy brother I,
Euen like a stony Image, cold and numme.
Ah now no more will I controule my griefes,
Rent off thy siluer haire, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth, and be this dismall sight
The closing vp of our most wretched eyes:
Now is a time to storme, why art thou still?
Titus. Ha, ha, ha,
Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this heure.
Ti. Why I haue not another teare to shed.
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would vsurpe vpon my watry eyes,
And make them blinde with tributarie teares.
Then which way shall I finde Reuenges Cave?
For these two heads doe seeme to speake to me,
And threat me, I shall neuer come to blisse,
Till all these mischiefes be returned againe,
Euen in their throats that haue committed them.
Come let me see what taske I haue to doe,
You hearse people, circle me about,
That I may turne me to each one of you,
And sweare vnto my soule to right your wrongs.
The vow is made, come Brother take a head,
And in this hand the other will I beare.
And Lauinia thou shalt be employ'd in these things:
Beare thou my hand sweet wench betweene thy teeth:
As for thee boy, goe get thee from my sight,
Thou art an Exile, and thou must not stay,
Hie to the Gothes, and raise an army there,
And if you loue me, as I thinke you doe,
Let's kisse and part, for we haue much to doe. Exeunt

Manet Lucius.

Luci. Farewell Andronicus my noble Father:
The woefull'st man that euer liu'd in Rome:
Farewell proud Rome, til Lucius come againe,
Heloues his pledges desert then his life:
Farewell Lauinia my noble sister,
O would thou were as thou to fore hast beene,
But now, not Lucius nor Lauinia liues
But in oblivion and hateful griefes:
If Lucius liue, he will requit your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine and his Empresse
Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his Queene.
Now will I to the Gothes and raise a power,
To be reueng'd on Rome and Saturnine. Exit Lucius

A Banket.
Enter Andronicus, Marcus, Lauinia, and the Boy.

An. So, so, now sit, and looke you eate no more
Then will preserue iust so much strength in vs
As will reuenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus vnknit that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy Neece and I (poore Creatures) want our hands
And cannot passionate our tenfold griefe,
With foulded Armes. This poore right hand of mine,
Is left to tirranize vppon my breast.
Who when my heart all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thumpe it downe.
Thou Map of woe, that thus dost talk in signes,
When thy poore hart beates without remorse,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still?
Wound it with sighing girle, kil it with groanes:
Or get some little knife betweene thy teeth,
And iust against thy hart make thou a hole,
That all the teares that thy poore eyes let fall
May run into that sinke, and soaking in,
Drowne the lamenting foole, in Sea salt teares.
Mar. Fy brother fy, teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands vppon her tender life.
An. How now! Has sorrow made thee dote already?
Why Marcus, no man should be mad but I:
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah wherefore dost thou vrge the name of hands,
To aid Æneas tell the tale twice ore
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O handle not the theame, to talke of hands,
Least we remember still that we haue none.
Fie, fie, how frantiquely I square my talke
As if we should forget we had no hands?
If Marcus did not name the word of hands.
Come, lets fall too, and gentle girle eate this,
Heere is no drinke? Harke Marcus what she saies,
I can interpret all her martir'd signes,
She saies, she drinkes no other drinke but teares
Breu'd with her sorrow: meth'd vppon her cheekes.
Speech.

leſſe complayne, I will learne thy thought:

ging Hermits in their holy prayers.

Good grandſire leaue theſe bitter deepe laments,
ny Aunt merry, with ſome pleaſing tale.
r. Alas, the tender boy in paſſion mou'd, eepe to ſee his grandſires heauineſſe.
Peace tender Sapling, thou art made of teares,
tres will quickly melt thy life away.
Marcus ſtrikes the diſh with a knife.
doeſt thou ſtrike at Marcus with knife.
r. At that that I haue kil'd my Lord, a Flye
Out on the murderour: thou kil'ſt my hart,

But? How: if that Flie had a father and mother?

a lamenting doings in the ayer, ith his pretty buzing melody,

eere to make vs merry,
ou haſt kil'd him.
r. Pardon me ſir,
a blacke illfaour'd Fly,
the Empreſſe Moore, therefore I kild him.
O, o, o,
rdon me for reprehending thee,
thaſt done a Charitable deed:
e thy knife, I will inſult on him,

for thy ſelfe, and thats for Tamora: Ah ſirra, inke we are not brought ſo low,
i bet weene vs, we can kill a Fly,
mes in likeneſſe of a Cole-blacke Moore.
Alas poore man, griefe ha's ſo wrought on him,
a falſe ſhadowes, for true ſubſtances.
ome, take away: Lauinia, goe with me,

Actus Quartus.

young Lucius and Lauinia running after him, and Boy flies from her with his bookes under his arme.
Enter Titus and Marcus.
Helpe Grandſire helpe, my Aunt Lauinia,
a me euery where I know not why.
'ncle Marcus ſee how ſwift ſhe comes,
ret Aunt, I know not what you meane.
Stand by me Lucius, doe not feare thy Aunt,
r. She loues thee boy too well to doe thee harme
I when my father was in Rome ſhe did.

Mar. What meanes my Neece Lauinia by theſe ſignes?
Ti. Feare not Lucius, ſome what doth ſhe meane:
See Lucius ſee, how much ſhe makes of thee:
Some whether would ſhe haue thee goe with her.
Ah boy, Cornelia neuer with more care
Read to her ſonnes, then ſhe hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour:
Canſt thou not geſſe wherefore ſhe plies thee thus?
Boy. My Lord I know not I, nor can I geſſe, Vnleſſe ſome fit or frenzie do poſſeſſe her:
For I haue heard my Grandſier ſay full oft,
Extremitie of griefes would make men mad.
And I haue read that Hecuba of Troy,
Ran mad through ſorrow, that made me to feare,
Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And would not but in fury fright my youth,
Which made me downe to throw my bookes, and flie
Cauſles perhaps, but pardon me ſweet Aunt,
And Madam, if my Vncle Marcus goe,
I will moſt willingly attend your Ladyſhip.
Mar. Lucius I will.
Ti. How now Lauinia, Marcus what meanes this?
Some booke there is that ſhe deſires to ſee,
Which is it girle of theſe? Open them boy.
But thou art deeper read and better skild,
Come and take choyſe of all my Library,
And ſo beguile thy ſorrow, till the heauens
Reueale the damn'd contriuer of this deed.
What booke?
Why lifts ſhe vp her armes in ſequence thus?
Mar. I thinke ſhe meanes that there was more then one Confederate in the fact, I more there was:
Or elſe to heauen ſhe heaues them to reuenge.
Ti. Lucius what booke is that ſhe toſſeth ſo?
Boy. Grandſier 'tis Ouids Metamorphoſis,
My mother gaue it me.
Mar. For loue of her that's gone,
Perhaps ſhe culd it from among the reſt.
Ti. Soft, ſo buſily ſhe turnes the leaues,
Helpe her, what would ſhe finde? Lauinia ſhall I read?
This is the tragicke tale of Philomel?
And treates of Tereus treaſon and his rape,
And rape I feare was roote of thine annoy.
Mar. See brother ſee, note how ſhe quotes the leaues
Ti. Lauinia, wert thou thus ſurpriz'd ſweet girle, Raui'ſht and wrong'd as Philomela was?
Forc'd in the ruthleſſe, vaſt, and gloomy woods?
See, ſee, I ſuch a place there is where we did hunt,
(O had we neuer, neuer hunted there)
Patern'd by that the Poet heere deſcribes,
By nature made for murthers and for rapes.
Mar. O why ſhould nature build ſo foule a den,
Vnleſſe the Gods delight in tragedies?
Ti. Giue ſignes ſweet girle, for heere are none but friend.
What Romaine Lord it was durſt do the deed?
Or ſlunke not Saturnine, as Tarquin erſt,
That left the Campe to ſinne in Lucrece bed.
Mar. Sit downe ſweet Neece, brother ſit downe by me,
Appello, Pallas, Ioue, or Mercury,
Inſpire me that I may this treaſon finde.
My Lord looke heere, looke heere Lauinia.

He writes his Name with his ſtaffe, and guides it with feete and mouths.

This ſandie plot is plaine, guide if thou canſt

This

This after me, I haue writ my name,
Without the helpe of any hand at all.
Curst be that hart that forc'st vs to this shift:
Write thou good Neece, and heere display at last,
What God will haue discouered for reuenge,
Heauen guide thy pen to print thy sorrowes plaine,
That we may know the Traytors and the truth.

She takes the staffe in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps and writes.

Ti. Oh doe ye read my Lord what she hath writ?
Stuprum. Chiron. Demetrius.
Mar. What, what, the lustfull sonnes of Tamora,
Performers of this hainous bloody deed?
Ti. Magni Dominator poli,
Tam lentus audis scelera, tam lentus vides?
Mar. Oh calme thee gentle Lord: Although I know
There is enough written vpon this earth,
To stirre a mutinie in the mildest thoughts,
And arme the mindes of infants to exclaimes.
My Lord kneele downe with me: Lauinia kneele,
And kneele sweet boy, the Romaine Hectors hope,
And sweare with me, as with the wofull Feere
And father of that chast dishonoured Dame,
Lord Iunius Brutus sweare for Lucrece rape,
That we will prosecute (by good aduise)
Mortall reuenge vpon these traytorous Gothes,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.
Ti. Tis sure enough, and you knew how.
But if you hunt these Beare-whelpes, then beware
The Dam will wake, and if she winde you once,
Shee's with the Lyon deepely still in league.
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her backe,
And when he sleepes will she do what she list.
You are a young huntsman Marcus, let it alone:
And come, I will goe get a leafe of brasse,
And with a Gad of steele will write these words,
And lay it by: the angry Northerne winde
Will blow these sands like Sibels leaues abroad,
And wheres your lesson then. Boy what say you?
Boy. I say my Lord, that if I were a man,
Their mothers bed-chamber should not be safe,
For these bad bond-men to the yoake of Rome.
Mar. I that's my boy, thy father hath full oft,
For his vngratefull country done the like.
Boy. And Vncle so will I, and if I liue.
Ti. Come goe with me into mine Armorie,
Lucius Ile fit thee, and withall, my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empresse sonnes,
Presents that I intend to send them both,
Come, come, thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?
Boy. I with my dagger in their bosomes Grandsire:
Ti. No boy not so, Ile teach thee another course,
Lauinia come, Marcus looke to my house,
Lucius and Ile goe braue it at the Court,
I marry will we sir, and weele be waited on. Exeunt.
Mar. O heauens! Can you heare a good man grone
And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus attend him in his extasie,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Then foe-mens markes vpon his batter'd shield,
But yet so iust, that he will not reuenge,
Reuenge the heauens for old Andronicus. Exit
Enter Aron, Chiron and Demetrius at one dore: and at another dore young Lucius and another, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ vpon them.

Chi. Demetrius heeres the sonne of Lucius,
He hath some message to deliuer vs.
Aron. I some mad message from his mad Grandfathe
Boy. My Lords, with all the humblenesse I may,
I greete your honours from Andronicus,
And pray the Romane Gods confound you both.
Deme. Gramercie louely Lucius, what's the newes?
For villanie's markt with rape. May it please you,
My Grandsire well aduis'd hath sent by me,
The goodliest weapons of his Armorie,
To gratifie your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome, for so he bad me say:
And so I do and with his gifts present
Your Lordships, when euer you haue need,
You may be armed and appointed well,
And so I leaue you both: like bloody villaines. Ex
Deme. What's heere? a scrole, & written round abou
Let's see.
Integer vitae scelerisque purus, non egit mauri iaculis nec arcu.
Chi. O 'tis a verse in Horace, I know it well.
I read it in the Grammer long agoe.
Moore. I iust, a verse in Horace: right, you haue it,
Now what a thing it is to be an Asse?
Heer's no sound iest, the old man hath found their guilt,
And sends the weapons wrapt about with lines,
That wound (beyond their feeling) to the quick:
But were our witty Empresse well a foot,
She would applaud Andronicus conceit:
But let her rest, in her vnrest a while.
And now young Lords, wa's not a happy starre
Led vs to Rome strangers, and more then so:
Captiues, to be aduanced to this height?
It did me good before the Pallace gate,
To braue the Tribune in his brothers hearing.
Deme. But me more good, to see so great a Lord
Basely insinuate, and send vs gifts.
Moore. Had he not reason Lord Demetrius?
Did you not vse his daughter very friendly?
Deme. I would we had a thousand Romane Dames
At such a bay, by turne to serue our lust.
Chi. A charitable wish, and full of loue.
Moore. Heere lack's but you mother for to say, Am

Enter Nurse with a blackamoore childe.
Nur. Good morrow Lords:
O tell me, did you see Aaron the Moore?
Aron. Well, more or lesse, or nere a whit at all,
Heere Aaron is, and what with Aaron now?
Nurse. Oh gentle Aaron, we are all vndone,
Now helpe, or woe betide thee euermore.
Aron. Why, what a catterwalling dost thou keepe?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine armes?
Nurse. O that which I would hide from heauens eye,
Our Empresse shame, and stately Romes disgrace,
She is deliuered Lords, she is deliuered.
Aron. To whom?
Nurse. I meane she is brought a bed?
Aron. Wel God giue her good rest,

Aron. Why so braue Lords, when we ioyne in league
I am a Lambe: but if you braue the Moore,
The chafed Bore, the mountaine Lyonesse,
The Ocean swells not so as Aaron stormes:
But say againe,how many saw the childe?

And none else but the deliuered Empresse.

Aron. The Empresse,the Midwife,and your selfe,

Wherefore did'st thou this?

Aron. O Lord sir, 'tis a deed of pollicie?
Shall she liue to betray this guilt of our's:
A long tongu'd babling Gossip? No Lords no.
And now be it knowne to you my full intent.
Not farre, one Muliteus my Country-man
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed,
His childe is like to her,faire as you are:
Goe packe with him, and giue the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all,
And how by this their Childe shall be aduaunc'd,
And be receiued for the Emperours heyre,
And substituted in the place of mine,
To calme this tempest whirling in the Court,
And let the Emperour dandle him for his owne.
Harke ye Lords, ye see I haue giuen her physicke,
And you must needs bestow her funerall,
The fields are neere,and you are gallant Groomes:
This done, see that you take no longer daies
But send the Midwife presently to me.
The Midwife and the Nurse well made away,
Then let the Ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron I see thou wilt not trust the ayre with secrets.

Deme. For this care of Tamora,
Her selfe,and hers are highly bound to thee. Exeunt.

Aron. Now to the Gothes, as swift as Swallow flies,
There to dispose this treasure in mine armes,
And secretly to greete the Empresse friends:
Come on you thick-lipt-slaue, Ile beare you hence,
For it is you that puts vs to our shifts:
Ile make you feed on berries,and on rootes,
And feed on curds and whay,and sucke the Goate,
And cabbin in a Caue, and bring you vp
To be a warriour, and command a Campe. Exit

Enter Titus, old Marcus, young Lucius, and other gentlemen with bowes, and Titus beares the arrowes with Letters on the end of them.

Tit. Come Marcus,come,kinsmen this is the way.
Sir Boy let me see your Archerie,
Looke yee draw home enough,and 'tis there straight:
Terras Astrea reliquit,be you remembred Marcus.
She's gone,she's fled,sirs take you to your tooles,
You Cosens shall goe sound the Ocean:
And cast your nets,haply you may find her in the Sea,
Yet ther's as little iustice as at Land:
No Publius and Sempronius,you must doe it,

Tis

'Tis you must dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmoſt Center of the earth:
Then when you come to Pluto's Region,
I pray you deliuer him this petition,
Tell him it is for iuſtice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with ſorrowes in vngratefull Rome.
Ah Rome! Well, well, I made thee miſerable,
What time I threw the peoples ſuffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leaue you not a man of warre vnſearcht,
This wicked Emperour may haue ſhips her hence,
And kinſmen then we may goe pipe for iuſtice.

Marc. O Publius is not this a heauie caſe
To ſee thy Noble Vncle thus diſtract?

Publ. Therefore my Lords it highly vs concernes,
By day and night t'attend him carefully:
And feede his humour kindely as we may,
Till time beget ſome carefull remedie.

Marc. Kinſmen, his ſorrowes are paſt remedie.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with reuengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius how now? how now my Maiſters?
What haue you met with her?

Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto ſends you word,
If you will haue reuenge from hell you ſhall,
Marrie for iuſtice ſhe is ſo imploy'd,
He thinkes with Ioue in heauen, or ſome where elſe:
So that perforce you muſt needs ſtay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delayes,
Ile diue into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Acaron by the heeles.
Marcus we are but ſhrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops ſize,
But metrall Marcus ſteele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare:
And ſith there's no iuſtice in earth nor hell,
We will ſollicite heauen, and moue the Gods
To ſend downe Iuſtice for to wreake our wongs:
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He gaues them the Arrowes.

Ad Iouem, that's for you: here ad Appollonem,
Ad Martem, that's for my ſelfe,
Heere Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercury,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You were as good to ſhoote againſt the winde.
To it Boy, Marcus looſe when I bid:
Of my word, I haue written to effect,
There's not a God left vnſollicited.

Marc. Kinſmen, ſhoot all your ſhafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.

Tit. Now Maiſters draw, Oh well ſaid Lucius:
Good Boy in Virgoes lap, giue it Pallas.

Marc. My Lord, I aime a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what haſt thou done?
See, ſee, thou haſt ſhot off one of Taurus hornes.

Mar. This was the ſport my Lord, when Publius ſhot,
The Bull being gal'd, gaue Aries ſuch a knocke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who ſhould finde them but the Empreſſe villaine:
She laught, and told the Moore he ſhould not chooſe
But giue them to his Maiſter for a preſent.

Tit. Why there it goes, God giue your Lordſhip ioy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons in it.

Tit. Newes, newes from heauen,
Marcus the poſt is come.
Sirrah, what tydings? haue you any letters?
Shall I haue Iuſtice, what ſayes Iupiter?

Clowne. Ho the Iibbetmaker, he ſayes that he hath keen them downe againe, for the man muſt not be hang till the next weeke.

Tit. But what ſayes Iupiter I aske thee?

Clowne. Alas ſir I know not Iupiter:
I neuer dranke with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?

Clowne. I of my Pigions ſir, nothing elſe.

Tit. Why, did'ſt thou not come from heauen?

Clowne. From heauen? Alas ſir, I neuer came there, God forbid I ſhould be ſo bold, to preſſe to heauen in young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to Tribunall Plebs, to take vp a matter of brawle, betw
my Vncle, and one of the Emperialls men.

Mar. Why ſir, that is as fit as can be to ſerue for Oration, and let him deliuer the Pigions to the Empe from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliuer an Oration to the E perour with a Grace?

Clowne. Nay truely ſir, I could neuer ſay grace in my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,
But giue your Pigeons to the Emperour,
By me thou ſhalt haue Iuſtice at his hands.
Hold, hold, meane while her's money for thy charges.
Giue me pen and inke.
Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliuer a Supplication?

Clowne. I ſir.

Tit. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the firſt approach you muſt kneel then kiſſe his ſcoote, then deliuer vp your Pigeons, a then looke for your reward. Be at hand ſir, for you it brauely.

Clowne. I warrant you ſir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirrha haſt thou a knife? Come let me ſee it.
Heere Marcus, fold it in the Oration,
For thou haſt made it like an humble Suppliant:
And when thou haſt giuen it the Emperour,
Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he ſayes.

Clowne. God be with you ſir, I will. Ex

Tit. Come Marcus let vs goe, Publius follow me.

Exeunt

Enter Emperour and Empreſſe, and her two ſonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrowes in his hand that Titus ſhot at them.

Saur. Why Lords,
What wrongs are theſe? was euer ſeene
An Emperour in Rome thus ouerborne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of egall iuſtice, vſ'd in ſuch contempt?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods,
(How euer theſe diſturbers of our peace
But in the peoples eares) there nought hath paſt,
But euen with law againſt the wilfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His ſorrowes haue ſo ouerwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzie, and his bitternes?
And now he writes to heauen for his reuenge.
See, heere's to Iue, and this to Mercury,

T

gracious Lord, my louely Saturnine,
Commander of my thoughts,

Enter Clowne.
d fellow, would'ſt thou ſpeake with vs?
orſooth, and your Miſterſhip be Emperiall.
reſſe I am, but yonder ſits the Emperour.
God & Saint Stephen giue you good den;
you a Letter, & a couple of Pigions heere.
He reads the Letter.
take him away, and hang him preſently.
ow much money muſt I haue?

pighfull and intollerable wrongs,
this monſtrous villany?
whence this ſame deuiſe proceedes:

he villaine hither by the haire,
Honour, ſhall ſhape priuiledge:
mocke, Ile be thy ſlaughter man:
wretch, that holp'ſt to make me great,
ife ſhould gouerne Rome and me.
Enter Nuntius Emilius.
at newes with thee Emilius?
ue my Lords, Rome neuer had more cauſe, aue gather'd head, and with a power ed men, bent to the ſpoyle arch amaine, vnder conduct me to old Andronicus:
in courſe of this reuenge to do
er Coriolanus did.
arlike Lucius Generall of the Gothes?
nip me, and I hang the head
th froſt, or graſſe beat downe with ſtormes:
our ſorrowes to approach,
mmon people loue ſo much,
often heard them ſay, walked like a priuate man)
niſhment was wrongfully,
e wiſht that Lucius were their Emperour.
y ſhould you feare? Is not our City ſtrong?
King. I, but the Citizens fauour Lucius,
And will reuolt from me, to ſuccour him.
Tam. King, be thy thoughts Imperious like thy name.
Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats do flie in it?
The Eagle ſuffers little Birds to ſing,
And is not careſull what they meane thereby,
Knowing that with the ſhadow of his wings,
He can at pleaſure ſtint their melodie.
Euen ſo mayeſt thou, the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheare thy ſpirit, for know thou Emperour,
I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,
With words more ſweet, and yet more dangerous
Then baites to fiſh, or hony ſtalkes to ſheepe,
When as the one is wounded with the baite,
The other rotted with delicious foode.
King. But he will not entreat his Sonne for vs.
Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will,
For I can ſmooth and fill his aged eare,
With golden promiſes, that were his heart
Almoſt Impregnable, his old eares deafe,
Yet ſhould both eare and heart obey my tongue.
Goe thou before to our Embaſſadour,
Say, that the Emperour requeſts a parly
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.
King. Emilius do this meſſage Honourably,
And if he ſtand in Hoſtage for his ſafety,
Bid him demaund what pledge will pleaſe him beſt.
Emil. Your bidding ſhall I do effectually. Exit.
Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the Art I haue,
To pluckе proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes.
And now ſweet Emperour be blithe againe,
And bury all thy feare in my deuiſes.
Satu. Then goe ſucceſſantly and plead for him. Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Flouriſh. Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes, with Drum and Soulders.

Luci. Approued warriours, and my faithfull Friends,
I haue receiued Letters from great Rome,
Which ſignifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how deſirous of our ſight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witneſſe,
Impetious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any ſcathe,
Let him make treble ſatiſfaction.
Goth. Braue ſlip, ſprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whoſe name was once our terrour, now our comfort,
Whoſe high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requites with foule contempt:
Behold in vs, weele follow where thou lead'ſt,
Like ſtinging Bees in hotteſt Summers day,
Led by their Maiſter to the flowred fields,
And be aueng'd on curſed Tamora:
And as he ſaith, ſo ſay we all with him.
Luci. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all.
But who comes heere, led by a luſty Goth?
Enter a Goth leading of Aaron with his child in his armes.
Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troups I ſtraid,
To gaze vpon a ruinous Monaſterie,

And

And as I earnestly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the wasted building, suddainely
I heard a childe cry vnderneath a wall:
I made vnto the noyse, when soone I heard,
The crying babe controul'd with this discourse:
Peace Tawny slaue, halfe Moore, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke,
Villaine thou might'st haue bene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milk-white,
They neuer do beget a cole-blacke-Calfe:
Peace, villaine peace, euen thus he rates the babe,
For I must beare thee to a trusty Goth,
Who when he knowes thou art the Empresse babe,
Will hold thee dearely for thy Mothers sake.
With this, my weapon drawne I rusht vpon him,
Surpriz'd him suddainely, and brought him hither
To vse, as you thinke needefull of the man.

Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate deuill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Empresse eye,
And heere's the Base Fruit of his burning lust.
Say wall-ey'd slaue, whether would'st thou conuay
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speake? what deafe? Not a word?
A halter Souldiers, hang him on this Tree,
And by his side his Fruite of Bastardie.

Aron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood.

Luci. Too like the Syre for euer being good.
First hang the Child that he may see it sprall,
A sight to vexe the Fathers soule withall.

Aron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, saue the Childe,
And beare it from me to the Empresse:
If thou do this, Ile shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may aduantage thee to heare;
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
Ile speake no more: but vengeance rot you all.

Luci. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall liue, and I will see it Nourisht.

Aron. And if it please thee? why assure thee Lucius,
'Twill vexe thy soule to heare what I shall speake.
For I must talke of Murthers, Rapes, and Massacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abhominable Deeds,
Complots of Mischiefe, Treason, Villanies
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiously preform'd,
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Vnlesse thou sweare to me my Childe shall liue.

Luci. Tell on thy minde,
I say thy Childe shall liue.

Aron. Sweare that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luci. Who should I sweare by,
Thou beleeu'st no God,
That gauntred, how can'st thou beleeue an oath?

Aron. What if I do not, as indeed I do not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called Conscience,
With twenty Popish trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I haue seene thee carefull to obserue:
Therefore I vrge thy oath, for that I know
An Ideot holds his Bauble for a God,
And keepes the oath which by that God he sweares,
To that Ile vrge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same God, what God so ere it be
That thou adorest, and hast in reuerence,
To saue my Boy, to nourish and bring him vp,
Ore else I will discouer nought to thee.

Luci. Euen by my God I sweare to thee I will.

Aron. First know thou,
I be got him on the Empresse.

Luci. Oh most Insatiate luxurious woman!

Aron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charitie.
To that which thou shalt heare of me anon,
'Twas her two Sonnes that murdered Bassianus,
They cut thy Sisters tongue, and ranisht her,
And cut her hands off, and trim'd her as thou saw'st.

Luci. Oh detestable villaine!
Call'st thou that Trimming?

Aron. Why she was washt, and cut, and trim'd,
And 'twas trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luci. Oh barbarous beastly villaines like thy selfe!

Aron. Indeede, I was their Tutor to instruct them.
That Coding spirit had they from their Mother,
As sure a Card as euer wonne the Set.
That bloody minde I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as euer fought at head.
Well, let my Deeds be witnesse of my worth.
I traynd thy Brethren to that gulfefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mentioned,
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of Mischiefe in it.
I play'd the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my selfe apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreame laughter.
I pried me through the Creuice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes heads,
Beheld his teares, and laught so hartily,
That both mine eyes were rainie like to his:
And when I told the Empresse of this sport,
She sounded almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tydings, gaue me twenty kisses.

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and neuer blush?

Aron. I, like a blacke Dogge, as the saying is.

Luci. Art thou not sorry for these hainous deeds?

Aron. I, that I had not done a thousand more.
Euen now I curse the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within few compasse of my curse,
Wherein I did not some Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or else deuise his death,
Rauish a Maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some Innocent, and forswear my selfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cattell breake their necks,
Set fire on Barnes and Hay stackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with the teares
Oft haue I digd vp dead men from their graues,
And set them vpright at their deere Friends doore,
Euen when their sorrowes almost was forgot,
And on their skinnes, as on the Barke of Trees,
Haue with my knife carued in Romaine Letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I haue done a thousand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a Fly,
And nothing greeues me heartily indeede,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luci. Bring downe the diuell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aron. If there be diuels, would I were a diuell,
To liue and burne in euerlasting fire,
So I might haue your company in hell,

Luci.

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.
Luci. Sirs ſtop his mouth, & let him ſpeake no more.
Enter Emilius.
Goth. My Lord, there is a Meſſenger from Rome
Deſires to be admitted to your preſence.
Luc. Let him come neere.
Welcome Emilius, what the newes from Rome?
Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romaine Emperour greetes you all by me,
And for he vnderſtands you are in Armes,
He craues a parly at your Fathers houſe
Willing you to demand your Hoſtages,
And they ſhall be immediately deliuered.
Goth. What ſaies our Generall?
Luc. Emilius, let the Emperour giue his pledges
Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcus, Flourſh.
And we will come: march away. Exeunt.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes diſguiſed.

Tam. Thus in this ſtrange and ſad Habilliament,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And ſay, I am Reuenge ſent from below,
To ioyne with him and right his hainous wrongs:
Knocke at his ſtudy where they ſay he keepes,
To ruminate ſtrange plots of dire Reuenge,
Tell him Reuenge is come to ioyne with him,
And worke confuſion on his Enemies.
They knocke and Titus opens his ſtudy dore.
Tit. Who doth moleſt my Contemplation?
Is it your tricke to make me ope the dore,
That ſo my ſad decrees may flie away,
And all my ſtudie be to no effect?
You are deceiu'd, for what I meane to do,
See heere in bloody lines I haue ſet downe:
And what is written ſhall be executed.
Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee.
Tit. No not a word: how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to giue it action,
Thou haſt the odds of me, therefore no more.
Tam. If thou did'ſt know me,
Thou would'ſt talke with me.
Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough,
Witneſſe this wretched ſtumpe,
Witneſſe theſe crimſon lines,
Witneſſe theſe Trenches made by griefe and care,
Witneſſe the tyring day, and heauie night,
Witneſſe all ſorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud Empreſſe, Mighty Tamora:
Is not thy comming for my other hand?
Tamo. Know thou ſad man, I am not Tamora,
She is thy Enemie, and I thy Friend,
I am Reuenge ſent from th'infernall Kingdome,
To eaſe the gnawing Vulture of the mind,
By working wreakefull vengeance on my Foes:
Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light,
Conferre with me of Murder and of Death,
There's not a hollow Caue or lurking place,
No Vaſt obſcurity, or Miſty vale,
Where bloody Murther or deteſted Rape,
Can couch for feare, but I will finde them out,
And in their eares tell them my dreadfull name,
Reuenge, which makes the foule offenders quake
Tit. Art thou Reuenge? and art thou ſent to me,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?
Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.
Tit. Do me ſome ſeruice ere I come to thee:
Loe by thy ſide where Rape and Murder ſtands,
Now giue ſome ſurance that thou art Reuenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes.
Prouide thee two proper Palfries, as blacke as Iet.
To hale thy vengefull Waggon ſwift away,
And finde out Murder in their guilty cares.
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will diſmount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Seruile footeman all day long,
Euen from Eptons riſing in the Eaſt,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea.
And day by day Ile do this heauy taske,
So thou deſtroy Rapine and Murder there.
Tam. Theſe are my Miniſters, and come with me.
Tit. Are them thy Miniſters, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rape and Murder, therefore called ſo,
Cauſe they take vengeance of ſuch kind of men.
Tit. Good Lord how like the Empreſſe Sons they are
And you the Empreſſe: But we worldly men,
Haue miſerable mad miſtaking eyes:
Oh ſweet Reuenge, now do I come to thee,
And if one armes imbracement will content thee,
I will imbrace thee: lie by and by.
Tam. This cloſing with him, fits his Lunacie,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-ſicke fits,
Do you vphold, and maintaine in your ſpeeches,
For now he firmely takes me for Reuenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him ſend for Lucius his Sonne,
And whil'ſt I at a Banquet hold him ſure,
Ile find ſome cunning practiſe out of hand
To ſcatter and diſperſe the giddie Gothes,
Or at the leaſt make them his Enemies:
See here he comes, and I muſt play my theame.
Tit. Long haue I bene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull houſe,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Empreſſe and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you ſuch a deuill?
For well I wote the Empreſſe neuer wags,
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you repreſent our Queene aright
It were conuenient you had ſuch a deuill:
But welcome as you are, what ſhall we doe?
Tam. What would'ſt thou haue vs doe Andronicus?
Dem. Shew me a Murtherer, Ile deale with him.
Chi. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape,
And I am ſent to be reueng'd on him.
Tam. Shew me a thouſand that haue done thee wrong,
And Ile be reuenged on them all.
Tit. Looke round about the wicked ſtreets of Rome,
And when thou find'ſt a man that's like thy ſelfe,
Good Murder ſtab him, hee's a Murtherer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To finde another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine ſtab him, he is a Raviſher.
Go thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maiſt thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For vp and downe ſhe doth reſemble thee.
I pray thee doe on them ſome violent death,
They haue bene violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well haſt thou leſſon'd vs, this ſhall we do.
But would it pleaſe thee good Andronicus,
To ſend for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leades towards Rome a Band of warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy houſe.
When he is heere, euen at thy Solemne Feaſt,
I will bring in the Empreſſe and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himſelfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy ſhall they ſtoop, and kneele,
And on them ſhalt thou eaſe, thy angry heart:
What ſaies Andronicus to this deuiſe?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my Brother, 'tis ſad Titus calls,
Go gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou ſhalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the cheifeſt Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empreſſe too,
Feaſts at my houſe, and he ſhall Feaſt with them,
This do thou for my loue, and ſo let him,
As he regards his aged Fathers life.
Mar. This will I do, and ſoone returne againe.
Tam. Now will I hence about thy buſineſſe,
And take my Miniſters along with me.
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder ſtay with me,
Or els Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleaue to no reuenge but Lucius.
Tam. What ſay you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour,
How I haue gouern'd our determined ieſt?
Yeeld to his Humour, ſmooth and ſpeake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.
Tit. I know them all, though they ſuppoſe me mad,
And will ore-reach them in their owne deuiſes,
A payre of curſed hell-hounds and their Dam.
Dem. Madam depart at pleaſure, leaue vs heere.
Tam. Farewell Andronicus, reuenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.
Tit. I know thou doo'ſt, and ſweet reuenge farewell.
Chi. Tell vs old man, how ſhall we be imploy'd?
Tit. Tut, I haue worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Caius and Valentine.
Pub. What is your will?
Tit. Know you theſe two?
Pub. The Empreſſe Sonnes
I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.
Tit. Fie Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,
The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,
And therefore bind them gentle Publius,
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,
Oft haue you heard me wiſh for ſuch an houre,
And now I find it, therefore binde them ſure,
Chi. Villaines forbeare, we are the Empreſſe Sonnes.
Pub. And therefore do we, what we are commanded.
Stop cloſe their mouthes, let them not ſpeake a word,
Is he ſure bound, looke that you binde them faſt. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lauinia with a Baſon.

Tit. Come, come Lauinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs ſtop their mouthes, let them not ſpeake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I vtter.
Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here ſtands the ſpring whom you haue ſtain'd with mud,
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt,
You kil'd her husband, and for that vil'd faulc,
Two of her Brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry ieſt,
Both her ſweet Hands, her Tongue, and that more dear
Then Hands or tongue, her ſpotleſſe Chaſtity,
Inhumaine Traytors, you conſtrain'd and forc'd.
What would you ſay, if I ſhould let you ſpeake?
Villaines for ſhame you could not beg for grace.
Harke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet is left, to cut your throats,
Whil'ſt that Lauinia tweene her ſtumps doth hold:
The Baſon that receiues your guilty blood.
You know your Mother meanes to feaſt with me,
And calls herſelfe Reuenge, and thinkes me mad.
Harke Villaines, I will grin'd your bones to duſt,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paſte,
And of the Paſte a Coffin I will reare,
And make two Paſties of your ſhamefull Heads,
And bid that ſtrumpet your vnhallowed Dam,
Like to the earth ſwallow her increaſe.
This is the Feaſt, that I haue bid her to,
And this the Banquet ſhe ſhall ſurfet on,
For worſe then Philomel you vſ'd my Daughter,
And worſe then Progne, I will be reueng'd,
And now prepare your throats: Lauinia come.
Receiue the blood, and when that they are dead,
Let me goe grin'd their Bones to powder ſmall,
And with this hateſull Liquor temper it,
And in that Paſte let their vil'd Heads be bake,
Come, come, be euery one officious,
To make this Banket, which I wiſh might proue,
More ſterne and bloody then the Centaures Feaſt.
He cuts their throats.
So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And ſee them ready, gainſt their Mother comes. Exeunt.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vncle Marcus, ſince 'tis my Fathers mind
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
Goth. And ours with thine befall, what Fortune will.
Luc. Good Vncle take you in this barbarous Moore,
This Ranenous Tiger, this accurſed deuill,
Let him receiue no ſuſtenance, ſetter him,
Till he be brought vnto the Emperous face,
For teſtimony of her foule proceedings.
And ſee the Ambuſh of our Friends be ſtrong,
I feare the Emperour meanes no good to vs.
Aron. Some deuill whiſper curſes in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may vtter forth
The Venemous Mallice of my ſwelling heart.
Luc. Away Inhumaine Dogge, Vnhallowed Slaue.
Sirs, helpe our Vncle, to conuey him in. Flouriſh.
The Trumpets ſhew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour and Empreſſe, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firmament more Suns then one?
Luc. What boote is there to call thy ſelfe a Sunne?
Mar. Romes Emperour & Nephew breake the parle,
Theſe quarrels muſt be quietly debated,
The Feaſt is ready which the careful Titus,

Hath

ied to an Honourable end, or Loue, for League, and good to Rome:
herfore draw nie and take your places.
Marcus we will. Hoboyes.

A Table brought in.

ter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on ble, and Lauinia with a vaile ouer her face.

Welcome my gracious Lord,
Dread Queene,
e Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
ne all although the cheere be poore,
our stomacks, please you eat of it.
y art thou thus attir'd Andronicus?
ause I would be sure to haue all well,
ne your Highneſſe, and your Empreſſe.
'e are beholding to you good Andronicus?
d if your Highneſſe knew my heart, you were:
e Emperour reſolue me this,
done of rath Virginius,
daughter with his owne right hand,
was enfor'st, stain'd, and deflowr'd?
t was Andronicus.
ar reaſon, Mighty Lord?
cauſe the Girle, ſhould not ſuruiue her ſhame,
preſence ſtill renew his ſorrowes.
reaſon mighty, ſtrong, and effectuall,
preſident, and liuely warrant,
ſt wretched) to performe the like:
mitia, and thy ſhame with thee,
hy ſhame, thy Fathers ſorrow die.
He kils her.
hat haſt done, vnnaturall and vnkinde?
d her for whom my teares haue made me blind.
full as Virginius was,
a thouſand times more cauſe then he.
hat was ſhe raviſht? tell who did the deed,
ſilt pleaſe you eat,
e your Highneſſe feed?
Why haſt thou ſlaine thine onely Daughter?
Not I, 'twas Chiron and Demetrius,
ht her, and cut away her tongue,
'twas they, that did her all this wrong.
Go fetch them hither to vs preſently.
hy there they are both, baked in that Pie,
their Mother daintily hath feſt, fleſh that ſhe herſelfe hath bred.
'tis true, witneſſe my knives ſharpe point.
He ſtabs the Empreſſe.
Die franticke wretch, for this accurſed deed.
Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed?
eede for meede, death for a deadly deed
You ſad fac'd men, people and Sonnes of Rome,
s ſeuer'd like a flight of Fowle,
y windes and high tempeſtuous guſts a teach you how, to knit againe ired Corne, into one mutuall ſheafe, oken limbs againe into one body.
Let Rome herſelfe be bane vnto herſelfe,
whom mightie kingdomes curſie too,
lome and deſperate caſtaway,
nefull execution on her ſelfe.
froſtie ſignes and chaps of age,
tneſſes of true experience,
nduce you to attend my words,
omes deere friend, as 'erſt our Auncеſtor,
When with his ſolemne tongue he did diſcourſe
To loue-ſicke Didoes ſad attending eare,
The ſtory of that balefull burning night,
When ſubtil Greekes ſurpriz'd King Priams Troy:
Tell vs what Sinon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That glues our Troy, our Rome the ciuill wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor ſteele,
Nor can I vtter all our bitter griefe,
But floods of teares will drowne my Oratorie,
And breake my very vtterance, euen in the time
When it ſhould moue you to attend me moſt,
Lending your kind hand Commiſeration.
Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale,
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him ſpeake.
Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,
That curſed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdred our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that raviſhed our Siſter,
For their fell faults our Brothers were beheaded,
Our Fathers teares deſpiſ'd, and baſely couſen'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And ſent her enemies vnto the graue.
Laſtly, my ſelfe vnkindly baniſhed,
The gates ſhut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drown'd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to imbrace me as a Friend:
And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That haue preſerv'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her boſome took e the Enemies point,
Sheathing the ſteele in my aduentrous body.
Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My ſcars can witneſſe, dumbe although they are,
That my report is iuſt and full of truth:
But ſoft, me thinkes I do digreſſe too much,
Cyting my worthleſſe praiſe. Oh pardon me,
For when no Friends are by, men praiſe themſelues.
Marc. Now is my turne to ſpeake. Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamora deliuered,
The iſſue of an Irreligious Moore,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of theſe woes,
The Villaine is aliue in Titus houſe,
And as he is, to witneſſe this is true.
Now iudge what courſe had Titus to reuenge
Theſe wrongs, vnſpeakeable paſt patience,
Or more then any liuing man could beare.
Now you haue heard the truth, what ſay you Romaines?
Haue we done ought amiſſe? ſhew vs wherein,
And from the place where you behold vs now,
The poore remainder of Andronici,
Will hand in hand all headlong caſt vs downe,
And on the ragged ſtones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall cloſure of our houſe:
Speake Romaines ſpeake, and if you ſay we ſhall,
Lo hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.
Emilius. Come come, thou reuerent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour: for well I know,
The common voyce do cry it ſhall be ſo.
Mar. Lucius, all haile Romes Royall Emperour,
Goe, goe into old Titus ſorrowfull houſe,
And hither hale that misbelieuing Moore,
To be adiudg'd ſome direfull ſlaughtering deſth,
As puniſhment for his moſt wicked life.
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Gouernour.

Luc. Thankes gentle Romanes, may I gouerne so,
To heale Romes harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, giue me ayme a-while,
For Nature puts me to a heauy taske:
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To shed obsequious teares vpon this Trunke:
Oh take this warme kisse on thy pale cold lips,
These sorrowfull drops vpon thy bloud-staine face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.

Mar. Teare for teare, and louing kisse for kisse,
Thy Brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips:
O were the summe of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinit, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of vs
To melt in showres: thy Grandsire lou'd thee well:
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee:
Sung thee asleepe, his Louing Breast, thy Pillow
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancie
In that respect then, like a louing Childe,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender Spring,
Because kinde Nature doth require it so:
Friends, should associate Friends, in Greefe and Woe.
Bid him farwell, commit him to the Graue,
Do him that kindnesse, and take leaue of him.

Boy. O Grandsire, Grandsire: euen with all my heart
Would I were Dead, so you did Liue againe.
O Lord, I cannot speake to him for weeping,
My teares will choake me, if I ope my mouth.

Romans. You sad Andronici, haue done with woes,
Giue sentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath beene breeder of these dire euents
Luc. Set him breast deepe in earth, and famish him:
There let him stand, and raue, and cry for foode:
If any one relieues, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome:
Some stay, to see him fast'ned in the earth.

Aron. O why should wrath be mute, & Fury dumbe?
I am no Baby I, that with base Prayers
I should repent the Euils I haue done.
Ten thousand worse, then euer yet I did,
Would I performe if I might haue my will:
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very Soule.

Lucius. Some louing Friends conuey the Emperour,
And giue him burriall in his Fathers graue,
My Father, and Lauinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our Houshold's Monument:
As for that heynous Tyger Tamora,
No Funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds;
No mournfull Bell shall ring her Burriall:
But throw her foorth to Beasts and Birds of pray:
Her life was Beast-like, and deuoid of pitty,
And being so, shall haue like want of pitty.
See Iustice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
From whom, our heauy happes had their beginning:
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Euents, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

Samp. I mean, if we be in choller, wee'l draw.

Greg. I, While you live, draw your neck out o'th Collar.

Samp. I strike quickly, being mov'd.

Greg. But thou art not quickly mov'd to strike.

Samp. A dog of the house of Mountague, moues me.

Greg. To moue, is to stir: and to be valiant, is to stand: Therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou runst away.

Samp. A dogge of that house shall moue me to stand. I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Mountagues.

Greg. That shewes thee a weake slaue, for the weakest goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Vessels, are euer thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Mountagues men from the wall, and thrust his Maides to the wall. (their men.

Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Masters, and vs

Samp. 'Tis all one, I will shew my selfe a tyrant: when I haue fought with the men, I will bee ciuill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids?

Samp. I, the heads of the Maids, or their Maiden-heads, Take it in what sence thou wilt.

Greg. They must take it sence, that feele it.

Samp. Me they shall feele while I am able to stand: And 'tis knowne I am a pretty peece of flesh.

Greg. 'Tis well thou art not Fish: If thou had'st, thou had'st beene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the House of the Mountagues.

Sam. Feare me not.

Gre. No marry: I feare thee.

Sam. Let vs take the Law of our sides: let them begin.

Gr. I wil frown as I passe by, & let thē take it as they list

Sam. Nay, as they dare. I wil bite my Thumb at them, which is a disgrace to them, if they beare it.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs sir?

Samp. I do bite my Thumbe, sir.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumb at vs, sir?

Sam. Is the Law of our side, if I say I? Gre. No.

Sam. No sir, I do not bite my Thumbe at you sir: but I bite my Thumbe sir.

Greg. Do you quarrell sir?

Abra. Quarrell sir? no sir. (as you

Sam. If you do sir, I am for you, I serue as good a man

Abra. No better? Samp. Well sir.

Enter Benuolio.

Gr. Say better: here comes one of my masters kins men.

Samp. Yes, better.

Abra. You Lye.

Samp. Draw if you be men. Gregory, remember thy washing blow. They Fight.

Ben. Part Fooles, put vp your Swords, you know not what you do.

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What art thou drawne, among these heartlesse Hindes? Turne thee Benuolio, looke vpon thy death.

Ben. I do but keepe the peace, put vp thy Sword, Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word As I hate hell, all Mountagues, and thee: Haue at thee Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Off. Clubs, Bils, and Partisons, strike, beat them down Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Mountagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gowne, and his wife.

Cap. What noise is this? Giue me my long Sword ho.

Wife. A crutch, a crutch: why call you for a Sword?

Cap. My Sword I say: Old Mountague is come, And flourishes his Blade in spight of me.

Enter old Mountague, & his wife.

Moun. Thou villaine Capulet. Hold me not, let me go

a. Wife. Thou shalt not stir a foote to seeke a Foe.

Enter Prince Eskales, with his Traine.

Prince. Rebellious Subiects, Enemies to peace, Prophaners of this Neighbor-stained Steele, Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beasts, That quench the fire of your pernitious Rage, With purple Fountaines issuing from your Veines: On paine of Torture, from those bloody hands Throw your mistemper'd Weapons to the ground, And heare the Sentence of your moued Prince. Three ciuill Brawles, bred of an Ayery word, By thee old Capulet and Mountague, Haue thrice disturb'd the quiet of our Streets, And made Verona's ancient Citizens Cast by their Graue beseeming Ornaments, To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

Tis you must dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmoſt Center of the earth:
Then when you come to Plutoes Region,
I pray you deliuer him this petition,
Tell him it is for iuſtice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with ſorrowes in vngratefull Rome.
Ah Rome! Well, well, I made thee miſerable,
What time I threw the peoples ſuffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leaue you not a man of warre vnſearcht,
This wicked Emperour may haue ſhipt her hence,
And kinſmen then we may goe pipe for iuſtice.

Marc. O Publius is not this a heauie caſe
To ſee thy Noble Vncle thus diſtract?

Publ. Therefore my Lords it highly vs concernes,
By day and night t'attend him carefully:
And feede his humour kindely as we may,
Till time beget ſome carefull remedie.

Marc. Kinſmen, his ſorrowes are paſt remedie.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with reuengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius how now? how now my Maiſters?
What haue you met with her?

Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto ſends you word,
If you will haue reuenge from hell you ſhall,
Marrie for iuſtice ſhe is ſo imploy'd,
He thinkes with Ioue in heauen, or ſome where elſe:
So that perforce you muſt needs ſtay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delayes,
Ile diue into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heeles.
Marcus we are but ſhrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops ſize,
But metteall Marcus ſteele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare:
And ſith there's no iuſtice in earth nor hell,
We will ſollicite heauen, and moue the Gods
To ſend downe Iuſtice for to wreake our wongs:
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He gaues them the Arrowes.

Ad Iouem, that's for you: here ad Appollonem,
Ad Martem, that's for my ſelfe,
Here Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercury,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You were as good to ſhoote againſt the winde.
Too it Boy, Marcus looſe when I bid:
Of my word, I haue written to effect,
Ther's not a God left vnſollicited.

Marc. Kinſmen, ſhoot all your ſhafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.

Tit. Now Maiſters draw. Oh well ſaid Lucius:
Good Boy in Virgoes lap, giue it Pallas.

Marc. My Lord, I aime a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what haſt thou done?
See, ſee, thou haſt ſhot off one of Taurus hornes.

Marc. This was the ſport my Lord, when Publius ſhot,
The Bull being gal'd, gaue Aries ſuch a knocke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who ſhould finde them but the Empreſſe villaine:
She laught, and told the Moore he ſhould not chooſe
But giue them to his Maiſter for a preſent.

Tit. Why there it goes, God giue your Lordſhip ioy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons in it.

Titus. Newes, newes, from heauen,
Marcus the poſt is come.
Sirrah, what tydings? haue you any letters?
Shall I haue Iuſtice, what ſayes Iupiter?

Clowne. Ho the Iibbetmaker, he ſayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man muſt not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what ſayes Iupiter I aske thee?

Clowne. Alas ſir I know not Iupiter:
I neuer dranke with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?

Clowne. I of my Pigions ſir, nothing elſe.

Tit. Why, did'ſt thou not come from heauen?

Clowne. From heauen? Alas ſir, I neuer came there, God forbid I ſhould be ſo bold, to preſſe to heauen in my young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take vp a matter of brawle, betwixt my Vncle, and one of the Emperialls men.

Mar. Why ſir, that is as fit as can be to ſerue for your Oration, and let him deliuer the Pigions to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliuer an Oration to the Emperour with a Grace?

Clowne. Nay truely ſir, I could neuer ſay grace all my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,
But giue your Pigeons to the Emperour,
By me thou ſhalt haue Iuſtice at his hands.
Hold, hold, meane while her's money for thy charges.
Giue me pen and inke.
Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliuer a Supplication?

Clowne. I ſir.

Titus. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the firſt approach you muſt kneele, then kiſſe his ſoole, then deliuer vp your Pigeons, and then looke for your reward. Ile be at hand ſir, ſee you do it bravely.

Clowne. I warrant you ſir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirrha haſt thou a knife? Come let me ſee it.
Heere Marcus, fold it in the Oration,
For thou haſt made it like an humble Suppliant:
And when thou haſt giuen it the Emperour,
Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he ſayes.

Clowne. God be with you ſir, I will. Exit.

Tit. Come Marcus let vs goe, Publius follow me. Exeunt.

Enter Emperour and Empreſſe, and her two ſonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrowes in his hand that Titus ſhot at him.

Saturn. Why Lords,
What wrongs are theſe? was euer ſeene
An Emperour in Rome thus ouer-borne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of egall iuſtice, vſ'd in ſuch contempt?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods,
(How euer theſe diſturbers of our peace
But in the peoples eares) there nought hath paſt,
But euen with law againſt the wilfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His ſorrowes haue ſo ouer-whelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzie, and his bitternes?
And now he writes to heauen for his redreſſe.
See, heeres to Ioue, and this to Mercury,

s to the God of warre:
flie about the ſtreets of Rome:
libelling againſt the Senate,
ur Iniuſtice euery where?
r, Is it not my Lords?
r, in Rome no Iuſtice were.
ned extaſies
r to theſe outrages:
ll know, that Iuſtice liues
th; whom if he ſleepe,
he in fury ſhall
ſt Conſpirator that liues.
acious Lord, my louely Saturnine, ommander of my thoughts,
eare the faults of Titus age,
ow for his valiant Sonnes, pier'ſt him deepe, and ſcar'd his heart;
ert his diſtreſſed plight,
he meaneſt or the beſt
pts. Why thus it ſhall become ara to gloſe with all: Aſide.
touch'd thee to the quicke,
it: If Aaron now be wiſe,
e Anchor's in the Port.
Enter Clowne.
'llow, would'ſt thou ſpeake with vs?
ooth, and your Miſterſhip be Emperiall.
Ie I am, but yonder ſits the Emperour.
od & Saint Stephen giue you good den;
ou a Letter, & a couple of Pigions heere.
He reads the Letter.
e him away, and hang him preſently.
much money muſt I haue?
ſirrah you muſt be hang'd.
y ber Lady, then I haue brought vp a neck
Exit.
hfull and intollerable wrongs,
is monſtrous villany?
ence this ſame deuiſe proceedes:
oe? As if his traytrous Sonnes, for murther of our Brother.
nes beene butcher'd wrongfully?
villaine hither by the haire,
nour, ſhall ſhape priuiledge:
ocke, Ile be thy ſlaughter man:
rch, that holp'ſt to make me great,
ſhould gouerne Rome and me.
Enter Nuntius Emilius.
newes with thee Emilius?
ny Lords, Rome neuer had more cauſe, gather'd head, and with a power men, bent to the ſpoyle ch amaine, vnder conduct to old Andronicus:
ourſe of this reuenge to do
Coriolanus did.
ke Lucius Generall of the Gothes?
p me, and I hang the head
roſt, or graſſe beat downe with ſtormes:
ſorrowes to approach,
on people loue ſo much,
ten heard them ſay, alked like a priuate man)
iſhment was wrongfully,
iſhe that Lucius were their Emperour.
hould you feare? Is not our City ſtrong?

King. I, but the Citizens fauour Lucius,
And will reuolt from me, to ſuccour him.
Tam. King, be thy thoughts Imperious like thy name.
Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats do flie in it?
The Eagle ſuffers little Birds to ſing,
And is not carefull what they meane thereby,
Knowing that with the ſhadow of his wings,
He can at pleaſure ſtint their melodie.
Euen ſo mayeſt thou, the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheare thy ſpirit, for know thou Emperour,
I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,
With words more ſweet, and yet more dangerous
Then baites to fiſh, or hony ſtalkes to ſheepe,
When as the one is wounded with the baite,
The other rotted with delicious foode.
King. But he will not entreat his Sonne for vs.
Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will,
For I can ſmooth and fill his aged eare,
With golden promiſes, that were his heart
Almoſt impregnable, his old eares deafe,
Yet ſhould both eare and heart obey my tongue.
Goe thou before to our Embaſſadour,
Say, that the Emperour requeſts a parly
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.
King. Emilius do this meſſage Honourably,
And if he ſtand in Hoſtage for his ſafety,
Bid him demaund what pledge will pleaſe him beſt.
Emil. Your bidding ſhall I do effectually. Exit.
Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the Art I haue,
To plucke proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes.
And now ſweet Emperour be blithe againe,
And bury all thy feare in my deuiſes.
Satu. Then goe ſucceſſantly and plead for him. Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Flouriſh. Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes, with Drum and Soulders.

Luci. Approued warriours, and my faithfull Friends,
I haue receiued Letters from great Rome,
Which ſignifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how deſirous of our ſight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witneſſe,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any ſcathe,
Let him make treble ſatisfaction.
Goth. Braue ſlip, ſprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whoſe name was once our terrour, now our comfort,
Whoſe high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requites with foule contempt:
Behold in vs, weele follow where thou lead'ſt,
Like ſtinging Bees in hotteſt Sommers day,
Led by their Maiſter to the flowred fields,
And be reueng'd on curſed Tamora:
And as he ſaith, ſo ſay we all with him.
Luci. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all.
But who comes heere, led by a luſty Goth?
Enter a Goth leading of Aaron with his child in his armes.
Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troups I ſtraid,
To gaze vpon a ruinous Monaſterie,

And

And as I earnestly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the wasted building, suddainely
I heard a childe cry vnderneath a wall:
I made vnto the noyse, when soone I heard,
The crying babe controul'd with this discourse:
Peace Tawny slaue, halfe Moore, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke,
Villaine thou might'st haue bene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milk-white,
They neuer do beget a cole-blacke-Calfe:
Peace, villaine peace, euen thus he rates the babe,
For I must beare thee to a trusty Goth,
Who when he knowes thou art the Empresse babe,
Will hold thee dearely for thy Mothers sake.
With this, my weapon drawne I rushe vpon him,
Surpriz'd him suddainely, and brought him hither
To vse, as you thinke needefull of the man.

Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate deuill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Empresse eye,
And heere's the Base Fruit of his burning lust.
Say wall-ey'd slaue, whether would'st thou conuay
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speake? what deafe? Not a word?
A halter Souldiers, hang him on this Tree,
And by his side his Fruite of Bastardie.

Aron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood.

Luci. Too like the Syre for euer being good.
First hang the Child that he may see it sprall,
A sight to vexe the Fathers soule withall.

Aron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, saue the Childe,
And beare it from me to the Empresse:
If thou do this, Ile shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may aduantage thee to heare:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
Ile speake no more: but vengeance rot you all.

Luci. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall liue, and I will see it Nourisht.

Aron. And if it please thee? why assure thee Lucius,
'Twill vexe thy soule to heare what I shall speake.
For I must talke of Murthers, Rapes, and Massacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abhominable Deeds,
Complots of Mischiefe, Treason, Villanies
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiously preform'd,
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Vnlesse thou sweare to me my Childe shall liue.

Luci. Tell on thy minde,
I say thy Childe shall liue.

Aron. Sweare that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luci. Who should I sweare by,
Thou beleeuest no God.
That graunted, how can'st thou beleeue an oath?

Aron. What if I do not, as indeed I do not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called Conscience,
With twenty Popish trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I haue seene thee carefull to obserue:
Therefore I vrge thy oath, for that I know
An Idiot holds his Bauble for a God,
And keepes the oath which by that God he sweares,
To that Ile vrge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same God, what God so ere it be
That thou adorest, and hast in reuerence,
To saue my Boy, to nourish and bring him vp,
Ore else I will discouer nought to thee.

Luci. Euen by my God I sweare to thee I will.

Aron. First know thou,
I be got him on the Empresse.

Luci. Oh most Insatiate luxurious woman!

Aron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charitie.
To that which thou shalt heare of me anon,
'Twas her two Sonnes that murdered Bassianus,
They cut thy Sisters tongue, and ravisht her,
And cut her hands off, and trim'd her as thou saw'st.

Luci. Oh detestable villaine!
Call'st thou that Trimming?

Aron. Why she was washt, and cut, and trim'd,
And 'twas trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luci. Oh barbarous beastly villaines like thy selfe!

Aron. Indeede, I was their Tutor to instruct them,
That Codding spirit had they from their Mother,
As sure a Card as euer wonne the Set:
That bloody minde I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as euer fought at head.
Well, let my Deeds be witnesse of my worth:
I traynd thy Brethren to that guilefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mentiond,
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of Mischiefe in it.
I play'd the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my selfe apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreame laughter.
I pried me through the Creuice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes heads,
Beheld his teares, and laught so hartily,
That both mine eyes were rainie like to his:
And when I told the Empresse of this sport,
She sounded almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tydings, gaue me twenty kisses.

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and neuer blush?

Aron. I, like a blacke Dogge, as the saying is.

Luci. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aron. I, that I had not done a thousand more.
Euen now I curse the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within few compasse of my curse,
Wherein I did not some Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or else deuise his death,
Rauish a Maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some Innocent, and forswear my selfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cattell breake their necks,
Set fire on Barnes and Hay-stackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with the teares:
Oft haue I digd vp dead men from their graues,
And set them vpright at their deere Friends doore,
Euen when their sorrowes almost was forgot,
And on their skinnes, as on the Barke of Trees,
Haue with my knife carued in Romaine Letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I haue done a thousand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a Fly,
And nothing grieues me heartily indeede,
But that I cannot doe ten thousand more.

Luci. Bring downe the diuell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aron. If there be diuels, would I were a diuell,
To liue and burne in euerlasting fire,
So I might haue your company in hell,

But

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.
Luci. Sirs ſtop his mouth, & let him ſpeake no more.
Enter Emilius.
Goth. My Lord, there is a Meſſenger from Rome
Deſires to be admitted to your preſence.
Luc. Let him come neere.
Welcome Emilius, what the newes from Rome?
Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romaine Emperour greetes you all by me,
And for he vnderſtands you are in Armes,
He craues a parly at your Fathers houſe
Willing you to demand your Hoſtages,
And they ſhall be immediately deliuered.
Goth. What ſaies our Generall?
Luc. Emilius, let the Emperour giue his pledges
Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcus, Flouriſh.
And we will come: march away. Exeunt.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes diſguiſed.

Tam. Thus in this ſtrange and ſad Habilliament,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And ſay, I am Reuenge ſent from below,
To ioyne with him and right his hainous wrongs:
Knocke at his ſtudy where they ſay he keepes,
To ruminate ſtrange plots of dire Reuenge,
Tell him Reuenge is come to ioyne with him,
And worke confuſion on his Enemies.
They knocke and Titus opens his ſtudy dore.
Tit. Who doth moleſt my Contemplation?
Is it your tricke to make me ope the dore,
That ſo my ſad decrees may flie away,
And all my ſtudie be to no effect?
You are deceiu'd, for what I meane to do,
See heere in bloody lines I haue ſet downe:
And what is written ſhall be executed.
Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee.
Tit. No not a word: how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to giue it action,
Thou haſt the odds of me, therefore no more.
Tam. If thou did'ſt know me,
Thou would'ſt talke with me.
Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough,
Witneſſe this wretched ſtumpe,
Witneſſe theſe crimſon lines,
Witneſſe theſe Trenches made by griefe and care,
Witneſſe the tyring day, and heauie night,
Witneſſe all ſorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud Empreſſe, Mighty Tamora:
Is not thy comming for my other hand?
Tamo. Know thou ſad man, I am not Tamora,
She is thy Enemie, and I thy Friend,
I am Reuenge ſent from th'infernall Kingdome,
To eaſe the gnawing Vulture of the mind,
By working wreakefull vengeance on my Foes:
Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light,
Conferre with me of Murder and of Death,
There's not a hollow Caue or lurking place,
No Vaſt obſcurity, or Miſty vale,
Where bloody Murther or deteſted Rape,
Can couch for feare, but I will finde them out,
And in their eares tell them my dreadfull name,
Reuenge, which makes the foule offenders quake
Tit. Art thou Reuenge? and art thou ſent to me,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?
Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.
Tit. Doe me ſome ſeruice ere I come to thee:
Loe by thy ſide where Rape and Murder ſtands,
Now giue ſome ſurance that thou art Reuenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes.
Prouide thee two proper Palfries, as blacke as Iet.
To hale thy vengefull Waggon ſwift away,
And finde out Murder in their guilty cares.
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will diſmount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Seruile footeman all day long,
Euen from Eptons riſing in the Eaſt,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea.
And day by day Ile do this heauy taske,
So thou deſtroy Rapine and Murder there.
Tam. Theſe are my Miniſters, and come with me.
Tit. Are them thy Miniſters, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rape and Murder, therefore called ſo,
Cauſe they take vengeance of ſuch kind of men.
Tit. Good Lord how like the Empreſſe Sons they are
And you the Empreſſe: But we worldly men,
Haue miſerable mad miſtaking eyes:
Oh ſweet Reuenge, now do I come to thee,
And if one armes imbracement will content thee,
I will imbrace thee: in by and by.
Tam. This cloſing with him, fits his Lunacie,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-ſicke fits,
Do you vphold, and maintaine in your ſpeecher,
For now he firmely takes me for Reuenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him ſend for Lucius his Sonne,
And whil'ſt I at a Banquet hold him ſure,
Ile find ſome cunning practiſe out of hand
To ſcatter and diſperſe the giddie Gothes,
Or at the leaſt make them his Enemies:
See heere he comes, and I muſt play my theame.
Tit. Long haue I bene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull houſe,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Empreſſe and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you ſuch a deuill?
For well I wote the Empreſſe neuer wags
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you repreſent our Queene aright
It were conuenient you had ſuch a deuill:
But welcome as you are, what ſhall we doe?
Tam. What would'ſt thou haue vs doe Andronicus?
Dem. Shew me a Murtherer, Ile deale with him.
Chi. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape,
And I am ſent to be reueng'd on him.
Tam. Shew me a thouſand that haue done thee wrong,
And Ile be reuenged on them all.
Tit. Looke round about the wicked ſtreets of Rome,
And when thou find'ſt a man that's like thy ſelfe,
Good Murder ſtab him, hee's a Murtherer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To finde another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine ſtab him, he is a Rauiſher.
Go thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maiſt thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For vp and downe ſhe doth reſemble thee.
I pray thee doe on them ſome violent death,
They haue bene violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well haſt thou leſſon'd vs, this ſhall we do.
But would it pleaſe thee good Andronicus,
To ſend for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leades towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy houſe.
When he is heere, euen at thy Solemne Feaſt,
I will bring in the Empreſſe and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himſelfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy ſhall they ſtoop, and kneele,
And on them ſhalt thou eaſe, thy angry heart:
What ſaies Andronicus to this deuiſe?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my Brother, 'tis ſad Titus calls,
Go gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou ſhalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefeſt Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empreſſe too,
Feaſts at my houſe, and he ſhall Feaſt with them,
This do thou for my loue, and ſo let him,
As he regards his aged Fathers life.
Mar. This will I do, and ſoone returne againe.
Tam. Now will I hence about thy buſineſſe,
And take my Miniſters along with me.
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder ſtay with me,
Or elſ Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleaue to no reuenge but Lucius.
Tam. What ſay you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour,
How I haue gouern'd our determined ieſt?
Yeeld to his Humour, ſmooth and ſpeake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.
Tit. I know them all, though they ſuppoſe me mad,
And will o're-reach them in their owne deuiſes,
A payre of curſed hell-hounds and their Dam.
Dem. Madam depart at pleaſure, leaue vs heere.
Tam. Farewell Andronicus, reuenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.
Tit. I know thou doo'ſt, and ſweet reuenge farewell.
Chi. Tell vs old man, how ſhall we be imploy'd?
Tit. Tut, I haue worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Caius, and Valentine.
Pub. What is your will?
Tit. Know you theſe two?
Pub. The Empreſſe Sonnes
I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.
Tit. Fie Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,
The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,
And therefore bind them gentle Publius,
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,
Oft haue you heard me wiſh for ſuch an houre,
And now I find it, therefore binde them ſure,
Chi. Villaines forbeare, we are the Empreſſe Sonnes.
Pub. And therefore do we, what we are commanded.
Stop cloſe their mouthes, let them not ſpeake a word,
Is he ſure bound, looke that you binde them faſt. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lauinia with a Baſon.

Tit. Come, come Lauinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs ſtop their mouthes, let them not ſpeake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I vtter.
Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here ſtands the ſpring whom you haue ſtain'd with mud,
This goodly Sommer with your Winters mixt,
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile'd foule,
Two of her Brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry ieſt,
Both her ſweet Hands, her Tongue, and that more dere
Then Hands or tongue, her ſpouleſſe Chaſtity,
Inhumaine Traytors, you conſtrain'd and forc'd.
What would you ſay, if I ſhould let you ſpeake?
Villaines for ſhame you could not beg for grace.
Harke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet is left, to cut your throats,
Whil'ſt that Lauinia tweene her ſtumps doth hold:
The Baſon that receiues your guilty blood.
You know your Mother meanes to feaſt with me,
And calls herſelfe Reuenge, and thinkes me mad,
Harke Villaines, I will grin'd your bones to duſt,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paſte,
And of the Paſte a Coffen I will reare,
And make two Paſties of your ſhamefull Heads,
And bid that ſtrumpet your vnhallowed Dam,
Like to the earth ſwallow her increaſe.
This is the Feaſt, that I haue bid her to,
And this the Banquet ſhe ſhall ſurfet on,
For worſe then Philomel you vſ'd my Daughter,
And worſe then Progne, I will be reueng'd,
And now prepare your throats. Lauinia come.
Receiue the blood, and when that they are dead,
Let me goe grin'd their Bones to powder ſmall,
And with this hateful Liquor temper it,
And in that Paſte let their vil'd Heads be bakt,
Come, come, be euery one officious,
To make this Banket, which I wiſh might proue,
More ſterne and bloody then the Centaures Feaſt.
He cut their throats.
So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And ſee them ready, gainſt their Mother comes. Exeunt.

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vncle Marcus, ſince 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
Goth. And ours with thine befall, what Fortune will.
Luc. Good Vncle take you in this barbarous Moore,
This Ranenous Tiger, this accurſed deuill,
Let him receiue no ſuſtenance, ſetter him,
Till he be brought vnto the Emperous face,
For teſtimony of her foule proceedings.
And ſee the Ambuſh of our Friends be ſtrong,
I feare the Emperour meanes no good to vs.
Aron. Some deuill whiſper curſes in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may vtter forth
The Venemous Malice of my ſwelling heart.
Luc. Away Inhumaine Dogge, Vnhallowed Slaue.
Sirs, helpe our Vncle, to conuey him in. Flouriſh.
The Trumpets ſhew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour and Empreſſe, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firmament more Sunnes then one?
Luc. What bootes it thee to call thy ſelfe a Sunne?
Mar. Romes Emperour & Nephewe breake the parle,
Theſe quarrels muſt be quietly debated,
The Feaſt is ready which the carefull Titus,

Marc

ned to an Honourable end,
for Loue, for League, and good to Rome:
therfore draw nie and take your places.
Marcus we will. Hoboyes.

A Table brought in.

nter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on able, and Lauinia with a vaile ouer her face.

Welcome my gracious Lord,
Dread Queene,
ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
me all: although the cheere be poore,
rour stomacks, please you eat of it.
hy art thou thus attir'd Andronicus?
cause I would be sure to haue all well.
ine your Highneſſe, and your Empreſſe.
We are beholding to you good Andronicus!
nd if your Highneſſe knew my heart, you were:
he Emperour reſolue me this,
ll done of rath Virginius,
daughter with his owne right hand,
e was enfor'st, ſtain'd, and deflowr'd?
It was Andronicus.
our reaſon, Mighty Lord?
cauſe the Girle, ſhuld not ſuruiue her ſhame,
r preſence ſtill renew his ſorrowes.
reaſon mighty, ſtrong, and effectuall,
e, preſident, and liuely warrant,
oſt wretched) to performe the like:
aunia, and thy ſhame with thee,
thy ſhame, thy Fathers ſorrow die.
He kils her.
What haſt done, vnnaturall and vnkinde?
'd her for whom my teares haue made me blind.
oſull as Virginius was,
a thouſand times more cauſe then he.
What was ſhe raviſht? tell who did the deed,
Wilt pleaſe you eat,
ſe your Higneſſe feed?
Why haſt thou ſlaine thine onely Daughter?
Not I, 'twas Chiron and Demetrius,
ſhut her, and cut away her tongue,
, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.
Go fetch them hither to vs preſently.
Why there they are both, baked in that Pie,
f their Mother dantily hath fed,
e fleſh that ſhe herſelfe hath bred.
'tis true, witneſſe my knives ſharpe point.
He ſtabs the Empreſſe.
Die franticke wretch, for this accurſed deed.
Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed?
ecede for meede, death for a deadly deed.
You ſad fac'd men, people and Sonnes of Rome,
es ſeuer'd like a flight of Fowle,
by windes and high tempeſtuous guſts:
e teach you how, to knit againe
tred Corne, into one mutuall Sheafe, roken limbs againe into one body.
Let Rome herſelfe be bane vnto herſelfe,
e whom mightie kingdomes curtſie too,
lome and deſperate caſtaway,
meſull execution on her ſelfe.
y froſtie ſignes and chaps of age,
witneſſes of true experience,
induce you to attend my words,
Romes deere friend, as 'erſt our Auncestor,
When with his ſolemne tongue he did diſcourſe
To loue-ſicke Didoes ſad attending eare,
The ſtory of that baleſull burning night,
When ſubtil Greekes ſurpriz'd King Priams Troy:
Tell vs what Sinon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That giues our Troy, our Rome the ciuill wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor ſteele,
Nor can I vtter all our bitter griefe,
But ſtoods of teares will drowne my Oratorie,
And breake my very vtterance, euen in the time
When it ſhould moue you to attend me moſt,
Lending your kind hand Commiſeration.
Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale,
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him ſpeake.
Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,
That curſed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdred our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that raviſhed our Siſter,
For their fell faults our Brothers were beheaded,
Our Fathers teares deſpiſ'd, and baſely couſen'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And ſent her enemies vnto the graue.
Laſtly, my ſelfe vnkindly baniſhed,
The gates ſhut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drown'd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to imbrace me as a Friend:
And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That haue preſerv'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her boſome took the Enemies point,
Sheathing the ſteele in my aduentrous body.
Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My ſcars can witneſſe, dumbe although they are,
That my report is iuſt and full of truth:
But ſoft, me thinkes I do digreſſe too much,
Cyting my worthleſſe praiſe: Oh pardon me,
For when no Friends are by, men praiſe themſelues.
Marc. Now is my turne to ſpeake: Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamora deliuered,
The iſſue of an Irreligious Moore,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of theſe woes,
The Villaine is alue in Titus houſe,
And as he is, to witneſſe this is true.
Now iudge what courſe had Titus to revenge
Theſe wrongs, vnſpeakeable paſt patience,
Or more then any liuing man could beare.
Now you haue heard the truth, what ſay you Romaines?
Haue we done ought amiſſe? ſhew vs wherein,
And from the place where you behold vs now,
The poore remainder of Andronici,
Will hand in hand all headlong caſt vs downe,
And on the ragged ſtones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall cloſure of our houſe:
Speake Romaines ſpeake, and if you ſay we ſhall,
Lo hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.
Emilius. Come come, thou reuerent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour: for well I know,
The common voyce do cry it ſhall be ſo.
Mar. Lucius, all haile Romes Royall Emperour,
Goe, goe into old Titus ſorrowfull houſe,
And hither hale that miſbeleiuing Moore,
To be adiudg'd ſome direfull ſlaughtering death,
As puniſhment for his moſt wicked life.
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Gouernour.

Luc. Thankes gentle Romanes, may I gouerne so,
To heale Romes harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, giue me aymea-while,
For Nature puts me to a heauy taske:
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To shed obsequious teares vpon this Trunke:
Oh take this warme kisse on thy pale cold lips,
These sorrowfull drops vpon thy bloud-staine face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.

Mar. Teare for teare, and louing kisse for kisse,
Thy Brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips:
O were the summe of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinit, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of vs
To melt in showres: thy Grandsire lou'd thee well.
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee:
Sung thee asleepe, his Louing Breast, thy Pillow
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancie.
In that respect then, like a louing Childe,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender Spring,
Because kinde Nature doth require it so:
Friends, should associate Friends, in Greefe and Woe.
Bid him farwell, commit him to the Graue,
Do him that kindnesse, and take leaue of him.

Boy. O Grandsire, Grandsire: euen with all my heart
Would I were Dead, so you did Liue againe.
O Lord, I cannot speake to him for weeping,
My teares will choake me, if I ope my mouth.

Romane. You sad Andronici, haue done with woes,
Giue sentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath beene breeder of these dire euents.

Luc. Set him breast deepe in earth, and famish him:
There let him stand, and raue, and cry for foode:
If any one relieues, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome:
Some stay, to see him fast ned in the earth.

Aron. O why should wrath be mute, & Fury dumb?
I am no Baby I, that with base Prayers
I should repent the Euils I haue done.
Ten thousand worse, then euer yet I did,
Would I performe if I might haue my will:
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very Soule.

Lucius Some louing Friends conuey the Emperour,
And giue him burriall in his Fathers graue.
My Father, and Lauinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our Houshold Monument:
As for that heynous Tyger Tamora,
No Funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds;
No mournfull Bell shall ring her Burriall:
But throw her forth to Beasts and Birds of prey:
Her life was Beast-like, and deuoid of pitty,
And being so, shall haue like want of pitty.
See Iustice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
From whom, our heauy happes had their beginning:
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Euents, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IVLIET.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Sampſon and Gregory, with Swords and Bucklers, of the Houſe of Capulet.

Sampſon.

Gregory: A my word wee'l not carry coales.

Greg. No, for then we ſhould be Colliars.

Samp. I mean, if we be in choller, wee'l draw.

Greg. I, While you liue, draw your necke out o'th Collar.

Samp. I ſtrike quickly, being mou'd.

Greg. But thou art not quickly mou'd to ſtrike.

Samp. A dog of the houſe of Mountague, moues me.

Greg. To moue, is to ſtir: and to be valiant, is to ſtand: Therefore, if thou art mou'd, thou runſt away.

Samp. A dogge of that houſe ſhall moue me to ſtand. I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Mountagues.

Greg. That ſhewes thee a weake ſlaue, for the weakeſt goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Veſſels, are euer thruſt to the wall: therefore I will puſh Mountagues men from the wall, and thruſt his Maides to the wall. (their men.

Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Maſters, and vs

Samp. 'Tis all one, I will ſhew my ſelfe a tyrant: when I haue fought with the men, I will bee ciuill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids?

Samp. I, the heads of the Maids, or their Maiden-heads, Take it in what ſence thou wilt.

Greg. They muſt take it ſence, that feele it.

Samp. Me they ſhall feele while I am able to ſtand: And 'tis knowne I am a pretty peece of fleſh.

Greg. 'Tis well thou art not Fiſh: If thou had'ſt, thou had'ſt beene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the Houſe of the Mountagues.

Enter two other Seruingmen.

Samp. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I wil back thee

Gre. How? Turne thy backe, and run.

Samp. Feare me not.

Gre. No marry: I feare thee.

Samp. Let vs take the Law of our ſides: let them begin.

Gr. I wil frowne as I paſſe by, & let thē take it as they liſt

Samp. Nay, as they dare. I wil bite my Thumb at them, which is a diſgrace to them, if they beare it.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs ſir?

Samp. I do bite my Thumbe, ſir.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumb at vs, ſir?

Sam. Is the Law of our ſide, if I ſay I? Gre. No.

Sam. No ſir, I do not bite my Thumbe at you ſir: but I bite my Thumbe ſir.

Greg. Do you quarrell ſir?

Abra. Quarrell ſir? no ſir. (as you

Sam. If you do ſir, I am for you, I ſerue as good a man

Abra. No better? Samp. Well ſir.

Enter Benuolio.

Gr. Say better: here comes one of my maſters kinſmen.

Samp. Yes, better.

Abra. You Lye.

Samp. Draw if you be men. Gregory, remember thy waſhing blow. They Fight.

Ben. Part Fooles, put vp your Swords, you know not what you do.

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What art thou drawne, among theſe heartleſſe Hindes? Turne thee Benuolio, looke vpon thy death.

Ben. I do but keepe the peace, put vp thy Sword, Or manage it to part theſe men with me.

Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word As I hate hell, all Mountagues, and thee: Haue at thee Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Offi. Clubs, Bils, and Partiſons, ſtrike, beat them down Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Mountagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gowne, and his wife.

Cap. What noiſe is this? Giue me my long Sword ho.

Wife. A crutch, a crutch: why call you for a Sword?

Cap. My Sword I ſay: Old Mountague is come, And flourithes his Blade in ſpight of me.

Enter old Mountague & his wife.

Moun. Thou villaine Capulet. Hold me not, let me go

Wife. Thou ſhalt not ſtir a foote to ſeeke a Foe.

Enter Prince Eſcales, with his Traine.

Prince. Rebellious Subiects, Enemies to peace, Prophaners of this Neighbor-ſtained Steele, Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beaſts, That quench the fire of your pernitious Rage, With purple Fountaines iſſuing from your Veines: On paine of Torture, from thoſe bloody hands Throw your miſtemper'd Weapons to the ground, And heare the Sentence of your moued Prince. Three ciuill Broyles, bred of an Ayery word, By thee old Capulet and Mountague, Haue thrice diſturb'd the quiet of our ſtreets, And made Verona's ancient Citizens Caſt by their Graue beſeeming Ornaments, To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

Cankred with peace, to part your Cankred hate,
If euer you disturbe our streets againe,
Your liues shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time all the rest depart away:
You Capulet shall goe along with me,
And Mountague come you this afternoone,
To know our Fathers pleasure in this case:
To old Free-towne, our common iudgement place:
Once more on paine of death, all men depart. Exeunt.

Moun. Who set this ancient quarrell new abroach?
Speake Nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Heere were the seruants of your aduersarie,
And yours close fighting ere I did approach,
I drew to part them, in the instant came
The fiery Tibalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
He swong about his head, and cut the windes,
Who nothing hurt withall, hiss'd him in scorne.
While we were enterchanging thrusts and blowes,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the Prince came, who parted either part.

Wife. O where is Romeo, saw you him to day?
Right glad am I, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an houre before the worshipt Sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the East,
A troubled mind draue me to walke abroad,
Where vnderneath the groue of Sycamour,
That West-ward rooteth from this City side:
So early walking did I see your Sonne:
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me,
And stole into the couert of the wood,
I measuring his affections by my owne,
Which then most sought, where most might not be found:
Being one too many by my weary selfe,
Pursued my Honour, not pursuing his
And gladly shunn'd, who gladly fled from me.

Moun. Many a morning hath he there beene seene,
With teares augmenting the fresh mornings deaw,
Adding to cloudes, more cloudes with his deepe sighes,
But all so soone as the all-cheering Sunne,
Should in the farthest East begin to draw
The shadie Curtaines from Auroras bed,
Away from light steales home my heauy Sonne,
And priuate in his Chamber pennes himselfe,
Shuts vp his windowes, locker faire day-light out,
And makes himselfe an artificiall night:
Blacke and portendous must this humour proue,
Vnlesse good counsell may the cause remoue.

Ben. My Noble Vncle doe you know the cause?

Moun. I neither know it, nor can learne of him.

Ben. Haue you importun'd him by any meanes?

Moun. Both by my selfe and many others Friends,
But he his owne affections counseller,
Is to himselfe (I will not say how true)
But to himselfe so secret and so close,
So farre from sounding and discouery,
As is the bud bit with an enuious worme,
Ere he can spread his sweete leaues to the ayre,
Or dedicate his beauty to the same,
Could we but learne from whence his sorrowes grow,
We would as willingly giue cure, as know.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. See where he comes, so please you step aside,
Ile know his greeuance, or be much denide.

Moun. I would thou were so happy by thy stay,
To heare true shrift. Come Madam let's away. Exeunt.

Ben. Good morrow Cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new strooke nine.

Rom. Aye me, sad houres seeme long.
Was that my Father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was: what sadnes lengthens Romeo's houres?

Ro. Not hauing that, which hauing, makes them short.

Ben. In loue.

Romeo. Out.

Ben. Of loue.

Rom. Out of her fauour where I am in loue.

Ben. Alas that loue so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in proofe.

Rom. Alas that loue, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes, see path-wayes to his will
Where shall we dine? O me: what fray was here?
Yet tell me not, for I haue heard it all:
Heere's much to do with hate, but more with loue:
Why then, O brawling loue, O louing hate,
O any thing, of nothing first created:
O heauie lightnesse, serious vanity,
Mishapen Chaos of well seeing formes,
Feather of lead, bright smoake, cold fire, sicke health,
Still waking sleepe, that is not what it is.
This loue feele I, that feele no loue in this.
Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No Coze, I rather weepe.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good hearts oppression.

Rom. Why such is loues transgression.
Griefes of mine owne lie heauie in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate to haue it prest
With more of thine, this loue that thou hast shown,
Doth adde more griefe, to too much of mine owne.
Loue, is a smoake made with the fume of sighes,
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in Louers eyes,
Being vext, a Sea nourisht with louing teares.
What is it else? a madnesse, most discreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet:
Farewell my Coze.

Ben. Soft I will goe along,
And if you leaue me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut I haue lost my selfe, I am not here,
This is not Romeo, hee's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadnesse, who is that you loue?

Rom. What shall I grone and tell thee?

Ben. Grone, why no: but sadly tell me who.

Rom. A sicke man in sadnesse makes his will:
A word ill vrg'd to one that is so ill:
In sadnesse Cozin, I do loue a woman.

Ben. I aym'd so neare, when I suppos'd you lou'd.

Rom. A right good marke man, and shee's faire I loue.

Ben. A right faire marke, faire Coze, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well in that hit you misse, shee'l not be hit
With Cupids arrow, she hath Dianas wit:
And in strong proofe of chastity well arm'd,
From loues weake childish Bow, she liues vncharm'd.
Shee will not stay the siege of louing termes,
Nor bid th'incounter of assailing eyes.
Nor open her lap to Saint-seducing Gold:
O she is rich in beauty, only poore,
That when she dies, with beautie dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworne, that she will still liue chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing make huge waste?
For beauty staru'd with her seuerity,
Cuts beauty off from all posteritie.

ire, too wilfull: ſlie too faire.

Capulet, Countie Paris, and the Clowne.
Montague is bound as well as I,

Enter Benuolio and Romeo.
ut man, one fire burnes out anothers burning,
ie leſſned by anothers anguiſh:
Turne giddie, and be holpe by backward turning:
One deſperate greefe, cures with anothers languiſh:
Take thou ſome new infection to the eye,
And the rank poyſon of the old will die.
Rom. Your Plantan leafe is excellent for that
Ben. For what I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken ſhin.
Ben. Why Romeo art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more then a mad man is:
Shut vp in priſon, kept without my foode,
Whipt and tormented: and Godden good fellow.
Ser. Godgigoden, I pray ſir can you read?
Rom. I mine owne fortune in my miſerie.
Ser. Perhaps you haue learn'd it without booke:
But I pray can you read any thing you ſee
Rom. I, if I know the Letters and the Language.
Ser. Ye ſay honeſtly, reſt you merry.
Rom. Stay fellow, I can read.
He reades the Letter.
Signeur Martino, and his wife and daughter: County Anſelme and his beauteous ſiſters: the Lady widdow of Vtruuio, Signeur Placentio, and his louely Neeces: Mercutio and his brother Valentine: mine vncle Capulet his wife and daughters: my faire Neece Roſaline, Luſtio, Signeur Valentio, & his Coſen Tybalt: Lucio and the louely Helena.
A faire aſſembly, whither ſhould they come?
Ser. Vp.
Rom. Whither? to ſupper?
Ser. To our houſe.
Rom. Whoſe houſe?
Ser. My Maſters.
Rom. Indeed I ſhould haue aſkt you that before.
Ser Now I'le tell you without asking. My maiſter is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the houſe of Mountagues I pray come and crush a cup of wine. Reſt you merry. Exit.
Ben. At this ſame ancient Feaſt of Capulets
Sups the faire Roſaline, whom thou ſo loues:
With all the admired Beauties of Verona,
Go thither and with vnattainted eye,
Compare her face with ſome that I ſhall ſhow,
And I will make thee thinke thy Swan a Crow.
Rom. When the deuout religion of mine eye
Maintaines ſuch falſhood, then turne teares to fire:
And theſe who often drown'd could neuer die,
Tranſparent Heretiques be burnt for liers.
One faire er then my loue the all-ſeeing Sun
Ne're ſaw her match, ſince firſt the world begun.
Ben. Tut, you ſaw her faire, none elſe being by,
Herſelfe poyſ'd with herſelfe in either eye:
But in that Chriſtall Scales, let there be weigh'd,
Your Ladies loue againſt ſome other Maid
That I will ſhow you, ſhining at this Feaſt,
And ſhe ſhew ſcant ſhell, well, that now ſhewes beſt.
Rom. Ile goe along, no ſuch ſight to be ſhowne,
But to reioyce in ſplendor of mine owne.
Enter Capulet, Wife and Nurſe.
Wife Nurſe wher's my daughter? call her forth to me.
Nurſe. Now by my Maidenhead, at twelue yeare old
I bad her come, what Lamb: what Lady-bird, God forbid, Where's this Girle? what Iuliet?
Enter Iuliet.
Iuliet. How now, who calls?
Nur. Your Mother.
Iuliet. Madam I am heere, what is your will?
Wife. This is the matter: Nurſe giue leaue awhile, we must talke in secret. Nurse come backe againe, I haue remembred me, thou'se heare our counsell. Thou knowest my daughter's of a pretty age.
muſt

Nurse. Faith I can tell her age vnto an houre.

Wife. Shee's not fourteene.

Nurse. Ile lay fourteene of my teeth,
And yet to my teene be it spoken,
I haue but foure, shee's not fourteene.
How long is it now to Lammas tide?

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurse. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammas Eue at night shall she be fourteene. Susan & she, God rest all Christian soules, were of an age. Well Susan is with God, she was too good for me. But as I said, on Lammas Eue at night shall she be fourteene, that shall she marie, I remember it well. 'Tis since the Earth-quake now eleuen yeares, and she was wean'd I neuer shall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, vpon that day: for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug sitting in the Sunne vnder the Douehouse wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a braine. But as I said, when it did tast the Worme-wood on the nipple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to see it teachie, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Doue-house, 'twas no needs I trow to bid mee trudge: and since that time it is a eleuen yeares, for then she could stand alone, nay by'th' roode she could haue runne & wadled all about: for euen the day before she broke her brow, & then my Husband God be with his soule, a was a merrie man, tooke vp the Child, yes quoth hee, dost thou fall vpon thy face? thou wilt fall backeward when thou hast more wit, wilt thou not Iule? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch left crying, & said I: to see now how a Iest shall come about. I warrant, & I shall liue a thousand yeares, I neuer should forget it: wilt thou not Iulet quoth he? and pretty foole it stinted, and said I.

Old La. Inough of this, I pray thee hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuse but laugh, to thinke it should leaue crying, & say I: and yet I warrant it had vpon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young Cockrels stone? A perilous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yes quoth my husband, fall'st vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age: wilt thou not Iule? It stinted: and said I.

Iule. And stint thou too. I pray thee Nurse, say I.

Nur. Peace I haue done: God marke thee too his grace thou wast the prettiest Babe that ere I nurst, and I might liue to see thee married once, I haue my wish.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame
I came to talke of, tell me daughter Iuliet,
How stands your disposition to be Married?

Iuli. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nur. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurse, I would say thou had'st sucke wisedome from thy teat.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, younger then you
Heere in Verona, Ladies of esteeme,
Are made already Mothers. By my count
I was your Mother, much vpon these yeares
That you are now a Maide, thus then in briefe:
The valiant Paris seekes you for his loue.

Nurse. A man young Lady, Lady, such a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Veronas Summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La. What say you, can you loue the Gentleman?
This night you shall behold him at our Feast,
Read ore the volume of young Paris face,
And find delight, writ there with Beauties pen:
Examine euery seuerall liniament,
And see how one another lends content:
And what obscur'd in this faire volume lies,
Find written in the Margent of his eyes.
This precious Booke of Loue, this vnbound Louer,
To Beautifie him, onely lacks a Cover.
The fish liues in the Sea, and 'tis much pride
For faire without, the faire within to hide:
That Booke in manies eyes doth share the glorie,
That in Gold clasps, Lockes in the Golden storie:
So shall you share all that he doth possesse,
By hauing him, making your selfe no lesse.

Nurse. No lesse, nay bigger: women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris loue?

Iuli. Ile looke to like, if looking liking moue.
But no more deepe will I endart mine eye,
Then your consent giues strength to make flye.

Enter a Seruing man.

Ser. Madam, the guests are come, Supper serv'd vp, you cal'd, my young Lady askt for, the Nurse curst in the Pantery, and euery thing in extremitie: I must hence to wait, I beseech you follow straight. Exit.

Mo. We follow thee, Iuliet, the Countie stayes.

Nurse. Goe Gyrle, seeke happy nights to happy dayes.
Exeunt.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benuolio, with fiue or six other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?
Or shall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixitie,
Weele haue no Cupid, hood wink't with a skarfe,
Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath,
Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper.
But let them measure vs by what they will,
Weele measure them a Measure, and be gone.

Rom. Giue me a Torch, I am not for this ambling,
Being but heauy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we must haue you dance.

Rom. Not I beleeue me, you haue dancing shoes
With nimble soles, I haue a soale of Lead
So stakes me to the ground, I cannot moue.

Mer. You are a Louer, borrow Cupids wings,
And soare with them aboue a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore enpearced with his shaft,
To soare with his light feathers, and to bound:
I cannot bound a pitch aboue dull woe,
Vnder loues heauy burthen do I sinke.

Hora. And to sinke in it should you burthen loue,
Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is loue a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boysterous, and it pricks like thorne.

Mer. If loue be rough with you, be rough with loue,
Pricke loue for pricking, and you beat loue downe.
Giue me a Case to put my visage in,
A Visor for a Visor, what care I
What curious eye doth quote deformities:
Here are the Beetle-browes shall blush for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no sooner in,
But euery man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart
Tickle the senceless rushes with their heeles:
For I am prouerb'd with a Grandsire Phrase,
Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on,
The game was ne're so faire, and I am done.

Mer. Tut,

I feare too early,for my mind miſgiues,
ſequence yet hanging in the ſtarres,
Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights reuels,and expire the tearme
Of a deſpiſed life cloſ'd in my breſt:
By ſome vile forfeit of vnnimely death.
But he that hath the ſtirrage of my courſe,
Direct my ſute: on luſtie Gentlemen.
Ben. Strike Drum.
They march about the Stage, and Seruingmen come forth with their napkins.
Enter Seruant.
Ser. Where's Potpan,that he helpes not to take away? He ſhift a Trencher? he ſcrape a Trencher?
1 When good manners,ſhall lie in one or two mens hands,and they vnwaſhe too, 'tis a foule thing.
Ser. Away with the Ioynſtooles, remoue the Court-cubbord, looke to the Plate: good thou, ſaue me a piece of Marchpane,and as thou loueſt me, let the Porters let in Suſan Grindſtone,and Nell, Anthonie and Potpan.
2. I Boy readie.
Ser. You are looket for,and cal'd for,aske for,& ſought for,in the great Chamber.
1 We cannot be here and there too,cheriſh Boyes,
Be briſk a while,and the longer liuer take all.
Exeunt.
Enter all the Gueſts and Gentlewomen to the Maskers.
1. Cap. Welcome Gentlemen,
Ladies that haue their toes
Vnplagu'd with Cornes,will walke about with you:
Ah my Miſtreſſes,which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
She lie ſweare hath Cornes: am I come neare ye now?
Welcome Gentlemen,I haue ſeene the day
That I haue worne a Viſor, and could tell
A whiſpering tale in a faire Ladies eare:
Such as would pleaſe: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome Gentlemen.come Muſitians play:
Muſicke plaies: and they dance.
A Hall,Hall,giue roome,and foote it Girles,
More light you knaues,and turne the Tables vp:
And quench the fire,the Roome is growne too hot.
Ah ſirrah,this vnlookt for ſport comes well:
Nay ſit,nay ſit,good Cozin Capulet,
For you and I are paſt our dauncing dates:
How long 'ſt now ſince laſt your ſelfe and I
Were in a Maske?
2. Cap. Berlady thirty yeares.
1. Cap. What man: 'tis not ſo much, 'tis not ſo much,
'Tis ſince the Nuptiall of Lucentio,
Come Pentycoſt as quickely as it will,
Some fiue and twenty yeares,and then we Maskt.
2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more,his Sonne is elder ſir:
His Sonne is thirty.
3. Cap. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.
Rom. What Ladie is that which doth inrich the hand
Of yonder Knight?
Ser. I know not ſir.
Rom. O ſhe doth teach the Torches to burne bright:
It ſeemes ſhe hangs vpon the cheeke of night,
As a rich Iewel in an Æthiops eare:
Beauty too rich for vſe,for earth too deare:
So ſhewes a Snowy Doue trooping with Crowes,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes showes:
The meaſure done,Ile watch her place of ſtand,
And touching hers,make bleſſed my rude hand.

Did

Did my heart loue till now, forſweare it ſight,
For I neuer ſaw true Beauty till this night.
Tib. This by his voice, ſhould be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier Boy, what dares the ſlaue
Come hither couer'd with an antique face,
To fleere and ſcorne at our Solemnitie?
Now by the ſtocke and Honour of my kin,
To ſtrike him dead I hold it not a ſin.
Cap. Why how now kinſman,
Wherefore ſtorme you ſo?
Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in ſpight,
To ſcorne at our Solemnitie this night.
Cap. Young Romeo is it?
Tib. 'Tis he, that Villaine Romeo.
Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
A bearес him like a portly Gentleman;
And to ſay truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well gouern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my houſe do him diſparagement:
Therfore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou reſpect,
Shew a faire preſence, and put off theſe frownes,
An ill beſeeming ſemblance for a Feaſt.
Tib. It fits when ſuch a Villaine is a gueſt,
Ile not endure him.
Cap. He ſhall be endu'rd.
What goodman boy, I ſay he ſhall, go too,
Am I the Maiſter here or you? go too,
Youle not endure him, God ſhall mend my ſoule,
Youle make a Mutinie among the Gueſts:
You will ſet cocke a hoope, youle be the man.
Tib. Why Vncle, 'tis a ſhame.
Cap. Go too, go too,
You are a ſawcy Boy, 'iſt ſo indeed?
This tricke may chance to ſcath you, I know what,
You muſt contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well ſaid my hearts, you are a Princox, goe,
Be quiet, or more light, more light for ſhame,
Ile make you quiet. What, chearely my hearts.
Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my fleſh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intruſion ſhall
Now ſeeming ſweet, conuert to bitter gall. Exit.
Rom. If I prophane with my vnworthieſt hand,
This holy ſhrine, the gentle ſin is this,
My lips to bluſhing Pilgrims did ready ſtand,
To ſmooth that rough touch, with a tender kiſſe.
Iul. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much.
Which mannerly deuotion ſhewes in this,
For Saints haue hands, that Pilgrims hands do tuch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kiſſe.
Rom. Haue not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?
Iul. I Pilgrim, lips that they muſt vſe in prayer.
Rom. O then deare Saint, let lips do what hands do,
They pray (grant thou) leaſt faith turne to diſpaire.
Iul. Saints do not moue,
Though grant for prayers ſake.
Rom. Then moue not while my prayers effect I take:
Thus from my lips, by thine my ſin is purg'd.
Iul. Then haue my lips the ſin that they haue tooke.
Rom. Sin from my lips? O treſpaſſe ſweetly vrg'd:
Giue me my ſin againe.
Iul. You kiſſe by th'booke.
Nur. Madam your Mother craues a word with you.
Rom. What is her Mother?
Nurſ. Marrie Batcheler,
Her Mother is the Lady of the houſe,
And a good Lady, and a wiſe, and Vertuous,
I Nur'ſt her Daughter that you talkt withall:
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall haue the chinckes.
Rom. Is ſhe a Capulet?
O deare account! My life is my foes debt.
Ben. Away, be gone, the ſport is at the beſt.
Rom. I ſo I feare, the more is my vnreſt.
Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We haue a trifling foolliſh Banquet towards.
Is it t'ne ſo? why then I thanke you all.
I thanke you honeſt Gentlemen, good night:
More Torches here: come on, then let's to bed.
Ah ſirrah, by my fale it waxes late,
Ile to my reſt.
Iuli. Come hither Nurſe,
What is yond Gentleman?
Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tyberio.
Iuli. What's he that now is going out of doors?
Nur. Marrie that I thinke be young Petruchio.
Iul. What's he that follows here that would not dance?
Nur. I know not.
Iul. Go aske his name: if he be married,
My graue is like to be my wedded bed.
Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Mountague,
The onely Sonne of your great Enemie.
Iul. My onely Loue ſprung from my onely hate,
Too early ſeene, vnknowne, and knowne too late,
Prodigious birth of Loue it is to me,
That I muſt loue a loathed Enemie.
Nur. What's this? whats this?
Iul. A rime, I learne euen now
Of one I dan'ſt withall.
One calls within, Iuliet.
Nur. Anon, anon:
Come let's away, the ſtrangers all are gone.
Exeunt.

Chorus.

Now old deſire doth in his death bed lie,
And yong affection gapes to be his Heire,
That faire, for which Loue gron'd for and would die,
With tender Iuliet matcht, is now not faire.
Now Romeo is beloued, and Loues againe,
Alike bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe ſuppos'd he muſt complaine,
And ſhe as ſteale Loues ſweet bait from fearefull hookes:
Being held a foe, he may not haue acceſſe
To breath ſuch vowes as Louers vſe to ſweare,
And ſhe as much in Loue, her meanes much leſſe,
To meete her new Beloued any where:
But paſſion lends them Powre, time, meanes to meete,
Temp'ring extremities with extreame ſweete.
Enter Romeo alone.
Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth, and find thy Center out.
Enter Benuolio, with Mercutio.
Ben. Romeo, my Coſen Romeo, Romeo.
Mere. He is wiſe,
And on my life hath ſtolne him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way and leapt this Orchard wall.
Call good Mercutio.
Mer. Nay, Ile coniure too.

Mer. Romeo, Humours, Madman, Paſſion, Louer,
Appeare thou in the likeneſſe of a ſigh,
Speake but one rime, and I am ſatisfied:
Cry me but ay me, Pronaunt, but Loue and day,
Speake to my goſſip Venus one faire word,
One Nickname for her purblinde ſonne and her,
Young Abraham Cupid he that ſhot ſo true,
When King Cophetua lou'd the begger Maid,
He heareth not, he ſtirreth not, he moueth not,
The Ape is dead, I muſt conjure him,
I conjure thee by Roſalines bright eyes,
By her High forehead, and her Scarlet lip,
By her Fine foote, Straight leg, and Quiuering thigh,
And the Demeanes, that there Adiacent lie,
That in thy likeneſſe thou appeare to vs.

Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him, t'would anger him
To raiſe a ſpirit in his Miſtreſſe circle,
Of ſome ſtrange nature, letting it ſtand
Till ſhe had laid it, and conjured it downe,
That were ſome ſpight:
My inuocation is faire and honeſt, & in his Miſtris name,
I conjure onely but to raiſe vp him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himſelfe among theſe Trees
To be conſorted with the Humerous night:
Blind is his Loue, and beſt befits the darke.

Mer. If Loue be blind, Loue cannot hit the marke,
Now will he ſit vnder a Medler tree,
And wiſh his Miſtreſſe were that kind of Fruite,
As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,
O Romeo that ſhe were, O that ſhe were
An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo goodnight, Ile to my Truckle bed,
This Field-bed is to cold for me to ſleepe,
Come ſhall we go?

Ben. Go then, for 'tis in vaine to ſeeke him here
That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.

Rom. He ieſts at Scarres that neuer felt a wound,
But ſoft, what light through yonder window breaks?
It is the Eaſt, and Iuliet is the Sunne.
Ariſe faire Sun and kill the enuious Moone,
Who is already ſicke and pale with griefe,
That thou her Maid art far more faire then ſhe
Be not her Maid ſince ſhe is enuious,
Her Veſtal liuery is but ſicke and greene,
And none but fooles do weare it, caſt it off:
It is my Lady, O it is my Loue, O that ſhe knew ſhe were,
She ſpeakes, yet ſhe ſayes nothing, what of that?
Her eye diſcourſes, I will anſwere it:
I am too bold 'tis not to me ſhe ſpeakes:
Two of the faireſt ſtarres in all the Heauen,
Hauing ſome buſineſſe do entreat her eyes,
To twinckle in their Spheres till they returne.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head,
The brightneſſe of her cheeke would ſhame thoſe ſtarres,
As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heauen,
Would through the ayrie Region ſtreame ſo bright,
That Birds would ſing, and thinke it were not night:
See how ſhe leanes her cheeke vpon her hand.
O that I were a Gloue vpon that hand,
That I might touch that cheeke.

Iul. Ay me.

Rom. She ſpeakes.
Oh ſpeake againe bright Angell, for thou art
As glorious to this night being ore my head,
As is a winged meſſenger of heauen
Vnto the white vpturned wondring eyes
Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he beſtrides the lazie puffing Clouds,
And ſailes vpon the boſome of the ayre.

Iul. O Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
Denie thy Father and refuſe thy name:
Or if thou wilt not, be but ſworne my Loue,
And Ile no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I heare more, or ſhall I ſpeake at this?

Iu. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:
Thou art thy ſelfe, though not a Mountague.
What's Mountague? it is not hand nor foote,
Nor arme, nor face, O be ſome other name
Belonging to a man.
What's in a names that which we call a Roſe,
By any other word would ſmell as ſweete,
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo cal'd,
Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,
Without that title Romeo, doffe thy name,
And for thy name which is no part of thee,
Take all my ſelfe.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
Call me but Loue, and Ile be new baptiz'd,
Hence foorth I neuer will be Romeo.

Iuli. What man art thou, that thus beſcreen'd in night
So ſtumbleſt on my counſell?

Rom. By a name,
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name deare Saint, is hatefull to my ſelfe,
Becauſe it is an Enemy to thee,
Had I it written, I would teare the word.

Iuli. My eares haue yet not drunke a hundred words
Of thy tongues vttering, yet I know the ſound.
Art thou not Romeo, and a Mountague?

Rom. Neither faire Maid, if either thee diſlike.

Iul. How cam'ſt thou hither,
Tell me, and wherefore?
The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,
And the place death, conſidering who thou art,
If any of my kinſmen find thee here.

Rom. With Loues light wings
Did I ore-perch theſe Walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold Loue out,
And what Loue can do, that dares Loue attempt:
Therefore thy kinſmen are no ſtop to me.

Iul. If they do ſee thee, they will murther thee.

Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye,
Then twenty of their Swords, Looke thou but ſweete,
And I am proofe againſt their enmity.

Iul. I would not for the world they ſaw thee here.

Rom. I haue nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
And but thou loue me, let them finde me here,
My life were better ended by their hate,
Then death proroged wanting of thy Loue.

Iul. By whoſe direction found'ſt thou out this place?

Rom. By Loue that firſt did promp me to enquire,
He lent me counſell, and I lent him eyes,
I am no Pylot, yet were thou as far
As that vaſt-ſhore-waſhet with the fartheſt Sea,
I ſhould aduenture for ſuch Marchandiſe.

Iul. Thou knoweſt the maske of night is on my face,
Elſe would a Maiden bluſh bepaint my cheeke,
For that which thou haſt heard me ſpeake to night,
Faine would I dwell on forme, faine, faine, denie
What I haue ſpoke, but farewell Complement,
Doeſt thou Loue? I know thou wilt ſay I,

And

And I will take thy word, yet if thou swear'ſt,
Thou maieſt proue falſe: at Louers periuries
They ſay Ioue laught, oh gentle Romeo,
If thou doſt Loue, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou thinkeſt I am too quickly woone,
Ile frowne and be perueiſe, and ſay thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: But elſe not for the world.
In truth faire Montague I am too fond:
And therefore thou maieſt thinke my behauiour light,
But truſt me Gentleman, Ile proue more true,
Then thoſe that haue coying to be ſtrange,
I ſhould haue beene more ſtrange, I muſt confeſſe,
But that thou ouer heard'ſt ere I was ware
My true Loues paſſion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yeelding to light Loue,
Which the darke night hath ſo diſcouered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder Moone I vow,
That tips with ſiluer all theſe Fruite tree tops.

Iul. O ſweare not by the Moone, th'inconſtant Moone,
That monethly changes in her circled Orbe,
Leaſt that thy Loue proue likewiſe variable.

Rom. What ſhall I ſweare by?

Iul. Do not ſweare at all:
Or if thou wilt ſweare by thy gratious ſelfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And Ile beleeue thee.

Rom. If my hearts deare loue.

Iul. Well do not ſweare, although I ioy in thee:
I haue no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too raſh, too vnaduiſ'd too ſudden,
Too like the lightning which doth ceaſe to be
Ere, one can ſay, it lightens. Sweete good night:
This bud of Loue by Summers ripening breath,
May proue a beautious Flower when next we meete:
Goodnight, goodnight, as ſweete repoſe and reſt,
Come to thy heart, as that within my breſt.

Rom. O wilt thou leaue me ſo vnſatisfied?

Iul. What ſatisfaction can'ſt thou haue to night?

Ro. Th'exchange of thy Loues faithfull vow for mine

Iul. I gaue thee mine before thou did'ſt requeſt it:
And yet I would it were to giue againe.

Rom. Would'ſt thou withdrawit,
For what purpoſe Loue?

Iul. But to be franke and giue it thee againe,
And yet I wiſh but for the thing I haue,
My bounty is as boundleſſe as the Sea,
My Loue as deepe, the more I giue to thee
The more I haue, for both are Infinite:
I heare ſome noyſe within deare Loue adue:

Cals within.

Anon good Nurſe, ſweet Montague be true:
Stay but a little, I will come againe.

Rom. O bleſſed bleſſed night, I am afear'd
Being in night, all this is but a dreame,
Too flattering ſweet to be ſubſtantiall.

Iul. Three words deare Romeo,
And goodnight indeed.
If that thy bent of Loue be Honourable,
Thy purpoſe marriage, ſend me word to morrow,
By one that Ile procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt performe the right,
And all my Fortunes at thy foote Ile lay,
And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.

within: Madam.

I come, anon: but if thou meaneſt not well,
I do beſeech thee

within: Madame.

(By and by I come)
To ceaſe thy ſtrife, and leaue me to my griefe.
To morrow will I ſend.

Rom. So thriue my ſoule.

Iu. A thouſand times goodnight. Exit.

Rome. A thouſand times the worſe to want thy light.
Loue goes toward Loue as ſchool-boyes frō their books
But Loue frō Loue, towards ſchoole with heauie looks.

Enter Iuliet againe.

Iul. Hiſt Romeo hiſt: O for a Falkners voice,
To lure this Taſſell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarſe, and may not ſpeake aloud,
Elſe would I teare the Caue where Eccho lies,
And make her ayrie tongue more hoarſe, then
With repetition of my Romeo.

Rom. It is my ſoule that calls vpon my name.
How ſiluer ſweet, ſound Louers tongues by night,
Like ſofteſt Muſicke to attending eares.

Iul. Romeo.

Rom. My Neece.

Iul. What a clock to morrow
Shall I ſend to thee?

Rom. By the houre of nine.

Iul. I will not faile, 'tis twenty yeares till then,
I haue forgot why I did call thee backe.

Rom. Let me ſtand here till thou remember it.

Iul. I ſhall forget, to haue thee ſtill ſtand there,
Remembring how I Loue thy company.

Rom And Ile ſtill ſtay, to haue thee ſtill forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Iul. 'Tis almoſt morning, I would haue thee gone,
And yet no further then a wantons Bird,
That let's it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore priſoner in his twiſted Gyues,
And with a ſilken thred plucks it backe againe,
So louing Ieallous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy Bird.

Iul. Sweet ſo would I,
Yet I ſhould kill thee with much cheriſhing:
Good night, good night.

Rom. Parting is ſuch ſweete ſorrow,
That I ſhall ſay goodnight, till it be morrow.

Iul. Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy breſt

Rom. Would I were ſleepe and peace ſo ſweet to reſt.
The gray ey'd morne ſmiles on the frowning night.
Checkring the Eaſterne Clouds with ſtreakes of light,
And darkneſſe fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dayes pathway, made by Titans wheeles
Hence will I to my ghoſtly Friers cloſe Cell,
His helpe to craue, and my deare hap to tell. Exit.

Enter Frier alone with a basket.

Fri. The gray ey'd morne ſmiles on the frowning night,
Checkring the Eaſterne Clouds with ſtreaks of light:
And fleckled darkneſſe like a drunkard reeles,
From forth daies path, and Titans burning wheeles:
Now ere the Sun aduance his burning eye,
The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,
I muſt vpfill this Oſier Cage of ours.
With balefull weedes, and precious Iuiced Flowers,
The earth that's Natures mother, is her Tombe,
What is her burying graue that is her wombe
And from her wombe children of diuers kind

We ſucking on her naturall boſome find:
Many for many vertues excellent:
None but for ſome, and yet all different.
O mickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Herbs, ſtones, and their true qualities:
For nought ſo vile, that on the earth doth liue,
But to the earth ſome ſpeciall good doth giue.
Nor ought ſo good, but ſtrain'd from that faire vſe,
Reuolts from true birth, ſtumbling on abuſe.
Vertue it ſelfe turnes vice being miſapplied,
And vice ſometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rind of this weake flower,
Poyſon hath reſidence, and medicine power:
For this being ſmelt, with that part cheares each part,
Being taſted ſlayes all ſences with the heart.
Two ſuch oppoſed Kings encampe them ſtill,
In man as well as Herbes grace and rude will:
And where the worſer is predominant,
Full ſoone the Canker death eates vp that Plant.

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite.
What early tongue ſo ſweet ſaluteth me?
Young Sonne, it argues a diſtempered head,
So ſoone to bid goodmorrow to thy bed;
Care keepes his watch in every old mans eye,
And where Care lodges, ſleepe will neuer lye:
But where vnbruſed youth with vnſtuft braine
Doth couch his limbs, there, golden ſleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlineſſe doth me aſſure,
Thou art vprous'd with ſome diſtemperature;
Or if not ſo, then here I hit it right.
Our Romeo hath not beene in bed to night.

Rom. That laſt is true, the ſweeter reſt was mine.

Fri. God pardon ſin: waſt thou with Roſaline?

Rom. With Roſaline, my ghoſtly Father? No,
I haue forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but wher haſt thou bin then?

Rom Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen.
I haue ben feaſting with mine enemie,
Where on a ſudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy helpe and holy phiſicke lies:
I beare no hatred, bleſſed man: for loe
My intereſſion likewiſe ſteads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, reſt homely in thy driſt,
Ridling confeſſion, findes but ridling ſhrift.

Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Loue is ſet,
On the faire daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers, ſo hers is ſet on mine;
And all combin'd, ſaue what thou muſt combine
By holy marriage: when and where, and how,
We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell thee as we paſſe, but this I pray,
That thou conſent to marrie vs to day.

Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is heere?
Is Roſaline that thou didſt Loue ſo deare
So ſoone forſaken? young mens Loue then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Ieſu Maria, what a deale of brine
Hath waſht thy ſallow cheekes for Roſaline?
How much ſalt water throwne away in waſt,
To ſeaſon Loue that of it doth not taſt.
The Sun not yet thy ſighes, from heauen cleares,
Thy old groanes yet ringing in my ancient eares:
Lo here vpon thy cheeke the ſtaine doth ſit,
Of an old teare that is not waſht off yet.
If ere thou waſt thy ſelfe, and theſe woes thine,
Thou and theſe woes, were all for Roſaline.
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this ſentence then,
Women may fall, when there's no ſtrength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'ſt me oft for louing Roſaline.

Fri. For doting, not for louing pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'ſt me bury Loue.

Fri. Not in a graue,
To lay one in, another out to haue.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Loue now
Doth grace for grace, and Loue for Loue allow:
The other did not ſo.

Fri. O ſhe knew well,
Thy Loue did read by rote, that could not ſpell:
But come young wauerer, come goe with me,
In one reſpect, Ile thy aſſiſtant be:
For this alliance may ſo happy proue,
To turne your houſhould rancor to pure Loue.

Rom. O let vs hence, I ſtand on ſudden haſt.

Fri. Wiſely and ſlow, they ſtumble that run faſt.

Exeunt

Enter Benuolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the deuile ſhould this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I ſpoke with his man.

Mer. Why that ſame pale hard-hearted wench, that Roſaline torments him ſo, that he will ſure run mad.

Ben. Tibalt, the kinſman to old Capulet, hath ſent a Letter to his Fathers houſe.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will anſwere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may anſwere a Letter.

Ben. Nay, he will anſwere the Letters Maiſter how he dares, being dared.

Mer Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead ſtab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the eare with a Loue ſong, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boyes but-ſhaft, and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why what is Tibalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh hee's the Courageous Captaine of Complements: he fights as you ſing prickſong, keeps time, diſtance, and proportion, he reſts his minum, one, two, and the third in your boſom: the very butcher of a ſilk button a Duelliſt, a Duelliſt: a Gentleman of the very firſt houſe of the firſt and ſecond cauſe: ah the immortall Paſſado the Punto reuerſo, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of ſuch antique liſping affecting phantacies, theſe new tuners of accent: Ieſu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandſire, that we ſhould be thus afflicted with theſe ſtrange flies: theſe faſhion Mongers, theſe pardon mee's, who ſtand ſo much on the new forme, that they cannot ſit at eaſe on the old bench. O their bones, their bones,

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his Roe, like a dryed Herring. O flesh, flesh, how art thou fiſhified? Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his Lady, was a kitchen wench, marrie ſhe had a better Loue to berime her: Dido a dowdie, Cleopatra a Gipſie, Helen and Hero, hildings and Harlots: Thisbie a gray eie or ſo, but not to the purpoſe. Signior Romeo, Bon iour, there's a French ſalutation to your

French slop: you gaue vs the the counterfeit fairely last night.

Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I giue you?

Mer. The slip sir, the slip, can you not conceiue?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my businesse was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may straine curtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning to curtsie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most curteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of curtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flowr'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this ieast, now till thou hast worne out thy Pump, that when the single sole of it is worne, the ieast may remaine after the wearing, sole-singular.

Rom. O single sol'd ieast,
Soly singular for the singlenesse.

Mer. Come betweene vs good Benuolio, my wits faints.

Rom Swits and spurs,
Swits and spurs, or Ile crie a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Goose chase, I am done: For thou hast more of the Wild-Goose in one of thy wits, then I am sure I haue in my whole fiue. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou wast neuer with mee for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom. Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very Bitter-sweeting,
It is a most sharpe sawce.

Rom. And is it not well seru'd into a Sweet-Goose?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an vnch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proues thee farre and wide, a broad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Loue, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo: now art thou what thou art by Art as well as by Nature, for this driueling Loue is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling vp and downe to hid his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desir'st me to stop in my tale against the hare.

Ben. Thou would'st else haue made thy tale large.

Mer. O thou art deceiu'd, I would haue made it short, for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupie the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare.
A saile, a saile.

Mer. Two, two: a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon.

Nur. My Fan Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face?
For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer God ye gooden faire Gentlewoman.

Nur. Is it gooden?

Mer. Tis no lesse I tell you: for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now vpon the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out vpon you: what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
That God hath made, himselfe to mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to, marrie quoth a Gentleman: can any of you tel me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you: but young Romeo will be elder when you haue found him, then he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nur. You say well,
Mer. Yea is the worst well,
Very well tooke: I faith, wisely, wisely.

Nur. If you be he sir,
I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will endite him to some Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So ho.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No Hare sir, vnlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something stale and hoare ere it be spent.
An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.
But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent.
Romeo will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell ancient Lady:
Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benuolio.

Nur. I pray you sir, what sawcie Merchant was this that was so full of his roperie?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurse, that loues to heare himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, then he will stand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a speake any thing against me, Ile take him downe, & a were lustier then he is, and twentie such Iacks: and if I cannot, Ile finde those that shall: scurule knaue, I am none of his flurt-gils, I am none of his skaines-mates, and thou must stand by too and suffer euery knaue to vse me at his pleasure.

Pet. I saw no man vse you at his pleasure: if I had, my weapon should quickly haue beene out, I warrant you, I dare draw as soone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur. Now afore God, I am so vext, that euery part about me quiuers, skuruy knaue: pray you sir a word: and as I told you, my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what she bid me say, I will keepe to my selfe: but first let me tell ye, if ye should leade her in a fooles paradise, as they say, it were a very grosse kind of behauiour, as they say: for the Gentlewoman is yong: & therefore, if you should deale double with her, truely it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Nur. Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I protest vnto thee.

Nur. Good heart, and yfaith I will tell her as much: Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not marke me?

Nur. I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer. (Mercutio,

Rom. Bid her deuise some meanes to come to shrift this
And there she shall at Frier Laurences Cell
Be shriu'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Go too, I say you shall.

Nurse

Nur. This afternoone sir? well she shall be there.
Ro. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall,
Within this houre my man shall be with thee,
And bring thee Cords made like a tackled staire.
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy,
Must be my conduy in the secret night.
Farewell, be trustie and Ile quite thy paines:
Farewell, commend me to thy Mistresse.
Nur. Now God in heauen blesse thee: harke you sir.
Rom. What saist thou my deare Nurse?
Nurse. Is your man secret, did you nere heare say two may keepe counsell putting one away.
Ro. Warrant thee my man as true as steele.
Nur. Well sir, my Mistresse is the sweetest Lady, Lord, Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard: but she good soule had as leeue a see Toade, a very Toade as see him: I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man, but Ile warrant you, when I say so, shee lookes as pale as any clout in the vertall world. Doth not Rosemarie and Romeo begin both with a letter?
Rom. I Nurse, what of that? Both with an R
Nur. A mocker that's the dogs name. R. is for the no, I know it begins with some other letter, and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemary, that it would do you good to heare it.
Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.
Nur. I a thousand times. Peter?
Pet. Anon.
Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Iuliet.

Iul. The clocke strook nine, when I did send the Nurse, In halfe an houre she promised to returne,
Perchance she cannot meete him: that's not so:
Oh she is lame, Loues Herauld should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides then the Sunnes beames,
Driuing backe shadowes ouer lowring hils.
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doues draw Loue,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings:
Now is the Sun vpon the highmost hill
Of this dates iourney, and from nine till twelue,
I three long houres, yet she is not come.
Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my sweete Loue,
And his to me, but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwieldie, slow, heauy, and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse.

O God she comes, O hony Nurse what newes?
Hast thou met with him? send thy man away.
Nur. Peter stay at the gate.
Iul. Now good sweet Nurse:
O Lord, why lookest thou sad?
Though newes, be sad, yet tell them merrily,
If good thou sham'st the musicke of sweet newes,
By playing it to me, with so sower a face.
Nur. I am a weary, giue me leaue awhile,
Fie how my bones ake, what a iaunt haue I had?
Iul. I would thou had'st my bones, and I thy newes:
Nay come I pray thee speake, good good Nurse speake.
Nur. Iesu what haste can you not stay a while?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?
Iul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breth
To say to me, that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,
Is longer then the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy newes good or bad? answere to that,
Say either, and Ile stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, if good or bad?
Nur. Well, you haue made a simple choice, you know not how to chuse a man: Romeo, no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excels all mens, and for a hand, and a foote, and a body, though they be not to be talkt on, yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of courtesie, but Ile warrant him as gentle a Lambe: go thy wayes wench, serue God. What haue you din'd at home?
Iul. No no: but all this this did I know before
What saies he of our marriage? what of that?
Nur. Lord how my head akes, what a head haue I?
It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.
My backe a tother side: o my backe, my backe:
Beshrew your heart for sending me about
To catch my death with iaunting vp and downe.
Iul. I faith: I am sorrie that thou art so well.
Sweet sweet, sweet Nurse, tell me what saies my Loue?
Nur. Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And I warrant a vertuous: where is your Mother?
Iul. Where is my Mother?
Why she is within, where should she be?
How oddly thou replyest:
Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman:
Where is your Mother?
Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you so hot? marrie come vp I trow,
Is this the Poultis for my aking bones?
Henceforward do your messages your selfe.
Iul. Heere's such a coile, come what saies Romeo?
Nur. Haue you got leaue to go to shrift to day?
Iul. I haue
Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Laurence Cell,
There staies a Husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood vp in your cheekes,
They'le be in Scarlet straight at any newes:
Hie you to Church, I must an other way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Loue
Must clambe a birds nest Soone when it is darke:
I am the drudge, and toile in your delight:
But you shall beare the burthen soone at night.
Go Ile to dinner: hie you to the Cell.
Iul. Hie to high Fortune, honest Nurse, farewell. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heauens vpon this holy act,
That after houres, with sorrow chide vs not.
Rom. Amen, amen, but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervaile the exchange of ioy
That one short minute giues me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then Loue-deuouring death do what he dare,
It is inough, I may but call her mine.
Fri. These violent delights haue violent endes,
And in their triumph: die like fire and powder,
Which as they kisse consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his owne deliciousnesse,
And in the taste confoundes the appetite.
Therefore Loue moderately, long Loue doth so,
Too swift arriues as tardie as too slow.

Enter Iuliet.

Here comes the Lady: Oh so light a foot
Will nere weare out the euerlasting flint,

muſt talke in ſecret. Nurſe come backe againe, I haue remembred me, thou'ſe heare our counſell. Thou knoweſt my daughter's of a prety age.

Nurſe. Faith I can tell her age vnto an houre.

Wife. Shee's not fourteene.

Nurſe. Ile lay fourteene of my teeth,
And yet to my teene be it ſpoken,
I haue but foure, ſhee's not fourteene.
How long is it now to Lammas tide?

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurſe. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammas Eue at night ſhall ſhe be fourteene. Suſan & ſhe, God reſt all Chriſtian ſoules, were of an age. Well Suſan is with God, ſhe was too good for me. But as I ſaid, on Lammas Eue at night ſhall ſhe be fourteene, that ſhall ſhe marie, I remember it well. 'Tis ſince the Earth-quake now eleuen yeares, and ſhe was wean'd I neuer ſhall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, vpon that day: for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug ſitting in the Sunne vnder the Douehouſe wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a braine. But as I ſaid, when it did taſt the Worme-wood on the nipple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to ſee it teachie, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Doue-houſe, 'twas no needs I trow to bid mee trudge: and ſince that time it is a eleuen yeares, for then ſhe could ſtand alone, nay bi'th' roode ſhe could haue runne & wadled all about: for euen the day before ſhe broke her brow, & then my Husband God be with his ſoule, a was a merrie man, tooke vp the Child, yes quoth hee, doeſt thou fall vpon thy face? thou wilt fall backeward when thou haſt more wit, wilt thou not Iule? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch left crying, & ſaid I: to ſee now how a leſt ſhall come about. I warrant, & I ſhall liue a thouſand yeares, I neuer ſhould forget it: wilt thou not Iulet quoth he? and pretty foole it ſtinted, and ſaid I.

Old La. Inough of this, I pray thee hold thy peace.

Nurſe. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuſe but laugh, to thinke it ſhould leaue crying, & ſay I: and yet I warrant it had vpon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young Cockrels ſtone? A perilous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yes quoth my husband, fall'ſt vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou commeſt to age: wilt thou not Iule? It ſtinted: and ſaid I.

Iule. And ſtint thou too. I pray thee Nurſe, ſay I.

Nur. Peace I haue done: God marke thee too his grace thou waſt the prettieſt Babe that ere I nurſt, and I might liue to ſee thee married once, I haue my wiſh.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame
I came to talke of, tell me daughter Iuliet,
How ſtands your diſpoſition to be Married?

Iuli. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nur. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurſe, I would ſay thou had'ſt ſuckt wiſedome from thy teat.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, yonger then you
Heere in Verona, Ladies of eſteeme,
Are made already Mothers. By my count
I was your Mother, much vpon theſe yeares
That you are now a Maide, thus then in briefe:
The valiant Paris ſeekes you for his loue.

Nurſe. A man young Lady, Lady, ſuch a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Veronas Summer hath not ſuch a flower.

Nurſe. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La. What ſay you, can you loue the Gentleman?
This night you ſhall behold him at our Feaſt,
Read o're the volume of young Paris face,
And find delight, writ there with Beauties pen:
Examine euery ſeuerall liniament,
And ſee how one another lends content:
And what obſcur'd in this faire volume lies,
Find written in the Margent of his eyes.
This preſious Booke of Loue, this vnbound Louer,
To Beautifie him, onely lacks a Couer.
The fiſh liues in the Sea, and 'tis much pride
For faire without, the faire within to hide:
That Booke in manies eyes doth ſhare the glorie,
That in Gold claſpes, Lockes in the Golden ſtorie:
So ſhall you ſhare all that he doth poſſeſſe,
By nauing him, making your ſelfe no leſſe.

Nurſe. No leſſe, nay bigger: women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris loue?

Iuli. Ile looke to like, if looking liking moue.
But no more deepe will I endart mine eye,
Then your conſent giues ſtrength to make flye.

Enter a Seruing man.

Ser. Madam, the gueſts are come, ſupper ſerv'd vp, you cal'd, my young Lady aſkt for, the Nurſe curſt in the Pantery, and euery thing in extremitie: I muſt hence to wait, I beſeech you follow ſtraight. Exit.

Mo. We follow thee, Iuliet, the Countie ſtaies.

Nurſe. Goe Gyrle, ſeeke happy nights to happy dayes. Exeunt.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benuolio, with fiue or ſix other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What ſhall this ſpeech be ſpoke for our excuſe?
Or ſhall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of ſuch prolixitie,
Weele haue no Cupid, hood winkt with a skarfe,
Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath,
Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper:
But let them meaſure vs by what they will,
Weele meaſure them a Meaſure, and be gone.

Rom. Giue me a Torch, I am not for this ambling,
Being but heauy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we muſt haue you dance.

Rom. Not I beleeue me, you haue dancing ſhoes
With nimble ſoles, I haue a ſoale of Lead
So ſtakes me to the ground, I cannot moue.

Mer. You are a Louer, borrow Cupids wings,
And ſoare with them aboue a common bound.

Rom. I am too ſore enpearced with his ſhaft,
To ſoare with his light feathers, and to bound:
I cannot bound a pitch aboue dull woe,
Vnder loues heauy burthen do I ſinke.

Hora. And to ſinke in it ſhould you burthen loue,
Too great oppreſſion for a tender thing.

Rom. Is loue a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boyſterous, and it pricks like thorne.

Mer. If loue be rough with you, be rough with loue,
Prick loue for pricking, and you beat loue downe,
Giue me a Caſe to put my viſage in,
A Viſor for a Viſor, what care I
What curious eye doth quote deformities:
Here are the Beetle-browes ſhall blush for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no ſooner in,
But euery man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart
Tickle the ſenceleſſe ruſhes with their heeles:
For I am prouerb'd with a Grandſire Phraſe,
Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on,
The game was ne're ſo faire, and I am done.

Mer. Tut,

Mer. Tut,dun's the Mouſe,the Conſtables owne word,
If thou art dun,weele draw thee from the mire.
Or ſaue your reuerence loue,wherein thou ſtickeſt
Vp to the eares,come we burne day-light ho.
Rom. Nay that's not ſo.
Mer. I meane ſir I delay.
We waſt our lights in vaine,lights,lights,by day;
Take our good meaning,for our Iudgement ſits
Fiue times in that,ere once in our fine wits.
Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske,
I eus 'tis no wit to go.
Mer. Why may one aske?
Rom. I dreampt a dreame to night
Mer. And ſo did I.
Rom. Well what was yours?
Mer. That dreamers often lye.
Ro. In bed a ſleepe while they do dreame things true.
Mer. O then I ſee Queene Mab hath beene with you:
She is the Fairies Midwife, & ſhe comes in ſhape no bigger then Agat-ſtone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman, drawne with a teeme of little Atomies,ouer mens noſes as they lie aſleepe: her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs: the Couer of the wings of Graſſhoppers, her Traces of the ſmalleſt Spiders web, her coullers of the Moonſhines watry Beames.her Whip of Crickets bone, the Laſh of Philome,her Waggoner, a ſmall grey-coated Gnat,not halfe ſo bigge as a round little Woorme, prickt from the Lazie-finger of a man. Her Chariot is an emptie Haſelnut, made by the Ioyner Squirrel or old Grub, time out a mind,the Fairies Coach-makers: & in this ſtate ſhe gallops night by night,through Louers braines: and then they dreame of Loue.On Courtiers knees,that dreame on Curſies ſtraight: ore Lawyers fingers, who ſtraight dreame on Fees, ore Ladies lips, who ſtrait on kiſſes dreame, which oft the angry Mab with bliſters plagues, becauſe their breath with Sweet meats tainted are. Sometime ſhe gallops ore a Courtiers noſe, & then dreames he of ſmelling out a ſuite: & ſometime comes ſhe with Tith pigs tale,tickling a Parſons noſe as a lies aſleepe, then he dreames of another Benefice. Sometime ſhe driueth ore a Souldiers neckе, & then dreames he of cutting Forraine throates, of Breaches,Ambuſcadoes,Spaniſh Blades: Of Healths fiue Fadome deepe,and then anon drums in his eares,at which he ſtarres and wakes; and being thus frighted, ſweares a prayer or two & ſleepes againe:this is that very Mab that plats the manes of Horſes in the night: & bakes the Elklocks in foule ſluttiſh haires,which once entangled,much misfortune bodes.
This is the hag,when Maides lie on their backs,
That preſſes them,and learnes them firſt to beare,
Making them women of good carriage.
This is ſhe.
Rom. Peace,peace,Mercutio peace,
Thou talk'ſt of nothing.
Mer. True,I talke of dreames:
Which are the children of an idle braine,
Begot of nothing,but vaine phantaſie,
Which is as thin of ſubſtance as the ayre,
And more inconſtant then the wind,who woos
Euen now the frozen boſome of the North:
And being anger'd, puffes away from thence,
Turning his ſide to the dew dropping South.
Ben. This wind you talke of blowes vs from our ſelues,
Supper is done,and we ſhall come too late.
Rom. I feare too early,for my mind miſgiues,
Some conſequence yet hanging in the ſtarres,
Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights reuels,and expire the tearme
Of a deſpiſed life cloſ'd in my breſt:
By ſome vile forfeit of vntimely death.
But he that hath the ſtiuage of my courſe,
Direct my ſute: on luſtie Gentlemen.
Ben. Strike Drum.
They march about the Stage, and Seruingmen come forth with their napkins.
Enter Seruant.
Ser. Where's Potpan,that he helpes not to take away? He ſhift a Trencher? he ſcrape a Trencher?
1. When good manners,ſhall lie in one or two mens hands,and they vnwaſht too, 'tis a foule thing.
Ser. Away with the Ioynſtooles,remoue the Court-cubbord, looke to the Plate: good thou, ſaue me a piece of Marchpane,and as thou loueſt me, let the Porters let in Suſan Grindſtone,and Nell, Anthonie and Potpan.
2. I Boy readie.
Ser. You are looke for,and cal'd for,aske for,& ſought for,in the great Chamber.
1. We cannot be here and there too,cheriely Boyes,
Be brisk a while,and the longer liuer take all.
Exeunt.
Enter all the Gueſts and Gentlewomen to the Maskers.
1. Cap. Welcome Gentlemen,
Ladies that haue their toes
Vnplagu'd with Cornes,will walke about with you:
Ah my Miſtreſſes,which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
She ile ſweare hath Cornes: am I come neare ye now?
Welcome Gentlemen,I haue ſeene the day
That I haue worne a Viſor, and could tell
A whiſpering tale in a faire Ladies eare:
Such as would pleaſe: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome Gentlemen.come Muſitians play:
Muſicke plaies: and the dance.
A Hall,Hall,giue roome,and foote it Girles,
More light you knaues,and turne the Tables vp:
And quench the fire,the Roome is growne too hot.
Ah ſirrah,this vnlookt for ſport comes well:
Nay ſit,nay ſit,good Cozin Capulet,
For you and I are paſt our dauncing dates:
How long 'is now ſince laſt your ſelfe and I
Were in a Maske?
2. Cap. Berlady thirty yeares.
1. Cap. What man: 'tis not ſo much, 'tis not ſo much,
'Tis ſince the Nuptiall of Lucentio,
Come Pentycoſt as quickely as it will,
Some fiue and twenty yeares,and then we Maskt.
2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more,his Sonne is elder ſir:
His Sonne is thirty.
1. Cap. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.
Rom. What Ladie is that which doth inrich the hand
Of yonder Knight?
Ser. I know not ſir.
Rom. O ſhe doth teach the Torches to burne bright:
It ſeemes ſhe hangs vpon the cheeke of night,
As a rich Iewel in an Æthiops eare:
Beauty too rich for vſe,for earth too deare:
So ſhewes a Snowy Doue trooping with Crowes,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes showes:
The meaſure done,Ile watch her place of ſtand,
And touching hers,make bleſſed my rude hand.

Did

Did my heart loue till now, forſweare it ſight,
For I neuer ſaw true Beauty till this night.
Tib. This by his voice, ſhould be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier Boy, what dares the ſlaue
Come hither couer'd with an antique face,
To fleere and ſcorne at our Solemnitie?
Now by the ſtocke and Honour of my kin,
To ſtrike him dead I hold it not a ſin.
Cap. Why how now kinſman,
Wherefore ſtorme you ſo?
Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in ſpight,
To ſcorne at our Solemnitie this night.
Cap. Young Romeo is it?
Tib. 'Tis he, that Villaine Romeo.
Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
A bearес him like a portly Gentleman:
And to ſay truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well gouern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my houſe do him diſparagement:
Therfore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou reſpect,
Shew a faire preſence, and put off theſe frownes,
An ill beſeeming ſemblance for a Feaſt.
Tib. It fits when ſuch a Villaine is a gueſt,
Ile not endure him.
Cap. He ſhall be endu'rd.
What goodman boy, I ſay he ſhall, go too,
Am I the Maiſter here or you? go too,
Youle not endure him, God ſhall mend my ſoule,
Youle make a Mutinie among the Gueſts:
You will ſet cocke a hoope, youle be the man.
Tib. Why Vncle, 'tis a ſhame.
Cap. Go too, go too,
You are a ſawcy Boy, 'iſt ſo indeed?
This tricke may chance to ſcath you, I know what,
You muſt contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well ſaid my hearts, you are a Princox, goe,
Be quiet, or more light, more light for ſhame,
Ile make you quiet. What, chearely my hearts.
Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my fleſh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intruſion ſhall
Now ſeeming ſweet, conuert to bitter gall. Exit.
Rom. If I prophane with my vnworthieſt hand,
This holy ſhrine, the gentle ſin is this,
My lips to bluſhing Pilgrims did ready ſtand,
To ſmooth that rough touch, with a tender kiſſe.
Iul. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly deuotion ſhewes in this,
For Saints haue hands, that Pilgrims hands do tuch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kiſſe.
Rom. Haue not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?
Iul. I Pilgrim, lips that they muſt vſe in prayer.
Rom. O then deare Saint, let lips do what hands do,
They pray (grant thou) leaſt faith turne to diſpaire.
Iul. Saints do not moue,
Though grant for prayers ſake.
Rom. Then moue not while my prayers effect I take:
Thus from my lips, by thine my ſin is purg'd.
Iul. Then haue my lips the ſin that they haue tooke.
Rom. Sin from my lips? O treſpaſſe ſweetly vrg'd:
Giue me my ſin againe.
Iul. You kiſſe by th'booke.
Nur. Madam your Mother craues a word with you.
Rom. What is her Mother?
Nurſ. Marrie Batcheler,
Her Mother is the Lady of the houſe,
And a good Lady, and a wiſe, and Vertuous,
I Nur'ſi her Daughter that you talkt withall:
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall haue the chinckes.
Rom. Is ſhe a Capulet?
O deare account! My life is my foes debt.
Ben. Away, be gone, the ſport is at the beſt.
Rom. I ſo I feare, the more is my vnreſt.
Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We haue a trifling fooliſh Banquet towards:
Is it t'ne ſo? why then I thanke you all.
I thanke you honeſt Gentlemen, good night:
More Torches here: come on, then let's to bed.
Ah ſirrah, by my fac it waxes late,
Ile to my reſt.
Iulia. Come hither Nurſe,
What is yond Gentleman?
Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tyberio.
Iuli. What's he that now is going out of doore?
Nur. Marrie that I thinke be young Petruchio.
Iul. What's he that follows here that would not dance?
Nur. I know not.
Iul. Go aske his name: if he be married,
My graue is like to be my wedded bed.
Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Mountague,
The onely Sonne of your great Enemie.
Iul. My onely Loue ſprung from my onely hate,
Too early ſeene, vnknowne, and knowne too late,
Prodigious birth of Loue it is to me,
That I muſt loue a loathed Enemie.
Nur. What's this? whats this?
Iul. A rime, I learne euen now
Of one I dan't withall.
One calls within, Iulio.
Nur. Anon, anon:
Come let's away, the ſtrangers all are gone.
Exeunt.

Chorus.

Now old deſire doth in his death bed lie,
And yong affection gapes to be his Heire,
That faire, for which Loue groan'd for and would die,
With tender Iuliet matcht, is now not faire.
Now Romeo is beloued, and Loues againe,
Alike bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe ſuppos'd he muſt complaine,
And ſhe ſteale Loues ſweet baite from fearefull hookes:
Being held a foe, he may not haue acceſſe
To breath ſuch vowes as Louers vſe to ſweare,
And ſhe as much in Loue, her meanes much leſſe,
To meete her new Beloued any where:
But paſſion lends them Power, time, meanes to meete,
Temp'ring extremities with extreame ſweete.
Exeunt.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth, and find thy Center out.
Enter Benuolio, with Mercutio.
Ben. Romeo, my Coſen Romeo, Romeo.
Merc. He is wiſe,
And on my life hath ſtolne him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way and leapt this Orchard wall.
Call good Mercutio:
Nay, Ile coniure too.

Mer. Romeo, Humours, Madman, Paſſion, Louer,
Appeare thou in the likeneſſe of a ſigh,
Speake but one rime, and I am ſatisfied:
Cry me but ay me, Pronounce, but Loue and day,
Speake to my goſſip Venus one faire word,
One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,
Young Abraham Cupid he that ſhot ſo true,
When King Cophetua lou'd the begger Maid,
He heareth not, he ſtirreth not, he moueth not,
The Ape is dead, I muſt coniure him,
I coniure thee by Roſalines bright eyes,
By her High forehead, and her Scarlet lip,
By her Fine foote, Straight leg, and Quiuering thigh,
And the Demeanes, that there Adiacent lie,
That in thy likeneſſe thou appeare to vs.

Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him, t'would anger him
To raiſe a ſpirit in his Miſtreſſe circle,
Of ſome ſtrange nature, letting it ſtand
Till ſhe had laid it, and coniured it downe,
That were ſome ſpight.
My inuocation is faire and honeſt, & in his Miſtris name,
I coniure onely but to raiſe vp him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himſelfe among theſe Trees
To be conſorted with the Humerous night:
Blind is his Loue, and beſt befits the darke.

Mer. If Loue be blind, Loue cannot hit the marke,
Now will he ſit vnder a Medler tree,
And wiſh his Miſtreſſe were that kind of Fruite,
As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,
O Romeo that ſhe were, O that ſhe were
An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo goodnight, Ile to my Truckle bed,
This Field-bed is to cold for me to ſleepe,
Come ſhall we go?

Ben. Go then, for 'tis in vaine to ſeeke him here
That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.

Rom. He ieſts at Scarres that neuer felt a wound,
But ſoft, what light through yonder window breakes?
It is the Eaſt, and Iuliet is the Sunne.
Ariſe faire Sun and kill the enuious Moone,
Who is ſtreadie ſicke and pale with griefe,
That thou her Maid art far more faire then ſhe
Be not her Maid ſince ſhe is enuious,
Her Veſtal liuery is but ſicke and greene,
And none but fooles do weare it, caſt it off:
It is my Lady, O it is my Loue, O that ſhe knew ſhe were,
She ſpeakes, yet ſhe ſayes nothing, what of that?
Her eye diſcourſes, I will anſwere it:
I am too bold 'tis not to me ſhe ſpeakes:
Two of the faireſt ſtarres in all the Heauen,
Hauing ſome buſineſſe do entreate her eyes,
To twinckle in their Spheres till they returne.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head,
The brightneſſe of her cheeke would ſhame thoſe ſtarres,
As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heauen,
Would through the ayrie Region ſtreame ſo bright,
That Birds would ſing, and thinke it were not night:
See how ſhe leanes her cheeke vpon her hand.
O that I were a Gloue vpon that hand,
That I might touch that cheeke.

Iul. Ay me.

Rom. She ſpeakes.
Oh ſpeake againe bright Angell, for thou art
As glorious to this night being ore my head,
As is a winged meſſenger of heauen
Vnto the white vpturned wondring eyes
Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he beſtrides the lazie puffing Cloudes,
And ſailes vpon the boſome of the ayre.

Iul. O Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
Denie thy Father and refuſe thy name:
Or if thou wilt not, be but ſworne my Loue,
And Ile no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I heare more, or ſhall I ſpeake at this?

Iu. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:
Thou art thy ſelfe, though not a Mountague.
What's Mountague? it is nor hand nor foote,
Nor arme, nor face, O be ſome other name
Belonging to a man.
What? in a names that which we call a Roſe,
By any other word would ſmell as ſweete,
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo cal'd,
Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,
Without that title Romeo, doffe thy name,
And for thy name which is no part of thee,
Take all my ſelfe.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
Call me but Loue, and Ile be new baptiz'd,
Hence forth I neuer will be Romeo.

Iuli. What man art thou, that thus beſcreen'd in night
So ſtumbleſt on my counſell?

Rom. By a name,
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name deare Saint, is hatefull to my ſelfe,
Becauſe it is an Enemy to thee,
Had I it written, I would teare the word.

Iuli. My eares haue yet not drunke a hundred words
Of thy tongues vttering, yet I know the ſound.
Art thou not Romeo, and a Mountague?

Rom. Neither faire Maid, if either thee diſlike.

Iul. How cam'ſt thou hither,
Tell me, and wherefore?
The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,
And the place death, conſidering who thou art,
If any of my kinſmen find thee here.

Rom. With Loues light wings
Did I ore-perch theſe Walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold Loue out,
And what Loue can do, that dares Loue attempt:
Therefore thy kinſmen are no ſtop to me.

Iul If they do ſee thee, they will murther thee.

Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye,
Then twenty of their Swords, looke thou but ſweete,
And I am proofe againſt their enmity.

Iul. I would not for the world they ſaw thee here.

Rom. I haue nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
And but thou loue me, let them finde me here,
My life were better ended by their hate,
Then death proroged wanting of thy Loue.

Iul. By whoſe direction found'ſt thou out this place?

Rom. By Loue that firſt did prompt me to enquire,
He lent me counſell, and I lent him eyes,
I am no Pylot, yet were thou as far
As that vaſt-ſhore-waſher with the fartheſt Sea,
I ſhould aduenture for ſuch Merchandiſe.

Iul. Thou knoweſt the maske of night is on my face,
Elſe would a Maiden bluſh bepaint my cheeke,
For that which thou haſt heard me ſpeake to night,
Faine would I dwell on forme, faine, faine, denie
What I haue ſpoke, but farewell Complement,
Doeſt thou Loue? I know thou wilt ſay I,

And

And I will take thy word, yet if thou swear'ſt,
Thou maieſt proue falſe: at Louers periuries
They ſay Ioue laughs, oh gentle Romeo,
If thou doſt Loue, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou thinkeſt I am too quickly woone,
Ile frowne and be peruerſe, and ſay thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: But elſe not for the world.
In truth faire Montague I am too fond:
And therefore thou maieſt thinke my behauiour light,
But truſt me Gentleman, Ile proue more true,
Then thoſe that haue coying to be ſtrange,
I ſhould haue beene more ſtrange, I muſt confeſſe,
But that thou ouer-heard'ſt ere I was ware
My true Loues paſſion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yeelding to light Loue,
Which the darke night hath ſo diſcouered.
Rom. Lady, by yonder Moone I vow,
That tips with ſiluer all theſe Fruite tree tops.
Iul. O ſweare not by the Moone, th'inconſtant Moone,
That monethly changes in her circled Orbe,
Leaſt that thy Loue proue likewiſe variable.
Rom. What ſhall I ſweare by?
Iul. Do not ſweare at all:
Or if thou wilt ſweare by thy gratious ſelfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And Ile beleeue thee.
Rom. If my hearts deare loue.
Iul. Well do not ſweare, although I ioy in thee:
I haue no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too raſh, too vnaduiſ'd too ſudden,
Too like the lightning which doth ceaſe to be
Ere one can ſay, it lightens. Sweete good night:
This bud of Loue by Summers ripening breath,
May proue a beautious Flower when next we meete:
Goodnight, goodnight, as ſweete repoſe and reſt,
Come to thy heart, as that within my breſt.
Rom. O wilt thou leaue me ſo vnſatisfied?
Iul. What ſatisfaction can'ſt thou haue to night?
Ro. Th'exchange of thy Loues faithfull vow for mine
Iul. I gaue thee mine before thou did'ſt requeſt it:
And yet I would it were to giue againe.
Rom. Would'ſt thou withdraw it,
For what purpoſe Loue?
Iul. But to be franke and giue it thee againe,
And yet I wiſh but for the thing I haue,
My bounty is as boundleſſe as the Sea,
My Loue as deepe, the more I giue to thee
The more I haue, for both are Infinite:
I heare ſome noyſe within deare Loue adue:
Cal within.
Anon good Nurſe, ſweet Montague be true:
Stay but a little, I will come againe.
Rom. O bleſſed bleſſed night, I am afear'd
Being in night, all this is but a dreame,
Too flattering ſweet to be ſubſtantiall.
Iul. Three words deare Romeo,
And goodnight indeed.
If that thy bent of Loue be Honourable.
Thy purpoſe marriage, ſend me word to morrow,
By one that Ile procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt performe the right,
And all my Fortunes at thy foote Ile lay,
And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.
Within: Madam.
I come, anon: but if thou meanſt not well,
I do beſeech thee
Within: Madam.
(By and by I come)
To ceaſe thy ſtrife, and leaue me to my griefe.
To morrow will I ſend.
Rom. So thrive my ſoule.
Iu. A thouſand times goodnight. Exit
Rom. A thouſand times the worſe to want thy light.
Loue goes toward Loue as ſchool-boyes frõ their books
But Loue frõ Loue, towards ſchoole with heauie looks.

Enter Iuliet againe.

Iul. Hiſt Romeo hiſt: O for a Falkners voice,
To lure this Taſſell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarſe, and may not ſpeake aloud,
Elſe would I teare the Caue where Eccho lies,
And make her ayrie tongue more hoarſe, then
With repetition of my Romeo.
Rom. It is my ſoule that calls vpon my name.
How ſiluer ſweet, ſound Louers tongues by night,
Like ſofteſt Muſicke to attending eares.
Iul. Romeo.
Rom. My Neece.
Iul. What a clock to morrow
Shall I ſend to thee?
Rom. By the houre of nine.
Iul. I will not faile, 'tis twenty yeares till then,
I haue forgot why I did call thee backe.
Rom. Let me ſtand here till thou remember it.
Iul. I ſhall forget, to haue thee ſtill ſtand there,
Remembring how I Loue thy company.
Rom. And Ile ſtill ſtay, to haue thee ſtill forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.
Iul. 'Tis almoſt morning, I would haue thee gone,
And yet no further then a wanton Bird,
That lets it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore priſoner in his twiſted Gyues,
And with a ſilken thred plucks it backe againe,
So louing Iealous of his liberty.
Rom. I would I were thy Bird.
Iul. Sweet ſo would I,
Yet I ſhould kill thee with much cheriſhing:
Good night, good night.
Rom. Parting is ſuch ſweete ſorrow,
That I ſhall ſay goodnight, till it be morrow.
Iul. Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy breſt.
Rom. Would I were ſleepe and peace ſo ſweet to reſt.
The gray ey'd morne ſmiles on the frowning night,
Checkring the Eaſterne Clouds with ſtreaks of light,
And darkneſſe fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dayes pathway, made by Titans wheeles
Hence will I to my ghoſtly Friers cloſe Cell,
His helpe to craue, and my deare hap to tell. Exit.

Enter Frier alone with a basket.

Fri. The gray ey'd morne ſmiles on the frowning night,
Checkring the Eaſterne Clouds with ſtreaks of light:
And fleckled darkneſſe like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dares path, and Titans burning wheeles:
Now ere the Sun aduance his burning eye,
The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,
I muſt vpfill this Oſier Cage of ours.
With balefull weedes, and precious iuiced flowers,
The earth that's Natures mother, is her Tombe,
What is her burying graue that is her wombe
And from her wombe children of diuers kind

We ſucking on her naturall boſome find:
Many for many vertues excellent:
None but for ſome, and yet all different.
O mickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Hearbs, ſtones, and their true qualities:
For nought ſo vile, that on the earth doth liue,
But to the earth ſome ſpeciall good doth giue.
Nor ought ſo good, but ſtrain'd from that faire vſe,
Reuolts from true birth, ſtumbling on abuſe.
Vertue it ſelfe turnes vice being miſapplied,
And vice ſometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rind of this weake flower,
Poyſon hath reſidence, and medicine power:
For this being ſmelt, with that part cheares each part,
Being taſted ſlayes all ſences with the heart.
Two ſuch oppoſed Kings encampe them ſtill,
In man as well as Hearbes grace and rude will:
And where the worſer is predominant,
Full ſoone the Canker death eates vp that Plant.

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite.
What early tongue ſo ſweet ſaluteth me?
Young Sonne, it argues a diſtempered head,
So ſoone to bid good-morrow to thy bed;
Care keepes his watch in every old mans eye,
And where Care lodges, ſleepe will neuer lye:
But where vnbruſed youth with vnſtuft braine
Doth couch his lims, there, golden ſleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlineſſe doth me aſſure,
Thou art vprous'd with ſome diſtemperature;
Or if not ſo, then here I hit it right.
Our Romeo hath not beene in bed to night.

Rom. That laſt is true, the ſweeter reſt was mine.

Fri. God pardon ſin: waſt thou with Roſaline?

Rom. With Roſaline, my ghoſtly Father? No,
I haue forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but wher haſt thou bin then?

Rom. Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen.
I haue bin feaſting with mine enemie,
Where on a ſudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy helpe and holy phiſicke lies:
I beare no hatred, bleſſed man: for loe
My intereſſion likewiſe ſteads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, reſt homely in thy drift,
Riddling confeſſion, findes but riddling ſhrift.

Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Loue is ſet,
On the faire daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers, ſo hers is ſet on mine;
And all combin'd, ſaue what thou muſt combine
By holy marriage: when and where, and how,
We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell thee as we paſſe, but this I pray,
That thou conſent to marrie vs to day.

Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is heere?
Is Roſaline that thou didſt Loue ſo deare
So ſoone forſaken? young mens Loue then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Ieſu Maria, what a deale of brine
Hath waſht thy ſallow cheekes for Roſaline?
How much ſalt water throwne away in waſt,
To ſeaſon Loue that of it doth not taſt.
The Sun not yet thy ſighes, from heauen clearers,
Thy old grones yet ringing in my auncient eares:
Lo here vpon thy cheeke the ſtaine doth ſit,
Of an old teare that is not waſht off yet.
If ere thou waſt thy ſelfe, and theſe woes thine,
Thou and theſe woes, were all for Roſaline.
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this ſentence then,
Women may fall, when there's no ſtrength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'ſt me oft for louing Roſaline.

Fri. For doting, not for louing pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'ſt me bury Loue.

Fri. Not in a graue,
To lay one in, another out to haue.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Loue now
Doth grace for grace, and Loue for Loue allow:
The other did not ſo.

Fri. O ſhe knew well,
Thy Loue did read by rote, that could not ſpell:
But come young wauerer, come goe with me,
In one reſpect, Ile thy aſſiſtant be:
For this alliance may ſo happy prooue,
To turne your houſholds rancor to pure Loue.

Rom. O let vs hence, I ſtand on ſudden haſt.

Fri. Wiſely and ſlow, they ſtumble that run faſt.

Exeunt

Enter Benuolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the deuile ſhould this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I ſpoke with his man.

Mer. Why that ſame pale hard-hearted wench, that Roſaline torments him ſo, that he will ſure run mad.

Ben. Tibalt, the kinſman to old Capulet, hath ſent a Letter to his Fathers houſe.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will anſwere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may anſwere a Letter.

Ben. Nay, he will anſwere the Letters Maiſter how he dares, being dared.

Mer Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead ſtab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the eare with a Loue ſong, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boyes but-ſhaft, and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why what is Tibalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh he's the Courageous Captaine of Complements: he fights as you ſing prickſong, keeps time, diſtance, and proportion, he reſts his minum, one, two, and the third in your boſom: the very butcher of a ſilk button a Duelliſt: a Duelliſt: a Gentleman of the very firſt houſe of the firſt and ſecond cauſe: ah the immortall Paſſado the Punto reuerſo, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of ſuch antique liſping affecting phantacies, theſe new tuners of accent: Ieſu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandſire, that we ſhould be thus afflicted with theſe ſtrange flies: theſe faſhion Mongers, theſe pardon mee's, who ſtand ſo much on the new forme, that they cannot ſit at eaſe on the old bench. O their bones, their bones.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his Roe, like a dryed Herring. O flesh, flesh, how art thou fiſhified? Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his Lady, was a kitchen wench, marrie ſhe had a better Loue to berime her: Dido a dowdie, Cleopatra a Gipſie, Helen and Hero, hildings and Harlots: Thiſbie a gray eie or ſo, but not to the purpoſe. Signior Romeo, Bon iour, there's a French ſalutation to your

French slop: you gaue vs the the counterfait fairely last night.

Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I giue you?

Mer. The slip sir, the slip, can you not conceiue?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my businesse was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may straine curtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning to curtsie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most curteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of curtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flowr'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this iest, now till thou hast worne out thy Pump, that when the single sole of it is worne, the iest may remaine after the wearing, sole-singular.

Rom. O single sol'd iest,
Soly singular for the singlenesse.

Mer. Come betweene vs good Benuolio, my wits faints.

Rom Swits and spurs,
Swits and spurs, or Ile crie a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Goose chase, I am done: For thou hast more of the Wild-Goose in one of thy wits, then I am sure I haue in my whole fiue. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou wast neuer with mee for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom. Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very Bitter-sweeting,
It is a most sharpe sawce.

Rom. And is it not well seru'd into a Sweet-Goose?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an inch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proues thee farre and wide, a broad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Loue, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo: now art thou what thou art by Art as well as by Nature, for this driueling Loue is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling vp and downe to hid his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desir'st me to stop in my tale against the hare.

Ben. Thou would'st else haue made thy tale large. (haire.

Mer. O thou art deceiu'd, I would haue made it short, or I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupie the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare.
A saile, a saile.

Mer. Two, two: a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon.

Nur. My Fan Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face?
For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer God ye gooden faire Gentlewoman.

Nur. Is it gooden?

Mer. Tis no lesse I tell you: for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now vpon the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out vpon you: what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
That God hath made, himselfe to mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to, mar quoth a Gentleman: can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you: but young Romeo will be elder when you haue found him, then he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nur. You say well.

Mer. Yea is the worst well,
Very well tooke: I faith, wisely, wisely.

Nur. If you be he sir,
I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will endite him to some Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So ho.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No Hare sir, vnlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something stale and hoare ere it be spent.
An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.
But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent.
Romeo will you come to your Fathers? We'le to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell ancient Lady:
Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benuolio.

Nur. I pray you sir, what sawcie Merchant was this that was so full of his roperie?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurse, that loues to heare himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, then he will stand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a speake any thing against me, Ile take him downe, & a were lustier then he is, and entertaine such iacks: and if I cannot, Ile finde those that shall: scurule knaue, I am none of his flurt-gils, I am none of his skaines-mates, and thou must stand by too and suffer euery knaue to vse me at his pleasure.

Pet. I saw no man vse you at his pleasure: if I had, my weapon should quickly haue beene out, I warrant you, I dare draw as soone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur. Now afore God, I am so vext, that euery part about me quiuers, skuruy knaue: pray you sir a word: and as I told you, my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what she bid me say, I will keepe to my selfe: but first let me tell ye, if ye should leade her in a fooles paradise, as they say, it were a very grosse kind of behauiour, as they say: for the Gentlewoman is yong: & therefore, if you should deale double with her, truely it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Nur. Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I protest vnto thee.

Nur. Good heart, and yfaith I will tell her as much: Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not marke me?

Nur. I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which (as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer. (afternoone.

Rom. Bid her deuise some meanes to come to shrift this
And there she shall at Frier Laurence Cell
Be shriu'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Go too, I say you shall.

Nur.

Nur. This afternoone sir? well she shall be there.

Ro. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall,
Within this houre my man shall be with thee,
And bring thee Cords made like a tackled staire,
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy,
Must be my conuoy in the secret night.
Farewell,be trustie and Ile quite thy paines:
Farewell,commend me to thy Mistresse.

Nur. Now God in heauen blesse thee:harke you sir,

Rom. What saist thou my deare Nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret, did you nere heare say two may keepe counsell putting one away.

Ro. Warrant thee my man as true as steele.

Nur. Well sir,my Mistresse is the sweetest Lady,Lord, Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne,one Paru,that would faine lay knife aboard: but she good soule had as leeue a see Toade,a very Toade as see him: I anger her sometimes,and tell her that Paru is the properer man, but Ile warrant you,when I say so, shee lookes as pale as any clout in the versall world. Doth not Rosemarie and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. I Nurse,what of that? Both with an R

Nur. A mocker that's the dogsname. R. is for the no, I know it begins with some other letter, and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemary, that it would do you good to heare it.

Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.

Nur. I a thousand times. Peter?

Pet. Anon.

Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Iuliet.

Iul. The clocke strook nine,when I did send the Nurse,
In halfe an houre she promised to returne,
Perchance she cannot meete him:that's not so:
Oh she is lame, Loues Herauld should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides then the Sunnes beames,
Driuing backe shadowes ouer lowring hils:
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doues draw Loue,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings:
Now is the Sun vpon the highmost hill
Of this dayes iourney,and from nine till twelue,
I three long houres,yet she is not come.
Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my sweete Loue,
And his to me,but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwieldie,slow,heauy,and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse.

O God she comes,O hony Nurse what newes?
Hast thou met with him?send thy man away.

Nur. Peter stay at the gate.

Iul. Now good sweete Nurse:
O Lord,why lookest thou sad?
Though newes,be sad,yet tell them merrily.
If good thou sham'st the musicke of sweet newes,
By playing it to me,with so sower a face.

Nur. I am a weary,giue me leaue awhile,
Fie how my bones ake,what a iaunt haue I had?

Iul. I would thou had'st my bones,and I thy newes:
Nay come I pray thee speake good good Nurse speake.

Nur. Iesu what haste?can you not stay a while?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?

Iul. How art thou out of breath,when thou hast breth
To say to me,that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,
Is longer then the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy newes good or bad?answere to that,
Say either,and Ile stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied,is't good or bad?

Nur. Well, you haue made a simple choice, you know not how to chuse a man: Romeo,no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excells all mens, and for a hand,and a foote,and a body, though they be not to be talkt on,yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of courtesie,but Ile warrant him as gentle a Lambe: go thy waies wench,serue God. What haue you din'd at home?

Iul. No no: but all this this did I know before
What saies he of our marriage? what of that?

Nur. Lord how my head akes,what a head haue I?
It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.
My backe a'tother side,o my backe,my backe:
Beshrew your heart for sending me about
To catch my death with iaunting vp and downe.

Iul. I'faith:I am sorrie that thou art so well.
Sweet sweet,sweet Nurse,tell me what saies my Loue?

Nur. Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman,
And a courtious,and a kind,and a handsome,
And I warrant a vertuous:where is your Mother?

Iul. Where is my Mother?
Why she is within,where should she be?
How oddly thou repli'st:
Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman:
Where is your Mother?

Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you so hot?marrie come vp I trow,
Is this the Poultis for my aking bones?
Henceforward do your messages your selfe.

Iul. Heere's such a coile,come what saies Romeo?

Nur. Haue you got leaue to go to shrift to day?

Iul. I haue

Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Lawrence Cell,
There staies a Husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood vp in your cheekes,
They'le be in Scarlet straight at any newes:
Hie you to Church,I must an other way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Loue
Must clime a birds nest Soone when it is darke:
I am the drudge,and toile in your delight:
But you shall beare the burthen soone at night.
Go lie to dinner hie you to the Cell.

Iul. Hie to high Fortune,honest Nurse,farewell. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heauens vpon this holy act,
That after houres,with sorrow chide vs not.

Rom. Amen,amen,but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervaile the exchange of ioy
That one short minute giues me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then Loue-deuouring death do what he dare,
It is enough,I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights haue violent endes,
And in their triumph die like fire and powder;
Which as they kisse consume. The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his owne deliciousnesse,
And in the taste confounds the appetite.
Therefore Loue moderately,long Loue doth so,
Too swift arriues as tardie as too slow.

Enter Iuliet.

Here comes the Lady. Oh so light a foot
Will nere weare out the euerlasting flint,

A Louer may bestride the Gossamours,
That ydles in the wanton Summer ayre,
And yet not fall,so light is vanitie.
Iul. Good euen to my ghostly Confessor.
Fri. Romeo shall thanke thee Daughter for vs both.
Iul. As much to him,else is his thanks too much.
Fri. Ah Iuliet,if the measure of thy ioy
Be heapt like mine,and that thy skill be more
To blason it,then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour ayre,and let rich musickes tongue,
Vnfold the imagin'd happinesse that both
Receiue in either,by this deere encounter.
Iul. Conceit more rich in matter then in words,
Brags of his substance,not of Ornament:
They are but beggers that can count their worth,
But my true Loue is growne to such such excesse,
I cannot sum vp some of halfe my wealth.
Fri. Come,come with me,& we will make short worke,
For by your leaues,you shall not stay alone,
Till holy Church incorporate two in one.

Enter Mercutio, Benuolio, and men.

Ben. I pray thee good Mercutio lets retire,
The day is hot,the Capulets abroad:
And if we meet, we shal not scape a brawle,for now these hot dayes,is the mad blood stirring.
Mer. Thou art like one of these fellowes,that when he enters the confines of a Tauerne,claps me his Sword vpon the Table,and sayes,God send me no need of thee: and by the operation of the second cup,drawes him on the Drawer,when indeed there is no need.
Ben. Am I like such a Fellow?
Mer. Come,come,thou art as hot a Iacke in thy mood, as any in Italie: and as soone moued to be moodie, and as soone moodie to be mou'd.
Ben. And what too?
Mer. Nay, and there were two such, we should haue none shortly,for one would kill the other:thou, why thou wilt quarrell with a man that hath a haire more, or a haire lesse in his beard,then thou hast:thou wilt quarrell with a man for cracking Nuts, hauing no other reason, but because thou hast hasell eyes: what eye, but such an eye, would spie out such a quarrell? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head hath bin beaten as addle as an egge for quarrelling:thou hast quarrel'd with a man for coffing in the street, because he hath wakened thy Dog that hath laine asleepe in the Sun. Did'st thou not fall out with a Tailor for wearing his new Doublet before Easter? with another,for tying his new shooes with old Ribaud,and yet thou wilt Tutor me from quarrelling?
Ben. And I were so apt to quarell as thou art,any man should buy the Fee-simple of my life, for an houre and a quarter.
Mer. The Fee-simple? O simple.

Enter Tybalt, Petruchio, and others.

Tib. By my head here comes the Capulets.
Mer. By my heele I care not.
Tyb. Follow me close,for I will speake to them.
Gentlemen,Good den,a word with one of you.
Mer. And but one word with one of vs?couple it with something,make it a word and a blow.
Tib. You shall find me apt inough to that sir, and you will giue me occasion.
Mercu. Could you not take some occasion without giuing?
Tib. Mercutio thou consort'st with Romeo.
Mer. Consort? what dost thou make vs Minstrels? & thou make Minstrels of vs,looke to heare nothing but discords:heere's my fiddlestick,heere's that shall make you dance. Come consort.
Ben. We talke here in the publike haunt of men
Either withdraw vnto some priuate place,
Or reason coldly of your greeuances:
Or else depart,here all eies gaze on vs.
Mer. Mens eyes were made to looke,and let them gaze
I will not budge for no mans pleasure I.

Enter Romeo.

Tib. Well peace be with you sir,here comes my man.
Mer. But I'le be hang'd sir if he weare your Liuery.
Marry go before to field,heele be your follower,
Your worship in that sense,may call him man.
Tib. Romeo,the loue I beare thee,can afford
No better terme then this: Thou art a Villaine.
Rom. Tybalt,the reason that I haue to loue thee,
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage
To such a greeting:Villaine am I none;
Therefore farewell,I see thou know'st me not.
Tib. Boy,this shall not excuse the iniuries
That thou hast done me,therefore turne and draw.
Rom. I do protest I neuer iniur'd thee,
But lou'd thee better then thou can'st deuise:
Till thou shalt know the reason of my loue,
And so good Capulet,which name I tender
As dearely as my owne,be satisfied.
Mer. O calme,dishonourable,vile submission:
Alla Stoccatho carries it away.
Tybalt,you Rat catcher,will you walke?
Tib. What wouldst thou haue with me?
Mer. Good King of Cats,nothing but one of your nine liues,that I meane to make bold withall,and as you shall vse me hereafter dry beate the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your Sword out of his Pilcher by the eares? Make haste,least mine be about your eares ere it be out.
Tib. I am for you.
Rom. Gentle Mercutio,put thy Rapier vp.
Mer. Come sir,your Passado.
Rom. Draw Benuolio,beat downe their weapons:
Gentlemen,for shame forbeare this outrage,
Tybalt,Mercutio,the Prince expressly hath Forbidden bandying in Verona streetes.
Hold Tybalt,good Mercutio.

Exit Tybalt.

Mer. I am hurt.
A plague a both the Houses,I am sped:
Is he gone and hath nothing?
Ben. What art thou hurt?
Mer. I,I,a scratch,a scratch,marry 'tis inough,
Where is my Page?go Villaine fetch a Surgeon.
Rom. Courage man,the hurt cannot be much.
Mer. No 'tis not so deepe as a well, nor so wide as a Church doore,but 'tis inough,'twill serue: aske for me to morrow,and you shall find me a graue man. I am peppered I warrant,for this world: a plague a both your houses. What,a Dog, a Rat, a Mouse,a Cat to scratch a man to death: a Braggart,a Rogue,a Villaine, that fights by the booke of Arithmeticke, why the deu'le came you betweene vs? I was hurt vnder your arme.
Rom. I thought all for the best.
Mer. Helpe me into some house Benuolio,
Or I shall faint:a plague a both your houses.
They haue made wormes meat of me.

I haue it, and ſoundly to your Houſes. Exit.

Rom. This Gentleman the Princes neere Alie,
My very Friend hath got his mortall hurt
In my behalfe, my reputation ſtain'd
With Tybalts ſlaunder, Tybalt that an houre
Hath beene my Cozin: O Sweet Iuliet,
Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,
And in my temper ſoftned Valours ſteele.

Enter Benuolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, braue Mercutio's is dead,
That Gallant ſpirit hath aſpir'd the Cloudes,
Which too vntimely here did ſcorne the earth.

Rom. This daies blacke Fate, on mo daies doth depend,
This but begins, the wo others muſt end.

Enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the Furious Tybalt backe againe.

Rom. He gon in triumph, and Mercutio ſlaine?
Away to heauen reſpectiue Lenitie,
And fire and Fury, be my conduct now.
Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe
That late thou gau'ſt me, for Mercutios ſoule
Is but a little way aboue our heads,
Staying for thine to keepe him companie:
Either thou or I, or both, muſt goe with him.

Tib. Thou wretched Boy that didſt conſort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This ſhall determine that.

They fight. Tybalt falles.

Ben. Romeo, away be gone:
The Citizens are vp, and Tybalt ſlaine,
Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away.

Rom. O I am Fortunes foole.

Ben. Why doſt thou ſtay?

Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens.

Cit. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?
Tibalt that Murtherer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Cit. Vp ſir go with me:
I charge thee in the Princes names obey.

Enter Prince, old Montague, Capulet, their Wiues and all.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this Fray?

Ben. O Noble Prince, I can diſcouer all
The vnluckie Manage of this fatall brall:
There lies the man ſlaine by young Romeo,
That ſlew thy kinſman braue Mercutio.

Cap. Wi. Tybalt, my Cozin? O my Brothers Child,
O Prince, O Cozin, Husband, O the blood is ſpild
Of my deare kinſman. Prince as thou art true,
For blood of ours, ſhed blood of Mountague.
O Cozin, Cozin.

Prin. Benuolio, who began this Fray?

Ben. Tybalt here ſlaine, whom Romeo's hand did ſlay,
Romeo that ſpoke him faire, bid him bethinke
How nice the Quarrell was, and vrg'd withall
Your high diſpleaſure: all this vttered,
With gentle breath, calme looke, knees humbly bow'd
Could not take truce with the vnruly ſpleene
Of Tybalts deafe to peace, but that he Tilts
With Peireing ſteele at bold Mercutio's breaſt,
Who all as hot, turnes deadly point to point,
And with a Martiall ſcorne, with one hand beates
Cold death aſide, and with the other ſends
It back to Tybalt, whoſe dexterity
Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud,
Hold Friends, Friends part, and ſwifter then his tongue,
His aged arme, beats downe their fatall points,
And twixt them ruſhes, vnderneath whoſe arme,
An enuious thruſt from Tybalt, hit the life
Of ſtout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled.
But by and by comes backe to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertained Reuenge,
And too't they goe like lightning, for ere I
Could draw to part them, was ſtout Tybalt ſlaine:
And as he fell, did Romeo turne and flie:
This is the truth, or let Benuolio die.

Cap. Wi. He is a kinſman to the Mountague,
Affection makes him falſe, he ſpeakes not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this blacke ſtrife,
And all thoſe twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for Iuſtice, which thou Prince muſt giue:
Romeo ſlew Tybalt, Romeo muſt not liue.

Prin. Romeo ſlew him, he ſlew Mercutio,
Who now the price of his deare blood doth owe.

Cap. Not Romeo Prince, he was Mercutios Friend,
His fault concludes, but what the law ſhould end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And for that offence,
Immediately we doe exile him hence:
I haue an intereſt in your hearts proceeding:
My blood for your rude brawles doth lie a bleeding,
But I'le Amerce you with ſo ſtrong a fine,
That you ſhall all repent the loſſe of mine.
It will be deafe to pleading and excuſes,
Nor teares, nor prayers ſhall purchaſe our abuſes.
Therefore vſe none, let Romeo hence in haſt,
Elſe when he is found, that houre is his laſt.
Beare hence this body, and attend our will:
Mercy not Murders, pardoning thoſe that kill.

Exeunt.

Enter Iuliet alone.

Iul. Gallop apace, you fiery footed ſteedes,
Towards Phœbus lodging, ſuch a Wagoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the weſt,
And bring in Cloudie night immediately.
Spred thy cloſe Curtaine Loue-performing night,
That run-awayes eyes may wincke, and Romeo
Leape to theſe armes, vntalkt of and vnſeene,
Louers can ſee to doe their Amorous rights,
And by their owne Beauties: or if Loue be blind,
It beſt agrees with night: come ciuill night,
Thou ſober ſuted Matron all in blacke,
And learne me how to looſe a winning match,
Plaid for a paire of ſtainleſſe Maidenhoods.
Hood my vnman'd blood baiting in my Cheekes,
With thy Blacke mantle, till ſtrange Loue grow bold,
Thinke true Loue acted ſimple modeſtie:
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie vpon the wings of night
Whiter then new Snow vpon a Rauens backe:
Come gentle night, come louing blacke brow'd night,
Giue me my Romeo, and when I ſhall die,
Take him and cut him out in little ſtarres,
And he will make the Face of heauen ſo fine,
That all the world will be in Loue with night,
And pay no worſhip to the Garniſh Sun.
O I haue bought the Manſion of a Loue,
But not poſſeſt it, and though I am ſold,
Not yet enioy'd, ſo tedious is this day,
As is the night before ſome Feſtiuall,

To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not weare them, O here comes my Nurse.

Enter Nurse with cords.

And she brings newes and every tongue that speaks
But Romeos, name, speakes heauenly eloquence:
Now Nurse, what newes? what hast thou there?
The Cords that Romeo bid thee fetch?
Nur. I, I, the Cords.
Iuls. Ay me, what newes?
Why dost thou wring thy hands.
Nur. A welady, hee's dead, hee's dead,
We are vndone Lady, we are vndone.
Alacke the day, hee's gone, hee's kil'd, he's dead.
Iul. Can heauen be so enuious?
Nur. Romeo can,
Though heauen cannot. O Romeo, Romeo,
Who euer would haue thought it Romeo.
Iuli. What diuell art thou,
That dost torment me thus?
This torture should be roar'd in dismall hell,
Hath Romeo slaine himselfe? say thou but I,
And that bare vowell I shall poyson more
Then the death-darting eye of Cockatrice,
I am not I, if there be such an I.
Or those eyes shot, that makes thee answere I:
If he be slaine say I, or if not, no.
Briefe, sounds, determine of my weale or wo.
Nur. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,
God saue the marke, here on his manly brest,
A pitteous Coarse, a bloody piteous Coarse:
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood,
All in gore blood, I sounded at the sight.
Iul O breake my heart,
Poore Banckrout breake at once,
To prison eyes, nere looke on libertie.
Vile earth to earth resigne, end motion here,
And thou and Romeo presse on heauie beere.
Nur. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best Friend I had:
O curteous Tybalt honest Gentleman,
That euer I should liue to see thee dead.
Iul What storme is this that blowes so contrarie?
Is Romeo slaughtred? and is Tybalt dead?
My deerest Cozen, and my dearer Lord:
Then dreadfull Trumpet sound the generall doome,
For who is liuing, if those two aregone;
Nur. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished,
Romeo that kil'd him, he is banished.
Iul. O God!
Did Rom'os hand shed Tybalts blood
It did, it did, alas the day, it did,
Nur. O Serpent heart, hid with a flowring face.
Iul. Did euer Dragon keepe so faire a Caue?
Beautifull Tyrant, fiend Angelicall:
Rauenous Doue-feather'd Raven,
Woluish-rauening Lambe,
Dispised substance of Diuinest show:
Iust opposite to what thou iustly seem'st,
A damne Saint, an Honourable Villaine:
O Nature! what hadst thou to doe in hell,
When thou did'st bower the spirit of a fiend
In mortall paradise of such sweet flesh?
Was euer booke containing such vile matter
So fairely bound? O that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous Pallace.
Nur. There's no trust, no faith, no honestie in men,
All periur'd, all forsworne, all naught, all dissemblers,
Ah where's my man? giue me some Aqua-vitæ?
These griefes, these woes, these sorrowes make me old:
Shame come to Romeo.
Iul. Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish, he was not borne to shame:
Vpon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throane where Honour may be Crown'd
Sole Monarch of the vniuersall earth.
O what a beast was I to chide him?
Nur. Will you speake well of him,
That kil'd your Cozen?
Iul. Shall I speake ill of him that is my husband?
Ah poore my Lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name,
When I thy three houres wife haue mangled it.
But wherefore Villaine did'st thou kill my Cozin?
That Villaine Cozin would haue kil'd my husband:
Backe fooliish teares, backe to your natiue spring,
Your tributarie drops belong to woe,
Which you mistaking offer vp to ioy:
My husband liues that Tybalt would haue slaine,
And Tibalt dead that would haue slaine my husband:
All this is comfort, wherefore weepe I then?
Some words there was worser then Tybalts death
That murdered me, I would forget it faine,
But oh, it presses to my memory.
Like damned guilty deedes to sinners minds,
Tybalt is dead and Romeo banished:
That banished, that one word ban shed,
Hath slaine ten thousand Tybalts: Tybalts death
Was woe inough if it had ended there:
Or if sower woe delights in fellowship,
And needly will be ranke with other griefes,
Why followed not when she said Tybalts dead,
Thy Father or thy Mother, nay or both,
Which moderne lamentation might haue mou'd.
But which a rere-ward following Tybalts death
Romeo is banished to speake that word,
Is Father, Mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Iuliet,
All slaine, all dead. Romeo is banished,
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that words death, no words can that woe sound.
Where is my Father and my Mother Nurse?
Nur. Weeping and wailing ouer Tybalts Coarse,
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.
Iu. Wash they his wounds with teares: mine shal be spent
When theirs are drie for Romeo's banishment.
Take vp those Cordes, poore ropes you are beguil'd,
Both you and I for Romeo is exild:
He made you for a high-way to my bed,
But I a Maid, die Maiden widowed
Come Cord, come Nurse, Ile to my wedding bed,
And death not Romeo, take my Maiden head.
Nur. Hie to your Chamber, Ile find Romeo
To comfort you, I wot well where he is:
Harke ye your Romeo will be heere at night,
Ile to him, he is hid at Laurences Cell.
Iul. O find him, giue this Ring to my true Knight,
And bid him come, to take his last farewell.

Exit.

Enter Frier and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo come forth,
Come forth thou fearfull man,
Affliction is enamor'd of thy parts
And thou art wedded to calamitie.
Rom. Father what newes?

What

What is the Princes Doome?
What ſorrow craues acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?
Fri. Too familiar
Is my deare Sonne with ſuch ſowre Company:
I bring thee tydings of the Princes Doome.
Rom. What leſſe then Doomeſday,
Is the Princes Doome?
Fri. A gentler iudgement vaniſht from his lips,
Not bodies death, but bodies baniſhment.
Rom. Ha, baniſhment? be mercifull, ſay death:
For exile hath more terror in his looke,
Much more then death: do not ſay baniſhment.
Fri. Here from Verona art thou baniſhed:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.
Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,
But Purgatorie, Torture, hell it ſelfe:
Hence baniſhed, is baniſht from the world,
And worlds exile is death. Then baniſhed,
Is death, miſtearm'd, calling death baniſhed,
Thou cut'ſt my head off with a golden Axe,
And ſmil'ſt vpon the ſtroke that murders me.
Fri. O deadly ſin, O rude vnthankefulneſſe!
Thy fault our Law calles death, but the kind Prince
Taking thy part, hath ruſht aſide the Law,
And turn'd that blacke word death, to baniſhment.
This is deare mercy, and thou ſeeſt it not.
Rom. 'Tis Torture, and not mercy, heauen is here
Where Iuliet liues, and euery Cat and Dog,
And little Mouſe, euery vnworthy thing
Liue here in Heauen and may looke on her,
But Romeo may not. More Validitie,
More Honourable ſtate, more Courtſhip liues
In carrion Flies, then Romeo: they may ſeaze
On the white wonder of deare Iuliets hand,
And ſteale immortall bleſſing from her lips,
Who euen in pure and veſtall modeſtie
Still bluſh, as thinking their owne kiſſes ſin.
This may Flies doe, when I from this muſt flie,
And ſaiſt thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not, he is baniſhed.
Had'ſt thou no poyſon mixt, no ſharpe ground knife,
No ſudden meane of death, though neuer ſo meane,
But baniſhed to kill me? Baniſhed?
O Frier, the damned vſe that word in hell:
Howlings attend it, how haſt thou the hart
Being a Diuine, a Ghoſtly Confeſſor,
A Sin-Abſoluer, and my Friend profeſt:
To mangle me with that word, baniſhed?
Fri. Then fond Mad man, heare me ſpeake.
Rom. O thou wilt ſpeake againe of baniſhment.
Fri. Ile giue thee Armour to keepe off that word,
Aduerſities ſweete milke, Philoſophie,
To comfort thee, though thou art baniſhed.
Rom. Yet baniſhed? hang vp Philoſophie!
Vnleſſe Philoſophie can make a Iuliet,
Diſplant a Towne, reuerſe a Princes Doome,
It helpes not, it preuailes not, talke no more.
Fri. O then I ſee, that Mad men haue no eares.
Rom. How ſhould they,
When wiſemen haue no eyes?
Fri. Let me diſpaire with thee of thy eſtate,
Rom. Thou can'ſt not ſpeake of that thou doſt not feele,
Were thou as young as Iuliet my Loue,
An houre but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me baniſhed,
Then might'ſt thou ſpeake,
Then might'ſt thou teare thy hayre,
And fall vpon the ground as I doe now,
Taking the meaſure of an vnmade graue.
Enter Nurſe, and knockes.
Frier. Ariſe one knockes,
Good Romeo hide thy ſelfe.
Rom. Not I,
Vnleſſe the breath of Hartſicke groanes
Miſt-like infold me from the ſearch of eyes
Knocke
Fri. Hacke how they knocke:
(Who's there) Romeo ariſe,
Thou wilt be taken, ſtay a while, ſtand vp Knocke.
Run to my ſtudy. by and by, Gods will
What ſimpleneſſe is this. I come, I come.
Knocke
Who knocks ſo hard?
Whence come you? what's your will?
Enter Nurſe.
Nur. Let me come in,
And you ſhall know my errand:
I come from Lady Iuliet.
Fri Welcome then.
Nur O holy Frier. O tell me holy Frier,
Where's my Ladies Lord? where's Romeo?
Fri. There on the ground,
With his owne teares made drunke.
Nur O he is euen in my Miſtreſſe caſe,
Iuſt in her caſe. O wofull ſimpathy:
Pittious predicament, euen ſo lies ſhe,
Blubbring and weeping, weeping and blubbring,
Stand vp, ſtand vp, ſtand and you be a man,
For Iuliets ſake, for her ſake riſe and ſtand:
Why ſhould you fall into ſo deepe an O.
Rom Nurſe.
Nur. Ah ſir, ah ſir, deaths the end of all.
Rom. Speak'ſt thou of Iuliet? how is it with her?
Doth not ſhe thinke me an old Murtherer,
Now I haue ſtain'd the Childhood of our ioy,
With blood remoued, but little from her owne?
Where is ſhe? and how doth ſhe? and what ſayes
My conceal'd Lady to our conceal'd Loue?
Nur. Oh ſhe ſayes nothing ſir, but weeps and weeps,
And now falls on her bed, and then ſtarts vp,
And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,
And then downe falls againe.
Rom. As if that name ſhot from the dead leuell of a Gun,
Did murder her, as that names curſed hand
Murdred her kinſman. Oh tell me Frier, tell me,
In what vile part of this Anatomie
Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may ſacke
The hatefull Manſion.
Fri. Hold thy deſperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy forme cries out thou art:
Thy teares are womaniſh, thy wild acts denote
The vnreaſonable Furie of a beaſt.
Vnſeemely woman, in a ſeeming man,
And ill beſeeming beaſt in ſeeming both,
Thou haſt amaz'd me. By my holy order,
I thought thy diſpoſition better temper'd.
Haſt thou ſlaine Tybalt? wilt thou ſlay thy ſelfe?
And ſlay thy Lady, that in thy life lies,
By doing damned hate vpon thy ſelfe?
Why rail'ſt thou on thy birth? the heauen and earth?

Since

Since birth, and heauen and earth, all three do meete
In thee at once, which thou at once would'ſt looſe.
Fie, fie, thou ſham'ſt thy ſhape, thy loue, thy wit,
Which like a Vſurer abound'ſt in all:
And vſeſt none in that true vſe indeed,
Which ſhould bedecke thy ſhape, thy loue, thy wit:
Thy Noble ſhape, is but a forme of waxe,
Digreſſing from the Valour of a man,
Thy deare Loue ſworne but hollow periurie,
Killing that Loue which thou haſt vow'd to cheriſh.
Thy wit, that Ornament, to ſhape and Loue,
Miſhapen in the conduct of them both
Like powder in a ſkilleſſe Souldiers flaske,
Is ſet a fire by thine owne ignorance,
And thou diſmembred with thine owne defence.
What, rowſe thee man, thy Iuliet is aliue,
For whoſe deare ſake thou waſt but lately dead,
There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee.
But thou ſlew'ſt Tybalt, there art thou happie.
The law that threatned death became thy Friend,
And turn'd it to exile, there art thou happy.
A packe or bleſſing light vpon thy backe,
Happineſſe Courts thee in her beſt array,
But like a miſhaped and ſullen wench,
Thou putteſt vp thy Fortune and thy Loue:
Take heed, take heed, for ſuch die miſerable.
Goe get thee to thy Loue as was decreed,
Aſcend her Chamber, hence and comfort her:
But looke thou ſtay not till the watch be ſet,
For then thou canſt not paſſe to Mantua,
Where thou ſhalt liue till we can finde a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of thy Prince, and call thee backe,
With twenty hundred thouſand times more ioy
Then thou went'ſt forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurſe, commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her haſten all the houſe to bed,
Which heauy ſorrow makes them apt vnto.
Romeo is comming.

Nur. O Lord, I could haue ſtaid here all night,
To heare good counſell: oh what learning is!
My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.

Rom. Do ſo, and bid my Sweete prepare to chide.

Nur. Heere ſir, a Ring ſhe bid me giue you ſir:
Hie you, make haſt, for it growes very late.

Rom. How well my comfort is reuiu'd by this.

Fri. Go hence,
Goodnight, and here ſtands all your ſtate:
Either be gone before the watch be ſet,
Or by the breake of day diſguis'd from hence,
Soiourne in Mantua, Ile find out your man,
And he ſhall ſignifie from time to time,
Euery good hap to you, that chaunces heere:
Giue me thy hand, 'tis late, farewell, goodnight.

Rom. But that a ioy paſt ioy, calls out on me,
It were a griefe, ſo briefe to part with thee:
Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter old Capulet, his Wife and Paris.

Cap. Things haue falne out ſir ſo vnluckily,
That we haue had no time to moue our Daughter:
Looke you, ſhe Lou'd her kinſman Tybalt dearely,
And ſo did I. Well, we were borne to die.
'Tis very late, ſhe'l not come downe to night:
I promiſe you, but for your company,
I would haue bin a bed an houre ago.

Par. Theſe times of woe, affoord no times to woe
Madam goodnight, commend me to your Daughter.

Lady. I will, and know her mind early to morrow,
To night, ſhe is mewed vp to her heauineſſe.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a deſperate tender
Of my Childes loue: I thinke ſhe will be rul'd
In all reſpects by me: nay more, I doubt it not
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed,
Acquaint her here, of my Sonne Paris Loue,
And bid her, marke you me, on Wendſday next,
But ſoft, what day is this?

Par. Monday my Lord.

Cap. Monday, ha ha: well Wendſday is too ſoone.
A Thurſday let it be: a Thurſday tell her,
She ſhall be married to this Noble Earle:
Will you be ready? do you like this haſt?
Weele keepe no great adoe, a Friend or two,
For harke you, Tybalt being ſlaine ſo late,
It may be thought we held him carelеſſly,
Being our kinſman, if we reuell much:
Therefore weele haue ſome halfe a dozen Friends,
And there an end. But what ſay you to Thurſday?

Par. My Lord,
I would that Thurſday were to morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone, a Thurſday, be it then:
Go you to Iuliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her wife, againſt this wedding day.
Farewell my Lord, light to my Chamber hoa,
Afore me, it is ſo late, that we may call it early by and by
Goodnight. Exeunt

Enter Romeo and Iuliet aloft.

Iul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet neere day:
It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
That pierc'd the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly ſhe ſings on yond Pomgranet tree,
Beleeue me Loue, it was the Nightingale.

Rom. It was the Larke the Herauld of the Morne:
No Nightingale: looke Loue what enuious ſtreakes
Do lace the ſeuering Cloudes in yonder Eaſt:
Nights Candles are burnt out, and Iocond day
Stands tipto on the miſtie Mountaines tops,
I muſt be gone and liue, or ſtay and die.

Iul. Yond light is not daylight, I know it I:
It is ſome Meteor that the Sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.
Therefore ſtay yet, thou need'ſt not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be tane, let me be put to death,
I am content, ſo thou wilt haue it ſo.
Ile ſay yon gray is not the mornings eye,
'Tis but the pale reflexe of Cynthias brow.
Nor that is not Larke whoſe notes do beate
The vaulty heauen ſo high aboue our heads,
I haue more care to ſtay, then will to go:
Come death and welcome, Iuliet will it ſo.
How ift my ſoule, lets talke, it is not day.

Iul. It is, it is, hie hence be gone away:
It is the Larke that ſings ſo out of tune,
Straining harſh Diſcords, and vnpleaſing Sharps.
Some ſay the Larke makes ſweete Diuiſion;
This doth not ſo: for ſhe diuideth vs.
Some ſay, the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since arme from arme that voyce doth vs affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Hunt-vp to the day,
O now be gone, more light and light growes.
Rom. More light & light, more darke & darke our woes.

Enter Madam and Nurse.

Nur. Madam.
Iul. Nurse.
Nur. Your Lady Mother is comming to your chamber,
The day is broke, be wary, looke about.
Iul. Then window let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.
Iul. Art thou gone so? Loue, Lord, ay Husband, Friend,
I must heare from thee euery day in the houre,
For in a minute there are many dayes,
O by this count I shall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell:
I will omit no opportunitie,
That may conuey my greetings Loue, to thee.
Iul. O thinkest thou we shall euer meet againe?
Rom. I doubt it not, and all these woes shall serue
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Iulet. O God! I haue an ill Diuining soule,
Me thinkes I see thee now, thou art so lowe,
As one dead in the bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eye-sight failes, or thou look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me Loue, in my eye so do you:
Drie sorrow drinkes our blood. Adue, adue. Exit.
Iul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? be fickle Fortune:
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But send him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter, are you vp?
Iul. Who is't that calls? Is it my Lady Mother.
Is she not downe so late, or vp so early?
What vnaccustom'd cause procures her hither?
Lad. Why how now Iuliet?
Iul. Madam I am not well.
Lad. Euermore weeping for your Cozins death?
What wilt thou wash him from his graue with teares?
And if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him liue:
Therefore haue done, some griefe shewes much of Loue,
But much of griefe, shewes still some want of wit.
Iul. Yet let me weepe, for such a feeling losse.
Lad. So shall you feele the losse, but not the Friend
Which you weepe for.
Iul. Feeling so the losse,
I cannot choose but euer weepe the Friend.
La. Well Girle, thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the Villaine liues which slaughter'd him.
Iul. What Villaine, Madam?
Lad. That same Villaine Romeo.
Iul. Villaine and he, be many Miles assunder:
God pardon, I doe with all my heart:
And yet no man like he, doth grieue my heart.
Lad. That is because the Traitor liues.
Iul. I Madam from the reach of these my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.
Lad. We will haue vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more, Ile send to one in Mantua,
Where that same banisht Run-agate doth liue,
Shall giue him such an vnaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soone keepe Tybalt company:
And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.
Iul. Indeed I neuer shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart so for a kinsman vext:
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poyson, I would temper it;
That Romeo should vpon receit thereof,
Soone sleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors
To heare him nam'd, and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Loue I bore my Cozin,
Vpon his body that hath slaughter'd him.
Mo. Find thou the meanes, and Ile find such a man.
But now Ile tell thee ioyfull tidings Gyrle.
Iul. And ioy comes well, in such a needy time,
What are they, beseech your Ladyship?
Mo. Well, well, thou hast a carefull Father Child?
One who to put thee from thy heauinesse,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of ioy,
That thou expects not, nor I looke not for.
Iul. Madam in happy time, what day is this?
Mo. Marry my Child, early next Thursday morne,
The gallant, young, and Noble Gentleman,
The Countie Paris at Saint Peters Church,
Shall happily make thee a ioyfull Bride.
Iul. Now by Saint Peters Church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a ioyfull Bride.
I wonder at this haste, that I must wed
Ere he that should be Husband comes to woe:
I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam,
I will not marrie yet, and when I doe, I sweare
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate
Rather then Paris. These are newes indeed.
Mo. Here comes your Father, tell him so your selfe,
And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the Sun sets, the earth doth drizle dewe
But for the Sunset of my Brothers Sonne,
It raines downright.
How now? A Conduit Gyrle, what still in teares?
Euermore showring in one little body?
Thou counterfaits a Barke, a Sea, a Wind:
For still thy eyes, which I may call the Sea,
Do ebbe and flow with teares, the Barke thy body is
Sayling in this salt flood, the windes thy sighes,
Who raging with the teares and they with them,
Without a sudden calme will ouer set
Thy tempest tossed body. How now wife?
Haue you deliuered to her our decree?
Lady. I sir;
But she will none, she giues you thankes,
I would the foole were married to her graue.
Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you wife,
How, will she none? doth she not giue vs thanks?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her blest,
Vnworthy as she is, that we haue wrought
So worthy a Gentleman, to be her Bridegroome
Iul. Not proud you haue,
But thankfull that you haue:
Proud can I neuer be of what I haue,
But thankfull euen for hate, that is meant Loue.
Cap. How now?
How now? Chopt Logicke? what is this?
Proud, and I thanke you, and I thanke you not.
Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,
But fettle your fine ioints 'gainst Thursday next,

To

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee, on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene ſickneſſe carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.
Lady. Fie, fie, what are you mad?
Iul. Good Father, I beſeech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to ſpeake a word.
Fa. Hang thee young baggage, diſobedient wretch,
I tell thee what, get thee to Church a Thurſday,
Or never after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not anſwere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we ſcarce thought vs bleſt,
That God had lent vs but this onely Child,
But now I ſee this one is one too much,
And that we haue a curſe in having her:
Out on her Hilding.
Nur. God in heauen bleſſe her,
You are to blame my Lord to rate her ſo.
Fa. And why my Lady wiſedome hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, ſmatter with your goſſip, go.
Nur. I ſpeake no treaſon,
Father, O Godigoden,
May not one ſpeake?
Fa. Peace you mumbling ſoole,
Vtter your grauitie ore a Goſſips bowles
For here we need it not.
La. You are too hot.
Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:
Day, night, houre, ride, time, worke, play,
Alone in company, ſtill my care hath bin
To haue her matcht, and having now prouided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,
Of faire Demeanes, Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,
Stuft as they ſay with Honourable parts,
Proportion'd as ones thought would wiſh a man,
And then to haue a wretched puling ſoole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To anſwer, Ile not wed, I cannot Loue:
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But, and you will not wed, Ile pardon you.
Graze where you will, you ſhall not houſe with me:
Looke to't, thinke on't, I do not vſe to ieſt.
Thurſday is neere, lay hand on heart, aduiſe,
And you be mine, Ile giue you to my Friend:
And you be not, hang, beg, ſtraue, die in the ſtreets,
For by my ſoule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine ſhall neuer do thee good:
Truſt to't, bethinke you, Ile not be forſworne Exit.
Iuli. Is there no pittie ſitting in the Cloudes,
That ſees into the bottome of my griefe?
O ſweet my Mother caſt me not away,
Delay this marriage, for a month, a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.
Mo. Talke not to me, for Ile not ſpeake a word,
Do as thou wilt, for I haue done with thee. Exit.
Iul. O God!
O Nurſe, how ſhall this be preuented?
My Husband is on earth, my faith in heauen,
How ſhall that faith returne againe to earth,
Vnleſſe that Husband ſend it me from heauen,
By leauing earth? Comfort me, counſaile me:
Alacke, alacke, that heauen ſhould practiſe ſtratagems
Vpon ſo ſoft a ſubiect as my ſelfe.
What ſaiſt thou? haſt thou not a word of ioy?
Some comfort Nurſe.

Nur. Faith here it is,
Romeo is baniſhed, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:
Or if he do, it needs muſt be by ſtealth.
Then ſince the caſe ſo ſtands as now it doth,
I thinke it beſt you married with the Countie,
O hee's a louely Gentleman:
Romeo's a diſh-clout to him: an Eagle Madam
Hath not ſo greene, ſo quicke, ſo faire an eye
As Paris hath, beſhrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this ſecond match,
For it excels your firſt: or if it did not,
Your firſt is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As liuing here and you no vſe of him.
Iul. Speakeſt thou from thy heart?
Nur. And from my ſoule too,
Or elſe beſhrew them both.
Iul. Amen.
Nur. What?
Iul. Well, thou haſt comforted me marueilous much,
Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Hauing diſpleaſ'd my Father, to Laurence Cell,
To make confeſſion, and to be abſolu'd.
Nur. Marrie I will, and this is wiſely done.
Iul. Ancient damnation, O moſt wicked fiend!
It is more ſin to wiſh me thus forſworne,
Or to diſpraiſe my Lord with that ſame tongue
Which ſhe hath prais'd him with aboue compare,
So many thouſand times? Go Counſellor,
Thou and my boſome henceforth ſhall be twaine:
Ile to the Frier to know his remedie,
If all elſe faile, my ſelfe haue power to die. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Countie Paris.

Fri. On Thurſday ſir? the time is very ſhort.
Par My Father Capulet will haue it ſo,
And I am nothing ſlow to ſlack his haſt.
Fri. You ſay you do not know the Ladies mind?
Vneuen is the courſe, I like it not.
Pa. Immoderately ſhe weepes for Tybalts death,
And therfore haue I little talke of Loue,
For Venus ſmiles not in a houſe of teares.
Now ſir, her Father counts it dangerous
That ſhe doth giue her ſorrow ſo much ſway:
And in his wiſedome, haſtis our marriage,
To ſtop the inundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her ſelfe alone,
May be put from her by ſocietie.
Now doe you know the reaſon of this haſt?
Fri. I would I knew not why it ſhould be ſlow'd.
Looke ſir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.

Enter Iuliet.

Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.
Iul. That may be ſir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be, muſt be Loue, on Thurſday next.
Iul. What muſt be ſhall be.
Fri. That's a certaine text.
Par. Come you to make confeſſion to this Father?
Iul. To anſwere that, I ſhould confeſſe to you.
Par. Do not denie to him, that you Loue me.
Iul. I will confeſſe to you that I Loue him.
Par. So will ye, I am ſure that you Loue me.
Iul. If I do ſo, it will be of more price,
Being ſpoke behinde your backe, than to your face.
Par Poore ſoule, thy face is much abus'd with teares.

Iul. The

Iul. The teares haue got ſmall victorie by that:
For it was bad enough before their ſpight.
Par. Thou wrong'ſt it more then teares with that report.
Iul. That is no ſlaunder ſir, which is a truth,
And what I ſpake, I ſpake it to my face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou haſt ſlaundred it.
Iul. It may be ſo, for it is not mine owne.
Are you at leiſure, Holy Father now,
Or ſhall I come to you at euening Maſſe?
Fri. My leiſure ſerues me penſiue daughter now.
My Lord you muſt intreat the time alone.
Par. Godſheild: I ſhould diſturbe Deuotion,
Iuliet, on Thurſday early will I rouſe yee,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kiſſe. Exit Paru.
Iul. O ſhut the doore, and when thou haſt done ſo,
Come weepe with me, paſt hope, paſt care, paſt helpe.
Fri. O Iuliet, I already know thy griefe,
It ſtreames me paſt the compaſſe of my wits:
I heare thou muſt and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thurſday next be married to this Countie.
Iul. Tell me not Frier that thou heareſt of this,
Vnleſſe thou tell me how I may preuent it:
If in thy wiſedome, thou canſt giue no helpe,
Do thou but call my reſolution wiſe,
And with this knife, Ile helpe it preſently.
God ioyn'd my heart, and Romeos thou our hands,
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo ſeal'd:
Shall be the Labell to another Deede,
Or my true heart with trecherous reuolt,
Turne to another, this ſhall ſlay them both:
Therefore out of thy long experienc'd time,
Giue me ſome preſent counſell, or behold
Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the vmpeere, arbitrating that,
Which the commiſſion of thy yeares and art,
Could to no iſſue of true honour bring:
Be not ſo long to ſpeak, I long to die,
If what thou ſpeak'ſt, ſpeake not of remedy.
Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe ſpie a kind of hope,
Which craues as deſperate an execution,
As that is deſperate which we would preuent.
If rather then to marrie Countie Paru
Thou haſt the ſtrength of will to ſlay thy ſelfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt vndertake
A thinglike death to chide away this ſhame,
That coap'ſt with death himſelfe, to ſcape fro it:
And if thou dar'ſt, Ile giue thee remedie.
Iul. Oh bid me leape, rather then marrie Paru,
From off the Battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theeuiſh waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are, chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell houſe,
Ore-couered quite with dead mens rattling bones,
With reckie ſhankes and yellow chappels ſculls:
Or bid me go into a new made graue,
And hide me with a dead man in his graue,
Things that to heare them told, haue made me tremble.
And I will doe it without feare or doubt,
To liue an vnſtained wife to my ſweet Loue.
Fri. Hold then: goe home be merrie, giue conſent,
To marrie Paru: wenſday is to morrow.
To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,
Let not thy Nurſe lie with thee in thy Chamber.
Take thou this Viall being then in bed,
And this diſtilling liquor drinke thou off,
When preſently through all thy veines ſhall run,
A cold and drowſie humour: for no pulſe
Shall keepe his natiue progreſſe, but ſurceaſe:
No warmth, no breath ſhall teſtifie thou liueſt,
The Roſes in thy lips and cheekes ſhall fade
To many aſhes, the eyes windowes fall
Like death when he ſhut vp the day of life:
Each part depriu'd of ſupple gouernment,
Shall ſtiffe and ſtarke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likeneſſe of ſhrunke death
Thou ſhalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleaſant ſleepe.
Now when the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rouſe thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy beſt Robes vncouer'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue:
Thou ſhalt be borne to that ſame ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time againſt thou ſhalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither ſhall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua.
And this ſhall free thee from this preſent ſhame,
If no inconſtant toy nor womaniſh feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.
Iul. Giue me, giue me, O tell not me of feare.
Fri. Hold get you gone, be ſtrong and proſperous
In this reſolue, Ile ſend a Frier with ſpeed
To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.
Iu. Loue giue me ſtrength,
And ſtrength ſhall helpe afford:
Farewell deare father. Exit

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurſe, and ſeruing men, two or three.

Cap So many guests inuite as here are writ,
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning Cookes.
Ser. You ſhall haue none ill ſir, for Ile trie if they can licke their fingers
Cap. How canſt thou trie them ſo?
Ser. Marrie ſir, 'tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers: therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me
Cap. Go be gone, we ſhall be much vnfurniſht for this time: what is my Daughter gone to Frier Lawrence?
Nur I forſooth
Cap. Well he may chance to do ſome good on her,
A peeuiſh ſelfe-wild harlotry it is.
Enter Iuliet.
Nur See where ſhe comes from ſhrift
With merrie looke.
Cap. How now my headſtrong,
Where haue you bin gadding?
Iul. Where I haue learnt me to repent the ſin
Of diſobedient oppoſition
To you and your behoſts, and am enioyn'd
By holy Lawrence, to fall proſtrate here,
To beg your pardon, pardon I beſeech you,
Henceforward I am euer rul'd by you.
Cap. Send for the Counte, goe tell him of this,
Ile haue this knot knit vp to morrow morning.
Iul. I met the youthfull Lord at Lawrence Cell,
And gaue him what becomed Loue I might,
Not ſtepping ore the bounds of modeſtie.
Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, ſtand vp,

This

This is as't should be,let me see the County:
I marrie go I say,and fetch him hither.
Now afore God,this reuerend holy Frier,
All our whole Cittie is much bound to him.
Iul. Nurse will you goe with me into my Closet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furnish me to morrow?
Mo. No not till Thursday,there's time inough.
Fa. Go Nurse,go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.
Exeunt Iuliet and Nurse.
Mo. We shall be short in our prouision,
Tis now neere night.
Fa Tush,I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well,I warrant thee wife:
Go thou to Iuliet,helpe to decke vp her,
Ile not to bed to night,let me alone:
Ile play the huswife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth,well I will walke my selfe
To Countie Paris,to prepare him vp
Against to morrow,my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyrle is so reclaim'd.
Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Iuliet and Nurse.
Iul. I those attires are best,but gentle Nurse
I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night:
For I haue need of many Orysons,
To moue the heauens to smile vpon my state,
Which well thou know'st,is crosse and full of sin.
Enter Mother.
Mo. What are you busie ho?need you my help?
Iul. No Madam,we haue cul'd such necessaries
As are behouefull for our state to morrow:
So please you,let me now be left alone;
And let the Nurse this night sit vp with you,
For I am sure,you haue your hands full all,
In this so sudden businesse.
Mo. Goodnight.
Get thee to bed and rest,for thou hast need. Exeunt.
Iul Farewell:
God knowes when we shall meete againe.
I haue a fain: cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almost freezes vp the heate of fire:
Ile call them backe againe to comfort me.
Nurse,what should she do here?
My dismall Sceane,I needs must act alone:
Come Viall what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No, no, this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poyson which the Frier
Subtilly hath ministred to haue me dead,
Least in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is,and yet me thinkes it should not,
For he hath still beene tried a holy man.
How,if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeeme me? There's a fearefull point:
Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault;
To whose foule mouth no healthsome ayre breathes in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes.
Or if I liue,is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vaulte,an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Auncestors are packt:
Where bloody Tybalt,yet but greene in earth,
Lies festring in his shrow'd,where as they say,
At some houres in the night,Spirits resort:
Alacke,alacke,is it not like that I
So early waking,what with loathsome smells,
And shrikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That liuing mortalls hearing them,run mad.
O if I walke,shall I not be distraught,
Inuironed with all these hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers ioynts?
And plucke the mangled Tybalt from his shrow'd?
And in this rage,with some great kinsmans bone,
As (with a club) dash out my desperate braines
O looke,me thinks I see my Cozins Ghost,
Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body
Vpon my Rapiers point: stay Tybalt,stay;
Romeo,Romeo,Romeo,here's drinke: I drinke to thee

Enter Lady of the house,and Nurse.

Lady. Hold,

Enter Nurse.
Go waken Iuliet,go and trim her vp.
Ile go and chat with Paris:hie make haste,
Make haste,the Bridegroome,he is come already:
Make haste I say.
Nur. Mistris,what Mistris?Iuliet?Fast I warrant her she:
Why Lambe,why Lady,fie you slugabed,
Why Loue I say?Madam,sweet heart:why Bride?
What not a word?You take your pennyworths now:
Sleepe for a weeke,for the next night I warrant
The Countie Paris hath set vp his rest,
That you shall rest but little,God forgiue me
Marrie and Amen:how sound is shee a sleepe?

I muſt needs wake her: Madam, Madam, Madam,
I, let the Countie take you in your bed,
Heele fright you vp yfaith. Will it not be?
What dreſt, and in your clothes, and downe againe?
I muſt needs wake you: Lady, Lady, Lady?
Alas, alas, helpe, helpe, my Ladyes dead,
Oh weladay, that euer I was borne,
Some Aqua-vitæ ho, my Lord, my Lady?

Mo. What noiſe is heere? Enter Mother.

Nur. O lamentable day.

Mo. What is the matter?

Nur. Looke, looke, oh heauie day.

Mo. O me, O me, my Child, my onely life:
Reuiue, looke vp, or I will die with thee:
Helpe, helpe, call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For ſhame bring Iuliet forth, her Lord is come.

Nur. Shee's dead: deceaſt, ſhee's dead: alacke the day.

M. Alacke the day, ſhee's dead, ſhee's dead, ſhee's dead.

Fa. Ha? Let me ſee her: out alas ſhee's cold,
Her blood is ſettled and her ioynts are ſtiffe:
Life and theſe lips haue long bene ſeperated:
Death lies on her like an vntimely frott
Vpon the ſweeteſt flower of all the field.

Nur. O Lamentable day!

Mo. O wofull time.

Fa. Death that hath tane her hence to make me waile,
Ties vp my tongue, and will not let me ſpeake.

Enter Frier and the Counte.

Fri. Come, is the Bride ready to go to Church?

Fa. Ready to go, but neuer to returne.
O Sonne, the night before thy wedding day,
Hath death laine with thy wife: there ſhe lies,
Flower as ſhe was, deflowred by him.
Death is my Sonne in law, death is my Heire,
My Daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leaue him all life liuing, all is deaths.

Pa. Haue I thought long to ſee this mornings face,
And doth it giue me ſuch a ſight as this?

Co. Accurſt, vnhappie, wretched hatefull day,
Moſt miſerable houre, that ere time ſaw
In laſting labour of his Pilgrimage.
But one, poore one, one poore and louing Child,
But one thing to reioyce and ſolace in,
And cruell death hath catcht it from my ſight.

Nur. O woe, O wofull, wofull, wofull day,
Moſt lamentable day, moſt wofull day,
That euer, euer, I did yet behold.
O day, O day, O day, O hatefull day,
Neuer was ſeene ſo blacke a day as this
O wofull day, O wofull day.

Pa. Beguild, diuorced, wronged, ſpighted, ſlaine,
Moſt deteſtable death, by thee beguil'd,
By cruell, cruell thee quite ouerthrowne:
O loue, O life: not life, but loue in death.

Fat. Deſpis'd, diſtreſſed, hated, martir'd, kil'd,
Vncomfortable time, why cam'ſt thou now
To murther, murther our ſolemnitie?
O Child, O Child: my ſoule, and not my Child,
Dead art thou, alacke my Child is dead,
And with my Child, my ioyes are buried.

Fri. Peace ho for ſhame, confuſion: Care lines not
In theſe confuſions, heauen and your ſelfe
Had part in this faire Maid, now heauen hath all,
And all the better is it for the Maid:
Your part in her, you could not keepe from death,
But heauen keepes his part in eternall life:
The moſt you ſought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heauen, ſhe ſhouldſt be aduan'ſt,
And weepe ye now, ſeeing ſhe is aduan'ſt
Aboue the Cloudes, as high as Heauen it ſelfe?
O in this loue, you loue your Child ſo ill,
That you run mad, ſeeing that ſhe is well:
Shee's not well married, that liues married long,
But ſhee's beſt married, that dies married yong.
Drie vp your teares, and ſtickе your Roſemarie
On this faire Coarſe, and as the cuſtome is,
And in her beſt array beare her to Church:
For though ſome Nature bids all vs lament,
Yet Natures teares are Reaſons merriment.

Fa. All things that we ordained Feſtiuall,
Turne from their office to blacke Funerall:
Our inſtruments to melancholy Bells,
Our wedding cheare, to a ſad buriall Feaſt:
Our ſolemne Hymnes, to ſullen Dyrges change:
Our Bridall flowers ſerue for a buried Coarſe:
And all things change them to the contrarie.

Fri. Sir go you in, and Madam, go with him,
And go ſir Paris, euery one prepare
To follow this faire Coarſe vnto her graue:
The heauens do lowre vpon you, for ſome ill:
Moue them no more, by croſſing their high will. Exeunt

Mu. Faith we may put vp our Pipes and be gone.

Nur. Honeſt goodfellowes: Ah put vp, put vp,
For well you know, this is a pitifull caſe.

Mu. I by my troth, the caſe may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Muſitions, oh Muſitions,
Hearts eaſe, hearts eaſe,
O, and you will haue me liue, play hearts eaſe.

Mu. Why hearts eaſe?

Pet. O Muſitions,
Becauſe my heart it ſelfe plaies, my heart is full

Mu. Not a dump we, 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mu. No.

Pet. I will then giue it you ſoundly.

Mu. What will you giue vs?

Pet. No money on my faith, but the gleeke.
I will giue you the Minſtrell.

Mu. Then will I giue you the Seruing creature.

Peter. Then will I lay the ſeruing Creatures Dagger on your pate. I will carie no Crochets, Ile Re you, Ile Fa you, do you note me?

Mu. And you Re vs, and Fa vs, you Note vs.

2 M. Pray you put vp your Dagger,
And put out your wit.
Then haue at you with my wit.

Peter. I will drie-beate you with an yron wit,
And put vp my yron Dagger.
Anſwere me like men:
When griping griefe the heart doth wound, then Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound.
Why ſiluer ſound? why Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound? what ſay you Simon Catling?

Mu. Marry ſir, becauſe ſiluer hath a ſweet ſound.

Pet. Prateſt, what ſay you Hugh Rebecke?

2 M. I ſay ſiluer ſound, becauſe Muſitions ſound for ſil-

Pet. Prateſt to, what ſay you Iames Soundpoſt? (ver

3 Mu. Faith I know not what to ſay.

Pet. O I cry you mercy, you are the Singer.
I will ſay for you; it is Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound,

Becauſe Muſitions haue no gold for ſounding:
Then Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound with ſpeedy helpe doth lend redreſſe. Exit.

Mu. What a peſtilent knaue is this ſame?

M. 2. Hang him Iacke, come weele in here, tarrie for the Mourners, and ſtay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may truſt the flattering truth of ſleepe,
My dreames preſage ſome ioyfull newes at hand:
My boſomes Lord ſits lightly in his throne:
And all this day an vnacuſtom'd ſpirit,
Lifts me aboue the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that giues a dead man leaue to thinke,)
And breath'd ſuch life with kiſſes in my lips,
That I reuiu'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how ſweet is loue it ſelfe poſſeſt,
When but loues ſhadowes are ſo rich in ioy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balthazer?
Doſt thou not bring me Letters from the Frier?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Iuliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if ſhe be well.

Man. Then ſhe is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body ſleepes in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liue,
I ſaw her laid low in her kindreds Vault,
And preſently tooke Poſte to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing theſe ill newes,
Since you did leaue it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it euen ſo?
Then I denie you Starres.
Thou knoweſt my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Poſt-Horſes, I will hence to night.

Man. I do beſeech you ſir, haue patience:
Your lookes are pale and wild, and do import
Some miſaduenture.

Rom. Tuſh, thou art deceiu'd,
Leaue me, and do the thing I bid thee do.
Haſt thou no Letters to me from the Frier?

Man. No my good Lord.

Exit Man.

Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hyre thoſe Horſes, Ile be with thee ſtraight.
Well Iuliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Lets ſee for meanes: O miſchiefe thou art ſwift,
To enter in the thoughts of deſperate men:
I do remember an Apothecarie,
And here abouts dwells, which late I noted
In tattred weeds, with ouerwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miſerie had worne him to the bones:
And in his needie ſhop a Tortoyſe hung,
An Alligater ſtuft, and other skins
Of ill ſhap'd fiſhes, and about his ſhelues,
A beggerly account of emptie boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and muſtie ſeedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roſes
Were thinly ſcattered, to make vp a ſhew.
Noting this penury, to my ſelfe I ſaid,
An if a man did need a poyſon now,
Whoſe ſale is preſent death in Mantua,
Here liues a Caitiffe wretch would ſell it him.
O this ſame thought did but fore-run my need,
And this ſame needie man muſt ſell it me.
As I remember, this ſhould be the houſe,
Being holy day, the beggers ſhop is ſhut.
What ho! Apothecarie?

Enter Apothecarie.

Apo. Who calls ſo low'd?

Rom. Come hither man, I ſee that thou art poore,
Hold, there is fortie Duckets, let me haue
A dram of poyſon, ſuch ſoone ſpeeding geare,
As will diſperſe it ſelfe through all the veines,
That the life-wearie-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be diſcharg'd of breath,
As violently, as haſtie powder fier'd
Doth hurry from the fatall Cannons wombe.

Apo. Such mortall drugs I haue, but Mantua lawe
Is death to any he, that vtters them.

Rom. Art thou ſo bare and full of wretchedneſſe,
And fear'ſt to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppreſſion ſtarueth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hangs vpon thy backe:
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds lawe
The world affords no law to make thee rich.
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

Apo. My pouerty, but not my will conſents.

Rom. I pray thy pouerty, and not thy will.

Apo. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the ſtrength
Of twenty men, it would diſpatch you ſtraight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worſe poyſon to mens ſoules,
Doing more murther in this loathſome world,
Then theſe poore compounds that thou may'ſt not ſell.
I ſell thee poyſon, thou haſt ſold me none.
Farewell, buy food, and get thy ſelfe in fleſh.
Come Cordiall, and not poyſon, go with me
To Iuliets graue, for there muſt I vſe thee.

Exeunt

Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Laurence.

Iohn. Holy Franciſcan Frier, Brother, ho?

Enter Frier Laurence.

Law. This ſame ſhould be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what ſayes Romeo?
Or if his mind be writ, giue me his Letter.

Iohn. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to aſſociate me,
Here in this Citie viſiting the ſick.
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suſpecting that we both were in a houſe
Where the infectious peſtilence did raigne,
Seal'd vp the doores, and would not let vs forth,
So that my ſpeed to Mantua there was ſtaid.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Iohn. I could not ſend it, here it is againe,
Nor get a meſſenger to bring it thee,
So feareſull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappie Fortune: by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it ſtraight
Vnto my Cell.

Iohn. Brother Ile go and bring it thee. Exit.

Law. Now muſt I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Iuliet wake,
Shee will beſhrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of theſe accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And

epe her as my Cell till Romeo come,
ung Coarſe, clos'd in a dead mans Tombe.
Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page.

Giue me thy Torch Boy, hence and ſtand aloft,
it out, for I would not be ſeene:
yond young Trees lay thee all along,
g thy eare cloſe to the hollow ground,
no ſoot vpon the Churchyard tread,
looſe, vnfirme with digging vp of Graues,
ſhalt heare it: whiſtle then to me,
all that thou heareſt ſome thing approach,
e thoſe flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.
. I am almoſt afraid to ſtand alone
the Churchyard, yet I will aduenture.
weet Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed I ſtrew:
thy Canopie is duſt and ſtones,
with ſweet water nightly I will dewe.
ning that, with teares diſtil'd by moanes)
obſequies that I for thee will keepe,
ly ſhall be, to ſtrew thy graue, and weepe.
Whiſtle Boy.
y giues warning, ſomething doth approach,
curſed foot wanders this wayes to night,
ſſe my obſequies, and true loues right?
with a Torch? Muffle me night a while

Enter Romeo and Peter.

. Giue me that Mattocke, & the wrenching Iron,
ake this Letter, early in the morning
ſee deliuer it to my Lord and Father,
me the light; vpon thy life I charge thee,
ere thou hear'ſt or ſeeſt, ſtand all alooſe,
not interrupt me in my courſe,
I deſcend into this bed of death,
ly to behold my Ladies face:
eſſly to take thence from her dead finger,
ious Ring: a Ring that I muſt vſe,
e employment, therefore hence be gone:
hou iealous doſt returne to prie
t I further ſhall intend to do,
uen I will teare thee ioynt by ioynt,
ew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbs:
me, and my intents are ſauage wilde:
fierce and more inexorable farre,
mptie Tygers, or the roaring Sea.
I will be gone ſir, and not trouble you
So ſhall thou ſhew me friendſhip: take thou that,
nd be proſperous, and farewell good fellow.
For all this ſame, Ile hide me here about,
kes I feare, and his intents I doubt.
. Thou deteſtable mawe, thou wombe of death,
ſwith the deareſt morſell of the earth:
enforce thy rotten lawes to open,
deſpight, Ile cram thee with more food.
. This is that baniſht haughtie Mountague, urdred my Loues Cozin; with which griefe, ppoſed the faire Creature died,
re is come to do ſome villanous ſhame dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
y vnhallowed royle, vile Mountague:
ngerance be purſued further then death?
mord villaine, I do apprehend thee.
nd go with me, for thou muſt die,

Rom. I muſt indeed, and therfore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a deſperate man,
Flie hence and leaue me, thinke vpon thoſe gone,
Let them affright thee. I beſeech thee Youth,
Put not an other ſin vpon my head,
By vrging me to furie. O be gone,
By heauen I loue thee better then my ſelfe,
For I come hither arm'd againſt my ſelfe:
Stay not, be gone, liue, and hereafter ſay,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.
Par. I do deſie thy commiſſeration,
And apprehend thee for a Felon here.
Ro. Wilt thou prouoke me? Then haue at thee Boy.
Pet. O Lord they fight, I will go call the Watch.
Pa. O I am ſlaine, if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe, lay me with Iuliet.
Rom. In faith I will, let me peruſe this face:
Mercutios kinſman, Noble Countie Paris,
What ſaid my man, when my betoſſed ſoule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris ſhould haue married Iuliet.
Said he not ſo? Or did I dreame it ſo?
Or am I mad, hearing him talke of Iuliet,
To thinke it was ſo? O giue me thy hand,
One, writ with me in ſowre misfortunes booke.
Ile burie thee in a triumphant graue.
A Graue; O no, a Lanthorne; ſlaughtred Youth,
For here lies Iuliet, and her beauties makes
This Vault a feaſting preſence full of light.
Death lie thou there, by a dead man interr'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Haue they beene merrie? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Loue, my Wife,
Death that hath ſuckt the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet vpon thy Beautie
Thou are not conquer'd. Beauties enſigne yet
Is Crymſon in thy lips, and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flagge is not aduanced there.
Tybalt, ly'ſt thou there in thy bloody ſheet?
O what more fauour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To ſunder his that was thy enemie?
Forgiue me Cozen. Ah deare Iuliet:
Why art thou yet ſo faire? I will beleeue,
Shall I beleeue, that vnſubſtantiall death is amorous?
And that the leane abhorred Monſter keepes
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that, I ſtill will ſtay with thee,
And neuer from this Pallace of dym night
Depart againe: come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health, where ere thou tumbleſt in.
O true Apothecarie!
Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kiſſe I die.
Depart againe, here, here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides: O here
Will I ſet vp my euerlaſting reſt:
And ſhake the yoke of inauſpicious ſtarres
From this world-wearied fleſh: Eyes looke your laſt:
Armes take your laſt embrace: And lips, O you
The doores of breath, ſeale with a righteous kiſſe
A dateleſſe bargaine to ingroſſing death:
Come bitter conduct, come vnſauoury guide,
Thou deſperate Pilot, now at once run on
The daſhing Rocks, thy Sea-ſicke weerie Barke:
Heere's to my Loue. O true Apothecary:

Since birth, and heauen and earth, all three do meete
In thee at once, which thou at once would'ſt looſe.
Fie, fie, thou ſham'ſt thy ſhape, thy loue, thy wit,
Which like a Vſurer abound'ſt in all:
And vſeſt none in that true vſe indeed,
Which ſhould bedecke thy ſhape, thy loue, thy wit:
Thy Noble ſhape, is but a forme of waxe,
Digreſſing from the Valour of a man,
Thy deare Loue ſworne but hollow periurie,
Killing that Loue which thou haſt vow'd to cheriſh.
Thy wit, that Ornament, to ſhape and Loue,
Miſhapen in the conduct of them both
Like powder in a ſkilleſſe Souldiers flaske,
Is ſet a fire by thine owne ignorance,
And thou diſmembred with thine owne defence.
What, rowſe thee man, thy Iuliet is aliue,
For whoſe deare ſake thou waſt but lately dead.
There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou ſlew'ſt Tybalt, there art thou happie.
The law that threatned death became thy Friend.
And torn'd it to exile, there art thou happy.
A packe of bleſſings light vpon thy backe,
Happineſſe Courts thee in her beſt array,
But like a miſhaped and ſullen wench,
Thou puttеſt vp thy Fortune and thy Loue:
Take heed, take heed, for ſuch die miſerable.
Goe get thee to thy Loue as was decreed,
Aſcend her Chamber, hence and comfort her:
But looke thou ſtay not till the watch be ſet,
For then thou canſt not paſſe to Mantua,
Where thou ſhalt liue till we can finde a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of thy Prince, and call thee backe,
With twenty hundred thouſand times more ioy
Then thou went'ſt forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurſe, commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her haſten all the houſe to bed,
Which heauy ſorrow makes them apt vnto.
Romeo is comming.

Nur. O Lord, I could haue ſtaid here all night,
To heare good counſell: oh what learning is;
My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.

Rom. Do ſo, and bid my Sweete prepare to chide.

Nur. Heere ſir, a Ring ſhe bid me giue you ſir.:
Hie you, make haſt, for it growes very late.

Rom. How well my comfort is reuiu'd by this.

Fri. Go hence,
Goodnight, and here ſtands all your ſtate:
Either be gone before the watch be ſet,
Or by the breake of day diſguis'd from hence,
Soiourne in Mantua, Ile find out your man,
And he ſhall ſignifie from time to time,
Euery good hap to you, that chaunces heere:
Giue me thy hand, 'tis late, farewell, goodnight.

Rom. But that a ioy paſt ioy, calls out on me,
It were a griefe, ſo briefe to part with thee:
Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter old Capulet, his Wife and Paris.

Cap. Things haue falne out ſir ſo vnluckily,
That we haue had no time to moue our Daughter:
Looke you, ſhe Lou'd her kinſman Tybalt dearely,
And ſo did I. Well, we were borne to die.
'Tis very late, ſhe'l not come downe to night:
I promiſe you, but for your company,
I would haue bin a bed an houre ago.

Par. Theſe times of woe, affoord no times to woer
Madam goodnight, commend me to your Daughter.

Lady. I will, and know her mind early to morrow,
To night, ſhe is mewed vp to her heauineſſe.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a deſperate tender
Of my Childes loue: I thinke ſhe will be rul'd
In all reſpects by me: nay more, I doubt it not
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed,
Acquaint her here, of my Sonne Paris Loue,
And bid her, marke you me, on Wendſday next,
But ſoft, what day is this?

Par. Monday my Lord.

Cap. Monday, ha ha: well Wendſday is too ſoone.
A Thurſday let it be: a Thurſday tell her,
She ſhall be married to this Noble Earle:
Will you be ready? do you like this haſt?
Weele keepe no great adoe, a Friend or two,
For harke you, Tybalt being ſlaine ſo late,
It may be thought we held him carelеſſly,
Being our kinſman, if we reuell much:
Therefore weele haue ſome halfe a dozen Friends,
And there an end. But what ſay you to Thurſday?

Par. My Lord,
I would that Thurſday were to morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone, a Thurſday, be it then:
Go you to Iuliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her wife, againſt this wedding day.
Farewell my Lord, light to my Chamber hoa,
Afore me, it is ſo late, that we may call it early by and by Goodnight, Exeunt.

Enter Romeo and Iuliet aloft.

Iul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet neere day:
It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
That pier'ſt the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly ſhe ſings on yond Pomgranate tree,
Beleeue me Loue, it was the Nightingale.

Rom. It was the Larke the Herauld of the Morne
No Nightingale: looke Loue what enuious ſtreakes
Do lace the ſeuering Cloudes in yonder Eaſt:
Nights Candles are burnt out, and Iocond day
Stands tipto on the miſtie Mountaines tops,
I muſt be gone and liue, or ſtay and die.

Iul. Yond light is not daylight, I know it I:
It is ſome Meteor that the Sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.
Therefore ſtay yet, thou need'ſt not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be tane, let me be put to death,
I am content, ſo thou wilt haue it ſo.
Ile ſay yon gray is not the mornings eye,
'Tis but the pale reflexe of Cynthias brow.
Nor that is not Larke whoſe notes do beate
The vaulty heauen ſo high aboue our heads,
I haue more care to ſtay, then will to go:
Come death and welcome, Iuliet will it ſo.
How ſtt my ſoule, lets talke, it is not day.

Iuli. It is, it is, hie hence be gone away:
It is the Larke that ſings ſo out of tune,
Straining harſh Diſcords, and vnpleaſing Sharpes.
Some ſay the Larke makes ſweete Diuiſion:
This doth not ſo: for ſhe diuideth vs.
Some ſay, the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since arme from arme that voyce doth vs affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Hunts-vp to the day,
O now be gone, more light and light growes.
Rom. More light & light, more darke & darke our woes.

Enter Madam and Nurse.

Nur. Madam.
Iul. Nurse.
Nur. Your Lady Mother is comming to your chamber,
The day is broke, be wary, looke about.
Iul. Then window let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.
Iul. Art thou gone so? Loue, Lord, ay Husband, Friend,
I must heare from thee every day in the houre,
For in a minute there are many dayes,
O by this count I shall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell:
I will omit no opportunitie,
That may conuey my greetings Loue, to thee.
Iul. O thinkest thou we shall euer meet againe?
Rom. I doubt it not, and all these woes shall serue
For sweet discourses in our time to come.
Iulet. O God! I haue an ill Diuining soule,
Me thinkes I see thee now, thou art so lowe,
As one dead in the bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eye-sight failes, or thou look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me Loue, in my eye so do you:
Drie sorrow drinkes our blood. Adue, adue. Exit.
Iul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? be fickle Fortune:
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But send him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter, are you vp?
Iul. Who is't that calls? Is it my Lady Mother.
Is she not downe so late, or vp so early?
What vnaccustom'd cause procures her hither?
Lad. Why how now Iuliet?
Iul. Madam I am not well.
Lad. Euermore weeping for your Cozins death?
What wilt thou wash him from his graue with teares?
And if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him liue:
Therefore haue done, some griefe shewes much of Loue,
But much of griefe, shewes still some want of wit.
Iul. Yet let me weepe, for such a feeling losse.
Lad. So shall you feele the losse, but not the Friend
Which you weepe for.
Iul. Feeling so the losse,
I cannot chuse but euer weepe the Friend.
La. Well Girle, thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the Villaine liues which slaughter'd him.
Iul. What Villaine, Madam?
Lad. That same Villaine Romeo.
Iul. Villaine and he, be many Miles assunder:
God pardon, I doe with all my heart:
And yet no man like he, doth grieue my heart.
Lad. That is because the Traitor liues.
Iul. I Madam from the reach of these my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.
Lad. We will haue vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more, Ile send to one in Mantua,
Where that same banisht Run-agate doth liue,
Shall giue him such an vnaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soone keepe Tybalt company:
And then I hope thou wilt be satisfied.
Iul. Indeed I neuer shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart so for a kinsman vext:
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poyson, I would temper it;
That Romeo should vpon receit thereof,
Soone sleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors
To heare him nam'd, and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Loue I bore my Cozin,
Vpon his body that hath slaughter'd him.
Mo. Find thou the meanes, and Ile find such a man.
But now Ile tell thee ioyfull tidings Gyrle.
Iul. And ioy comes well, in such a needy time,
What are they, beseech your Ladyship?
Mo. Well, well, thou hast a carefull Father Child?
One who to put thee from thy heauinesse,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of ioy,
That thou expects not, nor I looke not for.
Iul. Madam in happy time, what day is this?
Mo. Marry my Child, early next Thursday morne,
The gallant, young, and Noble Gentleman,
The Countie Paris at Saint Peters Church,
Shall happily make thee a ioyfull Bride.
Iul. Now by Saint Peters Church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a ioyfull Bride.
I wonder at this haste, that I must wed
Ere he that should be Husband comes to woe:
I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam,
I will not marrie yet, and when I doe, I sweare
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate
Rather then Paris. These are newes indeed.
Mo. Here comes your Father, tell him so your selfe,
And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the Sun sets, the earth doth drizzle dewe
But for the Sunset of my Brothers Sonne,
It raines downright.
How now? A Conduit Gyrle, what still in teares?
Euermore showring in one little body?
Thou counterfaits a Barke, a Sea, a Wind:
For still thy eyes, which I may call the Sea,
Do ebbe and flow with teares, the Barke thy body is
Sayling in this salt flood, the windes thy sighes,
Who raging with the teares and they with them,
Without a sudden calme will ouer set
Thy tempest tossed body. How now wife?
Haue you deliuered to her our decree?
Lady. I sir;
But she will none, she giues you thankes,
I would the foole were married to her graue.
Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you wife,
How, will she none? doth she not giue vs thankes?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her blest,
Vnworthy as she is, that we haue wrought
So worthy a Gentleman, to be her Bridegroome
Iul. Not proud you haue,
But thankfull that you haue:
Proud can I neuer be of what I haue,
But thankfull euen for hate, that is meant Loue.
Cap. How now?
How now? Chopt Logicke? what is this?
Proud, and I thanke you: and I thanke you not,
Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,
But fettle your fine ioints 'gainst Thursday next,

To

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee, on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene ſickneſſe carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.
Lady. Fie, fie, what are you mad?
Iul. Good Father, I beſeech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to ſpeake a word.
Fa. Hang thee young baggage, diſobedient wretch,
I tell thee what, get thee to Church a Thurſday,
Or neuer after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not anſwere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we ſcarce thought vs bleſt,
That God had lent vs but this onely Child,
But now I ſee this one is one too much,
And that we haue a curſe in hauing her:
Out on her Hilding.
Nur. God in heauen bleſſe her,
You are too blame my Lord to rate her ſo.
Fa. And why my Lady wiſedome hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, ſmatter with your goſſip, go.
Nur. I ſpeake no treaſon,
Father, O Godigoden,
May not one ſpeake?
Fa. Peace you mumbling ſoole,
Vtter your grauitie ore a Goſſips bowles
For here we need it not.
La. You are too hot.
Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:
Day, night, houre, ride, time, worke, play,
Alone in coꝰpanie, ſtill my care hath bin
To haue her matcht, and hauing now prouided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,
Of faire Demeanes, Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,
Stuft as they ſay with Honourable parts,
Proportion'd as ones thought would wiſh a man,
And then to haue a wretched puling ſoole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To anſwer, Ile not wed, I cannot Loue:
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But, and you will not wed, Ile pardon you,
Graze where you will, you ſhall not houſe with me:
Looke too't, thinke on't, I do not vſe to ieſt.
Thurſday is neere, lay hand on heart, aduiſe,
And you be mine, Ile giue you to my Friend:
And you be not, hang, beg, ſtraue, die in the ſtreets,
For by my ſoule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine ſhall neuer do thee good:
Truſt too't, bethinke you, Ile not be forſworne Exit.
Iuli. Is there no pittie ſitting in the Cloudes,
That ſees into the bottome of my griefe?
O ſweet my Mother caſt me not away,
Delay this marriage, for a month, a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.
Mo. Talke not to me, for Ile not ſpeake a word,
Do as thou wilt, for I haue done with thee. Exit.
Iul. O God!
O Nurſe, how ſhall this be preuented?
My Husband is on earth, my faith in heauen,
How ſhall that faith returne againe to earth,
Vnleſſe that Husband ſend it me from heauen,
By leauing earth: Comfort me, counſaile me:
Blacke, blacke, that heauen ſhould practiſe ſtratagems
Vpon ſo ſoft a ſubiect as my ſelfe.
What ſaiſt thou? haſt thou not a word of ioy?
Some comfort Nurſe.
Nur. Faith here it is,
Romeo is baniſhed, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:
Or if he do, it needs muſt be by ſtealth.
Then ſince the caſe ſo ſtands as now it doth,
I thinke it beſt you married with the Countie,
O hee's a louely Gentleman:
Romeo's a diſh-clout to him: an Eagle Madam
Hath not ſo greene, ſo quicke, ſo faire an eye
As Paris hath, beſhrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this ſecond match,
For it excels your firſt: or if it did not,
Your firſt is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As liuing here and you no vſe of him.
Iul. Speakeſt thou from thy heart?
Nur. And from my ſoule too,
Or elſe beſhrew them both.
Iul. Amen.
Nur. What?
Iul. Well, thou haſt comforted me marueilous much,
Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Hauing diſpleaſ'd my Father, to Laurence Cell,
To make confeſſion, and to be abſolu'd.
Nur. Marrie I will, and this is wiſely done.
Iul. Auncient damnation. O moſt wicked fiend!
It is more ſin to wiſh me thus forſworne,
Or to diſpraiſe my Lord with that ſame tongue
Which ſhe hath praiſ'd him with aboue compare,
So many thouſand times? Go Counſellor,
Thou and my boſome henceforth ſhall be twaine:
Ile to the Frier to know his remedie,
If all elſe faile, my ſelfe haue power to die. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Countie Paris.

Fri. On Thurſday ſir the time is very ſhort.
Par My Father Capulet will haue it ſo,
And I am nothing ſlow to ſlack his haſt.
Fri. You ſay you do not know the Ladies mind?
Vneuen is the courſe, I like it not.
Pa. Immoderately ſhe weepes for Tybalts death,
And therfore haue I little talke of Loue,
For Venus ſmiles not in a houſe of teares.
Now ſir, her Father counts it dangerous
That ſhe doth giue her ſorrow ſo much ſwey:
And in his wiſedome, haſtis our marriage,
To ſtop the inundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her ſelfe alone,
May be put from her by ſocietie.
Now doe you know the reaſon of this haſt?
Fri. I would I knew not why it ſhould be ſlow'd.
Looke ſir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.

Enter Iuliet.

Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.
Iul. That may be ſir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be, muſt be Loue, on Thurſday next.
Iul. What muſt be ſhall be.
Fri. That's a certaine text.
Par. Come you to make confeſſion to this Father?
Iul. To anſwere that, I ſhould confeſſe to you.
Par. Do not denie to him, that you Loue me.
Iul. I will confeſſe to you that I Loue him.
Par. So will ye, I am ſure that you Loue me.
Iul. If I do ſo, it will be of more price,
Being ſpoke behind your backe, than to your face.
Par. Poore ſoule, thy face is much abuſ'd with teares.

Iul. The

Iul. The teares haue got ſmall victorie by that:
For it was bad inough before their ſpight.
Par. Thou wrong'ſt it more then teares with that report.
Iul. That is no ſlaunder ſir, which is a truth,
And what I ſpake, I ſpake it to thy face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou haſt ſlaundred it.
Iul. It may be ſo, for it is not mine owne.
Are you at leiſure, Holy Father now,
Or ſhall I come to you at euening Maſſe?
Fri. My leiſure ſerues me penſiue daughter now.
My Lord you muſt intreat the time alone.
Par. Godſhield: I ſhould diſturbe Deuotion.
Iuliet, on Thurſday early will I rouſe yee,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kiſſe. Exit Par.
Iul. O ſhut the doore, and when thou haſt done ſo,
Come weepe with me, paſt hope, paſt care, paſt helpe.
Fri. O Iuliet, I already know thy griefe,
It ſtreames me paſt the compaſſe of my wits:
I heare thou muſt and nothing may prorogne it,
On Thurſday next be married to this Countie.
Iul. Tell me not Frier that thou heareſt of this,
Vnleſſe thou tell me how I may preuent it:
If in thy wiſedome, thou canſt giue no helpe,
Do thou but call my reſolution wiſe,
And with' his knife, Ile helpe it preſently.
God ioyn'd my heart, and Romeos thou our hands,
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo ſeal'd:
Shall be the Label to another Deede,
Or my true heart with trecherous reuolt,
Turne to another, this ſhall ſlay them both:
Therefore out of thy long experien'st time,
Giue me ſome preſent counſell, or behold
Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the vmpeere, arbitrating that,
Which the commiſſion of thy yeares and art,
Could to no iſſue of true honour bring:
Be not ſo long to ſpeak, I long to die,
If what thou ſpeak'ſt, ſpeake not of remedy.
Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe ſpie a kind of hope,
Which craues as deſperate an execution,
As that is deſperate which we would preuent.
If rather then to marrie Countie Paris
Thou haſt the ſtrength of will to ſlay thy ſelfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt vndertake
A thing like death to chide away this ſhame,
That coap'ſt with death himſelfe, to ſcape from it:
And if thou dar'ſt, Ile giue thee remedie.
Iul. Oh bid me leape, rather then marrie Paris,
From off the Battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theeuiſh waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are: chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell houſe,
Ore-couered quite with dead mens rattling bones,
With reekie ſhankes and yellow chappels ſculls:
Or bid me go into a new made graue,
And hide me with a dead man in his graue:
Things that to heare them told, haue made me tremble,
And I will doe it without feare or doubt,
To liue an vnſtained wife to my ſweet Loue.
Fri. Hold then: goe home be merrie, giue conſent,
To marrie Paris: wenſday is to morrow,
To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,
Let not thy Nurſe lie with thee in thy Chamber:
Take thou this Viall being then in bed,
And this diſtilling liquor drinke thou off,
When preſently through all thy veines ſhall run,
A cold and drowſie humour: for no pulſe
Shall keepe his natiue progreſſe, but ſurceaſe:
No warmth, no breath ſhall teſtifie thou liueſt,
The Roſes in thy lips and cheekes ſhall fade
To paſſy aſhes, thy eyes windowes fall
Like death when he ſhut vp the day of life:
Each part depriu'd of ſupple gouernment,
Shall ſtiffe and ſtarke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likeneſſe of ſhrunke death
Thou ſhalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleaſant ſleepe.
Now when the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rowſe thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy beſt Robes vncouer'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue:
Thou ſhalt be borne to that ſame ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time againſt thou ſhalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither ſhall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua,
And this ſhall free thee from this preſent ſhame,
If no inconſtant toy nor womanith feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.
Iul. Giue me, giue me, O tell not me of feare.
Fri. Hold get you gone, be ſtrong and proſperous:
In this reſolue, Ile ſend a Frier with ſpeed
To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.
Iu. Loue giue me ſtrength,
And ſtrength ſhall helpe afford:
Farewell deare father. Exit

Enter father Capulet, Mother, Nurſe, and Seruing men two or three.

Cap So many gueſts inuite as here are writ,
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning Cookes.
Ser. You ſhall haue none ill ſir, for Ile try if they can licke their fingers
Cap. How canſt thou try them ſo?
Ser. Marrie ſir, 'tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me
Cap. Go be gone, we ſhall be much vnfurniſht for this time what is my Daughter gone to Frier Laurence?
Nur Forſooth
Cap. Well he may chance to do ſome good on her,
A peeuiſh ſelfe-wild harlotry it is.
Enter Iuliet.
Nur See where ſhe comes from ſhrift
With merrie looke.
Cap. How now my headſtrong,
Where haue you bin gadding?
Iul. Where I haue learnt me to repent the ſin
Of diſobedient oppoſition
To you and your behеſts, and am enioyn'd
By holy Laurence, to fall prоſtrate here,
To beg your pardon: pardon I beſeech you.
Henceforward I am euer rul'd by you.
Cap. Send for the Countie, goe tell him of this,
Ile haue this knot knit vp to morrow morning.
Iul. I met the youthfull Lord at Laurence Cell,
And gaue him what becomed Loue I might,
Not ſtepping ore the bounds of modeſtie.
Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, ſtand vp.

This

This is as't should be,let me see the County:
I marrie go I say,and fetch him hither.
Now afore God,this reuerend holy Frier,
All our whole Cittie is much bound to him.
Iul. Nurse will you goe with me into my Closet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furnish me to morrow?
Mo. No not till Thursday,there's time inough.
Fa. Go Nurse,go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.
Exeunt Iuliet and Nurse.
Mo. We shall be short in our prouision,
'Tis now neere night.
Fa Tush,I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well,I warrant thee wife:
Go thou to Iuliet,helpe to decke vp her,
Ile not to bed to night,let me alone:
Ile play the huswife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth,well I will walke my selfe
To Countie Paris,to prepare him vp
Against to morrow,my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyrle is so reclaim'd.
Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Iuliet and Nurse.
Iul. I those attires are best,but gentle Nurse
I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night:
For I haue need of many Orysons,
To moue the heauens to smile vpon my state,
Which well thou know'st,is crosse and full of sin.
Enter Mother.
Mo. What are you busie ho?need you my help?
Iul. No Madam,we haue cul'd such necessaries
As are behouefull for our state to morrow:
So please you,let me now be left alone;
And let the Nurse this night sit vp with you,
For I am sure,you haue your hands full all,
In this so sudden businesse.
Mo. Goodnight.
Get thee to bed and rest,for thou hast need. Exeunt.
Iul Farewell:
God knowes when we shall meete againe.
I haue a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almost freezes vp the heate of fire:
Ile call them backe againe to comfort me.
Nurse,what should she do here?
My dismall Scene,I needs must act alone:
Come Viall what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No,no, this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poyson which the Frier
Subtilly hath minist'red to haue me dead,
Least in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is,and yet me thinkes it should not,
For he hath still beene tried a holy man.
How,if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeeme me? There's a fearefull point:
Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault?
To whose foule mouth no healthsome ayre breaths in,
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes.
Or if I liue,is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vaulte,an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Auncestors are packt.
Where bloody Tybalt,yet but greene in earth,
Lies festring in his shrow'd,where as they say,
At some houres in the night,Spirits resort.
Alacke,alacke,is it not like that?
So early waking,what with loathsome smels,
And shrikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That liuing mortalls hearing them,run mad.
O if I walke,shall I not be distraught,
Inuironed with all these hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers ioynts?
And plucke the mangled Tybalt from his shrow'd?
And in this rage,with some great kinsmans bone,
As (with a club) dash out my desperate braines
O looke,me thinks I see my Cozins Ghost,
Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body
Vpon my Rapiers point: stay Tybalt,stay;
Romeo,Romeo,Romeo,here's drinke: I drinke to thee

Enter Lady of the house,and Nurse.
Lady. Hold,
Take these keies,and fetch more spices Nurse.
Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Pastry
Enter old Capulet.
Cap. Come,stir,stir,stir,
The second Cocke hath Crow'd,
The Curphew Bell hath rung,'tis three a clocke
Looke to the bakte meates,good Angelica.
Spare not for cost.
Nur. Go you Cot-queane,go.
Get you to bed,faith youle be sicke to morrow
For this nights watching.
Cap. No not a whit:what? I haue watcht ere now
All night for lesse cause,and nere beene sicke.
La. I you haue bin a Mouse-hunt in your time.
But I will watch you from such watching now.
Exit Lady and Nurse.
Cap. A iealous hood,a iealous hood,
Now fellow,what there?
Enter three or foure with spits,and logs,and baskets.
Fel. Things for the Cooke sir,but I know not what.
Cap. Make haste,make haste,sirrah,fetch drier Logs
Call Peter,he will shew thee where they are.
Fel. I haue a head sir,that will find out logs,
And neuer trouble Peter for the matter.
Cap. Masse and well said a merrie horeson,ha.
Thou shalt be loggerhead. good Father,'tis day.
Exit Master.
The Countie will be here with Musicke straight,
For so he said he would,I heare him neere.
Nurse,wife,what ho?what Nurse I say?
Enter Nurse.
Go waken Iuliet,go and trim her vp.
Ile go and chat with Paris,make hast,
Make hast,the Bridegroome,he is come already:
Make hast I say.
Nur. Mistris,what Mistris?Iuliet?Fast I warrant her she,
Why Lambe,why Lady,fie you slugabed,
Why Loue I say?Madam,sweet heart,why Bride?
What not a word?You take your pennyworths now.
Sleepe for a weeke,for the next night I warrant
The Countie Paris hath set vp his rest,
That you shall rest but little,God forgiue me
Marrie and Amen:how sound is shee a sleepe?

I muſt needs wake her: Madam, Madam, Madam,
I, let the Countie take you in your bed,
Heele fright you vp yfaith. Will it not be?
What dreſt, and in your clothes, and downe againe?
I muſt needs wake you: Lady, Lady, Lady?
Alas, alas, helpe, helpe, my Ladyes dead,
Oh weladay, that euer I was borne,
Some Aqua-vitæ ho, my Lord, my Lady?

Mo. What noiſe is heere? Enter Mother.

Nur. O lamentable day.

Mo. What is the matter?

Nur. Looke, looke, oh heauie day.

Mo. O me, O me, my Child, my onely life:
Reuiue, looke vp, or I will die with thee:
Helpe, helpe, call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For ſhame bring Iuliet forth, her Lord is come.

Nur. Shee's dead: deceaſt, ſhee's dead: alacke the day.

M. Alacke the day, ſhee's dead, ſhee's dead, ſhee's dead.

Fa. Ha? Let me ſee her: out alas ſhee's cold,
Her blood is ſettled and her ioynts are ſtiffe:
Life and theſe lips haue long bene ſeperated:
Death lies on her like an vntimely froſt
Vpon the ſweeteſt flower of all the field.

Nur. O Lamentable day!

Mo. O wofull time.

Fa. Death that hath tane her hence to make me waile,
Ties vp my tongue, and will not let me ſpeake.

Enter Frier and the Countie.

Fri. Come, is the Bride ready to go to Church?

Fa. Ready to go, but neuer to returne.
O Sonne, the night before thy wedding day,
Hath death laine with thy wife: there ſhe lies,
Flower as ſhe was, deflowred by him.
Death is my Sonne in law, death is my Heire,
My Daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leaue him all life liuing, all is deaths.

Pa. Haue I thought long to ſee this mornings face,
And doth it giue me ſuch a ſight as this?

Mo. Accurſt, vnhappie, wretched hatefull day.
Moſt miſerable houre, that euer time ſaw
In laſting labour of his Pilgrimage.
But one, poore one, one poore and louing Child,
But one thing to reioyce and ſolace in,
And cruell death hath catcht it from my ſight.

Nur. O woe, O wofull, wofull, wofull day,
Moſt lamentable day, moſt wofull day,
That euer, euer, I did yet behold.
O day, O day, O day, O hatefull day,
Neuer was ſeene ſo blacke a day as this:
O wofull day, O wofull day.

Pa. Beguild, diuorced, wronged, ſpighted, ſlaine,
Moſt deteſtable death by thee beguil'd,
By cruell, cruell thee quite ouerthrowne:
O loue, O life: not life, but loue in death.

Fat. Deſpis'd, diſtreſſed, hated, martir'd, kil'd,
Vncomfortable time, why cam'ſt thou now
To murther, murther our ſolemnitie?
O Child, O Child: my ſoule, and not my Child,
Dead art thou, alacke my Child is dead,
And with my Child, my ioyes are buried.

Fri. Peace ho for ſhame, confuſion: Care liues not
In theſe confuſions, heauen and your ſelfe
Had part in this faire Maid, now heauen hath all,
And all the better is it for the Maid:
Your part in her, you could not keepe from death,
But heauen keepes his part in eternall life:
The moſt you ſought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heauen, ſhe ſhouldſt be aduan'ſt,
And weepe ye now, ſeeing ſhe is aduan'ſt
Aboue the Cloudes, as high as Heauen it ſelfe?
O in this loue, you loue your Child ſo ill,
That you run mad, ſeeing that ſhe is well:
Shee's not well married, that liues married long,
But ſhee's beſt married, that dies married yong.
Drie vp your teares, and ſtick your Roſemarie
On this faire Coarſe, and as the cuſtome is,
And in her beſt array beare her to Church:
For though ſome Nature bids all vs lament,
Yet Natures teares are Reaſons merriment.

Fa. All things that we ordained Feſtiuall,
Turne from their office to blacke Funerall:
Our inſtruments to melancholy Bells,
Our wedding cheare, to a ſad buriall Feaſt.
Our ſolemne Hymnes, to ſullen Dyrges change:
Our Bridall flowers ſerue for a buried Coarſe:
And all things change them to the contrarie.

Fri. Sir go you in; and Madam, go with him,
And go ſir Paris, every one prepare
To follow this faire Coarſe vnto her graue:
The heauens do lowre vpon you, for ſome ill:
Moue them no more, by croſſing their high will. Exeunt

Mu. Faith we may put vp our Pipes and be gone.

Nur. Honeſt goodfellowes: Ah put vp, put vp,
For well you know, this is a pitifull caſe.

Mu. I by my troth, the caſe may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Muſitions, oh Muſitions,
Hearts eaſe, hearts eaſe,
O, and you will haue me liue, play hearts eaſe.

Mu. Why hearts eaſe;

Pet. O Muſitions,
Becauſe my heart it ſelfe plaies, my heart is full

Mu. Not a dump we, 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mu. No.

Pet. I will then giue it you ſoundly.

Mu What will you giue vs?

Pet. No money on my faith, but the gleeke
I will giue you the Minſtrell.

Mu. Then will I giue you the Seruing creature.

Peter. Then will I lay the ſeruing Creatures Dagger on your pate. I will carie no Crochets, Ile Re you, Ile Fa you, do you note me?

Mu. And you Re vs, and Fa vs, you Note vs.

2 M. Pray you put vp your Dagger,
And put out your wit.
Then haue at you with my wit.

Peter. I will drie-beate you with an yron wit,
And put vp my yron Dagger.
Anſwere me like men.
When griping griefes the heart doth wound, then Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound.
Why ſiluer ſound? why Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound? what ſay you Simon Catling?

Mu. Marry ſir, becauſe ſiluer hath a ſweet ſound.

Pet. Prateſt, what ſay you Hugh Rebicke?

2 M. I ſay ſiluer ſound, becauſe Muſitians ſound for ſil-

Pet. Prateſt too, what ſay you Iames Sound-Poſt? (ver

3 Mu. Faith I know not what to ſay.

Pet. O I cry you mercy, you are the Singer.
I will ſay for you; it is Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound.

Becauſe Muſitions haue no gold for ſounding:
Then Muſicke with her ſiluer ſound with ſpeedy helpe doth lend redreſſe. Exit.

Mu. What a peſtilent knaue is this ſame?

1. 2. Hang him Iacke, come weele in here, tarrie for the Mourners, and ſtay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may truſt the flattering truth of ſleepe,
My dreames preſage ſome ioyfull newes at hand:
My boſomes L. ſits lightly in his throne:
And all this day an vnacuſtom'd ſpirit,
Lifts me aboue the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that giues a dead man leaue to thinke,)
And breath'd ſuch life with kiſſes in my lips,
That I reuiu'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how ſweet is loue it ſelfe poſſeſt,
When but loues ſhadowes are ſo rich in ioy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balthazer?
Doſt thou not bring me Letters from the Frier?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Iuliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if ſhe be well.

Man. Then ſhe is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body ſleepes in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liue,
I ſaw her laid low in her kindreds Vault,
And preſently tooke Poſte to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing theſe ill newes,
Since you did leaue it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it euen ſo?
Then I denie you Starres.
Thou knoweſt my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Poſt-Horſes, I will hence to night.

Man. I do beſeech you ſir, haue patience:
Your lookes are pale and wild, and do import
Some miſaduenture.

Rom. Tuſh, thou art deceiu'd,
Leaue me, and do the thing I bid thee do.
Haſt thou no Letters to me from the Frier?

Man. No my good Lord.

Exit Man.

Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hyre thoſe Horſes, Ile be with thee ſtraight.
Well Iuliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Lets ſee for meanes: O miſchiefe thou art ſwift,
To enter in the thoughts of deſperate men:
I do remember an Apothecarie,
And here abouts dwells, which late I noted
In tattred weeds, with ouerwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miſerie had worne him to the boones:
And in his needie ſhop a Tortoyſe hung,
An Alligator ſtuft, and other skins
Of ill ſhap'd fiſhes, and about his ſhelues,
A beggerly account of emptie boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and muſtie ſeedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roſes
Were thinly ſcattered, to make vp a ſhew.
Noting this penury, to my ſelfe I ſaid,
An if a man did need a poyſon now,
Whoſe ſale is perſent death in Mantua,
Here liues a Caitiffe wretch would ſell it him.
O this ſame thought did but fore-run my need,
And this ſame needie man muſt ſell it me.
As I remember, this ſhould be the houſe,
Being holy day, the beggers ſhop is ſhut.
What ho? Apothecarie?

Enter Apothecarie.

Apo. Who calls ſo lowd?

Rom. Come hither man, I ſee that thou art poore,
Hold, there is fortie Duckets, let me haue
A dram of poyſon, ſuch ſoone ſpeeding geare,
As will diſperſe it ſelfe through all the veines,
That the life-wearie-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be diſcharg'd of breath,
As violently, as haſtie powder fier'd
Doth hurry from the fatall Canons wombe.

Apo. Such mortall drugs I haue, but Mantua law
Is death to any he, that vtters them.

Rom. Art thou ſo bare and full of wretchedneſſe,
And feare ſt to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppreſſion ſtarueth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hangs vpon thy backe:
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds law
The world affords no law to make thee rich,
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

Apo. My pouerty, but not my will conſents.

Rom. I pray thy pouerty, and not thy will.

Apo. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the ſtrength
Of twenty men, it would diſpatch you ſtraight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worſe poyſon to mens ſoules,
Doing more murther in this loathſome world,
Then theſe poore compounds that thou may'ſt not ſell.
I ſell thee poyſon, thou haſt ſold me none,
Farewell, buy food, and get thy ſelfe in fleſh.
Come Cordiall, and not poyſon, go with me
To Iuliets graue, for there muſt I vſe thee.

Exeunt

Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Laurence.

Iohn. Holy Franciſcan Frier, Brother, ho?

Enter Frier Laurence.

Law. This ſame ſhould be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what ſayes Romeo?
Or if his mind be writ, giue me his Letter.

Iohn. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to aſſociate me,
Here in this Citie viſiting the ſick,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suſpecting that we both were in a houſe
Where the infectious peſtilence did raigne,
Seal'd vp the doores, and would not let vs forth,
So that my ſpeed to Mantua there was ſtaid.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Iohn. I could not ſend it, here it is againe,
Nor get a meſſenger to bring it thee,
So fearefull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappie Fortune! by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it ſtraight
Vnto my Cell.

Iohn. Brother Ile go and bring it thee. Exit.

Law. Now muſt I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Iuliet wake,
Shee will beſhrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of theſe accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And

hes at my Cell till Romeo come,
g Coarſe,clos'd in a dead mans Tombe,
Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page.

iue me thy Torch Boy,hence and ſtand aloſe,
out,for I would not be ſeene:
d young Trees lay thee all along,
y eare cloſe to the hollow ground,
ſoot vpon the Churchyard tread,
, vnſirme with digging vp of Graues,
halt heare it: whiſtle then to me,
that thou heareſt ſome thing approach,
oſe flowers. Do as I bid thee,go.
am almoſt afraid to ſtand alone
Churchyard,yet I will aduenture.
t Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed I ſtrew:
Canopie is duſt and ſtones,
ith ſweet water nightly I will dewe,
g that,with teares deſtil'd by mones;
uies that I for thee will keepe,
all be,to ſtrew thy graue, and weepe.
Whiſtle Boy.
ioues warning,ſomething doth approach,
ſed foot wanders this wayes to night,
my obſequies,and true loues right?
h a Torch? Muffle me night a while

Enter Romeo and Peter.

Giue me that Mattocke,& the wrenching Iron,
this Letter,early in the morning
ſhuer it to my Lord and Father,
he light; vpon thy life I charge thee,
thou hear'ſt or ſeeſt,ſtand all aloofe,
t interrupt me in my courſe,
ſcend into this bed of death,
o behold my Ladies face:
y to take thence from her dead finger,
Ring: a Ring that I muſt vſe, mployment,therefore hence be gone:
ealous doſt returne to prie
urther ſhall intend to do,
I will teare thee ioynt by ioynt,
this hungry Churchyard with thy limbs:
nd my intents are ſauage wilde:
e and more inexorable farre,
ie Tygers,or the roaring Sea.
will be gone ſir,and not trouble you ſhall thou ſhew me friendſhip: take thou that,
e proſperous,and farewell good fellow.
r all this ſame,I le hide me here about,
I feare,and his intents I doubt.
hou deteſtable mawe,thou wombe of death,
ith the deareſt morſell of the earth:
orce thy rotten Iawes to open,
ſpight,Ile cram thee with more food.
his is that baniſhs haughtie Mountager,
led my Loues Cozin; with which griefe,
ſed the faire Creature died,
come to do ſome villanous ſhame
d bodies: I will apprehend him.
nhallowed toyle,vile Mountague:
rance be purſued further then death?
d vallaine,I do apprehend thee.
go with me,for thou muſt die,

Rom. I muſt indeed,and therfore came I hither:
Good gentle youth,tempt not a deſperate man,
Flie hence and leaue me,thinke vpon thoſe gone,
Let them affright thee. I beſeech thee Youth,
Put not an other ſin vpon my head,
By vrging me to furie. O be gone,
By heauen I loue thee better then my ſelfe,
For I come hither arm'd againſt my ſelfe:
Stay not,be gone,liue,and hereafter ſay,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.
Par. I do deſie thy commiſſeration,
And apprehend thee for a Felon here.
Ro. Wilt thou prouoke me? Then haue at thee Boy.
Pet. O Lord they fight,I will go call the Watch.
Pa. O I am ſlaine,if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe,lay me with Iuliet.
Rom. In faith I will,let me peruſe this face:
Mercutio kinſman,Noble Countie Paris,
What ſaid my man,when my beroſſed ſoule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris ſhould haue married Iuliet.
Said he not ſo? Or did I dreame it ſo?
Or am I mad,hearing him talke of Iuliet,
To thinke it was ſo? O giue me thy hand,
One,writ with me in ſowre misfortunes booke.
Ile burie thee in a triumphant graue.
A Graue; O no,a Lanthorne; ſlaughtred Youth,
For here lies Iuliet,and her beautie makes
This Vault a feaſting preſence full of light.
Death lie thou there,by a dead man interr'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Haue they beene merrie? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Loue,my Wife,
Death that hath ſuckt the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet vpon thy Beautie
Thou are not conquer'd. Beauties enſigne yet
Is Crymſon in thy lips,and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flagge is not aduanced there.
Tybalt,ly'ſt thou there in thy bloudy ſheet?
O what more fauour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To ſunder his that was thy enemie?
Forgiue me Cozen. Ah deare Iuliet:
Why art thou yet ſo faire? I will beleeue,
Shall I beleeue,that vnſubſtantiall death is amorous?
And that the leane abhorred Monſter keepes
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that,I ſtill will ſtay with thee,
And neuer from this Pallace of dym night
Depart againe: come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health,where ere thou tumbleſt in.
O true Apothecarie!
Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kiſſe I die.
Depart againe; here,here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides: O here
Will I ſet vp my euerlaſting reſt:
And ſhake the yoke of inauſpicious ſtarres
From this world-wearied fleſh: Eyes looke your laſt:
Armes take your laſt embrace: And lips,O you
The doores of breath,ſeale with a righteous kiſſe
A dateleſſe bargaine to ingroſſing death:
Come bitter conduct,come vnſauoury guide,
Thou deſperate Pilot,now at once run on
The daſhing Rocks,thy Sea-ſicke weerie Barke:
Heere's to my Loue. O true Apothecary:

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.

Enter Frier with Lanthorne, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. St. Frances be my speed, how oft to night
Haue my old feet stumbled at graues? Who's there?

Man. Here's one, a Friend, & one that knowes you well.

Fri. Bliſſe be vpon you. Tell me good my Friend
What Torch is yond that vainely lends his light
To grubs, and eyeleſſe Scuiles? As I diſcerne,
It burneth in the Capels Monument.

Man. It doth ſo holy ſir,
And there's my Maſter, one that you loue.

Fri. Who is it?

Man. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he bin there?

Man. Full halfe an houre.

Fri. Go with me to the Vault.

Man. I dare not Sir:
My Maſter knowes not but I am gone hence,
And fearefully did menace me with death,
If I did ſtay to looke on his entents.

Fri. Stay, then Ile go alone, feares comes vpon me.
O much I feare ſome ill vnluckie thing.

Man. As I did ſleepe vnder this young tree here,
I dreamt my maiſter and another fought,
And that my Maiſter ſlew him.

Fri. Romeo.
Alacke, alacke, what blood is this which ſtaines
The ſtony entrance of this Sepulcher?
What meane theſe Maſterleſſe, and goarie Swords
To lie diſcolour'd by this place of peace?
Romeo, oh pale: who elſe? what Paris too?
And ſleept in blood? Ah what an vnkind houre
Is guiltie of this lamentable chance?
The Lady ſtirs.

Iul. O comfortable Frier, where's my Lord?
I do remember well where I ſhould be:
And there I am, where is my Romeo?

Fri. I heare ſome noyſe Lady, come from that neſt
Of death, contagion, and vnnaturall ſleepe,
A greater power then we can contradict
Hath thwarted our entents, come, come away,
Thy husband in thy boſome there lies dead:
And Paris too: come Ile diſpoſe of thee,
Among a Siſterhood of holy Nunnes:
Stay not to queſtion, for the watch is comming.
Come, go good Iuliet, I dare no longer ſtay. Exit.

Iul. Go get thee hence, for I will not away.
What's here? A cup clos'd in my true louers hand?
Poyſon I ſee hath bin his timeleſſe end
O churle, drinke all? and leſt no friendly drop,
To helpe me after, I will kiſſe thy lips,
Happlie ſome poyſon yet doth hang on them.
To make me die with a reſtorative.
Thy lips are warme.

Enter Boy and Watch.

Watch. Lead Boy, which way?

Iul. Yea noiſe?
Then ile be briefe. O happy Dagger.
This is thy ſheath, there ruſt and let me die. Kils herſelfe.

Boy. This is the place,
There where the Torch doth burne

Watch. The ground is bloody,
Search about the Churchyard.
Go ſome of you, who ere you find attach.
Pittifull ſight, here lies the Countie ſlaine,
And Iuliet bleeding, warme and newly dead
Who here hath laine theſe two dayes buried.
Go tell the Prince, runne to the Capulets,
Raiſe vp the Mountagues, ſome others ſearch,
We ſee the ground whereon theſe woes do lye,
But the true ground of all theſe piteous woes,
We cannot without circumſtance deſcry.

Enter Romeo's man.

Watch. Here's Romeo's man,
We found him in the Churchyard.

Con. Hold him in ſafety, till the Prince come hither.

Enter Frier and another Watchman.

3. Wat. Here is a Frier that trembles, ſighes, and weepes
We tooke this Mattocke and this Spade from him,
As he was comming from this Church-yard ſide.

Con. A great ſuſpition, ſtay the Frier too.

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What miſaduenture is ſo early vp,
That calls our perſon from our mornings reſt?

Enter Capulet and his Wife.

Cap. What ſhould it be that they ſo ſhrike abroad?

Wife. O the people in the ſtreete cry Romeo,
Some Iuliet, and ſome Paris, and all runne
With open outcry toward our Monument.

Pri. What feare is this which ſtartles in your eares?

Watch. Soueraigne, here lies the Countie Paris ſlaine,
And Romeo dead, and Iuliet dead before,
Warme and new kil'd.

Prin. Search,
Seeke, and know how, this foule murder comes.

Wat. Here is a Frier, and Slaughter'd Romeos man,
With Inſtruments vpon them fit to open
Theſe dead mens Tombes.

Cap. O heauen!
O wife looke how our Daughter bleedes!
This Dagger hath miſtane, for loe his houſe
Is empty on the backe of Mountague,
And is miſheathed in my Daughters boſome.

Wife. O me, this ſight of death, is as a Bell
That warnes my old age to a Sepulcher.

Enter Mountague.

Pri. Come Mountague, for thou art early vp
To ſee thy Sonne and Heire, now early downe.

Moun. Alas my liege, my wife is dead to night,
Griefe of my Sonnes exile hath ſtopt her breath:
What further woe conſpires againſt my age?

Prin. Looke: and thou ſhalt ſee.

Moun. O thou vntaught, what manners is in this,
To preſſe before thy Father to a graue?

Prin. Seale vp the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can cleare theſe ambiguities,
And know their ſpring, their head, their true deſcent,
And then will I be generall of your woes,
And lead you euen to death: meane time forbeare,
And let miſchance be ſlaue to patience,
Bring forth the parties of ſuſpition.

Fri. I am the greateſt, able to doe leaſt,
Yet moſt ſuſpected as the time and place
Doth make againſt me of this direfull murther:
And here I ſtand both to impeach and purge
My ſelfe condemned, and my ſelfe excus'd.

Prin. Then ſay at once, what thou doſt know in this?

Fri. I will be briefe, for my ſhort date of breath
Is not ſo long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo there dead, was husband to that Iuliet,
And ſhe there dead, that's Romeos faithfull wife:

them; and their ſtolne marriage day
alts Doomesday: whoſe vntimely death
the new-made Bridegroome from this Citie:
n (and not for Tybalt) Iuliet pinde.
emoue that ſiege of Greefe from her,
,and would haue married her perforce
ne Paris Then comes ſhe to me,
h wilde lookes) bid me deuiſe ſome meanes
r from this ſecond Marriage,
Cell there would ſhe kill her ſelfe
e I her (ſo Tutor'd by my Art)
g Potion, which ſo tooke effect ided, for it wrought on her e of death. Meane time, I writ to Romeo, hould hither come, as this dyre night,
to take her from her borrowed graue,
e time the Potions force ſhould ceaſe.
hich bore my Letter, Frier Iohn,
d by accident; and yeſternight my Letter backe. Then all alone, ehxed houre of her waking.
o take her from her Kindreds vault,
to keepe her cloſely at my Cell,
nueniently could ſend to Romeo.
n I came (ſome Minute ere the time waking) heere vntimely lay ole Paris, and true Romeo dead.
es, and I intreated her come foorth,
re this worke of Heauen, with patience:
, a noyſe did ſcarre me from the Tombe, (too deſperate) would not go with me, ſeemes) did violence on her ſelfe.
know, and to the Marriage her Nurſe is priuy:
ght in this miſcarried by my fault,
ld life be ſacrific'd, ſome houre before the time,
rigour of ſeuereſt Law.
We ſtill haue knowne thee for a Holy man.
Romeo's man? What can he ſay to this?
I brought my Maſter newes of Iuliets death,
And then in poſte he came from Mantua
To this ſame place, to this ſame Monument.
This Letter he early bid me giue his Father,
And threatned me with death, going in the Vault,
If I departed not, and left him there
Prin. Giue me the Letter, I will look on it
Where is the Counties Page that rais'd the Watch?
Sirra, what made your Maſter in this place?
Page. He came with flowres to ſtrew his Ladies graue,
And bid me ſtand aloofe, and ſo I did:
Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,
And by and by my Maſter drew on him,
And then I ran away to call the Watch.
Prin. This Letter doth make good the Friers words,
Their courſe of Loue, the tydings of her death:
And heere he writes, that he did buy a poyſon
Of a poore Pothecarie, and therewithall
Came to this Vault to dye, and lye with Iuliet.
Where be theſe Enemies? Capulet, Mountague,
See what a ſcourge is laide vpon your hate,
That Heauen finds meanes to kill your ioyes with Loue;
And I, for winking at your diſcords too,
Haue loſt a brace of Kinſmen: All are puniſh'd.
Cap. O Brother Mountague, giue me thy hand,
This is my Daughters ioynture, for no more
Can I demand.
Mont. But I can giue thee more:
For I will raiſe her Statue in pure Gold,
That whiles Verona by that name is knowne,
There ſhall no figure at that Rate be ſet,
As that of True and Faithfull Iuliet.
Cap. As rich ſhall Romeo by his Lady ly,
Poore ſacrifices of our enmity.
Prin. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,
The Sunne for ſorrow will not ſhew his head:
Go hence, to haue more talke of theſe ſad things.
Some ſhall be pardon'd, and ſome puniſhed:
For neuer was a Storie of more Woe,
Then this of Iuliet, and her Romeo. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE LIFE OF TYMON OF ATHENS.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Poet, Painter, Ieweller, Merchant, and Mercer, at seuerall doores.

Poet.

Good day Sir.

Pain. I am glad y'are well.

Poet. I haue not seene you long, how goes the World?

Pain. It weares sir, as it growes.

Poet. I that's well knowne:
But what particular Rarity? What strange,
Which manifold record not matches: see
Magicke of Bounty, all these spirits thy power
Hath coniur'd to attend,
I know the Merchant.

Pain. I know them both: th'others a Ieweller.

Mer. O 'tis a worthy Lord.

Iew. Nay that's most fixt.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an vntyreable and continuate goodnesse:
He passes.

Iew. I haue a Iewell heere.

Mer. O pray let's see't. For the Lord Timon, sir?

Iewel. If he will touch the estimate. But for that—

Poet. When we for recompence haue prais'd the vild,
It staines the glory in that happy Verse,
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. 'Tis a good forme.

Iewel. And rich: heere is a Water looke ye.

Pain. You are rapt sir, in some worke, some Dedication to the great Lord.

Poet. A thing slipt idlely from me.
Our Poesie is as a Gowne, which vses
From whence 'tis nourisht: the fire i'th Flint
Shewes not, till it be strooke: our gentle flame
Prouokes it selfe, and like the currant flyes
Each bound it chases. What haue you there?

Pain. A Picture sir: when comes your Booke forth?

Poet. Vpon the heeles of my presentment sir.
Let's see your peece.

Pain. 'Tis a good Peece.

Poet. So 'tis, this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: How this grace
Speakes his owne standing: what a mentall power
This eye shootes forth? How bigge imagination
Moues in this Lip, to th'dumbnesse of the gesture,
One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life:
Heere is a touch: Is't good?

Poet. I will say of it,
It Tutors Nature, Artificiall strife
Liues in these touches, liuelier then life.

Enter certaine Senators.

Pain. How this Lord is followed.

Poet. The Senators of Athens, happy man.

Pain. Looke moe.

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.
I haue in this rough worke, shap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hugge
With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moues itselfe
In a wide Sea of wax, no leuell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold,
But flies an Eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leauing no Tract behinde.

Pain. How shall I vnderstand you?

Poet. I will vnfold to you.
You see how all Conditions, how all Minds,
As well of glib and slipp'ry Creatures, as
Of Graue and austere qualitie, tender downe
Their seruices to Lord Timon: his large Fortune,
Vpon his good and gracious Nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his loue and tendance
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glasse-fac'd Flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loues better
Then to abhorre himselfe; euen he drops downe
The knee before him, and returnes in peace
Most rich in Timons nod.

Pain. I saw them speake together.

Poet. Sir, I haue vpon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be throned.
The Base o'th Mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinde of Natures
That labour on the bosome of this Sphere,
To propagate their states; amongst'st them all,
Whose eyes are on this Soueraigne Lady fixt,
One do I personate of Lord Timons seruice,
Whom Fortune with her Iuory hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace, to present slaues and seruants
Translates his Riuals.

Pain. 'Tis conceyu'd, to scope
This Throne, this Fortune, and this Hill me thinkes

With

With one man becken'd from the reſt below,
Bowing his head againſt the ſteepy Mount
To climbe his happineſſe, would be well expreſt
In our Condition.

Poet. Nay Sir, but heare me on:
All thoſe which were his Fellowes but of late,
Some better then his valew; on the moment
Follow his ſtrides, his Lobbies fill with tendance,
Raine Sacrificiall whiſperings in his eare,
Make Sacred euen his ſtyrrop, and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.

Pain. I marry, what of theſe?

Poet. When Fortune in her ſhift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloued, all his Dependants
Which labour'd after him to the Mountaines top,
Euen on their knees and hand, let him ſit downe,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thouſand morall Paintings I can ſhew,
That ſhall demonſtrate theſe quicke blowes of Fortunes,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well,
To ſhew Lord Timon, that meane eyes haue ſeene
The foot aboue the head.

Trumpets ſound.
Enter Lord Timon, addreſſing himſelfe courteouſly to every Suitor.

Tim. Impriſon'd is he, ſay you?

Meſ. My good Lord, fiue Talents is his debt,
His meanes moſt ſhort, his Creditors moſt ſtraite:
Your Honourable Letter he deſires
To thoſe haue ſhut him vp, which failing,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius well:
I am not of that Feather, to ſhake off
My Friend when he muſt needs me. I do know him
A Gentleman, that well deſerues a helpe,
Which he ſhall haue. Ile pay the debt, and free him.

Meſ. Your Lordſhip euer binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him, I will ſend his ranſome,
And being enfranchized bid him come to me;
'Tis not enough to helpe the Feeble vp,
But to ſupport him after. Fare you well.

Meſ. All happineſſe to your Honor. Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Oldm. Lord Timon, heare me ſpeake.

Tim. Freely good Father.

Oldm. Thou haſt a Seruant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I haue ſo: What of him?

Oldm. Moſt Noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he heere, or no? Lucilius.

Luc. Heere at your Lordſhips ſeruice.

Oldm. This Fellow heere, L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my houſe. I am a man
That from my firſt haue beene inclin'd to thriſe,
And my eſtate deſerues an Heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.

Tim. Well: what further?

Old. One onely Daughter haue I, no Kin elſe,
On whom I may conferre what I haue got:
The Maid is faire, a'th'youngeſt for a Bride,
And I haue bred her at my deereſt coſt
In Qualities of the beſt. This man of thine
Attempts her loue: I prythee (Noble Lord)
Ioyne with me to forbid him her reſort,
My ſelfe haue ſpoke in vaine.

Tim. The man is honeſt.

Oldm. Therefore he will be Timon,
His honeſty rewards him in it ſelfe,
It muſt not beare my Daughter.

Tim. Does ſhe loue him?

Oldm. She is yong and apt:
Our owne precedent paſſions do inſtruct vs
What leuities in youth.

Tim. Loue you the Maid?

Luc. I my good Lord, and ſhe accepts of it.

Oldm. If in her Marriage my conſent be miſſing,
I call the Gods to witneſſe, I will chooſe
Mine heyre from forth the Beggers of the world,
And diſpoſſeſſe her all.

Tim. How ſhall ſhe be endowed,
If ſhe be mated with an equall Husband?

Oldm. Three Talents on the preſent; in future, all.

Tim. This Gentleman of mine
Hath ſeru'd me long:
To build his Fortune, I will ſtraine a little,
For 'tis a Bond in men. Giue him thy Daughter,
What you beſtow, in him Ile counterpoize,
And make him weigh with her.

Oldm. Moſt Noble Lord,
Pawne me to this your Honour, ſhe is his.

Tim My hand to thee,
Mine Honour on my promiſe.

Luc. Humbly I thanke your Lordſhip, neuer may
That ſtate or Fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you. Exit

Poet. Vouchſafe my Labour,
And long liue your Lordſhip.

Tim. I thanke you, you ſhall heare from me anon:
Go not away. What haue you there, my Friend?

Pain. A peece of Painting, which I do beſeech
Your Lordſhip to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The Painting is almoſt the Naturall man:
For ſince Diſhonor Traffickes with mans Nature,
He is but out-ſide: Theſe Penſil'd Figures are Euen ſuch as they giue out. I like your worke,
And you ſhall finde I like it; Waite attendance
Till you heare further from me.

Pain. The Gods preſerue ye.

Tim. Well fare you Gentleman: giue me your hand.
We muſt needs dine together: Sir your Iewell
Hath ſuffered vnder praiſe.

Iewel. What my Lord, diſpraiſe?

Tim. A meere ſcarcity of Commendations,
If I ſhould pay you for't as 'tis extold,
It would vndoe me quite.

Iewel. My Lord, 'tis rated
As thoſe which ſell would giue: but you well know,
Things of like valew differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Maſters. Beleeu't deare Lord,
You mend the Iewell by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. Exeunt Apermantus.

Mer. No my good Lord, he ſpeakes the common tong
Which all men ſpeake with him.

Tim. Looke who comes heere, will you be chid?

Iewel. We'l beare with your Lordſhip.

Mer. He'l ſpare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee,
Gentle Apermantus.

Ape. Till I be gentle,ſtay thou for thy good motrow.
When thou art Timons dogge, and theſe Knaues honeſt.
Tim. Why doſt thou call them Knaues, thou know'ſt them not.
Ape. Are they not Athenians?
Tim. Yes.
Ape. Then I repent not.
Iew. You know me, Apemantus?
Ape. Thou know'ſt I do, I call'd thee by thy name.
Tim. Thou art proud Apemantus?
Ape. Of nothing ſo much,as that I am not like Timon
Tim. Whether art going?
Ape. To knocke out an honeſt Athenians braines.
Tim. That's a deed thou't dye for.
Ape. Right,if doing nothing be death by th'Law.
Tim. How lik'ſt thou this picture Apemantus?
Ape. The beſt,for the innocence.
Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it.
Ape. He wrought better that made the Painter, and yet he's but a filthy peece of worke.
Pain. Y'are a Dogge.
Ape. Thy Mothers of my generation: what's ſhe,if I be a Dogge?
Tim. Wilt dine with me Apemantus?
Ape. No: I eate not Lords.
Tim. And thou ſhould'ſt,thou'd'ſt anger Ladies.
Ape. O they eate Lords;
So they come by great bellies.
Tim. That's a laſcitious apprehenſion.
Ape. So, thou apprehend'ſt it,
Take it for thy labour.
Tim. How doſt thou like this Iewell, Apemantus?
Ape. Not ſo well as plain-dealing,which will not caſt a man a Doit.
Tim. What doſt thou thinke 'tis worth?
Ape. Not worth my thinking.
How now Poet?
Poet. How now Philoſopher?
Ape. Thou lyeſt.
Poet. Art not one?
Ape. Yes.
Poet. Then I lye not.
Ape. Art not a Poet?
Poet. Yes,
Ape. Then thou lyeſt:
Looke in thy laſt worke, where thou haſt feign'd him a worthy Fellow.
Poet. That's not feign'd, he is ſo.
Ape. Yes he is worthy of ther,and to pay thee for thy labour. He that loues to be flattered,is worthy o'th flatterer. Heauens,that I were a Lord,
Tim. What would'ſt do then Apemantus?
Ape. E'ne as Apemantus does now,hate a Lord with my heart.
Tim. What thy ſelfe?
Ape. I.
Tim. Wherefore?
Ape. That I had no angry wit to be a Lord.
Art not thou a Merchant?
Mer. I Apemantus.
Ape. Traffick confound thee,if the Gods will not.
Mer. If Trafficke do it, the Gods do it.
Ape. Traffickes thy God,& thy God confound thee.
Trumpet ſounds. Enter a Meſſenger.
Tim. What Trompets that?
Meſ. 'Tis Alcibiades,and ſome twenty Horſe
All of Companionſhip.
Tim. Pray entertaine them, giue them guide
You muſt needs dine with me: go not you hence
Till I haue thanke you: when dinners done
Shew me this peece, I am ioyfull of your ſights.
Enter Alcibiades with the reſt.
Moſt welcome Sir.
Ape. So,ſo; theſe Arches contract, and ſtr ſupple ioynts: that there ſhould bee ſmall loue a theſe ſweet Knaues, and all this Curteſie. The f mans bred out into Baboon and Monkey.
Alc. Sir,you haue ſau'd my longing,and I fe
Moſt hungerly on your ſight.
Tim. Right welcome Sir:
Ere we depart, we'l ſhare a bounteous time
In different pleaſures.
Pray you let vs in. Exeunt
Enter two Lords.
1. Lord What time a day is't Apemantus?
Ape. Time to be honeſt.
1 That time ſerues ſtill.
Ape. The moſt accurſed thou that ſtill omit
2 Thou are going to Lord Timons Feaſt.
Ape. I,to ſee meate fill Knaues,and Wine he
2 Farthee well, farthee well.
Ape. Thou art a Foole to bid me farewell tw
2 Why Apemantus?
Ape. Should'ſt haue kept one to thy ſelfe, fo to giue thee none.
1 Hang thy ſelfe.
Ape. No I will do nothing at thy bidding:
Make thy requeſts to thy Friend.
2 Away vnpreceable Dogge,
Or Ile ſpurne thee hence.
Ape. I will flye like a dogge, the heeles o'th
1 Hee's oppoſite to humanity.
Comes ſhall we in,
And taſte Lord Timons bounty: he out-goes
The verie heart of kindneſſe.
2 He powres it out: Plutus the God of Gold
Is but his Steward: no meede but he repayes
Seuen-fold aboue it ſelfe: No guiſt to him,
But breeds the giuer a returne: exceeding
All vſe of quittance.
1 The Nobleſt minde he carries,
That euer gouern'd man.
2 Long may he liue in Fortunes. Shall we in Ile keepe you Company.

Hoboyes Playing loud Muſicke.

A great Banquet ſerv'd in: and then, Enter Lord T States, the Athenian Lords, Ventigus which T deere'd from priſon. Then comes dropping after matters diſcontentedly like himſelfe.

Ventig. Moſt honoured Timon,
It hath pleas'd the Gods to remember my Father
And call him to long peace:
He is gone happy,and has left me rich:
Then,as in grateſull Vertue I am bound
To your free heart, I do returne thoſe Talents
Doubled with thankes and ſeruice, from whoſe h
I deriu'd liberty.
Tim. O by no meanes,
Honeſt Ventigus: You miſtake my loue.

I gaue it freely euer, and there's none
Can truely say he giues, if he receiues:
If euer bearers pray at that game, we muſt not dare
To imitate them: faults that are rich are faire.

Pain. A Noble ſpirit.

Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but deuis'd at firſt
To ſet a gloſſe on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodneſſe, ſorry ere 'tis ſhowne:
But where there is true friendſhip, there needs none.
Pray ſit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,
Then my Fortunes to me.

1. Lord. My Lord, we alwaies haue confeſſ'd it.

Apem. Ho ho, confeſſ'd it? Hang'd it? Haue you not?

Tim. O Apemantus, you are welcome.

Apem. No: You ſhall not make me welcome:
I come to haue thee thruſt me out of doores.

Tim. Fie, th'art a churle, ye haue got a humour there
Does not become a man, 'tis much too blame:
They ſay my Lords, Ira furor breuis eſt,
But yond man is verie angrie.
Go, let him haue a Table by himſelfe:
For he does neither affect companie,
Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Apem. Let me ſtay at thine apperill Timon,
I come to obſerue, I giue thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heede of thee: Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcome: I my ſelfe would haue no power,
prythee let my meate make thee ſilent.

Apem. I ſcorne thy meate, 'twould choake me: for I ſhould ne're flatter thee. Oh you Gods! What a number of men eats Timon, and he ſees 'em not? It greeues me to ſee ſo many dip their meate in one mans blood, and all the madneſſe is, he cheeres them vp too.
I wonder men dare truſt themſelues with men.
Me thinks they ſhould enuite them without kniues,
Good for their meate, and ſafer for their liues.
There's much example for't, the fellow that ſits next him, now parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a diuided draught: is the readieſt man to kill him. 'Tas beene proued, if I were a huge man I ſhould feare to drinke at meales, leaſt they ſhould ſpoile my wind-pipes dangerous notes, great men ſhould drinke with harneſſe on their throates.

Tim. My Lord in heare: and let the health go round.

2. Lord. Let it flow this way my good Lord.

Apem. Flow this way? A braue fellow. He keepes his tides well, thoſe healths will make thee and thy ſtate looke ill, Timon.
Heere's that which is too weake to be a ſinner,
Honeſt water, which ne're left man i'th'mire:
This and my food are equals, there's no ads,
Feaſts are too proud to giue thanks to the Gods.

Apemantus Grace.

Immortall Gods, I crane no pelfe,
I pray for no man but my ſelfe,
Grant I may neuer prooue ſo fond,
To truſt man on his Oath or Bond.
Or a Harlot for her weeping,
Or a Dogge that ſeemes a ſleeping,
Or a keeper with my freedome,
Or my friends if I ſhould need 'em.
Amen. So fall to't:
Rich men ſin, and I eat root.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus.

Tim. Captaine Alcibiades, your hearts in the field now.

Alci. My heart is euer at your ſeruice, my Lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakefaſt of Enemies, then a dinner of Friends.

Alc. So they were bleeding new my Lord there's no meat like 'em, I could wiſh my beſt friend at ſuch a Feaſt.

Apem. Would all thoſe Flatterers were thine Enemies then, that then thou might'ſt kill 'em: & bid me to 'em.

1. Lord. Might we but haue that happineſſe my Lord, that you would once vſe our hearts, whereby we might expreſſe ſome part of our zeales, we ſhould thinke our ſelues for euer perfect.

Tim. Oh no doubt my good Friends, but the Gods themſelues haue prouided that I ſhall haue much helpe from you: how had you beene my Friends elſe. Why haue you that charitable title from thouſands? Did not you chiefely belong to my heart? I haue told more of you to my ſelfe, then you can with modeſtie ſpeake in your owne behalfe. And thus farre I confirme you. Oh you Gods (thinke I,) what need we haue any Friends; if we ſhould ne're haue need of 'em? They were the moſt needleſſe Creatures liuing; ſhould we ne're haue vſe for 'em? And would moſt reſemble ſweete Inſtruments hung vp in Caſes, that keepes their ſounds to themſelues.
Why I haue often wiſht my ſelfe poorer, that I might come nearer to you: we are borne to do benefits. And what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our Friends? Oh what a pretious comfort 'tis, to haue ſo many like Brothers commanding one anothers Fortunes. Oh ioyes, e'ne made away ere
't can be borne: mine eies cannot hold out water me thinks to forget their Faults. I drinke to you.

Apem. Thou weep'ſt to make them drinke, Timon.

2. Lord. Ioy had the like conception in our eies,
And at that inſtant, like a babe ſprung vp.

Apem. Ho, ho: I laugh to thinke that babe a baſtard.

3. Lord. I promiſe you my Lord you mou'd me much.

Apem. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Maskers of Amazons, with Lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Tim. What meanes that Trumpe? How now?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Please you my Lord, there are certaine Ladies moſt deſirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wils?

Ser. There comes with them a fore-runner my Lord, which beares that office, to ſignifie their pleaſures.

Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Maske of Ladies.

Cup. Haile to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his Bounties taſte: the fiue beſt Senſes acknowledge thee their Patron, and come freely to gratulate thy plenteous boſome.
There taſt, touch all pleas'd from thy Table riſe:
They only now come but to Feaſt thine eies.

Tim. They're welcome all, let 'em haue kind admittance. Muſicke make their welcome.

Luc. You ſee my Lord, how ample y'are belou'd.

Apem. Hoyday,
What a ſweepe of vanitie comes this way.
They dance? They are madwomen,

Like

Like Madnesse is the glory of this life,
As this pompe shewes to a little oyle and roote.
We make our selues Fooles, to disport our selues,
And spend our Flatteries, to drinke those men,
Vpon whose Age we voyde it vp agen
With poysonous Spight and Enuy.
Who liues, that's not depraued, or depraues;
Who dyes, that beares not one spurne to their graues
Of their Friends guift:
I should feare, those that dance before me now,
Would one day stampe vpon me: 'Tas bene done,
Men shut their doores against a setting Sunne.

The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon, and to shew their loues, each single out an Amazon, and all Dance, men with women, a loftie straine or two to the Hoboyes, and cease.

Tim. You haue done our pleasures
Much grace (faire Ladies)
Set a faire fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not halfe so beautifull, and kinde:
You haue added worth vntoo't, and luster,
And entertain'd me with mine owne deuice.
I am to thanke you for't.

1 Lord. My Lord you take vs euen at the best.

Ape. Faith for the worst is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you, Please you to dispose your selues.

All La. Most thankfully, my Lord. Exeunt.

Tim. Flauius.

Fla. My Lord.

Tim. The little Casket bring me hither.

Fla. Yes, my Lord. More Iewels yet?
There is no crossing him in's humor,
Else I should tell him well, yfaith I should;
When all's spent, hee'ld be cross'd then, and he could.
'Tis pitty Bounty had not eyes behinde,
That man might ne're be wretched for his minde. Exit.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Ser. Heere my Lord, in readinesse.

2 Lord. Our Horses.

Tim. O my Friends:
I haue one word to say to you: Looke you, my good L.
I must intreat you honour me so much,
As to aduance this Iewell, accept it, and weare it,
Kinde my Lord.

1 Lord. I am so farre already in your guifts.

All. So are we all.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord, there are certaine Nobles of the Senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairely welcome.

Enter Flauius.

Fla. I beseech your Honor, vouchsafe me a word, it does concerne you neere.

Tim. Neere? why then another time Ile heare thee.
I prythee let's be prouided to shew them entertainment.

Fla. I scarse know how.

Enter another Seruant.

Ser. May it please your Honor, Lord Lucius
(Out of his free loue) hath presented to you
Foure Milke-white Horses, trapt in Siluer.

Tim. I shall accept them fairely: let the Presents
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third Seruant.

How now? What newes?

3 Ser. Please you my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucullus, entreats your companie to morrow, to hunt with him, and ha's sent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.

Tim. Ile hunt with him,
And let them be receiu'd, not without faire Reward.

Fla. What will this come to?
He commands vs to prouide, and giue great guifts, and all out of an empty Coffer:
Nor will he know his Purse, or yeeld me this,
To shew him what a Begger his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good.
His promises flye so beyond his state,
That what he speaks is all in debt, he ows for eu'ry word:
He is so kinde, that he now payes interest for't;
His Land's put to their Bookes. Well, would I were Gently put out of Office, before I were forc'd out:
Happier is he that has no friend to feede,
Then such that do e'ne Enemies exceede.
I bleed inwardly for my Lord. Exit

Tim. You doe your selues much wrong,
You bate too much of your owne merits.
Heere my Lord, a trifle of our Loue.

2 Lord. With more then common thankes
I will receyue it.

3 Lord. O he's the very soule of Bounty.

Tim. And now I remember my Lord, you gaue good words the other day of a Bay Courser I rod on. Tis yours because you lik'd it.

1 L. Oh, I beseech you pardon mee, my Lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word my Lord: I know no man can iustly praise, but what he does affect. I weighe my Friends affection with mine owne: Ile tell you true, Ile call to you.

All Lor. O none so welcome.

Tim. I take all, and your seuerall visitations
So kinde to heart, 'tis not enough to giue:
Me thinkes, I could deale Kingdomes to my Friends,
And nere be wearie. Alcibiades,
Thou art a Soldiour, therefore sildome rich,
It comes in Charitie to thee: for all thy liuing
Is mong'st the dead: and all the Lands thou hast
Lye in a pitcht field.

Alc. I, defil'd Land, my Lord.

1 Lord. We are so vertuously bound.

Tim. And so am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endeer'd.

Tim. All to you. Lights, more Lights.

1 Lord. The best of Happines, Honor, and Fortunes
Keepe with you Lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his Friends. Exeunt Lords

Aper. What a coyle's heere, seruing of beckes, and iutting out of bummes. I doubt whether their Legges be worth the summes that are giuen for 'em.
Friendship's full of dregges,
Me thinkes false hearts, should neuer haue sound legges.
Thus honest Fooles lay out their wealth on Curtsies.

Tim. Now Apermantus (if thou wert not sullen)
I would be good to thee.

Aper. No, Ile nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to raile vpon thee, and then thou wouldst sinne the faster. Thou giu'st so long Timon (I feare me) thou wilt giue away thy selfe in paper shortly.
What needs these Feasts, pompes, and Vaine-glories?

Tim.

Nay, and you begin to raile on Society once, I e not to giue regard to you. Farewell, & come t Muſicke. Exit
So: Thou wilt not heare mee now, thou ſhalt

Enter a Senator.

Good euen Varro: what, you come for money?

t is, and yours too, Iſidore?
t is ſo.

Cap. Would we were all diſcharg'd.
Var. I feare it,
Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Traine.

Tim. So ſoone as dinners done, wee'l forth againe
My Alcibiades. With me, what is your will?
Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues.
Tim. Dues? whence are you?
Cap. Of Athens heere, my Lord.
Tim. Go to my Steward.
Cap. Pleaſe it your Lordſhip, he hath put me off
To the ſucceſſion of new dayes this moneth:
My Maſter is awak'd by great Occaſion,
To call vpon his owne, and humbly prayes you,
That with your other Noble parts, you'l ſuite,
In giuing him his right.
Tim. Mine honeſt Friend,
I prythee but repaire to me next morning.
Cap. Nay, good my Lord.
Tim. Containe thy ſelfe, good Friend.
Var. One Varroes ſeruant, my good Lord.
Iſid From Iſidore, he humbly prayes your ſpeedy payment.
Cap. If you did know my Lord, my Maſters wants.
Var. 'Twas due on forfeyture my Lord, fixe weekes, and paſt.
Iſi. Your Steward puts me off my Lord, and I Am ſent expreſſely to your Lordſhip.
Tim. Giue me breath:
I do beſeech you good my Lords keepe on,
Ile waite vpon you inſtantly. Come hither. pray you
How goes the world, that I am thus encountred
With clamorous demands of debt, broken Bonds,
And the detention of long ſince due debts
Againſt my Honor?
Stew. Pleaſe you Gentlemen,
The time is vnagreeable to this buſineſſe:
Your importunacie ceaſe, till after dinner,
That I may make his Lordſhip vnderſtand
Wherefore you are not paid.
Tim. Do ſo my Friends, ſee them well entertain'd.
Stew. Pray draw neere. Exit.

Enter Apemantus and Foole.

Caph. Stay, ſtay, here comes the Foole with Apemantus, let's ha ſome ſport with 'em.
Var. Hang him, hee'l abuſe vs.
Iſid. A plague vpon him dogge.
Var. How doſt Foole?
Ape. Doſt Dialogue with thy ſhadow?
Var. I ſpeake not to thee.
Ape. No 'tis to thy ſelfe. Come away.
Iſi. There's the Foole hangs on your backe already.
Ape. No thou ſtand'ſt ſingle, th'art not on him yet.
Cap. Where's the Foole now?
Ape. He laſt aſk'd the queſtion. Poore Rogues, and Vſurers men, Bauds betweene Gold and want.
All. What are we Apemantus?
Ape. Aſſes.
All. Why?
Ape. That you aſk me what you are, & do not know your ſelues. Speake to 'em Foole.
Foole. How do you Gentlemen?
All. Gramercies good Foole:
How does your Miſtris?

Foole.

Foole. She's e'ne setting on water to scal'd such Chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Looke you, heere comes my Masters Page.

Page. Why how now Captaine? what do you in this wise Company.
How dost thou Apemantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably

Boy. Prythee Apemantus reade me the superscription of these Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canst not read?

Page No.

Ape There will little Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou wast borne a Bastard, and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelpt a Dogge, and thou shalt famish a Dogges death.
Answer not, I am gone. Exit

Ape. Ere so thou out-runst Grace,
Foole I will go with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leave me there?

Ape. If Timon stay at home.
You three serue three Vsurers?

All. I would they serv'd vs.

Ape. So would I:
As good a tricke as ever Hangman serv'd Theefe.

Foole. Are you three Vsurers men?

All. I Foole.

Foole. I thinke no Vsurer, but ha's a Foole to his Seruant. My Mistris is one, and I am her Foole: when men come to borrow of your Masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry: but they enter my Masters house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ap. Do it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaster, and a Knaue, which notwithstanding thou shalt be no lesse esteemed.

Varro. What is a Whoremaster Foole?

Foole. A Foole in good cloathes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit, sometime ap'peares like a Lord, sometime like a Lawyer, sometime like a Philosopher, with two stones moe then's artificiall one. Hee is verie often like a Knight; and generally, in all shapes that man goes vp and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this spirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a Foole:

Foole. Nor thou altogether a Wise man,
As much fooleric as I haue, so much wit thou lack'st.

Ape. That answer might haue become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside, heere comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (Foole) come.

Foole. I do not always follow Lover, elder Brother, and Woman, sometime the Philosopher.

Stew. Pray you walken eere,
Ile speake with you anon. Exeunt.

Tim. You make me meruell wherefore ere this time
Had you not fully laide my state before me,
That I might so haue rated my expence
As I had leaue of meanes.

Stew. You would not heare me:
At many leysures I propos'd.

Tim. Go too:
Perchance some single vantages you tooke,
When my indisposition put you backe,
And that vnaptnesse made your minister
Thus to excuse your selfe.

Stew. O my good Lord,
At many times I brought in my accompts,
Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honestie.
When for some trifling present you haue bid me
Returne so much, I haue shooke my head, and wept:
Yea 'gainst th'Authoritie of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more close: I did indure
Not fildome, nor no slight checkes, when I haue
Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate,
And your great flow of debts; my lou'd Lord,
Though you heare now (too late) yet nowes a time,
The greatest of your having, lackes a halfe,
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my Land be sold.

Stew. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeyted and gone,
And what remaines will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues; the future comes apace:
What shall defend the interim, and at length
How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a word,
Were it all yours, to giue it in a breath,
How quickely were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true.

Stew. If you suspect my Husbandry or Falshood,
Call me before th'exactest Auditors,
And set me on the proofe. So the Gods blesse me,
When all our Offices haue beene oppres't
With riotous Feeders, when our Vaults haue wept
With drunken spilth of Wine; when euery roome
Hath blaz'd with Lights, and bray'd with Minstrelsie,
I haue retyr'd me to a wastefull cocke,
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prythee no more.

Stew. Heauens haue I said, the bounty of this Lord:
How many prodigall bits haue Slaues and Peasants
This night englutted: who is not Timons,
What heart, head, sword, force, meanes, but is L. Timons:
Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timon:
Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praise,
The breath is gone, whereof this praise is made:
Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of Winter showres,
These flyes are couch't.

Tim. Come sermon me no further.
No villainous bounty yet hath past my heart:
Vnwisely, not ignobly haue I giuen.
Why dost thou weepe, canst thou the conscience lacke,
To thinke I shall lacke friends: secure thy heart,
If I would broach the vessels of my loue,
And try the argument of hearts, by borrowing,
Men, and mens fortunes could I frankely vse
As I can bid thee speake.

Ste. Assurance blesse your thoughts.

Tim And in some sort these wants of mine are crowned,
That I account them blessings. For by these
Shall I trie Friends. You shall perceiue
How you mistake my Fortunes:
I am wealthie in my Friends.
Within there, Flaminius, Seruilius?

Enter

Enter three Seruants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will dispatch you seuerally.
You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day; you to Sempronius; commend me to their loues; and I am proud say, that my occasions haue found time to vse 'em toward a supply of mony: let the request be fifty Talents.

Flam. As you haue said, my Lord.

Stew. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Go you sir to the Senators;
Of whom, euen to the States best health; I haue
Deseru'd this Hearing: bid 'em send o'th'instant
A thousand Talents to me.

Ser. I haue beene bold
(For that I knew it the most generall way)
To them, to vse your Signet, and your Name,
But they do shake their heads, and I am heere
No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Stew. They answer in a ioynt and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall, want Treasure cannot
Do what they would, are sorrie: you are Honourable,
But yet they could haue wisht, they know not,
Something hath beene amisse; a Noble Nature
May catch a wrench; would all were well; 'tis pitty,
And so intending other serious matters,
After distastefull lookes; and these hard Fractions
With certaine halfe-caps, and cold mouing nods,
They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You Gods reward them:
Prythee man looke cheerely. These old Fellowes
Haue their ingratitude in them Hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it stldome flowes,
'Tis lacke of kindely warmth, they are not kinde;
And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the iourney, dull and beauy.
Go to Ventidius (prythee be not sad,
Thou art true, and honest; Ingeniously I speake,
No blame belongs to thee:) Ventidius lately
Buried his Father, by whose death hee's stepp'd
Into a great estate. When he was poore,
Imprison'd, and in scarsitie of Friends,
I clear'd him with fiue Talents: Greet him from me,
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his Friend, which craues to be remembred
With those fiue Talents; that had, giue't these Fellowes
To whom 'tis instant due. Ne're speake, or thinke,
That Timons fortunes 'mong his Friends can sinke.

Stew. I would I could not thinke it:
That thought is Bounties Foe;
Being free it selfe, it thinkes all others so. Exeunt

Flaminius waiting to speake with a Lord from his Master, enters a seruant to him.

Ser. I haue told my Lord of you, he is comming down to you.

Flam. I thanke you Sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heere's my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Guift I warrant. Why this hits right: I dreampt of a Siluer Bason & Ewre to night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are verie respectively welcome sir. Fill me some Wine. And how does that Honourable, Compleate, Free-hearted Gentleman of Athens, thy very bountifull good Lord and Master?

Flam. His health is well sir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well sir: and what haft thou there vnder thy Cloake, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe, I come to intreat your Honor to supply: who hauing great and instant occasion to vse fiftie Talents, hath sent to your Lordship to furnish him: nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la: Nothing doubting sayes hee? Alas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to supper to him of purpose, to haue him spend lesse, and yet he would embrace no counsell, take no warning by my comming, euery man has his fault, and honestly is his. I ha told him on't, but I could nere get him from't.

Enter Seruant with Wine.

Ser. Please your Lordship, heere is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I haue noted thee always wise. Heere's to thee.

Flam. Your Lordship speakes your pleasure.

Luc. I haue obserued thee always for a towardlie prompt spirit, giue thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reason; and canst vse the time well, if the time vse thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone sirrah. Draw neerer honest Flaminius. Thy Lords a bountifull Gentleman, but thou art wise, and thou know'st well enough (although thou com'st to me) that this is no time to lend money, especially vpon bare friendshippe without securitie. Here's three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and say thou saw'st mee not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ,
And we aliue that liued? Fly damned basenesse
To him that worships thee.

Luc. Ha? Now I see thou art a Foole, and fit for thy Master. Exit L.

Flam May these adde to the number? may scald thee:
Let moulten Coine be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himselfe:
Has friendship such a faint and milkie heart,
It turnes in lesse then two nights? O you Gods!
I feele my Masters passion. This Slaue vnto his Honor,
Has my Lords meane in him:
Why should it thriue, and turne to Nutriment,
When he is turn'd to poyson?
O may Diseases onely worke vpon't:
And when he's sicke to death, let not that part of Nature
Which my Lord paid for, be of any power
To expell sicknesse, but prolong his hower. Exit.

Enter Lucius with three Strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an Honourable Gentleman.

1 We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happie howres are done and past, and his estate shrinkes from him.

Lucius. Fye no, doe not believe it: hee cannot want for money.

2 But believe you this my Lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many Talents, nay vrg'd extremely for't, and shewed what what necessity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luci. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luci. What a strange case was that? Now before the Gods I am asham'd on't. Denied that honourable man? There was very little Honour shew'd in't. For my owne part, I must needes confesse, I have receyued some small kindnesses from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and such like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had hee mistooke him, and sent to me, I should ne're have denied his Occasion so many Talents.

Enter Seruilius.

Seruil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I have swet to see his Honor. My Honor'd Lord, Lucil. Seruilius? You are kindely met sir: Farthewell, commend me to thy Honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquisite Friend.

Seruil. May it please your Honour, my Lord hath sent ——

Luci. Ha! what ha's he sent? I am so much endeered to that Lord; he's euer sending: how shall I thank him thinke'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Seruil. Has only sent his present Occasion now my Lord: requesting your Lordship to supply his instant vse with so many Talents.

Lucil. I know his Lordship is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents.

Seruil. But in the meane time he wants lesse my Lord. If his occasion were not vertuous, I should not vrge it halfe so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speake seriously Seruilius?

Seruil. Vpon my soule 'tis true Sir.

Luci. What a wicked Beast was I to disfurnish my self against such a good time, when I might ha shewn my selfe Honourable? How vnluckily it happened, that I should Purchase the day before for a little part, and vndo a great deale of Honour? Seruilius, now before the Gods I am not able to do (the more beast I say) I was sending to vse Lord Timon my selfe, these Gentlemen can witnesse; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good Lordship, and I hope his Honor will conceiue the fairest of mee, because I have no power to be kinde. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions say, that I cannot pleasure such an Honourable Gentleman. Good Seruilius, will you befriend mee so farre, as to vse mine owne words to him?

Ser. Yes sir, I shall. Exit Seruil.

Lucil. Ile looke you out a good turne Seruilius.
True as you said, Timon is shrunke indeede,
And he that's once deny'de, will hardly speede. Exit.

1 Do you obserue this Hostilius?

2 I, to well.

1 Why this is the worlds soule,
And iust of the same peece
Is euery Flatterers sport: who can call him his Friend
That dips in the same dish? For in my knowing
Timon has bin this Lords Father,
And kept his credit with his purse:
Supported his estate, nay Timons money
Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinkes,
But Timons Siluer treads vpon his Lip,
And yet, oh see the monstrousnesse of man,
When he lookes out in an vngratefull shape;
He does deny him (in respect of his)
What charitable men afforde to Beggers.

3 Religion groanes at it.

1 For mine owne part, I never tasted Timon in my life
Nor came any of his bounties ouer me,
To marke me for his Friend. Yet I protest,
For his right Noble minde, illustrious Vertue,
And Honourable Carriage,
Had his necessity made vse of me,
I would have put my wealth into Donation,
And the best halfe should have return'd to him,
So much I loue his heart: But I perceiue,
Men must learne now with pitty to dispence,
For Policy sits above Conscience. Exeunt.

Enter a third seruant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Must he needs trouble me in't? Hum.
'Boue all others?
He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidgius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison. All these Owes their estates vnto him.

Ser. My Lord,
They have all bin touch'd, and found Base-Mettle,
For they have all denied him.

Semp. How? Have they deny'de him?
Has Ventidgius and Lucullus deny'de him,
And does he send to me? Three? Humh?
It shewes but little loue, or iudgement in him.
Must I be his last Refuge? His Friends (like Physitians)
Thriue, giue him ouer: Must I take th'Cure vpon me?
Has much disgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might have knowne my place. I see no sense for't,
But his Occasions might have woo'd me first:
For in my conscience, I was the first man
That ere receiued gifts from him.
And does he thinke so backwardly of me now,
That Ile requite it last? No:
So it may prove an Argument of Laughter
To th'rest, and 'mong'st Lords be thought a Foole:
I'de rather then the worth of thrice the summe,
Had sent to me first, but for my mindes sake:
I'de such a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply, this answer ioyne;
Who bates mine Honor, shall not know my Coyne. Exit.

Ser. Excellent: Your Lordships a goodly Villain. the diuell knew not what he did, when hee made man Politicke; he crossed himselfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the Villanies of man will set him cleere. How fairely this Lord strives to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like those, that vnder hote ardent zeale, would set whole Realmes on fire, of such a nature is his politike loue.
This was my Lords best hope, now all are fled Saue onely the Gods. Now his Friends are dead.
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeere, must be imploy'd
Now to guard sure their Master:
And this is all a liberall course allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, must keep his house. Exit.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his comming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortensius.

Var. man. Well met, good-morrow Titus & Hortensius.
Tit.

Tit. The like to you kinde Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what do we meet together?

Luci. I, and I think one buſineſſe do's command vs all. For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And ſir Philotus too.

Phil. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother. What do you thinke the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine.

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord ſeene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to ſhine at ſeuen.

Luci. I, but the dayes are wax'd ſhorter with him: You muſt conſider, that a Prodigall courſe Is like the Sunnes, but not like his recouerable, I feare: 'Tis deepeſt Winter in Lord Timons purſe, that is: One may reach deepe enough, and yet finde little.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that.

Tit. Ile ſhew you how t'obſerue a ſtrange euent: Your Lord ſends now for Money?

Hort. Moſt true, he do's.

Tit. And he weares Iewels now of Timons guift, For which I waite for money.

Hort. It is againſt my heart.

Luci. Marke how ſtrange it ſhowes, Timon in this, ſhould pay more then he owes: And e'ne as if your Lord ſhould weare rich Iewels, And ſend for money for 'em.

Hort. I'me weary of this Charge, The Gods can witneſſe: I know my Lord hath ſpent of Timons wealth, And now Ingratitude, makes it worſe then ſtealth.

Varro. Yes, mine's three thouſand Crownes: What's yours?

Luci. Fiue thouſand mine.

Varro. 'Tis much deepe, and it ſhould ſeem by th'ſum Your Maſters confidence was aboue mine, Elſe ſurely his had equall'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.

Luci. Flaminius? Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord readie to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordſhip: pray ſignifie ſo much.

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled (diligent.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled ſo? He goes away in a Cloud: Call him, call him.

Tit. Do you heare, ſir?

2. Varro. By your leaue, ſir.

Stew. What do ye aske of me, my Friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, ſir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting, 'Twere ſure enough. Why then preferr'd you not your ſummes and Billes When your falſe Maſters eate of my Lords meat? Then they could ſmile, and fawne vpon his debts, And take downe th'Intereſt into their glutt'nous Mawes. You do your ſelues but wrong, to ſtirre me vp, Let me paſſe quietly: Beleeue't, my Lord and I haue made an end, I haue no more to reckon, he to ſpend.

Luci. I, but this anſwer will not ſerue.

Stew. If 't will not ſerue, 'tis not ſo baſe as you, For you ſerue Knaues.

1. Varro. How? What does his caſheer'd Worſhip mutter?

2. Varro. No matter what, he's poore, and that's reuenge enough. Who can ſpeake broader, then he that has no houſe to put his head in? Such may raile againſt great buildings.

Enter Seruilius.

Tit. Oh heere's Seruilius: now we ſhall know ſome anſwere.

Serv. If I might beſeech you Gentlemen, to repayre ſome other houre, I ſhould derriue much from't. For taking of my ſoule, my Lord leanes wondrouſly to diſcontent: His comfortable temper has forſooke him, he's much out of health, and keepes his Chamber.

Luci. Many do keepe their Chambers, are not ſick: And if it be ſo farre beyond his health, Me thinkes he ſhould the ſooner pay his debts, And make a cleere way to the Gods.

Serui. Good Gods.

Tim. We cannot take this for anſwer, ſir.

Flaminius within. Seruilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim What, are my doores oppoſ'd againſt my paſſage? Haue I bin euer free, and muſt my houſe Be my retentiue Enemy? My Gaole? The place which I haue Feaſted, does it now (Like all Mankinde) ſhew me an Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Timon.

Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Here's mine.

1. Var. And mine, my Lord.

2. Var. And ours, my Lord.

Phil. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with 'em, cleaue mee to the Girdle.

Luc. Alas, my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in ſummes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Fiue thouſand Crownes, my Lord.

Tim. Fiue thouſand drops payes that. What yours? and yours?

1. Var. My Lord.

2. Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the Gods fall vpon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceiue our Maſters may throwe their caps at their money, theſe debts may well be call'd deſperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

Exeunt.

Enter Timon.

Timon. They haue e'ene put my breath from mee the ſlaues. Creditors? Diuels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it ſhould be ſo?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim Ile haue it ſo. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my Friends againe Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius, All, Ile once more feaſt the Raſcals.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely ſpeake from your diſtreſted ſoule; there's not ſo much left to, furniſh out a moderate Table.

Timon

Tim. Be it not in thy care:
Go I charge thee, muſter them all, let in the tide
Of Knaues once more: my Cooke and He prouide. Exeunt

Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them, with Attendants.

1 Sen. My Lord, you haue my voyce, too't,
The faults Bloody:
'Tis neceſſary he ſhould dye:
Nothing imboldens ſinne ſo much, as Mercy.
2 Moſt true; the Law ſhall bruiſe 'em.
Alc Honor, health, and compaſſion to the Senate.
1 Now Captaine.
Alc. I am an humble Suitor to your Vertues;
For pitty is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants vſe it cruelly.
It pleaſes time and Fortune to lye heauie
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath ſtept into the Law: which is paſt depth
To thoſe that (without heede) do plundge intoo't.
He is a Man (ſetting his Fate aſide) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he ſoyle the fact with Cowardice,
(And Honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire ſpirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppoſe his Foe:
And with ſuch ſober and vnnoted paſſion
He did behooue his anger ere 'twas ſpent,
As if he had but proui'd an Argument
1 Sen. You vndergo too ſtrict a Paradox,
Striuing to make an vgly deed looke faire:
Your words haue tooke ſuch paines, as if they labour'd
To bring Man-ſlaughter into forme, and ſet Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour; which indeede
Is Valour miſ-begot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
Hee's truly Valiant, that can wiſely ſuffer
The worſt that man can breath,
And make his Wrongs, his Out-ſides,
To weare them like his Rayment, carelеſſely,
And ne're preferre his iniuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If Wrongs be euilles, and inforce vs kill,
What Folly 'tis, to hazard life for Ill.
Alci. My Lord.
1 Sen. You cannot make groſſe ſinnes looke cleare,
To reuenge is no Valour, but to beare.
Alci. My Lords, then vnder fauour, pardon me,
If I ſpeake like a Captaine.
Why do fond men expoſe themſelues to Battell,
And not endure all threats? Sleepe vpon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their Throats
Without repugnancy? If there be
Such Valour in the bearing, what make wee
Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiaſt
That ſtay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Aſſe, more Captaine then the Lyon?
The fellow loaden with Irons, wiſer then the Iudge?
If Wiſedome be in ſuffering, Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully Good,
Who cannot condemne raſhneſſe in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is ſinnes extreameſt Guſt,
But in defence, by Mercy, 'tis moſt iuſt.
To be in Anger, is impietie:
But who is Man, that is not Angrie.
Weigh but the Crime with this.

2 Sen. You breath in vaine.
Alci. In vaine?
His ſeruice done at Lacedemon, and Byzantium,
Were a ſufficient briber for his life.
1 What's that?
Alc. Why ſay my Lords ha's done faire ſeruice,
And ſlaine in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he beare himſelfe
In the laſt Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?
2 He has made too much plenty with him:
He's a ſworne Riotor, he has a ſinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour priſoner.
If there were no Foes, that were enough
To ouercome him. In that Beaſtly furie,
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherriſh Factions. 'Tis inferr'd to vs,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke dangerous.
1 He dyes.
Alci. Hard fate: he might haue dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchaſe his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to moue you.
Take my deſerts to his, and ioyne 'em both.
And for I know, your reuerend Ages loue Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my Honour to you
Vpon his good returnes.
If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Warre receiue't in valiant gore,
For Law is ſtrict, and Warre is nothing more.
1 We are for Law, he dyes, vrge it no more
On height of our diſpleaſure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that ſpilles another.
Alc. Muſt it be ſo? It muſt not be:
My Lords, I do beſeech you know me.
2 How?
Alc. Call me to your remembrances.
3 What
Alc I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not elſe be, I ſhould proue ſo baſe,
To ſue and be deny'de ſuch common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.
1 Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but ſpacious in effect:
We baniſh thee for euer.
Alc. Baniſh me?
Baniſh your dotage, baniſh vſurie,
That makes the Senate vgly.
1 If after two dayes ſhine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our waighties Iudgement.
And not to ſwell our Spirit,
He ſhall be executed preſently. Exeunt.
Alc. Now the Gods keepe you old enough,
That you may liue
Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.
I'm worſe then mad: I haue kept backe their Foes
While they haue told their Money, and let out
Their Coine vpon large intereſt. I my Lords,
Rich onely in large hurts. All theſe, for this?
Is this the Balſome, that the vſuring Senat
Powres into Captaines wounds? Banishment.
It comes not ill: I hate not to be baniſht,
It is a cauſe worthy my Spleene and Fury,
That I may ſtrike at Athens. Ile cheere vp
My diſcontented Troopes, and lay for hearts:
'Tis Honour with moſt Lands to be at odds,
Souldiers ſhould brooke as little wrongs as Gods. Exit.

Enter diuers Friends at seuerall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, sir.

2 I also wish it to you: I thinke this Honorable Lord did but try vs this other day.

1 Vpon that were my thoughts tyring when wee encountred. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his seuerall Friends.

2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.

1 I should thinke so. He hath sent mee an earnest inuiting, which many my neere occasions did vrge mee to put off: but he hath conjur'd mee beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunat businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorrie, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Prouision was out.

1 I am sicke of that greefe too, as I vnderstand how all things go.

2 Euery man heares so: what would hee haue borrowed of you?

1 A thousand Peeces.

2 A thousand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He sent to me sir ——— Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Euer at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.

2 The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaues Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay. Feast your eares with the Musicke awhile: If they will fare so harshly o'th Trompets sound: we shall to't presently.

1 I hope it remaines not vnkindely with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good Friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in.

2 My most Honorable Lord, I am e'ne sick of shame, that when your Lordship this other day sent to me, I was so vnfortunate a Beggar.

Tim. Thinke not on't, sir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All couer'd Dishes.

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it

1 How do you? What's the newes?

3 Alcibiades is banish'd: heare you of it?

Both. Alcibiades banish'd?

3 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 How? How?

2 I pray you vpon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward

2 This is the old man still.

3 Will hold? Will hold?

2 It do's: but time will, and so.

3 I do conceyue.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as he would to the lip of his Mistris: your diet shall bee in all places alike. Make not a Citie Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree vpon the first place. Sit, sit. The Gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankefulnesse. For your owne gifts, make your selues prou'd: But reserue still to giue, least your Deities be dispised. Lend to each man enough, that one needs not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the Gods. Make the Meate be beloued, more then the Man that giues it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelue Women at the Table, let a dozen of them be as they are. The rest of your Fees, O Gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common lege of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods, make suteable for destruction. For these my present Friends, as they are to mee nothing, so are nothing blesse them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncouer Dogges, and lap

Some speake. What do's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Timon. May you a better Feast neuer behold
You knot of Mouth-Friends: Smoke, & lukewarm water
Is your perfection. This is Timons last,
Who stucke and spangled you with Flatteries,
Washes it off and sprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Liue loath'd, and long
Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites,
Courteous Destroyers, affable Wolues, meeke Beares:
You Fooles of Fortune, Trencher-friends, Times Flyes,
Cap and knee-Slaues, vapours, and Minute Iackes.
Of Man and Beast, the infinite Malladie
Crust you quite o're. What do'st thou go?
Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou:
Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none.
What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast,
Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest.
Burne house, sinke Athens, henceforth hated be
Of Timon Man, and all Humanity. Exit

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now, my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Push, did you see my Cap?

4 I haue lost my Gowne.

1 He's but a mad Lord, & nought but humors swaies him. He gaue me a Iewell th'other day, and now hee has beate it out of my hat.
Did you see my Iewell?

2 Did you see my Cap.

3 Heere 'tis.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Let's make no stay.

2 Lord Timons mad.

3 I feel't vpon my bones.

4 One day he giues vs Diamonds, next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe vpon thee. O thou Wall
That girdles in those Wolues, dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens. Matrons, turne incontinent,
Obedience fayle in Children: Slaues and Fooles

Plucke the graue wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And minifter in their ſteeds, to generall Filthes.
Conuert o'th' Inſtant greene Virginity,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold faſt
Rather then render backe; out with your Knines,
And cut your Truſters throates. Bound Seruants, ſteale,
Large-handed Robbers your graue Maſters are,
And pill by Law. Maide, to thy Maſters bed,
Thy Miſtris is o'th Brothell. Some of ſixteen,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With it, beate out his Braines. Piety, and Feare,
Religion to the Gods, Peace, Iuſtice, Truth,
Domeſticke awe, Night-reſt, and Neighbour-hood,
Inſtruction, Manners, Myſteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Obſeruances, Cuſtomes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confuſion liue: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feauors, heape
On Athens ripe for ſtroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Luſt, and Libertie
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That gainſt the ſtreame of Vertue they may ſtriue,
And drowne themſelues in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th'Athenian boſomes, and their crop
Be generall Leproſie: Breath infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendſhip) may
Be meerely poyſon. Nothing Ile beare from thee
But nakedneſſe, thou deteſtable Towne,
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he ſhall finde
Th'vnkindeſt Beaſt, more kinder then Mankinde.
The Gods confound (heare me you good Gods all)
Th'Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankinde, high and low.
Amen. Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Seruants.

1 Heare you M. Steward, where's our Maſter?
Are we vndone, caſt off, nothing remaining?

Stew. Alack my Fellowes, what ſhould I ſay to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous Gods,
I am as poore as you.

2 Such a Houſe broke?
So Noble a Maſter falne, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And go along with him.

3 As we do turne our backes
From our Companion, throwne into his graue,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Shrinke all away, leaue their falſe vowes with him
Like empty purſes pickt; and his poore ſelfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his diſeaſe, of all ſhunn'd pouerty,
Walkes like contempts alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Seruants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd houſe.

3 Yet do our hearts weare Timons Liuery,
That ſee I by our Faces: we are Fellowes ſtill,
Seruing alike in ſorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, ſtand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we muſt all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good Fellowes all,
The lateſt of my wealth Ile ſhare among'ſt you.
Where euer we ſhall meete, for Timons ſake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Let's ſhake our heads, and ſay
As 'twere a Knell vnto our Maſters Fortunes,
We haue ſeene better dayes. Let each take ſome:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in ſorrow, parting poore

Embrace and part ſeuerall waies.

Oh the fierce wretchednеſſe that Glory brings vs!
Who would not wiſh to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Miſery and Contempt?
Who would be ſo mock'd with Glory, or to liue
But in a Dreame of Friendſhip,
To haue his pompe, and all what ſtate compounds,
But onely painted like his varniſht Friends?
Poore honeſt Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by Goodneſſe: Strange vnuſuall blood,
When mans worſt ſinne is, He do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe ſo kinde agen?
For Bounty that makes Gods, do ſtill marre Men.
My deereſt Lord, bleſt to be moſt accurſt,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy cheefe Afflictions. Alas (kinde Lord)
Hee's ſlung in Rage from this ingrateſull Seate
Of monſtrous Friends:
Nor has he with him to ſupply his life,
Or that which can command it:
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile euer ſerue his minde, with my beſt will,
Whilſt I haue Gold, Ile be his Steward ſtill. Exit

Enter Timon in the woods.

Tim. O bleſſed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Siſters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whoſe procreation, reſidence, and birth,
Scarſe is diuidant: touch them with ſeuerall fortunes,
The greater ſcornes the leſſer. Not Nature
(To whom all ſores lay ſiege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raiſe me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators ſhall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Native Honor.
It is the Paſtour Lards, the Brothers ſides,
The want that makes him leaue: who dares? who dares
In puritie of Manhood ſtand vpright
And ſay, this mans a Flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for euerie grize of Fortune
Is ſmooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden Foole. All's obliquie:
There's nothing leuell in our curſed Natures
But direct villanie. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feaſts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His ſemblable, yea himſelfe Timon diſdaines,
Deſtruction phang mankinde; Earth yeeld me Roots,
Who ſeekes for better of thee, ſawce his palate
With thy moſt operant Poyſon. What is here?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No Gods, I am no idle Votariſt,
Roots you cleere Heauens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Baſe, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valiant.
Ha you Gods! why this? what this, you Gods? why this
Will lugge your Prieſts and Seruants from your ſides
Pluche ſtout mens pillowes from below their heads.

Thus

low Slaue,
t and breake Religions, bleſſe th'accurſt,
thoare Leproſie ador'd, place Theeues,
e them Title, knee, and approbation nators on the Bench: This is it kes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
hom the Spittle-houſe, and ſleeptus ſores, aſt the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices prull day againe. Come damn'd Earth, mmon whore of Mankinde, that putteſt oddes
the rout of Nations, I will make thee ight Natures. March afarre off.
trumme? Th'art quicke,
le bury thee: Thou't go (ſtrong Theefe) owrie keepers of thee cannot ſtand:
thou out for earneſt.

Alcibiades with Drumme and Fife in warlike manner, and Phrynia and Timandra.

What art thou there? ſpeake.
A Beaſt as thou art. The Canker gnaw thy hart ving me againe the eyes of Man.
What is thy name? Is man ſo hateſull to thee,
thy ſelfe a Man?
I am Miſanthropos, and hate Mankinde.
part, I do wiſh thou were a dogge,
night loue thee ſomething.
I know thee well:
y Fortunes am valeorn'd, and ſtrange.
I know thee too, and more then that I know thee fire to know. Follow thy Drumme, nas blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
as Cannons, ciuill Lawes are cruell, hat ſhould warre be? This fell whore of thine, her more deſtruction then thy Sword,
ier Cherubin looke.
. Thy lips rot off.
I will not kiſſe thee, then the rot returnes
e owne lippes againe.
How came the Noble Timon to this change?
As the Moone do's, by wanting light to giue:
renew I could not like the Moone,
ere no Sunnes to borrow of.
Noble Timon, what friendſhip may I do thee?
None, but to maintaine my opinion.
What is it Timon?
Promiſe me Friendſhip, but performe none.
wilt not promiſe, the Gods plague thee, for thou n: if thou do'ſt performe, confound thee, for a man.
I haue heard in ſome ſort of thy Miſeries.
Thou ſaw'ſt them when I had proſperitie.
I ſee them now, then was a bleſſed time.
As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.
. Is this th'Athenian Minion, whom the world
o regardfully?
Art thou Timandra? Timon. Yes.
Be a whore ſtill, they loue thee not that vſe thee, n diſeaſes, leauing with thee their Luſt. Make y ſale houres, ſeaſon the ſtaues for Tubbes and bring downe Roſe-cheeks youth to the Fubſtaft, Diet.
Hang thee Monſter.
Pardon him ſweet Timandra for his wits
d and loſt in his Calamities.

I haue but little Gold of late, braue Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make reuolt
In my penurious Band. I haue heard and greeu'd
How curſed Athens, mindleſſe of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour ſtates
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod vpon them.
Tim. I prythee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.
Alc. I am thy Friend, and pitty thee deere Timon.
Tim. How doeſt thou pitty him whom't doſt trouble,
I had rather be alone.
Alc. Why fare thee well:
Heere is ſome Gold for thee.
Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eate it.
Alc. When I haue laid proud Athens on a heape.
Tim. Warr'ſt thou 'gainſt Athens.
Alc. I Timon, and haue cauſe.
Tim. The Gods confound them all in thy Conqueſt,
And thee after, when thou haſt Conquer'd.
Alc. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou waſt borne to conquer my Country.
Put vp thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, go on;
Be as a Planetary plague, when Ioue
Will o're ſome high-Vic'd City, hang his poyſon
In the ſicke ayre: Let not thy ſword skip one:
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vſurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite only, that is honeſt,
Her ſelfe's a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheeke
Make ſoft thy trenchant Sword: for thoſe Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Leafe of pitty writ,
But ſet them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whoſe dimpled ſmiles from Fooles exhauſt their mercy:
Thinke it a Baſtard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat ſhall cut,
And mince it ſans remorſe. Sweare againſt Obiects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whoſe proofe, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes,
Nor ſight of Prieſts in holy Veſtments bleeding,
Shall pierce a iot. There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers,
Make large confuſion: and thy fury ſpent,
Confounded be thy ſelfe. Speake not, be gone.
Alc. Haſt thou Gold yet, Ile take the Gold thou giueſt me, not all thy Counſell.
Tim. Doſt thou or doſt thou not, Heauens curſe vpon thee.
Both. Giue vs ſome Gold good Timon, haſt y more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forſweare her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold vp you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'l ſweare, terribly ſweare
Into ſtrong ſhudders, and to heauenly Agues
Th'immortall Gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile truſt to your Conditions, be whores ſtill.
And he whoſe pious breath ſeekes to conuert you,
Be ſtrong in Whore, allure him, burne him vp,
Let your cloſe fire predominate his ſmoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines ſix months
Be quite contrary, And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore ſtill,
Paint till a horſe may myre vpon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.
Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Foole. She's e'ne setting on water to scal'd such Chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Looke you, heere comes my Masters Page.

Page. Why how now Captaine? what do you in this wise Company.
How dost thou Apemantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably

Boy. Prythee Apemantus reade me the superscription of these Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canst not read?

Page No.

Ape There will litle Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou was't borne a Bastard, and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou was't whelpt a Dogge, and thou shalt famish a Dogges death.
Answer not, I am gone. Exit

Ape. Ene so thou out-runst Grace,
Foole I will go with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leave me there?

Ape. If Timon stay at home.
You three serue three Vsurers?

All. I would they serv'd vs.

Ape. So would I:
As good a tricke as ever Hangman serv'd Theefe.

Foole. Are you three Vsurers men?

All. I Foole.

Foole. I thinke no Vsurer, but ha's a Foole to his Seruant. My Mistris is one, and I am her Foole: when men come to borrow of your Masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry: but they enter my Masters house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ap. Do it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaster, and a Knaue, which notwithstanding thou shalt be no lesse esteemed.

Varro. What is a Whoremaster Foole?

Foole. A Foole in good cloathes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit, sometime t'appeares like a Lord, sometime like a Lawyer, sometime like a Philosopher, with two stones moe then's artificiall one. Hee is verie often like a Knight; and generally, in all shapes that man goes vp and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this spirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a Foole:

Foole. Nor thou altogether a Wise man,
As much foolerie as I haue, so much wit thou lack'st.

Ape. That answer might haue become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside, heere comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (Foole) come.

Foole. I do not alwayes follow Lover, elder Brother, and Woman, sometime the Philosopher.

Stew. Pray you walke neere,
Ile speake with you anon. Exeunt.

Tim. You make me meruell wherefore ere this time
Had you not fully laid my state before me,
That I might so haue rated my expence
As I had leaue of meanes.

Stew. You would not heare me:
At many leysures I propose.

Tim. Go too:
Perchance some single vantages you tooke,
When my indisposition put you backe,
And that vnaptnesse made your minister
Thus to excuse your selfe.

Stew. O my good Lord,
At many times I brought in my accompts,
Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honestie.
When for some trifling present you haue bid me
Returne so much, I haue shooke my head, and wept;
Yea 'gainst th'Authoritie of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more close: I did indure
Not fildome, nor no slight checkes, when I haue
Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate,
And your great flow of debts; my lou'd Lord,
Though you heare now (too late) yet nowes a time,
The greatest of your having, lackes a halfe,
To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my Land be sold.

Stew. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeyted and gone,
And what remaines will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues; the future comes apace:
What shall defend the interim, and at length
How goot our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a word,
Were it all yours, to giue it in a breath,
How quickely were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true.

Stew. If you suspect my Husbandry or Falshood,
Call me before th'exactest Auditors,
And set me on the proofe. So the Gods blesse me,
When all our Offices haue beene oppreſt
With riotous Feeders, when our Vaults haue wept
With drunken spilth of Wine; when euery roome
Hath blaz'd with Lights, and bray'd with Minstrelsie,
I haue rerym'd me to a wastefull cocke,
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prythee no more.

Stew. Heauens haue I said, the bounty of this Lord!
How many prodigall bits haue Slaues and Peasants
This night englutted: who is not Timons,
What heart, head, sword, force, meanes, but is L. Timon:
Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timon:
Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praise,
The breath is gone, whereof this praise is made:
Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of Winter showres,
These flyes are couche.

Tim. Come sermon me no further.
No villanous bounty yet hath past my heart:
Vnwisely, not ignobly haue I giuen.
Why dost thou weepe, canst thou the conscience lacke,
To thinke I shall lacke friends? secure thy heart,
If I would broach the vessels of my loue,
And try the argument of hearts, by borrowing,
Men, and mens fortunes could I frankely vse
As I can bid thee speake.

Ste. Assurance blesse your thoughts.

Tim. And in some sort these wants of mine are crowned,
That I account them blessings. For by these
Shall I trie Friends. You shall perceiue
How you mistake my Fortunes:
I am wealthie in my Friends.
Within there, Flaminius, Seruilius?

Enter

Enter three Seruants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will dispatch you seuerally.
You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day; you to Sempronius; commend me to their loues; and I am proud say, that my occasions haue found time to vse 'em toward a supply of mony: let the request be fifty Talents.

Flam. As you haue said, my Lord.

Ser. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Go you sir to the Senators;
Of whom, euen to the States best health; I haue
Deseru'd this Hearing: bid 'em send o'th'instant
A thousand Talents to me.

Ser. I haue beene bold
(For that I knew it the most generall way)
To them, to vse your Signet, and your Name,
But they do shake their heads, and I am heere
No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Ser. They answer in a ioynt and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall, want Treasure cannot
Do what they would, are sorrie: you are Honourable,
But yet they could haue wisht, they know not,
Something hath beene amisse; a Noble Nature
May catch a wrench; would all were well; 'tis pitty,
And so intending other serious matters,
After distastefull lookes; and these hard Fractions
With certaine halfe-caps, and cold moouing nods,
They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You Gods reward them:
Prythee man looke cheerely. These old Fellowes
Haue their ingratitude in them Hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it stldome flowes,
'Tis lacke of kindely warmth, they are not kinde;
And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the iourney, dull and heauy.
Go to Ventidius (prythee be not sad,
Thou art true, and honest; Ingeniously I speake,
No blame belongs to thee:) Ventidius lately
Buried his Father, by whose death hee's stepp'd
Into a great estate. When he was poore,
Imprison'd, and in scarsitie of Friends,
I clear'd him with fiue Talents: Greet him from me,
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his Friend, which craues to be remembred
With those fiue Talents; that had, giue't these Fellowes
To whom 'tis instant due. Ne're speake, or thinke,
That Timons fortunes 'mong his Friends can sinke.

Ser. I would I could not thinke it:
That thought is Bounties Foe;
Being free it selfe, it thinkes all others so. Exeunt

Flaminius waiting to speake with a Lord from his Master, enters a seruant to him.

Ser. I haue told my Lord of you, he is comming down to you.

Flam. I thanke you Sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heere's my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Gift I warrant. Why this hits right: I dreampt of a Siluer Basen & Ewre to night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are very respectiuely welcome sir. Fill me some Wine. And how does that Honourable, Complaete, Free-hearted Gentleman of Athens, thy very bountifull good Lord and Master?

Flam. His health is well sir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well sir: and what haft thou there vnder thy Cloake, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe, I come to intreat your Honor to supply: who hauing great and instant occasion to vse fifty Talents, hath sent to your Lordship to furnish him: nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la: Nothing doubting sayes hee? Alas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to supper to him of purpose, to haue him spend lesse, and yet he would embrace no counsell, take no warning by my coming, euery man has his fault, and honesty is his. I ha told him on't, but I could neere get him from't.

Enter Seruant with Wine.

Ser. Please your Lordship, heere is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I haue noted thee always wise. Heere's to thee.

Flam. Your Lordship speakes your pleasure.

Luc. I haue obserued thee always for a towardlie prompt spirit, giue thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reason; and canst vse the time well, if the time vse thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone sirrah. Draw neerer honest Flaminius. Thy Lords a bountifull Gentleman, but thou art wise, and thou know'st well enough (although thou comst to me) that this is no time to lend money, especially vpon bare friendshippe without securitie. Here's three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and say thou saw'st mee not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ,
And we alive that liued? Fly damned baseneſſe
To him that worships thee.

Luc. Ha? Now I see thou art a Foole, and fit for thy Master. Exit L.

Flam May these adde to the number y may scald thee:
Let moulten Coine be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himselfe:
Has friendship such a faint and milkie heart,
It turnes in lesse then two nights? O you Gods!
I feele my Masters passion. This Slaue vnto his Honor,
Has my Lords meate in him:
Why should it thriue, and turne to Nutriment,
When he is turn'd to poyson?
O may Diseases onely worke vpon't:
And when he's sicke to death, let not that part of Nature
Which my Lord payd for, be of any power
To expell sicknesse, but prolong his hower. Exit.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an Honourable Gentleman.

1 We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happie howres are done and past, and his estate shrinkes from him.

Lucius. Fye no, doe not beleeue it: hee cannot want for money.

2 But beleeue you this my Lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many Talents, nay vrg'd extremely for't, and shewed what

What neceſſity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luci. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luci. What a ſtrange caſe was that? Now before the Gods I am aſham'd on't. Denied that honourable man? There was verie little Honour ſhew'd in't. For my owne part, I muſt needes confeſſe, I have receyved ſome ſmall kindneſſes from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and ſuch like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had hee miſtooke him, and ſent to me, I ſhould ne're have denied his Occaſion ſo many Talents.

Enter Servilius.

Servil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I have ſwet to ſee his Honor. My Honor'd Lord.

Lucil. Servilius? You are kindely met ſir: Farthewell, commend me to thy Honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquiſite Friend.

Servil. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord hath ſent ——

Luci. Ha! what ha's he ſent? I am ſo much endeered to that Lord; hee's ever ſending: how ſhall I thank him thinke'ſt thou? And what has he ſent now?

Servil. Has onely ſent his preſent Occaſion now my Lord: requeſting your Lordſhip to ſupply his inſtant uſe with ſo many Talents.

Lucil. I know his Lordſhip is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents.

Servil. But in the meane time he wants leſſe my Lord. If his occaſion were not vertuous, I ſhould not urge it halfe ſo faithfully.

Luc. Doſt thou ſpeake ſeriouſly Servilius?

Servil. Upon my ſoule 'tis true Sir.

Luci. What a wicked Beaſt was I to diſfurniſh my ſelf againſt ſuch a good time, when I might ha ſhewn my ſelfe Honourable? How unluckily it happned, that I ſhold Purchaſe the day before for a little part, and undo a great deale of Honour? Servilius, now before the Gods I am not able to do (the more beaſt I ſay) I was ſending to uſe Lord Timon my ſelfe, theſe Gentlemen can witneſſe; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good Lordſhip, and I hope his Honor will conceive the fairеſt of me, becauſe I have no power to be kinde. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greateſt afflictions ſay, that I cannot pleaſure ſuch an Honourable Gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me ſo farre, as to uſe mine owne words to him?

Ser. Yes ſir, I ſhall. Exit Servil.

Lucil. Ile looke you out a good turne Servilius.
True as you ſaid, Timon is ſhrunke indeede,
And he that's once deny'de, will hardly ſpeede. Exit.

1 Do you obſerve this Hoſtilius?

2 I, to well.

1 Why this is the worlds ſoule,
And juſt of the ſame peece
Is every Flatterers ſpurt: who can call him his Friend
That dips in the ſame diſh? For in my knowing
Timon has bin this Lords Father,
And kept his credit with his purſe:
Supported his eſtate, nay Timons money
Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinkes,
But Timons Silver treads upon his Lip,
And yet, oh ſee the monſtrouſneſſe of man,
When he lookes out in an ungratefull ſhape;
He does deny him (in reſpect of his)
What charitable men afforde to Beggers.

3 Religion groanes at it.

1 For mine owne part, I never taſted Timon in my life
Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To marke me for his Friend. Yet I proteſt,
For his right Noble minde, illuſtrious Vertue,
And Honourable Carriage,
Had his neceſſity made uſe of me,
I would have put my wealth into Donation,
And the beſt halfe ſhould have return'd to him,
So much I love his heart: But I perceive,
Men muſt learne now with pitty to diſpence,
For Policy ſits above Conſcience. Exeunt.

Enter a third ſervant with Semproneus, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Muſt he needs trouble me in's? Humh.
'Bove all others?
He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidgius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from priſon. All theſe
Owes their eſtates unto him.

Ser. My Lord,
They have all bin touch'd, and found Baſe Mettle,
For they have all denied him.

Semp. How? Have they deny'de him?
Has Ventidgius and Lucullus deny'de him,
And does he ſend to me? Three? Humh?
It ſhewes but little love, or judgement in him.
Muſt I be his laſt Refuge? His Friends (like Phyſitians)
Thrive, give him over: Muſt I take th'Cure upon me?
Has much diſgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might have known me my place. I ſee no ſenſe for't,
But his Occaſions might have woo'd me firſt:
For in my conſcience, I was the firſt man
That ere receiued guift from him.
And does he thinke ſo backwardly of me now,
That Ile requite it laſt? No:
So it may prove an Argument of Laughter
To th'reſt, and 'mong'ſt Lords be thought a Foole:
I'de rather then the worth of thrice the ſumme,
Had ſent to me firſt, but for my mindes ſake:
I'de ſuch a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply, this anſwer joyne;
Who bates mine Honor, ſhall not know my Coyne. Exit

Ser. Excellent: Your Lordſhips a goodly Villain: the diuell knew not what he did, when hee made man Politicke; he croſſed himſelfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the Villanies of man will ſet him cleere. How fairely this Lord ſtrives to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like thoſe, that under hote ardent zeale, would ſet whole Realmes on fire, of ſuch a nature is his politike love.
This was my Lords beſt hope, now all are fled
Save onely the Gods. Now his Friends are dead.
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeare, muſt be imploy'd
Now to guard ſure their Maſter:
And this is all a liberall courſe allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, muſt keep his houſe. Exit.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his comming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortenſius.

Var. man. Well met, goodmorrow Titus & Hortenſius.
Tit.

Tit. The like to you kinde Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what do we meet together?

Luci. I, and I think one buſineſſe do's command vs all. For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And ſir Philotus too.

Phil. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother.
What do you think the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine.

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord ſeene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to ſhine at ſeuen.

Luci. I, but the dayes are wax't ſhorter with him:
You muſt conſider, that a Prodigall courſe
Is like the Sunnes, but not like his recoverable. I feare:
'Tis deepeſt Winter in Lord Timons purſe, that is: One may reach deepe enough, and yet finde little.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that.

Tit. Ile ſhew you how t'obſerue a ſtrange euent:
Your Lord ſends now for Money?

Hort. Moſt true, he doe's.

Tit. And he weares Iewels now of Timons guift, for which I waite for money.

Hort. It is againſt my heart.

Luci. Marke how ſtrange it ſhowes,
Timon in this, ſhould pay more then he owes:
And e'ne as if your Lord ſhould weare rich Iewels,
And ſend for money for 'em.

Hort. I'me weary of this Charge,
The Gods can witneſſe:
I know my Lord hath ſpent of Timons wealth,
And now Ingratitude, makes it worſe then ſtealth.

Varro. Yes, mine's three thouſand Crownes:
What's yours?

Luci. Fiue thouſand mine.

Varro. 'Tis much deepe, and it ſhould ſeem by th'ſum
Your Maſters confidence was aboue mine,
Elſe ſurely his had equall'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.

Luc. Flaminius? Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord readie to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordſhip: pray ſignifie ſo much.

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled (diligent.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled ſo?
He goes away in a Clowd: Call him, call him.

Tit. Do you heare, ſir?

2 Varro. By your leaue, ſir.

Stew. What do ye aske of me, my Friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, ſir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting,
T'were ſure enough.
Why then preſerr'd you not your ſummes and Billes
When your falſe Maſters eate of my Lords meate?
Then they could ſmile, and fawne vpon his debts,
And take downe th'Intereſt into their glutt'nous Mawes.
You do your ſelues but wrong, to ſtirre me vp,
Let me paſſe quietly:
Beleeue't, my Lord and I haue made an end,
I haue no more to reckon, he to ſpend.

Luci. I, but this anſwer will not ſerue.

Stew. If't 'twill not ſerue, 'tis not ſo baſe as you,
For you ſerue Knaues.

1 Varro. How? What does his caſheer'd Worſhip mutter?

2 Varro. No matter what, hee's poore, and that's reuenge enough. Who can ſpeake broader, then hee that has no houſe to put his head in? Such may raile againſt great buildings.

Enter Seruilius.

Tit. Oh heere's Seruilius: now wee ſhall know ſome anſwere.

Serv. If I might beſeech you Gentlemen, to repayre ſome other houre, I ſhould deriue much from't. For taſte of my ſoule, my Lord leanes wondrouſly to diſcontent: His comfortable temper has forſooke him, he's much out of health, and keepes his Chamber.

Luci. Many do keepe their Chambers, are not ſick:
And if it be ſo farre beyond his health,
Me thinkes he ſhould the ſooner pay his debts,
And make a cleere way to the Gods.

Serv. Good Gods.

Titus We cannot take this for anſwer, ſir.

Flaminius within. Seruilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim What, are my doores oppoſ'd againſt my paſſage?
Haue I bin euer free, and muſt my houſe
Be my retentiue Enemy? My Gaole?
The place which I haue Feaſted, does it now
(Like all Mankinde) ſhew me an Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Titus.

Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Here's mine.

1 Var. And mine, my Lord.

2 Var. And ours, my Lord.

Philo. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with 'em, cleaue me to the Girdle.

Luc. Alas, my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in ſummes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Fiue thouſand Crowner, my Lord.

Tim. Fiue thouſand drops payes that.
What yours? and yours?

1 Var. My Lord.

2 Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the Gods fall vpon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceiue our Maſters may throwe their caps at their money. theſe debts may well be call'd deſperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. Exeunt.

Enter Timon.

Timon. They haue e'ne put my breath from mee the ſlaues. Creditors? Diuels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it ſhould be ſo?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim Ile haue it ſo. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So firſly? Go, bid all my Friends againe Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius, Varro: All, Ile once more feaſt the Raſcalls.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely ſpeake from your diſtreſted ſoule; there's not ſo much left to, furniſh out a moderate Table.

Timon

Alc Honor, health, and compassion to the Senate.

Alc. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues;
For pitty is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants vse it cruelly.
It pleases time and Fortune to lye heauie
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath stept into the Law: which is past depth
To those that (without heede) do plundge into't.
He is a Man (setting his Fate aside) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he soyle the fact with Cowardice,
(And Honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire spirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his Foe:
And with such sober and vnnoted passion
He did behooue his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but proul'd an Argument
1 Sen. You vndergo too strict a Paradox,
Striuing to make an vgly deed looke faire:
Your words haue tooke such paines, as if they labour'd
To bring Man-slaughter into forme, and set Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour; which indeede
Is Valour mis-begot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
He's truly Valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breath,
And make his Wrongs, his Out-sides,
To weare them like his Rayment, carelessely,
And ne're preferre his iniuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If Wrongs be cuilles, and inforce vs kill,
What Folly 'tis, to hazard life for Ill.
Alci. My Lord.
1 Sen. You cannot make grosse sinnes looke cleare,
To reuenge is no Valour, but to beare.
Alci. My Lords, then vnder fauour, pardon me,
If I speake like a Captaine.
Why do fond men expose themselues to Battell,
And not endure all threats? Sleepe vpon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their Throats
Without repugnancy? If there be
Such Valour in the bearing, what make wee
Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant
That stay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Asse, more Captaine then the Lyon?
The fellow loaden with Irons, wiser then the Iudge?
If Wisedome be in suffering, Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully Good,
Who cannot condemne rashnesse in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sinnes extreamest Gust,
But in defence, by Mercy, 'tis most iust.
To be in Anger, is impietie:
But who is Man, that is not Angrie.
Weigh but the Crime with this.

2 Sen. You breath in vaine.
Alci. In vaine?
His seruice done at Lacedemon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.
1 What's that?
Alc. Why say my Lords ha's done faire seruice,
And slaine in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he beare himselfe
In the last Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?
2 He has made too much plenty with him:
He's a sworne Rioter, he has a sinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour prisone:
If there were no Foes, that were enough
To ouercome him. In that Beastly furie,
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherrish Factions. 'Tis inferr'd to vs,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke dangerous.
1 He dyes.
Alci. Hard fate: he might haue dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchase his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to moue you,
Take my deserts to his, and ioyne 'em both:
And for I know, your reuerend Ages loue Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my Honour to you
Vpon his good returne.
If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Warre receiue 't in valiant gore,
For Law is strict, and Warre is nothing more.
1 We are for Law, he dyes, vrge it no more
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that spilles another.
Alc. Must it be so? It must not be:
My Lords, I do beseech you know me.
2 How?
Alc. Call me to your remembrances.
3 What
Alc I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not else be, I should proue so base,
To sue and be deny'de such common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.
1 Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect:
We banish thee for euer.
Alc. Banish me?
Banish your dotage, banish vsurie,
That makes the Senate vgly.
1 If after two dayes shine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our weightier Iudgement.
And not to swell our Spirit,
He shall be executed presently. Exeunt.
Alc. Now the Gods keepe you old enough,
That you may liue
Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.
I'm worse then mad: I haue kept backe their Foes
While they haue told their Money, and let out
Their Coine vpon large interest. I my selfe,
Rich onely in large hurts. All those, for this?
Is this the Balsome, that the vsuring Senate
Powres into Captaines wounds? Banishment.
It comes not ill: I hate not to be banish'd,
It is a cause worthy my Spleene and Furie,
That I may strike at Athens. Ile cheere vp
My discontented Troopes, and lay for hearts:
'Tis Honour with most Lands to be at odds,
Souldiers should brooke as little wrongs as Gods. Exit.

Enter diuers Friends at seuerall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, sir.

2 I also wish it to you: I thinke this Honorable Lord did but try vs this other day.

1 Vpon that were my thoughts tyring when wee encountred. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his seuerall Friends.

2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.

1 I should thinke so. He hath sent mee an earnest inuiting, which many my neere occasions did vrge mee to put off: but he hath conjur'd mee beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunat businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorrie, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Prouision was out.

1 I am sicke of that greefe too, as I vnderstand how all things go.

2 Euery man heares so: what would hee haue borrowed of you?

1 A thousand Peeces.

2 A thousand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He sent to me sir ——Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Euer at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.

2 The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaues Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay. Feast your eares with the Musicke awhile: If they will fare so harshly o'th Trompets sound: we shall too't presently.

1 I hope it remaines not vnkindely with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good Friend, what cheere?

The Basket brought in.

2 My most Honorable Lord, I am e'ne sick of shame, that when your Lordship this other day sent to me, I was so vnfortunate a Beggar.

Tim. Thinke not on't, sir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

3 All couer'd Dishes.

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it

2 How do you? What's the newes?

3 Alcibiades is banish'd: heare you of it?

Both. Alcibiades banish'd?

3 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 How? How?

2 I pray you vpon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward

4 This is the old man still.

3 Will hold? Will hold?

2 It does: but time will, and so.

3 I do conceyue.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as hee would to the lip of his Mistris: your diet shall bee in all places alike. Make not a Citie Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree vpon the first place. Sit, sit. The Gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankefulnesse. For your owne guifts, make your selues prais'd: But reserue still to giue, least your Deities be dispis'd. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the Gods. Make the Meate be beloued, more then the Man that giues it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelue women at the Table, let a dozen of them bee as they are. The rest of your Fees, O Gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common lege of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods, make suteable for destruction. For these my present friends, as they are to meat nothing, so are nothing blesse them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncouer Dogges, and lap

Some speake. What do's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Timon. May you a better Feast neuer behold
You knot of Mouth-Friends: Smoke, & lukewarm water
Is your perfection. This is Timons last,
Who stucke and spangled you with Flatteries,
Washes it off and sprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Liue loath'd, and long
Most smiling, smooth, detested Parasites,
Courteous Destroyers, affable Wolues, meeke Beares:
You Fooles of Fortune, Trencher-friends, Times Flyes,
Cap and knee-Slaues, vapours, and Minute Iackes.
Of Man and Beast, the infinite Maladie
Crust you quite o're. What do'st thou go?
Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou:
Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none.
What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast,
Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest.
Burne house, sinke Athens, henceforth hated be
Of Timon Man, and all Humanity. Exit

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now, my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Push, did you see my Cap?

4 I haue lost my Gowne.

1 He's but a mad Lord, & nought but humors swaies him. He gaue me a Iewell th'other day, and now he has beate it out of my hat.
Did you see my Iewell?

2 Did you see my Cap.

3 Heere 'tis.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Let's make no stay.

2 Lord Timons mad.

3 I feel't vpon my bones.

4 One day he giues vs Diamonds, next day stones.

Exeunt the Senators.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe vpon thee. O thou Wall
That girdles in those Wolues, dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens. Matrons, turne incontinent,
Obedience fayle in Children: Slaues and Fooles

Plucke the graue wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And minifter in their ſteeds, to generall Filthes.
Conuert o'th Inſtant greene Virginity,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold faſt
Rather then render backe; out with your Knines,
And cut your Truſters throates. Bound Seruants, ſcale,
Large-handed Robbers your graue Maſters are,
And pill by Law. Maide, to thy Maſters bed,
Thy Miſtris is o'th' Brothell. Some of ſixteen,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With't, beate out his Braines. Piety, and Feare,
Religion to the Gods, Peace, Iuſtice, Truth,
Domeſticke awe, Night-reſt, and Neighbour-hood,
Inſtruction, Manners, Myſteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Obſeruances, Cuſtomes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confuſion liue: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feauors, heape
On Athens ripe for ſtroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Luſt, and Libertie
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That gainſt the ſtreame of Vertue they may ſtriue,
And drowne themſelues in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th'Athenian boſomes, and their crop
Be generall Leproſie: Breath, infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendſhip) may
Be meerely poyſon. Nothing Ile beare from thee
But nakedneſſe, thou deteſtable Towne,
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he ſhall finde
Th'vnkindeſt Beaſt, more kinder then Mankinde.
The Gods confound (heare me you good Gods all)
Th'Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankinde, high and low.
Amen. Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Seruants.

1 Heare you M. Steward, where's our Maſter?
Are we vndone, caſt off, nothing remaining?

Stew. Alack my Fellowes, what ſhould I ſay to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous Gods,
I am as poore as you.

2 Such a Houſe broke?
So Noble a Maſter falne, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And go along with him.

3 As we do turne our backes
From our Companion, throwne into his graue,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Shinke all away, leaue their falſe vowes with him
Like empty purſes pickt; and his poore ſelfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his diſeaſe, of all ſhunn'd pouerty,
Walkes like contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Seruants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd houſe.

3 Yet do our hearts weare Timons Liuery,
That ſee I by our Faces: we are Fellowes ſtill,
Seruing alike in ſorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, ſtand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we muſt all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good Fellowes all,
The lateſt of my wealth Ile ſhare among'ſt you
Where euer we ſhall meete, for Timons ſake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Let's ſhake our heads, and ſay,
As 'twere a Knell vnto our Maſters Fortunes,
We haue ſeene better dayes. Let each take ſome:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in ſorrow, parting poore

Embrace and part ſeuerall waies.

Oh the fierce wretchednеſſe that Glory brings vs!
Who would not wiſh to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches points to Miſery and Contempt?
Who would be ſo mock'd with Glory, or to liue
But in a Dreame of Friendſhip,
To haue his pompe, and all what ſtate compounds,
But only painted like his varniſht Friends:
Poore honeſt Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by Goodneſſe: Strange vnuſuall blood,
When mans worſt ſinne is, He do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe ſo kinde againe?
For Bounty that makes Gods, do ſtill marre Men.
My deereſt Lord, bleſt to be moſt accurſt,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy cheefe Afflictions. Alas (kinde Lord)
Hee's ſlung in Rage from this ingratefull Seate
Of monſtrous Friends:
Nor ha's he with him to ſupply his life,
Or that which can command it:
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile euer ſeruе his minde, with my beſt will,
Whilſt I haue Gold, Ile be his Steward ſtill. Exit

Enter Timon in the woods.

Tim. O bleſſed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Siſters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whoſe procreation, reſidence, and birth,
Scarſe is diuidant: touch them with ſeuerall fortunes,
The greater ſcornes the leſſer. Not Nature
(To whom all ſores lay ſiege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raiſe me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators ſhall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Native Honor.
It is the Paſtour Lards, the Brothers ſides,
The want that makes him leaue: who dares? who dares
In puritie of Manhood ſtand vpright
And ſay, this mans a Flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for euerie grize of Fortune
Is ſmooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden Foole. All's obliquie:
There's nothing leuell in our curſed Natures
But direct villanie. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feaſts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His ſemblable, yea himſelfe Timon diſdaines,
Deſtruction phang mankinde; Earth yeeld me Roots,
Who ſeekes for better of thee, ſawce his palate
With thy moſt operant Poyſon. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No Gods, I am no idle Votariſt,
Roots you cleere Heauens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Baſe, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valiant.
Ha you Gods! why this? what this, you Gods? why this
Will lugge your Prieſts and Seruants from your ſides
Pluche plum mens pillowes from below their heads.

Thus

Slaue,
breake Religions, bleſſe th'accurſt,
re Leproſie ador'd, place Theeues,
n Title, knee, and approbation

n whore of Mankinde, that putteſt oddes out of Nations, I will make thee Nature. March afarre off.

Miſanthropos, and hate Mankinde.
I do wiſh thou were a dogge, houres, ſeaſon the ſlaues for Tubbes and downe Roſe-cheeke youth to the Fubfaſt, ang thee Monſter.

loue him ſweet Timandra for his wits and loſt in his Calamities.

I haue but little Gold of late, braue Timon,
The want whereof, doth daily make reuolt
In my penurious Band. I haue heard and greeu'd
How curſed Athens, mindeleſſe of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour ſtates
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod vpon them.
Tim. I prythee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.
Alc. I am thy Friend, and pitty thee deere Timon.
Tim. How dareſt thou pitty him whom ſ dareſt trouble,
I had rather be alone.
Alc. Why fare thee well:
Heere is ſome Gold for thee.
Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eate it.
Alc. When I haue laid proud Athens on a hearſe.
Tim. Warr'ſt thou 'gainſt Athens.
Alc. I Timon, and haue cauſe.
Tim. The Gods confound them all in thy Conqueſt,
And thee after, when thou haſt Conquer'd.
Alc. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou waſt borne to conquer my Country.
Put vp thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, go on;
Be as a Planetary plague, when Ioue
Will o're ſome high-Vic'd City, hang his poyſon
In the ſicke ayre: Let not thy ſword skip one
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vſurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite onely, that is honeſt,
Her ſelfe's a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheeke
Make ſoft thy trenchant Sword: for thoſe Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Leafe of pitty writ,
But ſet them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whoſe dimpled ſmiles from Fooles exhauſt their mercy:
Thinke it a Baſtard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat ſhall cut,
And mince it ſans remorſe. Sweare againſt Obiects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whoſe proofe, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes,
Nor ſight of Prieſts in holy Veſtments bleeding,
Shall pierce a iot. There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers,
Make large confuſion: and thy fury ſpent,
Confounded be thy ſelfe. Speake not, be gone.
Alc. Haſt thou Gold yet, Ile take the Gold thou giueſt me, not all thy Counſell.
Tim. Doſt thou or doſt thou not, Heauens curſe vpon thee.
Both. Giue vs ſome Gold good Timon, haſt ſ more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forſweare her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold vp you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'l ſweare, terribly ſweare
Into ſtrong ſhudders, and to heauenly Agues
Th'immortall Gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile truſt to your Conditions, be whores ſtill.
And he whoſe pious breath ſeekes to conuert you,
Be ſtrong in Whore, allure him, burne him vp,
Let your cloſe fire predominate his ſmoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines ſix moneths
Be quite contrary, And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore ſtill,
Paint till a horſe may myre vpon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.
Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Beleeue't that wee'l do any thing for Gold.
Tim. Conſumptions ſowe
In hollow bones of man, ſtrike their ſharpe ſhinnes,
And marre mens ſpurring. Cracke the Lawyers voyce,
That he may neuer more falſe Title pleade.
Nor ſound his Quillets ſhrilly: Hoare the Flamen,
That ſcold'ſt againſt the quality of fleſh,
And not beleeues himſelfe. Downe with the Noſe,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foreſee (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld-pate Ruffians
And let the vnſcarr'd Braggerts of the Warre Deriue ſome paine from you. Plague all,
That your Activity may defeate and quell
The ſourſe of all Erection. There's more Gold.
Do you damne others, and let this damne you,
And ditches graue you all.
Both. More counſell with more Money, bounteous Timon.
Tim. More whore, more Miſchiefe firſt, I haue giuen you earneſt
Alc. Strike vp the Drum towardes Athens, farewell Timon: if I thriue well, Ile viſit thee againe.
Tim. If I hope well, Ile neuer ſee thee more.
Alc. I neuer did thee harme
Tim. Yes, thou ſpok'ſt well of me.
Alc. Call'ſt thou that harme?
Tim. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,
And take thy Beagles with thee.
Alc. We but offend him. ſtrike. Exeunt.
Tim. That Nature being ſicke of mans vnkindneſſe
Should yet be hungry: Common Mother, thou
Whoſe wombe vnmeaſureable, and infinite breſt
Teemes and feeds all. whoſe ſelfeſame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Childe (arrogant man) is puft.
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and eyeleſſe venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Births below Criſpe Heauen,
Whereon Hiperions quickning fire doth ſhine
Yeeld him, who all the humane Sonnes do hate,
From foorth thy plenteous boſome, one poore roote
Enſeare thy Fertile and Conceptious wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers, Dragons, Wolues, and Beares,
Teeme with new Monſters, whom thy vpward face
Hath to the Marbled Manſion all aboue
Neuer preſented. O, a Root, deare thankes
Dry vp thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-torne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Liquoriſh draughts
And Morſels Vnctious, greaſes his pure minde,
That from it all Conſideration ſlippes ——

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.
Ape. I was directed hither. Men report,
Thou doſt affect my Manners, and doſt vſe them.
Tim. 'Tis then, becauſe thou doſt not keepe a dogge
Whom I would imitate. Conſumption catch thee.
Ape. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore vnmanly Melancholly ſprung
From change of future. Why this Spade? this place?
This Slaue-like Habit, and theſe lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye ſoft,
Hugge their diſeas'd Perfumes, and haue forgot
That euer Timon was. Shame not theſe Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper.
Be thou a Flatterer now, and ſeeke to thriue
By that which has vndone thee: hinge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt obſerue
Blow off thy Cap: praiſe his moſt vicious ſtraine,
And call it excellent: thou waſt told thus:
Thou gau'ſt thine eares (like Tapſters, that bad welcome)
To Knaues, and all approachers: 'Tis moſt iuſt
That thou turne Raſcall, had'ſt thou wealth againe,
Raſcals ſhould haue't. Do not aſſume my likeneſſe.
Tim. Were I like thee, I'de throw away my ſelfe.
Ape. Thou haſt caſt away thy ſelfe, being like thy ſelf
A Madman ſo long, now a Foole: what think'ſt
That the bleake ayre, thy boyſterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy ſhirt on warme? Will theſe moyſt Tree,
That haue out-liu'd the Eagle, page thy heeles
And ſkip when thou point'ſt out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Caudle thy Morning taſte
To cure thy o're-nights ſurfeit? Call the Creatures,
Whoſe naked Natures liue in all the ſpight
Of wreakfull Heauen, whoſe bare vnhoused Trunkes
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Anſwer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.
O thou ſhalt finde.
Tim. A Foole of thee: depart.
Ape. I loue thee better now, then ere I did.
Tim. I hate thee worſe.
Ape. Why?
Tim. Thou flatter'ſt miſery.
Ape. I flatter not, but ſay thou art a Caytiffe.
Tim. Why do'ſt thou ſeeke me out?
Ape To vex thee.
Tim. Alwayes a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.
Doſt pleaſe thy ſelfe in't?
Ape. I.
Tim. What, a Knaue too?
Ape. If thou did'ſt put this ſowre cold habit on
To caſtigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Doſt it enforcedly: Thou'dſt Courtier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar: willing miſery
Out-liues incertaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling ſtill, neuer compleat:
The other, at high wiſh: beſt ſtate Contentleſſe,
Hath a diſtracted and moſt wretched being,
Worſe then the worſt, Content.
Thou ſhould'ſt deſire to dye, being miſerable.
Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miſerable.
Thou art a Slaue, whom Fortunes tender arme
With fauour neuer claſpt: but bred a Dogge.
Had'ſt thou like vs from our firſt ſwaine proceeded,
The ſweet degrees that this breefe world affords,
To ſuch as may the paſſiue drugges of it
Freely commend'ſt: thou would'ſt haue plung'd thy ſelf
In generall Riot, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Luſt, and neuer learn'd
The Icie precepts of reſpect, but followed
The Sugred game before thee. But my ſelfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionarie,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men
At duty more then I could frame employment;
That numberleſſe vpon me ſtucke, as leaues
Do on the Oake, haue with one Winters bruſh
Fell from their boughes, and left me open, bare,
For euery ſtorme that blowes. I to bleate this,
That neuer knew but better, is ſome burthen
Thy Nature, did commence in ſufferance, Time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why ſhould'ſt hate Men?
They neuer flatter'd thee. What haſt thou giuen?

If

If thou wilt curſe: thy Father (that poore ragge)
Muſt be thy ſubiect; who in ſpight put ſtuffe
To ſome ſhee-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogue, hereditary. Hence, be gone,
If thou hadſt not bene borne the worſt of men,
Thou hadſt bene a Knaue and Flatterer.

Ape. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. I, that I am not thee.

Ape. I, that I was no Prodigall.

Tim. I, that I am one now.
Were all the wealth I haue ſhut vp in thee,
I'ld giue thee leaue to hang it. Get thee gone:
That the whole life of Athens were in this,
Thus would I eate it.

Ape. Heere, I will mend thy Feaſt.

Tim. Firſt mend thy company, take away thy ſelfe.

Ape. So I ſhall mend mine owne, by'th'lacke of thine

Tim. 'Tis not well mended ſo, it is but botcht;
If not, I would it were.

Ape. What would'ſt thou haue to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlewind: if thou wilt,
Tell them there I haue Gold, looke, ſo I haue.

Ape. Heere is no vſe for Gold.

Tim. The beſt, and trueſt:
For heere it ſleepes, and do's no hyred harme.

Ape. Where lyeſt a nights Timon?

Tim. Vnder that's aboue me.
Where feed'ſt thou a-dayes Apemantus?

Ape. Where my ſtomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it.

Tim. Would poyſon were obedient & knew my mind

Ape. Where would'ſt thou ſend it?

Tim. To ſawce thy diſhes.

Ape. The middle of Humanity thou never knewe'ſt, but the extremitie of both ends. When thou waſt in thy Gilt, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much Curioſitie: in thy Ragges thou know'ſt none, but art deſpis'd for the contrary. There's a medlet for thee, eate it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Ape. Do'ſt hate a Medlet?

Tim. I, though it looke like thee.

Ape. And th'hadſt hated Medlers ſooner, y'ſhould'ſt haue loued thy ſelfe better now. What man didd'ſt thou euer know vnthrift, that was beloued after his meanes?

Tim. Who without thoſe meanes thou talk'ſt of, didſt thou euer know belou'd?

Ape. My ſelfe.

Tim. I vnderſtand thee: thou hadſt ſome meanes to keepe a Dogge.

Apem. What things in the world canſt thou neereſt compare to thy Flatterers?

Tim. Women neereſt, but men: men are the things themſelues. What would'ſt thou do with the world Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Ape. Giue it the Beaſts, to be rid of the men.

Tim Would'ſt thou haue thy ſelfe fall in the confuſion of men, and remaine a Beaſt with the Beaſts.

Ape. I Timon.

Tim. A beaſtly Ambition, which the Goddes graunt thee t'attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would ſuſpect thee, when peraduenture thou wert accus'd by the Aſſe: If thou wert the Aſſe, thy dulneſſe would torment thee; and ſtill thou liu'd'ſt but as a Breakefaſt to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedineſſe would afflict thee, & oft thou ſhould'ſt hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne ſelfe the conqueſt of thy fury. Wert thou a Beare, thou would'ſt be kill'd by the Horſe: wert thou a Horſe, thou would'ſt be ſeaz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the ſpottes of thy Kindred, were Iurors on thy life. All thy ſafety were remotion, and thy defence abſence. What Beaſt could'ſt thou bee, that were not ſubiect to a Beaſt: and what a Beaſt art thou already, that ſeeſt not thy loſſe in transformation.

Ape. If thou could'ſt pleaſe me
With ſpeaking to me, thou might'ſt
Haue hit vpon it heere.
The Commonwealth of Athens, is become
A Forreſt of Beaſts.

Tim. How has's the Aſſe broke the wall, that thou art out of the Citie.

Ape. Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter:
The plague of Company light vpon thee:
I will feare to catch it, and giue way.
When I know not what elſe to do,
Ile ſee thee againe.

Tim. When there is nothing liuing but thee,
Thou ſhalt be welcome.
I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,
Then Apemantus.

Ape. Thou art the Cap
Of all the Fooles aliue.

Tim. Would thou wert cleane enough
To ſpit vpon.

Ape. A plague on thee,
Thou art too bad to curſe.

Tim. All Villaines
That do ſtand by thee, are pure.

Ape. There is no Leproſie,
But what thou ſpeak'ſt.

Tim. If I name thee, Ile beate thee;
But I ſhould infect my hands.

Ape. I would my tongue
Could rot them off.

Tim. Away thou iſſue of a mangle dogge,
Choller does kill me,
That thou art aliue, I ſwoond to ſee thee.

Ape. Would thou would'ſt burſt.

Tim. Away thou tedious Rogue, I am ſorry I ſhall loſe a ſtone by thee.

Ape Beaſt.

Tim. Slaue.

Ape. Toad.

Tim. Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.
I am ſicke of this falſe world, and will loue nought
But euen the meere neceſſities vpon't:
Then Timon preſently prepare thy graue.
Lye where the light Fome of the Sea may beate
Thy graue ſtone dayly, make thine Epitaph,
That death in me, at others liues may laugh.
O thou ſweete King-killer, and deare diuorce
Twixt natural Sonne and ſire: thou bright defiler
Of Hymens pureſt bed, thou valiant Mars,
Thou euer, yoong, freſh, loued, and delicate wooer,
Whoſe bluſh doth thawe the conſecrated Snow
That lyes on Dians lap.
Thou viſible God,
That ſouldreſt cloſe Impoſſibilities,
And mak'ſt them kiſſe; that ſpeak'ſt with euerie Tonque

To euerie purpoſe: O thou touch of hearts,
Thinke thy ſlaue-man rebels, and by thy vertue
Set them into confounding odder, that Beaſts
May haue the world in Empire.
Ape. Would't were ſo,
But not till I am dead. Ile ſay th'haſt Gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd too ſhortly.
Tim. Throng'd too?
Ape. I.
Tim. Thy backe I prythee.
Ape. Liue, and loue thy miſery.
Tim. Long liue ſo, and ſo dye. I am quit.
Ape. Mo things like men,
Eate Timon, and abhorre them. Exit Apeman.

Enter the Bandetti.

1 Where ſhould he haue this Gold? It is ſome poore Fragment, ſome ſlender Ort of his remainder: the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, droue him into this Melancholly.
2 It is nois'd
He hath a maſſe of Treaſure.
3 Let vs make the aſſay vpon him, if he care not for't, he will ſupply vs eaſily: if he couetouſly reſerue it, how ſhall's get it?
2 True: for he beares it not about him:
'Tis hid.
1 Is not this hee?
All. Where?
2 'Tis his deſcription.
3 He? I know him.
All. Saue thee Timon.
Tim. Now Theeues.
All. Soldiers, not Theeues.
Tim. Both too, and women Sonnes.
All. We are not Theeues, but men
That much do want.
Tim. Your greateſt want is, you want much of meat:
Why ſhould you want? Behold, the Earth hath Rootes:
Within this Mile breake forth a hundred Springs:
The Oakes beare Maſt, the Briars Scarlet Heps,
The bounteous Huſwife Nature, on each bush,
Layes her full Meſſe before you. Want? why Want?
1 We cannot liue on Graſſe, on Berries, Water,
As Beaſts, and Birds, and Fiſhes.
Ti. Nor on the Beaſts themſelues, the Birds & Fiſhes,
You muſt eate men. Yet thankes I muſt you con,
That you are Theeues profeſt: that you worke not
In holier ſhapes: For there is boundleſſe Theft
In limited Profeſſions. Raſcall Theeues
Heere's Gold. Go, ſucke the ſubtle blood o'th'Grape,
Till the high Feauor ſeeth your blood to froth,
And ſo ſcape hanging. Truſt not the Phyſitian,
His Antidotes are poyſon, and he ſlayes
Moe then you Rob: Take wealth, and liues together,
Do Villanie do, ſince you proteſt to doo't,
Like Workemen, Ile exampre you with Theevery:
The Sunnes a Theefe, and with his great attraction
Robbes the vaſte Sea. The Moones an arrant Theefe,
And her pale fire, ſhe ſnatches from the Sunne.
The Seas a Theefe, whoſe liquid Surge, reſolues
The Moone into Salt teares. The Earth's a Theefe,
That feeds and breeds by a compoſture ſtolne
From gen'rall excrement: each thing's a Theefe.
The Lawes, your curbe and whip, in their rough power
Ha's vncheck'd Theft. Loue not your ſelues, away,
Rob one another, there's more Gold, cut throates,
All that you meete are Theeues: to Athens go,
Breake open ſhoppes, nothing can you ſteale
But Theeues do looſe it: ſteale leſſe, for this I giue you,
And Gold confound you howſoeere: Amen.
3 Has almoſt charm'd me from my Profeſſion, by perſwading me to it.
1 'Tis in the malice of mankinde, that he thus adiures vs not to haue vs thriue in our myſtery.
2 Ile beleeue him as an Enemy,
And giue ouer my Trade.
1 Let vs firſt ſee peace in Athens, there is no lyfe ſo miſerable, but a man may be true. Exit Theeues.

Enter the Steward to Timon.

Stew. Oh you Gods!
Is yon'd deſpis'd and ruinous man my Lord?
Full of decay and fayling? Oh Monument
And wonder of good deeds, euilly beſtow'd!
What an alteration of Honor has deſp'rate want made?
What viler thing vpon the earth, than Friends,
Who can bring Nobleſt minds, to baſeſt ends.
How rarely does it meete with this times guiſe,
When man was wiſht to loue his Enemies:
Grant I may euer loue, and rather woo
Thoſe that would miſcheeſe me, than thoſe that doo.
Has caught me in his eye, I will preſent my honeſt griefe vnto him; and as my Lord, ſtill ſerue him with my life
My deereſt Maſter.
Tim. Away: what art thou?
Stew. Haue you forgot me, Sir?
Tim. Why doſt aske that? I haue forgot all men.
Then, if thou grunt'ſt, th'art a man.
I haue forgot thee.
Stew. An honeſt poore ſeruant of yours.
Tim. Then I know thee not:
I neuer had honeſt man about me, I all
I kept were Knaues, to ſerue in meate to Villaines.
Stew. The Gods are witneſſe,
Ne'r did poore Steward weare a neuer greeſe
For his vndone Lord, than mine eyes for you.
Tim. What, doſt thou weepe?
Come neerer, then I loue thee
Becauſe thou art a woman, and diſclaim'ſt
Flinty mankinde: whoſe eyes do ſeuer giue,
But thorow Luſt and Laughter: pitties ſleeping:
Strange times, that weepe with laughing, not with weeping.
Stew. I begge of you to know me, good my Lord,
T'accept my greefe, and whil'ſt this poore wealth laſts,
To entertaine me as your Steward ſtill.
Tim. Had I a Steward
So true, ſo iuſt, and now ſo comfortable?
It almoſt turnes my dangerous Nature wilde.
Let me behold thy face: Surely, this man
Was borne of woman.
Forgiue my generall, and exceptleſſe rathneſſe
You perpetuall ſober Gods. I do proclaime
One honeſt man: Miſtake me not, but one:
No more I pray, and hee's a Steward.
How fayne would I haue hated all mankinde,
And thou redeem'ſt thy ſelfe. But all ſaue thee,
I fell with Curſes.
Me thinkes thou art more honeſt now, than wiſe:
For, by oppreſſing and betraying me,

Painter. Good as the beſt.
Promiſing, is the verie Ayre o'th'Time;
It opens the eyes of Expectation.
Performance, is ever the duller for his acte,
And but in the plainer and ſimpler kinde of people,
The deede of Saying is quite out of vſe.
To Promiſe, is moſt Courtly and faſhionable;
Performance, is a kinde of Will or Teſtament
Which argues a great ſickneſſe in his iudgement
That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Cane.

Timon. Excellent Workeman,
Thou canſt not paint a man ſo baddo
As is thy ſelfe.
Poet. I am thinking
What I ſhall ſay I haue prouided for him:
It muſt be a perſonating of himſelfe:
A Satyre againſt the ſoftneſſe of Proſperity,
With a Diſcouerie of the infinite Flatteries
That follow youth and opulencie.
Timon. Muſt thou needes
Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke?
Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men?
Do ſo, I haue Gold for thee.
Poet. Nay let's ſeeke him.
Then do we ſinne againſt our owne eſtate,
When we may profit meete, and come too late.
Painter. True:
When the day ſerues before blacke-corner'd night;
Finde what thou want'ſt, by free and offer'd light.
Come.
Tim. Ile meete you at the turne:
What a Gods Gold, that he is worſhipt
In a baſer Temple, then where Swine feede?
'Tis thou that rigg'ſt the Barke, and plow'ſt the Fome,
Setteſt admired reuerence in a Slaue,
To thee be worſhipt, and thy Saints for aye:
Be crown'd with Plagues, that thee alone obey.
Fit I meet them.
Poet. Haile worthy Timon.
Pain. Our late Noble Maſter.
Timon. Haue I once liu'd
To ſee two honeſt men?
Poet. Sir:
Hauing often of your open Bounty taſted,
Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends falne off,
Whoſe thankeleſſe Natures (O abhorred Spirits)
Not all the Whippes of Heauen, are large enough.
What, to you,
Whoſe Starre-like Nobleneſſe gaue life and influence
To their whole being? I am rapt, and cannot couer
The monſtrous bulke of this Ingratitude
With any ſize of words.
Timon. Let it go,
Naked men may ſee't the better:
You that are honeſt, by being what you are,
Make them beſt ſeene, and know wee.
Pain. He, and my ſelfe
Haue trauail'd in the great ſhowre of your guifts,
And ſweetly felt it.
Timon. I, you are honeſt men.
Painter. We are hither come
To offer you our ſeruice
Timon. Moſt honeſt men:

Why

Why how shall I requite you?
Can you eate Roots, and drinke cold water, no?
Both. What we can do,
Wee'l do to do you seruice.
Tim. Y'are honest men,
Y haue heard that I haue Gold,
I am sure you haue, speake truth, y'are honest men.
Pain. So it is said my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.
Timon. Good honest men: Thou drawst a counterfet
Best in all Athens, th'art indeed the best,
Thou counterfets't most liuely.
Pain. So, so, my Lord.
Tim. E'ne so sir as I say. And for thy fiction,
Why thy Verse swels with stuffe so fine and smooth,
That thou art euen Naturall in thine Art.
But for all this (my honest Natur'd friends)
I must needs say you haue a little fault,
Marry 'tis not monstrous in you, neither wish I
You take much paines to mend.
Both. Beseech your Honour
To make it knowne to vs.
Tim. You'l take it ill.
Both. Most thankefully, my Lord.
Timon. Will you indeed?
Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.
Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a Knaue,
That mightily deceiues you.
Both. Do we, my Lord?
Tim. I, and you heare him cogge,
See him dissemble,
Know his grosse patchery, loue him, feede him,
Keepe in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd
That he's a made-vp-Villaine
Pain. I know none such, my Lord.
Poet. Nor I.
Timon. Looke you,
I loue you well, Ile giue you Gold
Rid me these Villaines from your companies:
Hang them, or stab them, drowne them in a draught
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
Ile giue you Gold enough.
Both. Name them my Lord, let's know them.
Tim. You that way, and you this:
But two in Company:
Each man a part, all single, and alone,
Yet an arch Villaine keepes him company:
If where thou art, two Villaines shall not be,
Come not neere him. If thou would'st not reside
But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.
Hence, packe, there's Gold, you came for Gold ye slaues.
You haue worke for me; there's payment, hence,
You are an Alcumist, make Gold of that:
Out Rascall dogges. Exeunt

Enter Steward, and two Senators

Stew. It is vaine that you would speake with Timon:
For he is set so onely to himselfe,
That nothing but himselfe, which lookes like man,
Is friendly with him.
1. Sen. Bring vs to his Caue.
It is our part and promise to th'Athenians
To speake with Timon.
2. Sen. At all times alike
Men are not still the same: 'twas Time and Griefes
That fram'd him thus. Time with his faire hand,
Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes,
The former man may make him: bring vs to him
And chance it as it may.
Stew. Heere is his Caue:
Peace and content be heere. Lord Timon, Timon,
Looke out, and speake to Friends: Th'Athenians
By two of their most reuerend Senate greet thee:
Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Caue.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comforts burne,
Speake and be hang'd:
For each true word, a blister, and each falsh
Be as a Cauterizing to the roote o'th'Tongue,
Consuming it with speaking.
1 Worthy Timon.
Tim. Of none but such as you,
And you of Timon.
1 The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.
Tim. I thanke them,
And would send them backe the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.
1 O forget
What we are sorry for our selues in thee:
The Senators, with one consent of loue,
Intreate thee backe to Athens, who haue thought
On speciall Dignities, which vacant lye
For thy best vse and wearing.
2 They confesse
Toward thee, forgetfulnesse too generall grosse;
Which now the publike Body, which doth seldome
Play the recanter, feeling in it selfe
A lacke of Timons ayde, hath since wish'd
Of it owne fall, restraining ayde to Timon,
And send forth vs, to make their sorrowed render,
Together, with a recompence more fruitfull
Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme.
I euen such heapes and summes of Loue and Wealth,
As shall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their loue,
Euer to read them thine.
Tim. You witch me in it;
Surprize me to the very brinke of teares;
Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes,
And Ile beweepe these comforts, worthy Senators.
1 Therefore so please thee to returne with vs
And of our Athens, thine and ours to take
The Captainship, thou shalt be met with thanker,
Allowed with absolute power, and thy good name
Liue with Authoritie: So soone we shall driue backe
Of Alcibiades th approaches wild,
Who like a Boare too Gunge, doth root vp
His Countries peace.
2 And shakes his threatning Sword
Against the walles of Athens.
1 Therefore Timon
Tim. Well sir, I will; therefore I will sir thus:
If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sacke faire Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by th'Beards,
Giuing our holy Virgins to the staine
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd warre:
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speakes it,

In

ose but tell him that I care not,

Meſ. I haue ſpoke the leaſt.

2 We ſtand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.
Meſ. I met a Carrier, one mine ancient Friend,
Whom though in generall part we were oppoſ'd,
Yet our old loue made a particular force,
And made vs ſpeake like Friends. This man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timons Caue,
With Letters of intreaty, which imported
His Fellowſhip i'th'cauſe againſt your City,
In part for his ſake mou'd.

Enter the other Senators.

1 Heere come our Brothers.
3 No talke of Timon, nothing of him expect.
The Enemies Drumme is heard, and feareſull ſcouring
Doth choake the ayre with duſt: In, and prepare,
Ours is the fall I feare, our Foes the Snare. Exeunt.

Enter a Soulder in the Woods ſeeking Timon.

Sol. By all deſcription this ſhould be the place.
Whoſe heere? Speake hoa. No anſwer? What is this?
Timon is dead, who hath out-ſtretcht his ſpan,
Some Beaſt reade this; There do't not liue a Man.
Dead ſure, and this his Graue, what's on this Tomb,
I cannot read: the Charracter Ile take with wax,
Our Captaine hath in euery Figure skill;
An ag'd Interpreter, though yong in dayes:
Before proud Athens he's ſet downe by this,
Whoſe fall the marke of his Ambition is. Exit.

Trumpets ſound. Enter Alcibiades with his Powers before Athens.

Alc. Sound to this Coward, and leſcilious Towne,
Our terrible approach.
Sounds a Parly.
The Senators appeare vpon the walls.
Till now you haue gone on, and fill'd the time
With all Licentious meaſure, making your willes
The ſcope of Iuſtice. Till now, my ſelfe and ſuch
As ſlept within the ſhadow of your power
Haue wander'd with our traueſt Armes, and breath'd
Our ſufferance vainly: Now the time is flaſh,
When crouching Marrow in the beſter ſtrong
Cries (of it ſelfe) no more: Now breathleſſe wrong,
Shall ſit and pant in your great Chaires of eaſe,
And purſie Inſolence ſhall breake his winde
With feare and horrid flight.
1. Sen. Noble, and young;
When thy firſt greeſes were but a meere conceit,
Ere thou haſt power, or we had cauſe of feare,
We ſent to thee, to giue thy rages Balme,
To wipe out our Ingratitude, with Loues
Aboue their quantitie.
2 So did we wooe
Tranſformed Timon, to our Citties loue
By humble Meſſage, and by promiſt meanes:
We were not all vnkinde, nor all deſerue
The common ſtroke of warre.
1 Theſe walles of ours,
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You haue receyu'd your greeſe: Nor are they ſuch,
That theſe great Towres, Trophees, & Schools ſhould fall
For priuate faults in them.
2 Nor are they liuing

Who

Who were the motiues that you firſt went out,
(Shame that they wanted, cunning in excelſſe)
Hath broke their hearts. March, Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners ſpred,
By decimation and a tythed death:
If thy Reuenges hunger for that Food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the deſtin'd tenth,
And by the hazard of the ſpotted dye,
Let dye the ſpotted.

1 All haue not offended:
For thoſe that were, it is not ſquare to take
On thoſe that are, Reuenge: Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited. then deere Countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leaue without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle, and thoſe Kin
Which in the bluſter of thy wrath muſt fall
With thoſe that haue offended. like a Shepheard,
Approach the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not altogether.

1 What thou wilt,
Thou rather ſhalt inforce it with thy ſmile,
Then hew too't, with thy Sword.

1 Set but thy foot
Againſt our rampyr'd gates, and they ſhall ope:
So thou wilt ſend thy gentle heart before,
To ſay thou't enter Friendly.

2 Throw thy Gloue,
Or any Token of thine Honour elſe,
That thou wilt vſe the warres as thy redreſſe,
And not as our Confuſion: All thy Powers
Shall make their harbour in our Towne, till wee Haue ſeal'd thy full deſire.

Alc. Then there's my Gloue,
Deſend and open your vncharged Ports,
Thoſe Enemies of Timons, and mine owne
Whom you your ſelues ſhall ſet out for reproofe,
Fall and no more: and to attone your feares
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall paſſe his quarter, or offend the ſtreame
Of Regular Iuſtice in your Cities bounds,
But ſhall be remedied to your publique Lawes
At heaueſt anſwer.

Both. 'Tis moſt Nobly ſpoken.

Alc. Deſcend, and keepe your words.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd vpon the very hemme o'th'Sea,
And on his Graueſtone, this Inſculpture which
With wax I brought away: whoſe ſoft Impreſſion
Interprets for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reades the Epitaph.

Heere lies a wretched Corſe, of wretched Soule bereft.
Seek not my name: A Plague conſume you wicked Caitifs left:
Heere lye I Timon, who alone, all liuing men did hate,
Paſſe by, and curſe thy fill, but paſſe and ſtay not here thy gate.
These well expreſſe in thee thy latter ſpirits:
Though thou abhorr'dſt in vs our humane griefes,
Scorn'dſt our Braines flow, and thoſe our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall; yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vaſt Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Graue, on faults forgiuen. Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whoſe Memorie
Hereafter more. Bring me into your Citie,
And I will vſe the Oliue, with my Sword:
Make warre breed peace; make peace ſtint warre, make each
Preſcribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes ſtrike. Exeunt.

To ſee great Pompey paſſe the ſtreets of Rome?
And when you ſaw his Chariot but appeare,
Haue you not made an Vniuerſall ſhout,
That Tyber trembled vnderneath her bankes
To heare the replication of your ſounds,
Made in her Concaue Shores?
And do you now put on your beſt attyre?
And do you now cull out a Holyday?
And do you now ſtrew Flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph ouer Pompeyes blood?
Be gone,
Runne to your houſes, fall vpon your knees,
Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague
That needs moſt light on this Ingratitude.

Fla. Go, go, good Countrymen, and for this fault
Aſſemble all the poore men of your ſort;
Draw them to Tyber bankes, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the loweſt ſtreame
Do kiſſe the moſt exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See where their baſeſt mettle be not moou'd,
They vaniſh tongue-tyed in their guiltineſſe:
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I: Diſrobe the Images,
If you do finde them deckt with Ceremonies.

Mur. May we do ſo?
You know it is the Feaſt of Lupercall.

Fla. It is no matter, let no Images
Be hung with Cæſars Trophees: Ile about,
And driue away the Vulgar from the ſtreets;
So do you too, where you perceiue them thicke.
Theſe growing Feathers, pluckt from Cæſars wing,
Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,
Who elſe would ſoare aboue the view of men,
And keepe vs all in ſeruile fearefulneſſe. Exeunt

Enter Cæſar, Antony for the Courſe, Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Caſſius, Caska, a Soothſayer: after them Murellus and Flauius.

Cæſ. Calphurnia.

Cask. Peace ho, Cæſar ſpeakes.

Cæſ. Calphurnia.

Calp. Heere my Lord.

Cæſ. Stand you directly in Antonio's way,
When he doth runne his courſe. Antonio.

Ant. Cæſar, my Lord.

Cæſ. Forget not in your ſpeed Antonio,
To touch Calphurnia: for our Elders ſay,

The Barren touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their sterrile curse.
Ant. I shall remember,
When Cæsar sayes, Do this; it is perform'd.
Cæs. Set on, and leaue no Ceremony out.
Sooth. Cæsar.
Cæs. Ha? Who calles?
Casc. Bid every noyse be still: peace yet againe.
Cæs. Who is it in the presse, that calles on me?
I heare a Tongue (shriller then all the Musicke
Cry, Cæsar: Speake. Cæsar is turn'd to heare.
Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.
Cæs. What man is that?
Br. A Sooth-sayer bids you beware the Ides of March
Cæs. Set him before me, let me see his face.
Cass. Fellow, come from the throng, look vpon Cæsar.
Cæs. What sayst thou to me now? Speak once againe.
Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.
Cæs. He is a Dreamer, let vs leaue him: Passe.
Sennet. Exeunt. Manet Brut & Cass.
Cass. Will you go see the order of the course?
Brut. Not I.
Cass. I pray you do.
Brut. I am not Gamesome: I do lacke some part
Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antony:
Let me not hinder Cassius your desires;
Ile leaue you.
Cass. Brutus, I do obserue you now of late:
I haue not from your eyes, that gentlenesse
And shew of Loue, as I was wont to haue:
You beare too stubborne, and too strange a hand
Ouer your Friend, that loues you.
Brut. Cassius,
Be not deceiu'd: If I haue veyl'd my looke,
I turne the trouble of my Countenance
Merrely vpon my selfe. Vexed I am
Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions onely proper to my selfe,
Which giue some soyle (perhaps) to my Behauiours:
But let not therefore my good Friends be greeu'd
(Among which number Cassius be you one)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Then that poore Brutus with himselfe at warre,
Forgets the shewes of Loue to other men.
Cass. Then Brutus, I haue much mistook your passion,
By means whereof, this Breast of mine hath buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy Cogitations.
Tell me good Brutus, Can you see your face?
Brutus. No Cassius:
For the eye sees not it selfe but by reflection,
By some other things.
Cassius. 'Tis iust,
And it is very much lamented Brutus,
That you haue no such Mirrors, as will turne
Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,
That you might see your shadow:
I haue heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortall Cæsar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning vnderneath this Ages yoake,
Haue wish'd, that Noble Brutus had his eyes.
Brut. Into what dangers, would you
Leade me Cassius?
That you would haue me seeke into my selfe,
For that which is not in me?
Cæs. Therefore good Brutus, be prepar'd to heare
And since you know, you cannot see your selfe
So well as by Reflection; I your Glasse,
Will modestly discouer to your selfe,
That of your selfe, which you yet know not of.
And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common Laughter, or did vse
To stale with ordinary Oathes my loue
To every new Protester: if you know,
That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,
And after scandall them: Or if you know,
That I professe my selfe in Banquetting
To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous.

Flourish, and Shout.

Brut. What means this Shouting?
I do feare, the People choose Cæsar
For their King.
Cass. I, do you feare it?
Then must I thinke you would not haue it so.
Brut. I would not Cassius, yet I loue him well:
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it, that you would impart to me?
If it be ought toward the generall good,
Set Honor in one eye, and Death i'th other,
And I will looke on both indifferently:
For let the Gods so speed me, as I loue
The name of Honor, more then I feare death.
Cass. I know that vertue to be in you Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward fauour.
Well, Honor is the subiect of my Story:
I cannot tell, what you and other men
Thinke of this life. But for my single selfe,
I had as liefe not be, as liue to be
In awe of such a Thing, as I my selfe.
I was borne free as Cæsar, so were you,
We both haue fed as well, and we can both
Endure the Winters cold, as well as hee.
For once, vpon a Raw and Gustie day,
The troubled Tyber, chafing with her Shores,
Cæsar saide to me, Dar'st thou Cassius now
Leape in with me into this angry Flood,
And swim to yonder Point? Vpon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bad him follow: so indeed he did.
The Torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty Sinewes, throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of Controuersie.
But ere we could arriue the Point propos'd,
Cæsar cride, Helpe me Cassius, or I sinke.
I (as Æneas, our great Ancestor,
Did from the Flames of Troy, vpon his shoulder
The old Anchyses beare) so, from the waues of Tyber
Did I the tyred Cæsar: And this Man,
Is now become a God, and Cassius is
A wretched Creature, and must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelesly but nod on him.
He had a Feauer when he was in Spaine,
And when the Fit was on him, I did marke
How he did shake: 'Tis true, this God did shake,
His Coward lippes did from their colour fly,
And that same Eye, whose bend doth awe the World,
Did loose his Lustre: I did heare him grone:
I, and that Tongue of his, that bad the Romans
Marke him, and write his Speeches in their Bookes, Alas, it cried, Giue me some drinke Titinius, itle: Ye Gods, it doth amaze me, ch a feeble temper should art of the Maiesticke world,

he Palme alone.
Shout. Flourish.
nother generall shoot?

er his huge legges, and peepe about

Cæsar: What should be in that Cæsar?

Enter Cæsar and his Traine.

he Games are done,
is returning.
t they paſſe by,
ke by the Sleeue,
ll (after his ſowre fashion) tell you proceeded worthy note to day.
will do ſo: but looke you Caſſius,
ſpot doth glow on Cæsars brow,
e reſt, looke like a chidden Traine;
s Cheeke is pale, and Caſca
th ſuch Ferret, and ſuch fiery eyes
e ſeene him in the Capitoll

Being croſſt in Conference, by ſome Senators.

Caſſi. Caſca will tell vs what the matter is.
Cæſ. Antonio.
Ant. Cæſar.
Cæſ. Let me haue men about me, that are fat,
Sleeke-headed men, and ſuch as ſleepe a-nights:
Yond Caſſius has a leane and hungry looke,
He thinkes too much: ſuch men are dangerous.
Ant. Feare him not Cæſar, he's not dangerous,
He is a Noble Roman, and well giuen.
Cæſ. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not:
Yet if my name were liable to feare,
I do not know the man I ſhould auoyd
So ſoone as that ſpare Caſſius. He reades much,
He is a great Obſeruer, and he lookes
Quite through the Deeds of men. He loues no Playes,
As thou doſt Antony; he heares no Muſicke;
Seldome he ſmiles, and ſmiles in ſuch a ſort
As if he mock'd himſelfe, and ſcorn'd his ſpirit
That could be mou'd to ſmile at any thing.
Such men as he, be neuer at hearts eaſe,
Whiles they behold a greater then themſelues,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Then what I feare: for alwayes I am Cæſar.
Come on my right hand, for this eare is deafe,
And tell me truely, what thou think'ſt of him. Sennet

Exeunt Cæsar and his Traine.

Cask. You pul'd me by the cloake, would you ſpeake with me?
Bru. I Caska, tell vs what hath chanc'd to day
That Cæſar lookes ſo ſad.
Cask. Why you were with him, were you not?
Bru. I ſhould not then aske Caska what had chanc'd
Cask. Why there was a Crowne offer'd him, & being offer'd him, he put it by with the backe of his hand thus, and then the people fell a ſhouting.
Bru. What was the ſecond noyſe for?
Cask. Why for that too.
Caſſi. They ſhouted thrice: what was the laſt cry for?
Cask. Why for that too.
Bru. Was the Crowne offer'd him thrice?
Cask. I marry was't, and hee put it by thrice, euery time gentler than other; and at euery putting by, mine honeſt Neighbors ſhowted.
Caſſi. Who offer'd him the Crowne?
Cask. Why Antony.
Bru. Tell vs the manner of it, gentle Caska.
Caska. I can as well bee hang'd as tell the manner of it: It was meere Foolerie, I did not marke it. I ſawe Marke Antony offer him a Crowne, yet 'twas not a Crowne neyther, 'twas one of theſe Coronets: and as I told you, hee put it by once: but for all that, to my thinking, he would faine haue had it. Then hee offered it to him againe: then hee put it by againe: but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; hee put it the third time by, and ſtill as hee refuſ'd it, the rabblement howted, and clapp'd their chopt hands, and threw vppe their ſweatie Night-cappes, and vttered ſuch a deale of ſtinking breath, becauſe Cæſar refus'd the Crowne, that it had (almoſt) chooked Cæſar; for hee ſwounded, and fell downe at it: And for mine owne part, I durſt not laugh, for feare of opening my Lippes, and receyuing the bad Ayre.

Caſſi. But ſoft I pray you: what, did Cæſar ſwound?

Cask. He fell downe in the Market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was ſpeechleſſe.

Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the Falling ſickneſſe.

Caſſi. No, Cæſar hath it not: but you, and I, And honeſt Caſka, we haue the Falling ſickneſſe.

Cask. I know not what you meane by that, but I am ſure Cæſar fell downe. If the tag-ragge people did not clap him, and hiſſe him, according as he pleas'd, and diſpleas'd them, as they vſe to doe the Players in the Theatre, I am no true man.

Brut. What ſaid he, when he came vnto himſelfe?

Cask. Marry, before he fell downe, when he perceiu'd the common Heard was glad he refus'd the Crowne, he pluckt me ope his Doublet, and offer'd them his Throat to cut: and I had beene a man of any Occupation, if I would not haue taken him at a word, I would I might goe to Hell among the Rogues, and ſo hee fell. When he came to himſelfe againe, hee ſaid, If hee had done, or ſaid any thing amiſſe, he deſir'd their Worſhips to thinke it was his infirmitie. Three or foure Wenches where I ſtood, cryed, Alaſſe good Soule, and forgaue him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Cæſar had ſtab'd their Mothers, they would haue done no leſſe.

Brut. And after that, he came thus ſad away.

Cask. I.

Caſſi. Did Cicero ſay any thing?

Cask. I, he ſpoke Greeke.

Caſſi. To what effect?

Cask. Nay, and I tell you that, Ile ne're looke you i'th' face againe. But thoſe that vnderſtood him, ſmil'd at one another, and ſhooke their heads: but for mine owne part, it was Greeke to me. I could tell you more newes too: Marrellus and Flauius, for pulling Scarffes off Cæſars Images, are put to ſilence. Fare you well. There was more Foolerie yet, if I could remember it.

Caſſi. Will you ſuppe with me to Night, Caska?

Cask. No, I am promis'd forth.

Caſſi. Will you Dine with me to morrow?

Cask. I, if I be aliue, and your minde hold, and your Dinner worth the eating.

Caſſi. Good, I will expect you.

Cask. Doe ſo: farewell both. Exit.

Brut. What a blunt fellow is this growne to be? He was quick Mettle, when he went to Schoole.

Caſſi. So is he now, in execution Of any bold, or Noble Enterprize, How-euer he puts on this tardie forme. This Rudeneſſe is a Sawce to his good Wit, Which giues men ſtomacke to diſgeſt his words With better Appetite.

Brut. And ſo it is: For this time I will leaue you: To morrow, if you pleaſe to ſpeake with me, I will come home to you: or if you will, Come home to me, and I will waite for you.

Caſſi. I will doe ſo: till then, thinke of the World. Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thou art Noble: yet I ſee, Thy Honorable Mettle may be wrought From that it is diſpos'd: therefore it is meet, That Noble mindes keepe euer with their likes: For who ſo firme, that cannot be ſeduc'd? Cæſar doth beare me hard, but he loues Brutus. If I were Brutus now, and he were Caſſius, He ſhould not humor me. I will this Night, In ſeuerall Hands, in at his Windowes throw, As if they came from ſeuerall Citizens, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his Name: wherein obſcurely Cæſars Ambition ſhall be glanced at. And after this, let Cæſar ſeate him ſure, For wee will ſhake him, or worſe dayes endure. Exit.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter Caska, and Cicero.

Cic. Good euen, Caska: brought you Cæſar home? Why are you breathleſſe, and why ſtare you ſo?

Cask. Are not you mou'd, when all the ſway of Earth Shakes, like a thing vnfirme? O Cicero, I haue ſeene Tempeſts, when the ſcolding Winds Haue riu'd the knottie Oakes, and I haue ſeene Th'ambitious Ocean ſwell, and rage, and foame, To be exalted with the threatning Clouds: But neuer till to Night, neuer till now, Did I goe through a Tempeſt dropping-fire. Either there is a Ciuill ſtriſe in Heauen, Or elſe the World, too ſawcie with the Gods, Incenſes them to ſend deſtruction.

Cic. Why, ſaw you any thing more wonderfull?

Cask. A common ſlaue, you know him well by ſight, Held vp his left Hand, which did flame and burne Like twentie Torches ioyn'd; and yet his Hand, Not ſenſible of fire, remain'd vnſcorch'd. Beſides, I ha'not ſince put vp my Sword, Againſt the Capitoll I met a Lyon, Who glaz'd vpon me, and went ſurly by, Without annoying me. And there were drawne Vpon a heape, a hundred gaſtly Women, Transformed with their feare, who ſwore, they ſaw Men; all in fire, walke vp and downe the ſtreetes. And yeſterday, the Bird of Night did ſit, Euen at Noone-day, vpon the Market place, Howling, and ſhrieking. When theſe Prodigies Doe ſo conioyntly meet, let not men ſay, Theſe are their Reaſons, they are Naturall: For I beleeue, they are portentous things Vnto the Clymate, that they point vpon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a ſtrange diſpoſed time But men may conſtrue things after their faſhion, Cleane from the purpoſe of the things themſelues. Comes Cæſar to the Capitoll to morrow?

Cask. He doth: for he did bid Antonie Send word to you, he would be there to morrow.

Cic. Good-night then, Caska. This diſturbed Skie is not to walke in.

Cask. Farewell Cicero. Exit Cicero.

Enter Caſſius.

Caſſi. Who's there?

Cask. A Romane.

Caſſi. Caska by your Voyce.

Cask. Your Eare is good. Caſſius, what Night is this?

Caſſi. A very pleaſing Night to honeſt men.

Cask. Who euer knew the Heauens menace ſo?

Caſſi. Thoſe that haue knowne the Earth ſo full of faults.

For

For my part, I haue walk'd about the ſtreets,
Submitting me vnto the perillous Night;
And thus vnbraced, Caske, as you ſee,
Haue bar'd my Boſome to the Thunder-ſtone:
And when the croſſe blew Lightning ſeem'd to open
The Breſt of Heauen, I did preſent my ſelfe
Euen in the ayme, and very flaſh of it. (uens
Cask. But wherefore did you ſo much tempt the Hea
It is the part of men, to feare and tremble,
When the moſt mightie Gods, by tokens ſend
Such dreadfull Heraulds, to aſtoniſh vs.
Caſſi. You are dull, Caske:
And thoſe ſparkes of Life, that ſhould be in a Roman,
You doe want, or elſe you vſe not.
You looke pale, and gaze, and put on feare,
And caſt your ſelfe in wonder,
To ſee the ſtrange impatience of the Heauens:
But if you would conſider the true cauſe,
Why all theſe Fires, why all theſe gliding Ghoſts,
Why Birds and Beaſts, from qualitie and kinde,
Why Old men, Fooles, and Children calculate,
Why all theſe things change from their Ordinance,
Their Natures, and pre-formed Faculties,
To monſtrous qualitie; why you ſhall finde,
That Heauen hath infus'd them with theſe Spirits,
To make them Inſtruments of feare, and warning,
Vnto ſome monſtrous State.
Now could I (Caske) name to thee a man,
Moſt like this dreadfull Night,
That Thunders, Lightens, opens Graues, and roares,
As doth the Lyon in the Capitoll:
A man no mightier then thy ſelfe, or me,
In perſonall action; yet prodigious growne,
And fearefull, as theſe ſtrange eruptions are.
Cask. 'Tis Cæſar that you meane:
Is it not, Caſſius?
Caſſi. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Haue Thewes, and Limbes, like to their Anceſtors;
But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead,
And we are gouern'd with our Mothers ſpirits,
Our yeoke, and ſufferance, ſhew vs Womaniſh.
Cask. Indeed, they ſay, the Senators to morrow
Meane to eſtabliſh Cæſar as a King:
And he ſhall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,
In euery place, ſaue here in Italy.
Caſſi. I know where I will weare this Dagger then;
Caſſius from Bondage will deliuer Caſſius:
Therein, ye Gods, you make the weake moſt ſtrong;
Therein, ye Gods, you Tyrants doe deſeat.
Nor Stonie Towre, nor Walls of beaten Braſſe,
Nor ayre leſſe Dungeon, nor ſtrong Linkes of Iron,
Can be retentiue to the ſtrength of ſpirit:
But Life being wearie of theſe worldly Barres,
Neuer lacks power to diſmiſſe it ſelfe.
If I know this, know all the World beſides,
That part of Tyrannie that I doe beare,
I can ſhake off at pleaſure. Thunder ſtill.
Cask. So can I:
So euery Bond-man in his owne hand beares
The power to cancell his Captiuitie.
Caſſi. And why ſhould Cæſar be a Tyrant then?
Poore man, I know he would not be a Wolfe,
But that he ſees the Romans are but Sheepe:
He were no Lyon, were not Romans Hindes.
Thoſe that with haſte will make a mightie fire,
Begun it with weake Strawes. What traſh is Rome?
What Rubbiſh, and what Offall? when it ſerues
For the baſe matter, to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæſar. But oh Griefe,
Where haſt thou led me? I (perhaps) ſpeake this Before a willing Bond-man: then I know
My anſwere muſt be made. But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.
Cask. You ſpeake to Caske, and to ſuch a man,
That is no fleering Tell-tale. Hold, my Hand:
Be factious for redreſſe of all theſe Griefes,
And I will ſet this foot of mine as farre,
As who goes fartheſt.
Caſſi. There's a Bargaine made.
Now know you, Caske, I haue mou'd already
Some certaine of the Nobleſt minded Romans
To vnder-goe, with me, an Enterpriſe,
Of Honorable dangerous conſequence;
And I doe know by this, they ſtay for me
In Pompeyes Porch: for now this fearefull Night,
There is no ſtirre, or walking in the ſtreetes;
And the Complexion of the Element
In Faſours, like the Worke we haue in hand,
Moſt bloodie, fiery, and moſt terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Caske. Stand cloſe a while, for heere comes one in haſte.
Caſſi. 'Tis Cinna, I doe know him by his Gate,
He is a friend. Cinna, where haſte you ſo?
Cinna. To finde out you: Who's that, Metellus Cymber?
Caſſi. No, it is Caske, one incorporate
To our Attempts. Am I not ſtay'd for, Cinna?
Cinna. I am glad on't.
What a fearefull Night is this?
There's two or three of vs haue ſeene ſtrange ſights.
Caſſi. Am I not ſtay'd for? tell me.
Cinna. Yes, you are. O Caſſius,
If you could but winne the Noble Brutus
To our party——
Caſſi. Be you content. Good Cinna, take this Paper,
And looke you lay it in the Prætors Chayre,
Where Brutus may but finde it: and throw this
In at his Window: ſet this vp with Waxe
Vpon old Brutus Statue: all this done,
Repaire to Pompeyes Porch, where you ſhall finde vs.
Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?
Cinna. All, but Metellus Cymber, and hee's gone
To ſeeke you at your houſe. Well, I will hie,
And ſo beſtow theſe Papers as you bad me.
Caſſi. That done, repaire to Pompeyes Theater.
Exit Cinna.
Come Caske, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his houſe: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire Vpon the next encounter, yeelds him ours.
Cask. O, he ſits high in all the Peoples hearts:
And that which would appeare Offence in vs,
His Countenance, like richeſt Alchymie,
Will change to Vertue, and to Worthineſſe.
Caſſi. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You haue right well conceited: let vs goe,
For it is after Mid-night, and ere day
We will awake him, and be ſure of him.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Brut. What Lucius, hoe?
I cannot, by the progreſſe of the Starres,
Giue gueſſe how neere to day. Lucius, I ſay?
I would it were my fault to ſleepe ſo ſoundly.
When Lucius, when? awake, I ſay: what Lucius?

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you my Lord?

Brut. Get me a Taper in my Study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my Lord. Exit

Brut. It muſt be by his death: and for my part,
I know no perſonall cauſe, to ſpurne at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the queſtion?
It is the bright day, that brings forth the Adder,
And that craues warie walking: Crowne him that,
And then I graunt we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may doe danger with.
Th'abuſe of Greatneſſe, is, when it diſ-ioynes
Remorſe from Power: And to ſpeake truth of Cæſar,
I haue not knowne, when his Affections ſway'd
More then his Reaſon. But 'tis a common proofe,
That Lowlyneſſe is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber vpward turnes his Face:
But when he once attaines the vpmoſt Round,
He then vnto the Ladder turnes his Backe,
Lookes in the Clouds, ſcorning the baſe degrees
By which he did aſcend: ſo Cæſar may;
Then leaſt he may, preuent. And ſince the Quarrell
Will beare no colour, for the thing he is,
Faſhion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would runne to theſe, and theſe extremities:
And therefore thinke him as a Serpents egge,
Which hatch'd, would as his kinde grow miſchieuous;
And kill him in the ſhell.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. The Taper burneth in your Cloſet, Sir:
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus ſeal'd vp, and I am ſure
It did not lye there when I went to Bed.

Gives him the Letter

Brut. Get you to Bed againe, it is not day:
Is not to morrow (Boy) the firſt of March?

Luc. I know not, Sir.

Brut. Looke in the Calender, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, Sir. Exit.

Brut. The exhalations, whizzing in the ayre,
Giue ſo much light, that I may reade by them.

Opens the Letter, and reades.

Brutus thou ſleep'ſt: awake, and ſee thy ſelfe:
Shall Rome, &c. ſpeake, ſtrike, redreſſe
Brutus, thou ſleep'ſt: awake.
Such inſtigations haue beene often dropt,
Where I haue tooke them vp:
Shall Rome, &c. Thus muſt I piece it out:
Shall Rome ſtand vnder one mans awe? What Rome?
My Anceſtors did from the ſtreetes of Rome
The Tarquin driue, when he was call'd a King.
Speake, ſtrike, redreſſe. Am I entreated
To ſpeake, and ſtrike? O Rome, I make thee promiſe,
If the redreſſe will follow, thou receiu'ſt
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is waſted fifteene dayes.

Knocke within.

Brut. 'Tis good. Go to the Gate, ſome body knocke:
Since Caſſius firſt did whet me againſt Cæſar,
I haue not ſlept.
Betweene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the firſt motion, all the Interim is Like a Phantaſma, or a hideous Dreame:
The Genius, and the mortall Inſtruments
Are then in councell; and the ſtate of a man,
Like to a little Kingdome, ſuffers then
The nature of an Inſurrection.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your Brother Caſſius at the Doore,
Who doth deſire to ſee you.

Brut. Is he alone?

Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him.

Brut. Doe you know them?

Luc. No, Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloakes,
That by no meanes I may diſcouer them,
By any marke of fauour.

Brut. Let 'em enter:
They are the Faction. O Conſpiracie,
Sham'ſt thou to ſhew thy dang'rous Brow by Night,
When euills are moſt free? O then, by day
Where wilt thou finde a Cauerne darke enough,
To maske thy monſtrous Viſage? Seeke none Conſpiracie, Hide it in Smiles, and Affabilitie:
For if thou path thy native ſemblance on,
Not Erebus it ſelfe were dimme enough,
To hide thee from prieuention.

Enter the Conſpirators, Caſſius, Caska, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Caſ. I thinke we are too bold vpon your Reſt:
Good morrow Brutus, doe we trouble you?

Brut. I haue beene vp this houre, awake all Night:
Know I theſe men, that come along with you?

Caſſ. Yes, euery man of them; and no man here
But honors you: and euery one doth wiſh,
You had but that opinion of your ſelfe,
Which euery Noble Roman beares of you.
This is Trebonius.

Brut. He is welcome hither.

Caſſ. This, Decius Brutus.

Brut. He is welcome too.

Caſſ. This, Caska; this, Cinna; and this, Metellus Cymber.

Brut. They are all welcome.
What watchfull Cares doe interpoſe themſelues
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?

Caſſ. Shall I entreat a word? They whiſper

Decius. Here lyes the Eaſt: doth not the Day breake heere?

Caſk. No.

Cin. O pardon, Sir, it doth; and yon grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Meſſengers of Day.

Caſk. You ſhall confeſſe, that you are both deceiu'd:
Heere, as I point my Sword, the Sunne ariſes,
Which is a great way growing on the South,

ed for it. And gentle Friends,
Let's kill him Boldly, but not Wrathfully:
Let's carue him, as a Diſh fit for the Gods,
Not hew him as a Carkaſſe fit for Hounds:
And let our Hearts, as ſubtle Maſters do,
Stirre vp their Seruants to an act of Rage,
And after ſeeme to chide 'em. This ſhall make
Our purpoſe Neceſſary, and not Enuious.
Which ſo appearing to the common eyes,
We ſhall be call'd Purgers, not Murderers.
And for Marke Antony, thinke not of him:
For he can do no more then Cæſars Arme,
When Cæſars head is off.

Caſ. Yet I feare him,
For in the ingrafted loue he beares to Cæſar.

Bru. Alas, good Caſſius, do not thinke of him:
If he loue Cæſar, all that he can do
Is to himſelfe, take thought, and dye for Cæſar.
And that were much he ſhould: for he is giuen
To ſports, to wildeneſſe, and much company.

Treb. There is no feare in him; let him not dye,
For he will liue, and laugh at this hereafter.

Clocke ſtrikes.

Bru. Peace, count the Clocke.

Caſ. The Clocke hath ſtricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Caſſ But it is doubtfull yet,
Whether Cæſar will come forth to day, or no:
For he is Superſtitious growne of late,
Quite from the maine Opinion he held once,
Of Fantaſie, of Dreames, and Ceremonies:
It may be, theſe apparant Prodigies,
The vnaccuſtom'd Terror of this night,
And the perſwaſion of his Augurers,
May hold him from the Capitoll to day.

Decius. Neuer feare that: If he be ſo reſolu'd,
I can re-ſway him: For he loues to heare,
That Vnicornes may be betray'd with Trees,
And Beares with Glaſſes, Elephants with Holes,
Lyons with Toyles, and men with Flatterers.
But, when I tell him, he hates Flatterers,
He ſayes, he does; being then moſt flattered.
Let me worke:
For I can giue his humour the true bent;
And I will bring him to the Capitoll.

Caſ. Nay, we will all of vs, be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eight houre, is that the vttermoſt?

Cin. Be that the vttermoſt, and faile not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth beare Cæſar hard,
Who rated him for ſpeaking well of Pompey:
I wonder none of you haue thought of him.

Bru. Now good Metellus go along by him:
He loues me well, and I haue giuen him Reaſons,
Send him but hither, and Ile faſhion him.

Caſ. The morning comes vpon's:
We'l leaue you Brutus,
And friends diſperſe your ſelues; but all remember
What you haue ſaid, and ſhew your ſelues true Romans.

Bru. Good Gentlemen, looke freſh and merrily,
Let not our lookes put on our purpoſes,
But beare it as our Roman Actors do,
With vntyr'd Spirits, and formall Conſtancie,
And ſo good morrow to you euery one. Exeunt.

Manet Brutus.

Boy: Lucius: Faſt aſleepe? It is no matter,
Enioy the hony-heauy-Dew of Slumber:
Thou haſt no Figures, nor no Fantaſies,

Which

Which busie care drawes, in the braines of men;
Therefore thou sleep'st so found.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my Lord.

Bru. Portia: What meane you? wherfore rise you now?
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weake condition, to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. Y'haue vngently Brutus
Stole from my bed: and yesternight at Supper
You sodainly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your armes a-crosse:
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd vpon me, with vngentle lookes,
I vrg'd you further, then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stampt with your foote:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not,
But with an angry wafter of your hand
Gaue signe for me to leaue you: So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seem'd too much inkindled; and withall,
Hoping it was but an effect of Humor,
Which sometime hath his houre with every man.
It will not let you eate, nor talke, nor sleepe;
And could it worke so much vpon your shape,
As it hath much preuayl'd on your Condition,
I should not know you Brutus. Deare my Lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of greefe.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the meanes to come by it.

Bru. Why so I do: good Portia go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sicke? And is it Physicall
To walke vnbraced, and suckе vp the humours
Of the danke Morning? What, is Brutus sicke?
And will he steale out of his wholsome bed
To dare the vile contagion of the Night?
And tempt the Rhewmy, and vnpurged Ayre,
To adde vnto his sicknesse? No my Brutus,
You haue some sicke Offence within your minde,
Which by the Right and Vertue of my place
I ought to know of: And vpon my knees,
I charme you, by my once commended Beauty,
By all your vowes of Loue, and that great Vow
Which did incorporate and make vs one,
That you vnfold to me, your selfe; your halfe
Why you are heauy: and what men to night
Haue had resort to you: for heere haue beene
Some sixe or seuen, who did hide their faces
Euen from darknesse.

Bru. Kneele not gentle Portia.

Por. I should not needе, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the Bond of Marriage, tell me Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no Secrets
That appertaine to you? Am I your Selfe,
But as it were in sort, or limitation?
To keepe with you at Meales, comfort your Bed,
And talke to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the Suburbs
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus Harlot, not his Wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable Wife,
As deere to me, as are the ruddy droppes
That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.
I grauut I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman that Lord Brutus tooke to Wife:
I grauut I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman well reputed: Cato's Daughter.
Thinke you, I am no stronger then my Sex
Being so Father'd, and so Husbanded?
Tell me your Counsels, I will not disclose 'em:
I haue made strong proofe of my Constancie,
Giuing my selfe a voluntary wound
Heere, in the Thigh: Can I beare that with patience,
And not my Husbands Secrets?

Bru. O ye Gods!
Render me worthy of this Noble Wife. Knock.
Harke, harke, one knockes: Portia go in a while,
And by and by thy bosome shall partake
The secrets of my Heart.
All my engagements, I will construe to thee,
All the Charractery of my sad browes:
Leaue me with haste. Exit Portia.

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knockes.

Luc. Heere is a sicke man that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.
Boy, stand aside. Caius Ligarius, how?

Cai. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Bru. O what a time haue you chose out braue Caius
To weare a Kerchiefe? Would you were not sicke.

Cai. I am not sicke, if Brutus haue in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of Honor.

Bru. Such an exploit haue I in hand Ligarius,
Had you a healthfull eare to heare of it.

Cai. By all the Gods that Romans bow before,
I heere discard my sicknesse. Soule of Rome,
Braue Sonne, deriu'd from Honourable Loines,
Thou like an Exorcist, hast coniur'd vp
My mortified Spirit. Now bid me runne,
And I will striue with things impossible,
Yea get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A peece of worke,
That will make sicke men whole.

Cai. But are not some whole, that we must make sicke?

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall vnfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it must be done.

Cai. Set on your foote,
And with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth
That Brutus leads me on. Thunder.

Bru. Follow me then. Exeunt

Thunder & Lightning.
Enter Iulius Cæsar in his Night-gowne.

Cæsar. Nor Heauen, nor Earth,
Haue beene at peace to night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia, in her Sleepe cryed out, Helpe, ho: They murther Cæsar. Who's within?

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord.

Cæs. Go bid the Priests do present Sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of Successe.

Ser. I will my Lord. Exit

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What mean you Cæsar? Think you to walke forth?
You shall not stirre out of your house to day.

Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: the things that threatned me,
Ne're look'd but on my backe: When they shall see
The face of Cæsar, they are vanished.

Cal.

r. I neuer stood on Ceremonies, right me: There is one within,
gs that we haue heard and seene.
horrid sights seene by the Watch.
sh whelped in the streets,
ne yawn'd, and yeelded vp their dead;
rious fights vpon the Clouds
Squadrons, and right formes of Warre
l blood vpon the Capitoll:
treil hurtled in the Ayre:
h, and dying men did grone,
d shrieke and squeale about the streets.
things are beyond all vse.
them,
yan be auoyded
ripos'd by the mighty Gods?
go forth: for these Predictions
d in generall, as to Cæsar.
n Beggers dye, there are no Comets seen,
themselues blaze forth the death of Princes
rds dye many times before their deaths, ier taste of death but once:
aders that I yet haue heard,
most strange that men should feare, ith, a necessary end
hen it will come.
Enter a Seruant.
Augurers?
would not haue you to stirre forth to day.
strailes of an Offering forth,
finde a heart within the beast.
ods do this in shame of Cowardice:
e a Beast without a heart
ie at home to day for feare:
not; Danger knowes full well more dangerous then he.
Lyons litter'd in one day,
and more terrible,
ll go forth.
my Lord,
e is consum'd in confidence:
to day: Call it my feare,
ou in the house, and not your owne
Mark Antony to the Schare house,
y, you are not well to day:
ip knee, prouaile in this.
Antony shall say I am not well,
mor, I will stay at home.
Enter Decius.
Brutus, he shall tell them so.
r, all haile: Good morrow worthy Cæsar,
h you to the Senate house.
ou are come in very happy time,
peering to the Senators,
that I will not come to day.
: and that I dare not, falsifie:
e to day, tell them so Decius.
e is sicke.
Cæsar send a Lye?
quest stretcht mine Arme so farre,
tell Gray-beards the truth:
them, Cæsar will not come.
I mighty Cæsar let me know some cause,
e at where I tell them so.
saue it on my Will, I will not come,
h to satisfie the Senate.

But for your priuate satisfaction,
Because I loue you, I will let you know,
Calphurnia heere my wife, stayes me at home:
She dreampt to night she saw my Statue,
Which like a Fountaine, with an hundred spouts
Did run pure blood: and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, & did bathe their hands in it:
And these she apply, for warnings and portents,
And euils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to day.
Dec. This Dreame is all amisse interpreted,
It was a vision, faire and fortunate:
Your Statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies, that from you great Rome shall sucke
Reuiuing blood, and that great men shall presse
For Tinctures, Staines, Reliques, and Cognisance.
This by Calphurnia's Dreame is signified.
Cæs. And this way haue you well expounded it.
Dec. I haue, when you haue heard what I can say:
And know it now, the Senate haue concluded
To giue this day, a Crowne to mighty Cæsar.
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their mindes may change. Besides, it were a mocke
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
Breake vp the Senate, till another time:
When Cæsars wife shall meete with better Dreames.
If Cæsar hide himselfe, shall they not whisper
Loe Cæsar is affraid?
Pardon me Cæsar for my deere deere loue
To your proceeding, bids me tell you this:
And reason to my loue is liable.
Cæs. How foolish do your feares seeme now Calphurnia?
I am ashamed I did yeeld to them.
Giue me my Robe, for I will go.

Enter Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, Cynna, and Publius.

And looke where Publius is come to fetch me
Pub. Good morrow Cæsar.
Cæs. Welcome Publius.
What Brutus, are you stir'd so early too?
Good morrow Casca: Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne're so much your enemy,
As that same Ague which hath made you leane
What is't a Clocke?
Bru. Cæsar, 'tis strucken eight.
Cæs. I thanke you for your paines and curtesie.
Enter Antony.
See, Antony that Reuels long a-nights
Is not withstanding vp. Good morrow Antony.
Ant. So to most Noble Cæsar
Cæs. Bid them prepare within:
I am too blame to be thus waited for.
Now Cynna, now Metellus: what Trebonius,
I haue an houres talke in store for you:
Remember that you call on me to day:
Be neere me, that I may remember you.
Treb. Cæsar I will: and so neere will I be,
That your best Friends shall wish I had beene further.
Cæs. Good Friends go in, and taste some wine with me
And we (like Friends) will straight way go together.
Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus earnes to thinke vpon.
Exeunt
Enter Artemidorus.
Cæsar, beware of Brutus, take heede of Cassius; come not neere

more Casks, have an eye to Cynna, trust not Trebonius, marke well Metellius Cymber, Decius Brutus loves thee not: Thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one minde in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar: If thou beest not Immortall, looke about you: Security gives way to Conspiracie. The mighty Gods defend thee.

Thy Lover, Artemidorus.

Heere will I stand, till Cæsar passe along,
And as a Suitor will I give him this:
My heart laments, that Vertue cannot liue
Out of the teeth of Emulation.
If thou reade this, O Cæsar, thou mayest liue
I fnot, the Fates with Traitors do contriue. Exit.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-house,
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why doest thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand Madam.

Por. I would haue had thee there and heere agen
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there:
O Constancie, be strong vpon my side,
Set a huge Mountaine 'tweene my Heart and Tongue.
I haue a mans minde, but a womans might:
How hard it is for women to keepe counsell.
Art thou heere yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitoll, and nothing else?
And so returne to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Cæsar doth, what Suitors presse to him.
Hearke Boy, what noyse is that?

Luc. I heare none Madam.

Por Prythee listen well:
I heard a bussling Rumor like a Fray,
And the winde brings it from the Capitoll.

Luc. Sooth Madam, I heare nothing.

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither Fellow, which way hast thou bin?

Sooth. At mine owne house, good Lady.

Por. What is't a clocke?

Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitoll?

Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my stand,
To see him passe on to the Capitoll.

Por. Thou hast some suite to Cæsar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I haue Lady, if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar, as to heare me:
I shall beseech him to befriend himselfe.

Por. Why know'st thou any harme's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be,
Much that I feare may chance:
Good morrow to you: heere the street is narrow:
The throng that followes Cæsar at the heeles,
Of Senators, of Prætors, common Suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man (almost) to death.
Ile get me to a place more voyd, and there
Speake to great Cæsar as he comes along. Exit

Por. I must go in:
Aye me, How weake a thing
The heart of woman is? O Brutus,
The Heavens speede thee in thine enterprize.
Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a suite
That Cæsar will not grant. O, I grow faint:
Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,
Say I am merry; Come to me againe
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. Exeunt

Actus Tertius.

Flourish.

Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cynna, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Publius and the Soothsayer.

Cæs. The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. I Cæsar, but not gone.

Art. Haile Cæsar: Read this Scedule.

Decl. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read
(At your best leysure) this his humble suite.

Art. O Cæsar, reade mine first: for mine's a suite
That touches Cæsar neerer. Read it great Cæsar.

Cæs. What touches vs our selfe, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not Cæsar, read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirra, giue place.

Cass. What, vrge you your Petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitoll.

Popil. I wish your enterprize to day may thriue.

Cass. What enterprize Popilius?

Popil. Fare you well.

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cass. He wisht to day our enterprize might thriue.
I feare our purpose is discouered.

Bru. Looke how he makes to Cæsar: marke him.

Cass. Casca, be sodaine, for we feare prevention.
Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Cæsar never shall turne backe,
For I will slay my selfe.

Bru. Cassius be constant:
Popilius Lena speakes not of our purposes,
For looke he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cass. Trebonius knowes his time: for look you Brutus,
He drawes Marke Antony out of the way.

Decl. Where is Metellius Cymber, let him go,
And presently prefer his suite to Cæsar.

Bru. He is addrest: presse neere, and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that reares your hand.

Cæs. Are we all ready? What is now amisse,
That Cæsar and his Senate must redresse?

Metel. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar
Metellius Cymber throwes before thy Seate
An humble heart.

Cæs. I must prevent thee Cymber:
These couchings and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turne pre-Ordinance, and first Decree
Into the lane of Children. Be not fond.
To think that Cæsar beares such Rebell blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth Fooles, I meane sweet words,
Low crooked-curtsies, and base Spaniell fawning.
Thy Brother by decree is banished:
If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawne for him,
I spurne thee like a Curre out of my way.
Know, Cæsar doth not wrong, nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.

Metel. Is there no voyce more worthy than my owne

To ſound more ſweetly in great Cæſars eare,
For the repealing of my baniſh'd Brother?
Bru. I kiſſe thy hand, but not in flattery Cæſar:
Deſiring thee, that Publius Cymber may
Haue an immediate freedome of repeale.
Cæſ. What Brutus?
Caſſi. Pardon Cæſar: Cæſar pardon:
As lowe as to thy foote doth Caſſius fall,
To begge infranchiſement for Publius Cymber.
Cæſ. I could be well mou'd, if I were as you,
If I could pray to moue, Prayers would moue me:
But I am conſtant as the Northerne Starre,
Of whoſe true fixt, and reſting quality,
There is no fellow in the Firmament.
The Skies are painted with vnnumbred ſparkes,
They are all Fire, and euery one doth ſhine:
But, there's but one in all doth hold his place.
So, in the World; 'Tis furniſh'd well with Men,
And Men are Fleſh and Blood, and apprehenſiue;
Yet in the number, I do know but One
That vnaſſayleable holds on his Ranke,
Vnſhak'd of Motion: and that I am he,
Let me a little ſhew it, euen in this:
That I was conſtant Cymber ſhould be baniſh'd,
And conſtant do remaine to keepe him ſo.
Cinna. O Cæſar.
Cæſ. Hence: Wilt thou lift vp Olympus?
Decius. Great Cæſar.
Cæſ. Doth not Brutus bootleſſe kneele?
Caſk. Speake hands for me.
They ſtab Cæſar.
Cæſ. Et Tu Brute?——Then fall Cæſar. Dyes
Cin. Liberty, Freedome; Tyranny is dead,
Run hence, proclaime, cry it about the Streets.
Caſſi. Some to the common Pulpits, and cry out Liberty, Freedome, and Enfranchiſement.
Bru. People and Senators, be not affrighted:
Fly not, ſtand ſtill: Ambitions debt is paid.
Caſk. Go to the Pulpit Brutus.
Dec. And Caſſius too.
Bru. Where's Publius?
Cin. Heere, quite confounded with this mutiny.
Met. Stand faſt together, leaſt ſome Friend of Cæſars
Should chance——
Bru. Talke not of ſtanding. Publius good cheere,
There is no harme intended to your perſon,
Nor to no Roman elſe: ſo tell them Publius.
Caſſi. And leaue vs Publius, leaſt that the people
Ruſhing on vs, ſhould do your Age ſome miſchiefe.
Bru. Do ſo, and let no man abide this deede,
But we the Doers.
Enter Trebonius.
Caſſi. Where is Antony?
Treb. Fled to his Houſe amaz'd:
Men, Wiues, and Children, ſtare, cry out, and run,
As it were Doomeſday.
Bru. Fates, we will know your pleaſures:
That we ſhall dye we know, 'tis but the time
And drawing dayes out, that men ſtand vpon.
Caſk. Why he that cuts off twenty yeares of life,
Cuts off ſo many yeares of fearing death.
Bru. Grant that, and then is Death a Benefit:
So are we Cæſars Friends, that haue abrid'g'd
His time of fearing death. Stoope Romans, ſtoope,
And let vs bathe our hands in Cæſars blood
Vp to the Elbowes, and beſmeare our Swords:
Then walke we forth, euen to the Market place,
And wauing our red Weapons o're our heads,
Let's all cry Peace, Freedome, and Liberty.
Caſſi. Stoop then, and waſh. How many Ages hence
Shall this our lofty Scene be acted ouer,
In States vnborne, and Accents yet vnknowne?
Bru. How many times ſhall Cæſar bleed in ſport,
That now on Pompeyes Baſis lye along,
No worthier then the duſt?
Caſſi. So oft as that ſhall be,
So often ſhall the knot of vs be call'd,
The Men that gaue their Country liberty.
Dec. What, ſhall we forth?
Caſſi. I, euery man away.
Brutus ſhall leade, and we will grace his heeles
With the moſt boldeſt, and beſt hearts of Rome.
Enter a Seruant.
Bru. Soft, who comes heere? A friend of Antonies.
Ser. Thus Brutus did my Maſter bid me kneele;
Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall downe,
And being proſtrate, thus he bad me ſay:
Brutus is Noble, Wiſe, Valiant, and Honeſt;
Cæſar was Mighty, Bold, Royall, and Louing:
Say, I loue Brutus, and I honour him;
Say, I fear'd Cæſar, honour'd him, and lou'd him.
If Brutus will vouchſafe, that Antony
May ſafely come to him, and be reſolu'd
How Cæſar hath deſeru'd to lye in death,
Mark Antony, ſhall not loue Cæſar dead
So well as Brutus liuing; but will follow
The Fortunes and Affayres of Noble Brutus,
Thorough the hazards of this vntrod State,
With all true Faith. So ſayes my Maſter Antony.
Bru. Thy Maſter is a Wiſe and Valiant Romane,
I neuer thought him worſe:
Tell him, ſo pleaſe him come vnto this place
He ſhall be ſatisfied: and by my Honor
Depart vntouch'd.
Ser. Ile fetch him preſently. Exit Seruant.
Bru. I know that we ſhall haue him well to Friend.
Caſſi. I wiſh we may: But yet haue I a minde
That feares him much: and my miſgiuing ſtill
Falles ſhrewdly to the purpoſe.
Enter Antony.
Bru. But heere comes Antony:
Welcome Mark Antony.
Ant. O mighty Cæſar! Doſt thou lye ſo lowe?
Are all thy Conqueſts, Glories, Triumphes, Spoiles, Shrunke to this little Meaſure? Fare thee well.
I know not Gentlemen what you intend,
Who elſe muſt be let blood, who elſe is ranke:
If I my ſelfe, there is no houre ſo fit
As Cæſars deaths houre; nor no Inſtrument
Of halfe that worth, as thoſe your Swords; made rich
With the moſt Noble blood of all this World.
I do beſeech ye, if you beare me hard,
Now, whil'ſt your purpled hands do reeke and ſmoake,
Fulfill your pleaſure. Liue a thouſand yeeres,
I ſhall not finde my ſelfe ſo apt to dye.
No place will pleaſe me ſo, no meane of death,
As heere by Cæſar, and by you cut off,
The Choice and Maſter Spirits of this Age.
Bru. O Antony! Begge not your death of vs:
Though now we muſt appeare bloody and cruell,
As by our hands, and this our preſent Acte
You ſee we do: Yet ſee you but our hands,

And

And that, the bleeding businesse they haue done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pittifull;
And pitty to the generall wrong of Rome,
As fire driues out fire, so pitty, pitty
Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To you, our Swords haue leaden points Marke Antony:
Our Armes in strength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receiue you in,
With all kinde loue, good thoughts, and reuerence.

Cass. Your voyce shall be as strong as any mans,
In the disposing of new Dignities

Bru. Onely be patient, till we haue appeas'd
The Multitude, beside themselues with feare,
And then, we will deliuer you the cause,
Why I, that did loue Cæsar when I strooke him,
Haue thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your Wisedome.
Let euery man render me his bloody hand.
First Marcus Brutus will I shake with you;
Next Caius Cassius do I take your hand;
Now Decius Brutus yours; now yours Metellus,
Yours Cinna; and my valiant Casca yours;
Though last, not least in loue, yours good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all: Alas, what shall I say,
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad wayes you must conceit me.
Either a Coward, or a Flatterer.
That I did loue thee Cæsar O 'tis true:
If then thy Spirit looke vpon vs how,
Shall it not greeue thee dearer then thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingres of thy Foes?
Most Noble, in the presence of thy Coarse,
Had I as many eyes, as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they streame forth thy blood,
It would become me better, then to close
In tearmes of Friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me Iulius, heere was't thou bay'd braue Hart,
Heere did'st thou fall, and heere thy Hunters stand
Sign'd in thy Spoyle, and Crimson'd in thy Lethee.
O World! thou wast the Forrest to this Hart,
And this indeed, O World, the Hart of thee.
How like a Deere, strooken by many Princes,
Dost thou heere lye?

Cass. Marke Antony.

Ant. Pardon me Caius Cassius.
The Enemies of Cæsar, shall say this:
Then, in a Friend, it is cold Modestie.

Cass. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so,
But what compact meane you to haue with vs?
Will you be prick'd in number of our Friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I tooke your hands, but was indeed
Sway'd from the point, by looking downe on Cæsar.
Friends am I with you all, and loue you all,
Vpon this hope, that you shall giue me Reasons,
Why, and wherein, Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a sauage Spectacle:
Our Reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you Antony, the Sonne of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seeke,
And am moreouer suitor, that I may
Produce his body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.

Bru. You shall Marke Antony.

Cass. Brutus, a word with you:
You know not what you do; Do not consent
That Antony speake in his Funerall.
Know you how much the people may be mou'd
By that which he will vtter.

Bru. By your pardon:
I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Cæsars death.
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speakes by leaue, and by permission:
And that we are contented Cæsar shall
Haue all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies.
It shall aduantage more, then do vs wrong.

Cass. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Marke Antony, heere take you Cæsars body:
You shall not in your Funerall speech blame vs,
But speake all good you can deuise of Cæsar,
And say you doo't by our permission:
Else shall you not haue any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so:
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow vs. Exeunt.

Manet Antony.

O pardon me, thou bleeding peece of Earth:
That I am meeke and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest man
That euer liued in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds, now do I Prophesie,
(Which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby lips,
To begge the voyce and vtterance of my Tongue)
A Curse shall light vpon the limbes of men;
Domestick Fury, and fierce Ciuill strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in vse,
And dreadfull Obiects so familiar,
That Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their Infants quartered with the hands of Warre.
All pitty choak'd with custome of fell deeds,
And Cæsars Spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confines, with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry Hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede, shall smell aboue the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Burial.

Enter Octauio's Seruant.

You serue Octauius Cæsar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.

Ser. He did receiue his Letters, and is coming:
And bid me say to you by word of mouth——
O Cæsar!

Ant. Thy heart is bigge: get thee apart and weepe.
Passion I see is catching from mine eyes,
Seeing those Beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Begun to water. Is thy Master comming?

Ser. He lies to night within seuen Leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post backe with speede,
And tell him what hath chanc'd:
Heere is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octauius yet,
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet stay a while.

The

Thou ſhalt not backe, till I haue borne this courſe
Into the Market place: There ſhall I try
In my Oration, how the People take
The cruell iſſue of theſe bloody men,
According to the which, thou ſhalt diſcourſe
To yong Octauius, of the ſtate of things.
Lend me your hand. Exeunt

Enter Brutus and goes into the Pulpit, and Caſſius, with the Plebeians.

Ple. We will be ſatisfied: let vs be ſatisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and giue me Audience friends.
Caſſius go you into the other ſtreete,
And part the Numbers.
Thoſe that will heare me ſpeake, let 'em ſtay heere:
Thoſe that will follow Caſſius, go with him,
And publike Reaſons ſhall be rendred
Of Cæſars death.

1. Ple. I will heare Brutus ſpeake.

2. I will heare Caſſius, and compare their Reaſons,
When ſeuerally we heare them rendred.

3. The Noble Brutus is aſcended: Silence.

Bru. Be patient till the laſt.
Romans, Country-men, and Louers, heare me for my cauſe, and be ſilent, that you may heare. Beleeue me for mine Honor, and haue reſpect to mine Honor, that you may beleeue. Cenſure me in your Wiſedom, and awake your Senſes, that you may the better Iudge. If there be any in this Aſſembly, any deere Friend of Cæſars, to him I ſay, that Brutus loue to Cæſar, was no leſſe then his. If then, that Friend demand, why Brutus roſe againſt Cæſar, this is my anſwer: Not that I lou'd Cæſar leſſe, but that I lou'd Rome more. Had you rather Cæſar were liuing, and dye all Slaues; then that Cæſar were dead, to liue all Free-men? As Cæſar lou'd me, I weepe for him; as he was Fortunate, I reioyce at it; as he was Valiant, I honour him: But, as he was Ambitious, I ſlew him. There is Teares, for his Loue: Ioy, for his Fortune: Honor, for his Valour: and Death, for his Ambition. Who is heere ſo baſe, that would be a Bondman? If any, ſpeak, for him haue I offended. Who is heere ſo rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, ſpeak, for him haue I offended. Who is heere ſo vile, that will not loue his Country? If any, ſpeake, for him haue I offended. I paule for a Reply.

All. None Brutus, none.

Brutus. Then none haue I offended. I haue done no more to Cæſar, then you ſhall do to Brutus. The Queſtion of his death, is inroll'd in the Capitoll: his Glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforc'd, for which he ſuffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, with Cæſars body.

Heere comes his Body, mourn'd by Marke Antony, who though he had no hand in his death, ſhall receiue the benefit of his dying, a place in the Commonwealth, as which of you ſhall not. With this I depart, that as I ſlewe my beſt Louer for the good of Rome, I haue the ſame Dagger for my ſelfe, when it ſhall pleaſe my Country to need my death.

All. Liue Brutus, liue, liue.

1. Bring him with Triumph home vnto his houſe.

2. Giue him a Statue with his Anceſtors.

3. Let him be Cæſar.

4 Cæſars better parts,
Shall be Crown'd in Brutus.

We'l bring him to his Houſe
With Showtes and Clamors.

Bru. My Country-men.

2. Peece, ſilence, Brutus ſpeakes.

1. Peace ho.

Bru. Good Countrymen, let me depart alone,
And (for my ſake) ſtay heere with Antony:
Do grace to Cæſars Corpes, and grace his Speech
Tending to Cæſars Glories, which Marke Antony
(By our permiſſion) is allow'd to make.
I do intreat you, not a man depart,
Saue I alone, till Antony haue ſpoke. Exit

1 Stay ho, and let vs heare Mark Antony.

3 Let him go vp into the publike Chaire,
We'l heare him: Noble Antony go vp.

Ant. For Brutus ſake, I am beholding to you.

4 What does he ſay of Brutus?

3 He ſayes, for Brutus ſake
He findes himſelfe beholding to vs all.

4 'Twere beſt he ſpeake no harme of Brutus heere?

1 This Cæſar was a Tyrant.

3 Nay that's certaine:
Weare bleſt that Rome is rid of him.

2 Peace, let vs heare what Antony can ſay.

Ant. You gentle Romans.

All. Peace hoe, let vs heare him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your eares:
I come to bury Cæſar, not to praiſe him.
The euill that men do, liues after them,
The good is oft enterred with their bones,
So let it be with Cæſar. The Noble Brutus,
Hath told you Cæſar was Ambitious:
If it were ſo, it was a greeuous Fault,
And greeuouſly hath Cæſar anſwer'd it.
Heere, vnder leaue of Brutus, and the reſt
(For Brutus is an Honourable man,
So are they all, all Honourable men)
Come I to ſpeake in Cæſars Funerall.
He was my Friend, faithfull, and iuſt to me:
But Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious,
And Brutus is an Honourable man.
He hath brought many Captiues home to Rome,
Whoſe Ranſomes, did the generall Coffers fill:
Did this in Cæſar ſeeme Ambitious?
When that the poore haue cry'de, Cæſar hath wept:
Ambition ſhould be made of ſterner ſtuffe,
Yet Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious:
And Brutus is an Honourable man.
You all did ſee, that on the Lupercall,
I thrice preſented him a Kingly Crowne,
Which he did thrice refuſe. Was this Ambition?
Yet Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious:
And ſure he is an Honourable man.
I ſpeake not to diſproue what Brutus ſpoke,
But heere I am, to ſpeake what I do know:
You all did loue him once, not without cauſe,
What cauſe with-holds you then to mourne for him?
O Iudgement! thou are fled to brutiſh Beaſts,
And Men haue loſt their Reaſon. Beare with me,
My heart is in the Coffin there with Cæſar,
And I muſt pawſe, till it come backe to me.

1 Me thinkes there is much reaſon in his ſayings.

2 If thou conſider rightly of the matter,
Cæſar has had great wrong. (his place.

Has'a bee Maſters? I feare there will a worſe come in

4. Mark'd ye his words? he would not take ỹ Crown,
Therefore 'tis certaine, he was not Ambitious.
1. If it be found so, some will deere abide it.
2. Poore soule, his eyes are red as fire with weeping.
3. There's not a Nobler man in Rome then Antony.
4. Now marke him, he begins againe to speake.
Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar migh
Haue stood against the World: Now lies he there,
And none so poore to do him reuerence.
O Masters! If I were dispos'd to stirre
Your hearts and mindes to Mutiny and Rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong:
Who (you all know) are Honourable men.
I will not do them wrong: I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong my selfe and you,
Then I will wrong such Honourable men.
But here's a Parchment, with the Seale of Cæsar,
I found it in his Closset, 'tis his Will:
Let but the Commons heare this Testament:
(Which pardon me) I do not meane to reade,
And they would go and kisse dead Cæsars wounds,
And dip their Napkins in his Sacred Blood;
Yea, beggе a haire of him for Memory,
And dying, mention it within their Willes,
Bequeathing it as a rich Legacie
Vnto their Issue.
4 Wee'l heare the Will, reade it Marke Antony.
All. The Will, the Will; we will heare Cæsars Will
Ant. Haue patience gentle Friends, I must not read it,
It is not meete you know how Cæsar lou'd you:
You are not Wood, you are not Stones, but men.
And being men, hearing the Will of Cæsar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad;
'Tis good you know not that you are his Heires,
For if you should, O what would come of it?
4 Read the Will, wee l heare it Antony:
You shall reade vs the Will, Cæsars Will.
Ant. Will you be Patient? Will you stay a-while?
I haue o're-shot my selfe to tell you of it,
I feare I wrong the Honourable men,
Whose Daggers haue stabb'd Cæsar: I do feare it.
4 They were Traitors: Honourable men?
All. The Will, the Testament.
2 They were Villaines, Murderers: the Will, read the Will.
Ant. You will compell me then to read the Will:
Then make a Ring about the Corpes of Cæsar,
And let me shew you him that made the Will:
Shall I descend? And will you giue me leaue?
All. Come downe.
2 Descend.
3 You shall haue leaue.
4 A Ring, stand round.
1 Stand from the Hearse, stand from the Body.
2 Roome for Antony, most Noble Antony.
Ant. Nay presse not so vpon me, stand farre off.
All. Stand backe: roome, beare backe.
Ant. If you haue teares, prepare to shed them now.
You all do know this Mantle, I remember
The first time euer Cæsar put it on,
'Twas on a Summers Euening in his Tent,
That day he ouercame the Nervij.
Looke, in this place ran Cassius Dagger through:
See what a rent the enuious Casca made:
Through this, the well-beloued Brutus stabb'd,
And as he pluck'd his cursed Steele away:
Marke how the blood of Cæsar followed it
As rushing out of doores, to be resolu'd
If Brutus so vnkindely knock'd, or no:
For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsars Angel.
Iudge, O you Gods, how deerely Cæsar lou'd him:
This was the most vnkindest cut of all.
For when the Noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong then Traitors armes,
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his Mighty heart,
And in his Mantle, muffling vp his face,
Euen at the Base of Pompeyes Statue
(Which all the while ran blood) great Cæsar fell.
O what a fall was there, my Countrymen?
Then I, and you, and all of vs fell downe,
Whil'st bloody Treason flourish'd ouer vs.
O now you weepe, and I perceiue you feele
The dint of pitty: These are gracious drops?
Kinde Soules, what weepe you, when you but behold
Our Cæsars Vesture wounded? Looke you here,
Heere is himselfe, marr'd as you see with Traitors.
1. O pitteous spectacle!
2. O Noble Cæsar!
3. O woefull day!
4. O Traitors, Villaines!
1. O most bloody sight!
2. We will be reueng'd: Reuenge
About, seeke, burne, fire, kill, slay,
Let not a Traitor liue.
Ant. Stay Country-men
1. Peace there heare the Noble Antony.
2. Wee'l heare him, wee'l follow him, wee'l die with him.
Ant. Good Friends, sweet Friends, let me not stirre
To such a sodaine Flood of Mutiny:
They that haue done this Deede, are honourable.
What priuate greefes they haue, alas I know not,
That made them do it: They are Wise and Honourable,
And will no doubt with Reasons answer you.
I come not (Friends) to steale away your hearts,
I am no Orator, as Brutus is;
But (as you know me all) a plaine blunt man
That loue my Friend, and that they know full well,
That gaue me publike leaue to speake of him:
For I haue neyther wit nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor Vtterance, nor the power of Speech,
To stirre mens Blood, I onely speake right on:
I tell you that, which you your selues do know,
Shew you sweet Cæsars wounds, poore poore dum mouths
And bid them speake for me: But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle vp your Spirits, and put a Tongue
In euery Wound of Cæsar, that should moue
The stones of Rome, to rise and Mutiny.
All. Wee'l Mutiny.
1 Wee'l burne the house of Brutus.
3 Away then, come, seeke the Conspirators.
Ant. Yet heare me Countrymen, yet heare me speake
All. Peace hoe, heare Antony, most Noble Antony.
Ant. Why Friends, you go to do you know not what:
Wherein hath Cæsar thus deseru'd your loues?
Alas you know not, I must tell you then:
You haue forgot the Will I told you of.
All. Most true, the Will, let's stay and heare the Will.
Ant. Heere is the Will, and vnder Cæsars Seale:
To euery Roman Citizen he giues,
To euery seuerall man, seuenty fiue Drachmas.

ſt Noble Cæſar, wee'l reuenge his death.
loyall Cæſar.
e me with patience.
e hoe
reoner, he hath left you all his Walkes, rbors, and new-planted Orchards,
Tyber, he hath left them you,
poyres for euer: common pleaſures

Cæſar when comes ſuch another?
uer, neuer: come, away, away:
his body in the holy place,
Brands fire the Traitors houſes.

o fetch fire.

icke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.
Exit Plebeians.

Enter Seruant.
Octauius is already come to Rome.
ere is hee?
nd Lepidus are at Cæſars houſe.
d thither will I ſtraight, to viſit him:
on a wiſh. Fortune is merry, hood will giue vs any thing.
d him ſay, Brutus and Caſſius
Madmen through the Gates of Rome.
ke they had ſome notice of the people pouted them. Bring me to Octauius. Exeunt

Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

dreame to night, that I did feaſt with Cæſar, inluckily charge my Fantaſie:
I to wander foorth of doores, ng leads me foorth.
is your name?

do you dwell?
be a married man, or a Batchellor?
er euery man directly.

Am I a married man, or a Batchellour? Then truly, my name is Cinna.

him for his bad verſes, teare him for his bad

Cin. I am not Cinna the Conſpirator.

4. It is no matter, his name's Cinna, plucke but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.

3. Teare him, teare him; Come Brands hoe, Firebrands: to Brutus, to Caſſius, burne all. Some to Decius Houſe, and ſome to Caſca's; ſome to Ligarius: Away, go.

Exeunt all the Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octauius, and Lepidus.

Ant. Theſe many then ſhall die, their names are prickt

Octa. Your Brother too muſt die: conſent you Lepidus?

Lep. I do conſent.

Octa. Pricke him downe Antony.

Lep. Vpon condition Publius ſhall not liue,
Who is your Siſters ſonne, Marke Antony.

Ant. He ſhall not liue; looke, with a ſpot I dam him.
But Lepidus, go you to Cæſars houſe:
Fetch the Will hither, and we ſhall determine
How to cut off ſome charge in Legacies.

Lep. What? ſhall I finde you heere?

Octa. Or heere, or at the Capitoll. Exit Lepidus

Ant. This is a ſlight vnmeriting man,
Meet to be ſent on Errands: is it fit
The three-fold World diuided, he ſhould ſtand
One of the three to ſhare it?

Octa. So you thought him,
And tooke his voyce who ſhould be prickt to dye
In our blacke Sentence and Proſcription.

Ant. Octauius, I haue ſeene more dayes then you,
And though we lay theſe Honours on this man,
To eaſe our ſelues of diuers ſland'rous loads,
He ſhall but beare them, as the Aſſe beares Gold,
To groane and ſweat vnder the Buſineſſe,
Either led or driuen, as we point the way:
And hauing brought our Treaſure, where we will,
Then take we downe his Load, and turne him off
(Like to the empty Aſſe) to ſhake his eares,
And graze in Commons.

Octa. You may do your will:
But hee's a tried, and valiant Souldier.

Ant. So is my Horſe Octauius, and for that I do appoint him ſtore of Prouender.
It is a Creature that I teach to fight,
To winde, to ſtop, to run directly on:
His corporall Motion, gouern'd by my Spirit,
And in ſome taſte, is Lepidus but ſo:
He muſt be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:
A barren ſpirited Fellow; one that feeds
On Obiects, Arts, and Imitations.
Which out of vſe, and ſtal'de by other men
Begin his faſhion. Do not talke of him,
But as a property: and now Octauius,
Liſten great things. Brutus and Caſſius
Are leuying Powers; We muſt ſtraight make head:
Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd,
Our beſt Friends made, our meanes ſtretcht,
And let vs preſently go ſit in Councell,
How couert matters may be beſt diſclos'd,
And open Perils ſureſt anſwered.

Octa. Let vs do ſo: for we are at the ſtake,

And bayed about with many Enemies,
And some that smile haue in their hearts I feare
Millions of Mischeefes. Exeunt

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucillius, and the Army. Titinius and Pindarus meete them.

Bru. Stand ho.

Lucil. Giue the word ho, and Stand.

Bru. What now Lucillius, is Cassius neere?

Lucil. He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his Master.

Bru. He greets me well. Your Master Pindarus
In his owne change, or by ill Officers,
Hath giuen me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, vndone: But if he be at hand
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt
But that my Noble Master will appeare
Such as he is, full of regard, and Honour.

Bru. He is not doubted. A word Lucillius
How he receiu'd you: let me be resolu'd.

Lucil. With courtesie, and with respect enough,
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly Conference
As he hath vs'd of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot Friend, cooling: Euer note Lucillius,
When Loue begins to sicken and decay
It vseth an enforced Ceremony
There are no trickes, in plaine and simple Faith:
But hollow men, like Horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew, and promise of their Mettle:
Low March within.
But when they should endure the bloody Spurre,
They fall their Crests, and like deceitfull Iades Sinke in the Triall. Comes his Army on?

Lucil. They meane this night in Sardis to be quarter'd:
The greater part, the Horse in generall
Are come with Cassius.
Enter Cassius and his Powers

Bru. Hearke, he is arriu'd:
March gently on to meete him.

Cassi. Stand ho.

Bru. Stand ho, speake the word along.

Stand.

Stand.

Stand.

Cassi. Most Noble Brother, you haue done me wrong.

Bru. Iudge me you Gods; wrong I mine Enemies?
And if not so, how should I wrong a Brother

Cassi. Brutus, this sober forme of yours, hides wrongs,
And when you do them———

Brut. Cassius, be content,
Speake your greefes softly, I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our Armies heere
(Which should perceiue nothing but Loue from vs)
Let vs not wrangle. Bid them moue away:
Then in my Tent Cassius enlarge your Greefes,
And I will giue you Audience.

Cassi. Pindarus,
Bid our Commanders leade their Charges off
A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucillius, do you the like, and let no man
Come to our Tent, till we haue done our Conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our doore Exeunt
Manet Brutus and Cassius.

Cassi. That you haue wrong'd me, doth appeare in this
You haue condemn'd, and noted Lucius Pella
For taking Bribes heere of the Sardians;
Wherein my Letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man was slighted off.

Bru. You wrong'd your selfe to write in such a case.

Cassi. In such a time as this, it is not meet
That euery nice offence should beare his Comment.

Bru. Let me tell you Cassius, you your selfe
Are much condemn'd to haue an itching Palme,
To sell, and Mart your Offices for Gold
To Vnderseruers.

Cassi. I, an itching Palme?
You know that you are Brutus that speakes this,
Or by the Gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius Honors this corruption,
And Chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cassi. Chastisement?

Bru. Remember March, the Ides of March remember:
Did not great Iulius bleede for Iustice sake?
What Villaine touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for Iustice? What? Shall one of Vs,
That strucke the Formost man of all this World,
But for supporting Robbers: shall we now,
Contaminate our fingers, with base Bribes?
And sell the mighty Space of our large Honors
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a Dogge, and bay the Moone,
Then such a Roman

Cassi. Brutus, baite not me.
Ile not indure it: you forget your selfe
To hedge me in. I am a Souldier, I,
Older in practice, Abler then your selfe
To make Conditions

Bru. Go too, you are not Cassius.

Cassi. I am.

Bru. I say, you are not.

Cassi. Vrge me no more, I shall forget my selfe;
Haue minde vpon your health: Tempt me no further.

Bru. Away slight man.

Cassi. Is't possible?

Bru. Heare me, for I will speake.
Must I giue way, and roome to your rash Choller?
Shall I be frighted, when a Madman staires?

Cassi. O ye Gods, ye Gods, Must I endure all this?

Bru. All this? I more: Fret till your proud hart breake.
Go shew your Slaues how Choleriske you are,
And make your Bondmen tremble. Must I bouge?
Must I obserue you? Must I stand and crouch
Vnder your Testie Humour? By the Gods,
You shall digest the Venom of your Spleene
Though it do Split you. For, from this day forth,
Ile vse you for my Mirth, yea for my Laughter
When you are Waspish.

Cassi. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say, you are a better Souldier:
Let it appeare so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well. For mine owne part,
I shall be glad to learne of Noble men.

Cassi. You wrong me euery way:
You wrong me Brutus:
I saide, an Elder Souldier, not a Better.
Did I say Better?

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cassi. When Cæsar liu'd, he durst not thus haue moou'd Brut. Peace, peace, you durst not so haue tempted him

Caſſ. I durſt not.
Bru. No.
Caſſ. What? durſt not tempt him?
Bru. For your life you durſt not.
Caſſ. Do not preſume too much vpon my Loue, I may do that I ſhall be ſorry for.
Bru. You haue done that you ſhould be ſorry for. There is no terror Caſſius in your threats: For I am Arm'd ſo ſtrong in Honeſty, That they paſſe by me, as the idle winde, Which I reſpect not. I did ſend to you For certaine ſummes of Gold, which you deny'd me, For I can raiſe no money by vile meanes: By Heauen, I had rather Coine my Heart, And drop my blood for Drachmaes, then to wring From the hard hands of Peaſants, their vile trash By any indirection. I did ſend To you for Gold to pay my Legions, Which you deny'd me: was that done like Caſſius? Should I haue anſwer'd Caius Caſſius ſo? When Marcus Brutus growes ſo Couetous, To locke ſuch Raſcall Counters from his Friends, Be ready Gods with all your Thunder-bolts, Dash him to peeces.
Caſſ. I deny'd you not.
Bru. You did.
Caſſ. I did not. He was but a Foole That brought my anſwer back. Brutus hath riu'd my hart: A Friend ſhould beare his Friends infirmities; But Brutus makes mine greater then they are.
Bru. I do not, till you practice them on me
Caſſ. You loue me not.
Bru. I do not like your faults.
Caſſ. A friendly eye could neuer ſee ſuch faults.
Bru. A Flatterers would not, though they do appeare As huge as high Olympus.
Caſſ. Come Antony, and yong Octauius come, Reuenge your ſelues alone on Caſſius, For Caſſius is a-weary of the World: Hated by one he loues, brau'd by his Brother, Check'd like a bondman, all his faults obſeru'd, Set in a Note-booke, learn'd, and con'd by roate To caſt into my Teeth. O I could weepe My Spirit from mine eyes. There is my Dagger, And here my naked Breaſt: Within, a Heart Dearer then Pluto's Mine, Richer then Gold: If that thou beeſt a Roman, take it forth. I that deny'd thee Gold, will giue my Heart: Strike as thou did'ſt at Cæſar: For I know, When thou did'ſt hate him worſt, thou loued'ſt him better Then euer thou loued'ſt Caſſius.
Bru. Sheath your Dagger: Be angry when you will, it ſhall haue ſcope: Do what you will, Diſhonor, ſhall be Humour. O Caſſius, you are yoaked with a Lambe That carries Anger, as the Flint beares fire, Who much inforced, ſhewes a haſtie Sparke, And ſtraite is cold agen.
Caſſ. Hath Caſſius liu'd To be but Mirth and Laughter to his Brutus, When greefe and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?
Bru. When I ſpoke that, I was ill temper'd too.
Caſſ. Do you confeſſe ſo much? Giue me your hand.
Bru. And my heart too.
Caſſ. O Brutus!
Bru. What's the matter?
Caſſ. Haue not you loue enough to beare with me, When that rash humour which my Mother gaue me Makes me forgetfull.
Bru. Yes Caſſius, and from henceforth When you are ouer-earneſt with your Brutus, He'l thinke your Mother chides, and leaue you ſo.

Enter a Poet.

Poet. Let me go in to ſee the Generals, There is ſome grudge betweene 'em, 'tis not meete They be alone.
Lucil. You ſhall not come to them.
Poet. Nothing but death ſhall ſtay me.
Caſ. How now? What's the matter?
Poet. For ſhame you Generals; what do you meane? Loue, and be Friends, as two ſuch men ſhould bee, For I haue ſeene more yeeres I'me ſure then yee.
Caſ. Ha, ha, how vildely doth this Cynicke rime?
Bru. Get you hence ſirra: Sawcy Fellow, hence.
Caſ. Beare with him Brutus, 'tis his fashion.
Bru. Ile know his humor, when he knowes his time: What ſhould the Warres do with theſe Iigging Fooles? Companion, hence.
Caſ. Away, away be gone. Exit Poet
Bru. Lucilius and Titinius bid the Commanders Prepare to lodge their Companies to night.
Caſ. And come your ſelues, & bring Meſſala with you Immediately to vs.
Bru. Lucius, a bowle of Wine.
Caſ. I did not thinke you could haue bin ſo angry.
Bru. O Caſſius, I am ſicke of many greefes.
Caſ. Of your Philoſophy you make no vſe, If you giue place to accidentall euils.
Bru. No man beares ſorrow better. Portia is dead.
Caſ. Ha? Portia?
Bru. She is dead.
Caſ. How ſcap'd I killing, when I croſt you ſo? O inſupportable, and touching loſſe! Vpon what ſickneſſe?
Bru. Impatient of my abſence, And greefe, that yong Octauius with Mark Antony Haue made themſelues ſo ſtrong: For with her death That tydings came. With this ſhe fell diſtract, And (her Attendants abſent) ſwallow'd fire.
Caſ. And dy'd ſo?
Bru. Euen ſo.
Caſ. O ye immortall Gods!

Enter Boy with Wine, and Tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Giue me a bowl of wine, In this I bury all vnkindneſſe Caſſius. Drinkes
Caſ. My heart is thirſty for that Noble pledge. Fill Lucius, till the Wine ore-ſwell the Cup: I cannot drinke too much of Brutus loue.

Enter Titinius and Meſſala.

Bru. Come in Titinius: Welcome good Meſſala. Now ſit we cloſe about this Taper heere, And call in queſtion our neceſſities.
Caſ. Portia, art thou gone?
Bru. No more I pray you. Meſſala, I haue heere receiued Letters, That yong Octauius, and Marke Antony Come downe vpon vs with a mighty power, Bending their Expedition toward Philippi.

Meſſ. My ſelfe haue Letters of the ſelfe-ſame Tenure.
Bru. With what Addition.
Meſſ. That by proſcription, and billes of Outlarie,
Octauius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Haue put to death, an hundred Senators.
Bru. Therein our Letters do not well agree:
Mine ſpeake of ſeuenty Senators, that dy'de
By their proſcriptions, Cicero being one.
Caſſi. Cicero one?
Meſſa. Cicero is dead, and by that order of proſcription
Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord?
Bru. No Meſſala.
Meſſa. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her?
Bru. Nothing Meſſala.
Meſſa. That me thinkes is ſtrange.
Bru. Why aske you?
Heare you ought of her, in yours?
Meſſa. No my Lord
Bru. Now as you are a Roman tell me true.
Meſſa. Then like a Roman, beare the truth I tell,
For certaine ſhe is dead, and by ſtrange manner.
Bru. Why farewell Portia. We muſt die Meſſala
With meditating that ſhe muſt dye once,
I haue the patience to endure it now
Meſſa. Euen ſo great men, great loſſes ſhould indure.
Caſſi. I haue as much of this in Art as you
But yet my Nature could not beare it ſo.
Bru. Well, to our worke aliue. What do you thinke
Of marching to Philippi preſently.
Caſſi. I do not thinke it good.
Bru. Your reaſon?
Caſſi. This it is.
'Tis better that the Enemie ſeeke vs,
So ſhall he waſte his meanes, weary his Souldiers,
Doing himſelfe offence, whil'ſt we lying ſtill,
Are full of reſt, defence, and nimbleneſſe
Bru. Good reaſons muſt of force giue place to better
The people 'twixt Philippi, and this ground
Do ſtand but in a forc'd affection:
For they haue grug'd vs Contribution.
The Enemy, marching along by them,
By them ſhall make a fuller number vp,
Come on refreſht, new added, and encourag'd
From which aduantage ſhall we cut him off
If at Philippi we do face him there,
Theſe people at our backe
Caſſi. Heare me good Brother
Bru. Vnder your pardon. You muſt note beſide,
That we haue tride the vtmoſt of our Friends
Our Legions are brim full, our cauſe is ripe,
The Enemy encreaſeth euery day,
We at the height, are readie to decline
There is a Tide in the affayres of men,
Which taken at the Flood, leades on to Fortune
Omitted, all the voyage of their life,
Is bound in Shallowes, and in Miſeries
On ſuch a full Sea are we now a-float,
And we muſt take the current when it ſerues,
Or looſe our Ventures
Caſſi. Then with your will go on: wee'l along
Our ſelues, and meet them at Philippi
Bru. The deepe of night is crept vpon our talke,
And Nature muſt obey Neceſſitie,
Which we will niggard with a little reſt.
There is no more to ſay
Caſſi. No more, good night,
Early to morrow will we riſe, and hence.
Enter Lucius.
Bru. Lucius my Gowne: farewell good Meſſala,
Good night Titinius: Noble, Noble Caſſius,
Good night, and good repoſe.
Caſſi. O my deere Brother:
This was an ill beginning of the night:
Neuer come ſuch diuiſion 'tweene our ſoules
Let it not Brutus.
Enter Lucius with the Gowne
Bru. Euery thing is well.
Caſſi. Good night my Lord.
Bru. Good night good Brother
Tit. Meſſa. Good night Lord Brutus.
Bru. Farwell euery one. Exeunt
Giue me the Gowne. Where is thy Inſtrument?
Luc. Heere in the Tent.
Bru. What, thou ſpeak'ſt drowſily?
Poore knaue I blame thee not, thou art ore-watch'd.
Call Claudio, and ſome other of my men,
Ile haue them ſleepe on Cuſhions in my Tent.
Luc. Varrus, and Claudio.
Enter Varrus and Claudio.
Var. Cals my Lord?
Bru. I pray you ſirs, lye in my Tent and ſleepe,
It may be I ſhall raiſe you by and by
On buſineſſe to my Brother Caſſius.
Var. So pleaſe you, we will ſtand,
And watch your pleaſure.
Bru. I will it not haue it ſo: Lye downe good ſirs,
It may be I ſhall otherwiſe bethinke me.
Looke Lucius, heere's the booke I ſought for ſo
I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.
Luc. I was ſure your Lordſhip did not giue it me.
Bru. Beare with me good Boy, I am much forgetfull.
Canſt thou hold vp thy heauie eyes a-while,
And touch thy Inſtrument a ſtraine or two
Luc. I my Lord, an't pleaſe you.
Bru. It does my Boy:
I trouble thee too much, but thou are willing.
Luc. It is my duty Sir
Bru. I ſhould not vrge thy duty paſt thy might,
I know yong bloods looke for a time of reſt
Luc. I haue ſlept my Lord already.
Bru. It was well done, and thou ſhalt ſleepe again:
I will not hold thee long. If I do liue,
I will be good to thee.
Muſicke, and a Song.
This is a ſleepy Tune: O Murd'rous ſlumber!
Layeſt thou thy Leaden Mace vpon my Boy,
That playes thee Muſicke? Gentle knaue good night:
I will not do thee ſo much wrong to wake thee:
If thou do'ſt nod, thou break'ſt thy Inſtrument,
Ile take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night
Let me ſee, let me ſee; is not the Leafe turn'd downe
Where I left reading? Heere it is I thinke.
Enter the Ghoſt of Cæſar.
How ill this Taper burnes. Ha! Who comes heere?
I thinke it is the weakeneſſe of mine eyes
That ſhapes this monſtrous Apparition.
It comes vpon me: Art thou any thing?
Art thou ſome God, ſome Angell, or ſome Deuell,
That mak'ſt my blood cold, and my haire to ſtare?
Speake to me, what thou art.
Ghoſt Thy euill Spirit Brutus.
Bru. Why com'ſt thou?

Ghoſt.

o tell thee thou ſhalt ſee me at Philippi.
'ell: then I ſhall ſee thee againe?
at Philippi.
hy I will ſee thee at Philippi then:
takeo heart, thou vnthankeſt.
would hold more talke with thee.
Varrus, Claudio, Sirs: Awake:
e ſtrings my Lord, are falſe.
thinkes he ſtill is at his Inſtrument.
ke.
Lord.
d'ſt thou dreame Lucius, that thou ſo cryedſt
Lord, I do not know that I did cry.
s that thou did'ſt: Did'ſt thou ſee any thing?
hing my Lord.
pe againe Lucius: Sirra Claudio, Fellow,
ke.
Lord.
y Lord.
hy did you ſo cry out ſirs, in your ſleepe?
d we my Lord?
ſaw you any thing?
my Lord, I ſaw nothing.
ot I my Lord.
, and commend me to my Brother Caſſius:
on his Powres betimes before,
I follow.
ſhall be done my Lord. Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

ius Octauius, Antony, and their Army.
ou Antony, our hopes are anſwered,
e Enemy would not come downe,
he Hilles and vpper Regions:
it ſo: their battailes are at hand,
e to warne vs at Philippi heere:
before we do demand of them.
ſt I am in their boſomes, and I know they do it: They could be content er places, and come downe ull brauery: thinking by this face
our thoughts that they haue Courage;
ſo.
Enter a Meſſenger.
peare you Generals,
comes on in gallant ſhew:
y ſigne of Battell is hung out, ing to be done immediately.
Octauius, leade your Battaile ſoftly on ft hand of the euen Field.
on the right hand I: keepe thou the left.
hy do you croſſe me in this exigent.
do not croſſe you: but I will do ſo. March.
m. Enter Brutus, Caſſius, & their Army.
ey ſtand, and would haue parley:
and fall Trumpet, we muſt out and talke.
Mark Antony, ſhall we giue ſigne of Battaile?
o Cæſar, we will anſwer on their Charge.
Make forth, the Generals would haue ſome words.
Oct. Stirre not vntill the Signall.
Bru. Words before blowes: is it ſo Countrymen?
Octa. Not that we loue words better, as you do.
Bru. Good words are better then bad ſtrokes Octauius.
Ant. In your bad ſtrokes Brutus, you giue good words
Witneſſe the hole you made in Cæſars heart,
Crying long liue, Haile Cæſar.
Caſſ. Antony,
The poſture of your blowes are yet vnknowne;
But for your words, they rob the Hibla Bees,
And leaue them Hony-leſſe.
Ant. Not ſtingleſſe too.
Bru. O yes, and ſoundleſſe too:
For you haue ſtolne their buzzing Antony,
And very wiſely threat before you ſting.
Ant. Villaines: you did not ſo, when your vile daggers
Hackt one another in the ſides of Cæſar:
You ſhew'd your teethes like Apes,
And fawn'd like Hounds,
And bow'd like Bondmen, kiſſing Cæſars feete:
Whil'ſt damned Caſca, like a Curre, behinde
Strooke Cæſar on the necke. O you Flatterers.
Caſſ. Flatterers? Now Brutus thanke your ſelfe,
This tongue had not offended ſo to day,
If Caſſius might haue rul'd
Octa. Come, come, the cauſe. If arguing make vs ſweat,
The proofe of it will turne to redder drops:
Looke, I draw a Sword againſt Conſpirators,
When thinke you that the Sword goes vp againe?
Neuer till Cæſars three and thirtie wounds
Be well aueng'd; or till another Cæſar
Haue added ſlaughter to the Sword of Traitors.
Bru. Cæſar, thou canſt not dye by Traitors hands,
Vnleſſe thou bring'ſt them with thee.
Octa. So I hope:
I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword.
Bru. O if thou wer't the Nobleſt of thy Straine,
Young-man, thou could'ſt not dye more honourable.
Caſſ. A peeuiſh School-boy, worthles of ſuch Honor
Ioyn'd with a Maſker, and a Reueller.
Ant. Old Caſſius ſtill.
Octa. Come Antony: away:
Defiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
If you dare fight to day, come to the Field;
If not, when you haue ſtomackes.
Exit Octauius. Antony, and Army
Caſſ. Why now blow winde, ſwell Billow,
And ſwimme Barke:
The Storme is vp, and all is on the hazard.
Bru. Ho Lucilius, heark'e, a word with you.
Lucilius and Meſſala ſtand forth.
Luc My Lord.
Caſſ. Meſſala.
Meſſa. What ſayes my Generall?
Caſſ. Meſſala, this is my Birth-day: as this very day
Was Caſſius borne. Giue me thy hand Meſſala
Be thou my witneſſe, that againſt my will
(As Pompey was) am I compell'd to ſet
Vpon one Battell all our Liberties
You know, that I held Epicurus ſtrong,
And his Opinion: Now I change my minde,
And partly credit things that do preſage.
Comming from Sardis, on our former Enſigne
Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they perch'd, Gorging and feeding from our Soldiers hands,

Who

Who to Philippi heere conſorted vs:
This Morning are they fled away,and gone,
And to their ſteeds,do Rauens,Crowes,and Kites
Fly ore our heads,and downward looke on vs
As we were ſickely prey; their ſhadowes ſeeme
A Canopy moſt fatall, vnder which
Our Army lies, ready to giue vp the Ghoſt
Meſſa. Beleeue not ſo.
Caſſi. I but beleeue it partly,
For I am freſh of ſpirit,and reſolu'd
To meete all perils, very conſtantly.
Bru. Euen ſo Lucillius.
Caſſi. Now moſt Noble Brutus,
The Gods to day ſtand friendly, that we may
Louers in peace, leade on our dayes to age.
But ſince the affayres of men reſts ſtill incertaine,
Let's reaſon with the worſt that may befall.
If we do loſe this Battaile, then is this
The very laſt time we ſhall ſpeake together:
What are you then determined to do?
Bru. Euen by the rule of that Philoſophy,
By which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did giue himſelfe, I know not how:
But I do finde it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, ſo to preuent
The time of life, arming my ſelfe with patience,
To ſtay the prouidence of ſome high Powers,
That gouerne vs below.
Caſſi. Then, if we looſe this Battaile,
You are contented to be led in Triumph
Thorow the ſtreets of Rome.
Bru. No Caſſius,no:
Thinke not thou Noble Romane,
That euer Brutus will go bound to Rome,
He beares too great a minde. But this ſame day
Muſt end that worke, the Ides of March begun.
And whether we ſhall meete againe, I know not:
Therefore our euerlaſting farewell take:
For euer,and for euer, farewell Caſſius,
If we do meete againe, why we ſhall ſmile;
If not,why then this parting was well made.
Caſſi. For euer,and for euer, farewell Brutus:
If we do meete againe, wee'l ſmile indeede;
If not,'tis true, this parting was well made.
Bru. Why then leade on. O that a man might know
The end of this dayes buſineſſe, ere it come:
But it ſufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is knowne. Come ho,away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Meſſala.

Bru. Ride,ride Meſſala, ride and giue theſe Billes
Vnto the Legions,on the other ſide.
Loud Alarum.
Let them ſet on at once: for I perceiue
But cold demeanor in Octauio's wing:
And ſodaine puſh giues them the ouerthrow:
Ride,ride Meſſala, let them all come downe. Exeunt

Alarums. Enter Caſſius and Titinius.

Caſſi. O looke Titinius, looke, the Villaines flye:
My ſelfe haue to mine owne turn'd Enemy:
This Enſigne heere of mine was turning backe,
I ſlew the Coward, and did take it from him.
Titi. O Caſſius, Brutus gaue the word too early,
Who hauing ſome aduantage on Octauius,
Tooke it too eagerly: his Soldiers fell to ſpoyle,
Whilſt we by Antony are all incloſ'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pind. Flye further off my Lord: flye further off,
Mark Antony is in your Tents my Lord:
Flye therefore Noble Caſſius, flye farre off.
Caſſi. This Hill is farre enough. Looke,looke Titinius,
Are thoſe my Tents where I perceiue the fire?
Tit. They are, my Lord.
Caſſi. Titinius, if thou loueſt me,
Mount thou my horſe, and hide thy ſpurres in him,
Till he haue brought thee vp to yonder Troopes
And heere againe, that I may reſt aſſur'd
Whether yond Troopes,are Friend or Enemy.
Tit. I will be heere againe, euen with a thought. Exit.
Caſſi. Go Pindarus, get higher on that hill,
My ſight was euer thicke: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'ſt about the Field.
This day I breathed firſt, Time is come round,
And where I did begin,there ſhall I end,
My life is run his compaſſe. Sirra,what newes?
Pind. Aboue. O my Lord.
Caſſi. What newes?
Pind. Titinius is incloſed round about
With Horſemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he ſpurres on. Now they are almoſt on him:
Now Titinius. Now ſome light: O he lights too.
Hee's tane. Shout.
And hearke, they ſhout for ioy.
Caſſi. Come downe, behold no more:
O Coward that I am, to liue ſo long,
To ſee my beſt Friend tane before my face.

Enter Pindarus.

Come hither ſirrah: In Parthia did I take thee Priſoner,
And then I ſwore thee, ſauing of thy life,
That whatſoeuer I did bid thee do,
Thou ſhould'ſt attempt it. Come now keepe thine oath,
Now be a Free-man, and with this good Sword
That ran through Cæſars bowels, ſearch this boſome.
Stand not to anſwer: Heere, take thou the Hilts,
And when my face is couer'd,as 'tis now,
Guide thou the Sword —— Cæſar, thou art reueng'd,
Euen with the Sword that kill'd thee.
Pin. So, I am free,
Yet would not ſo haue beene
Durſt I haue done my will. O Caſſius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus ſhall run,
Where neuer Roman ſhall take note of him.

Enter Titinius and Meſſala.

Meſſa. It is but change, Titinius: for Octauius
Is ouerthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Caſſius Legions are by Antony.
Titi. Theſe tydings will well comfort Caſſius.
Meſſa. Where did you leaue him.
Titi. All diſconſolate,
With Pindarus his Bondman,on this Hill.
Meſſa. Is not that he that lyes vpon the ground?
Titi. He lies not like the Liuing. O my heart!
Meſſa. Is not that hee?
Titi. No,this was he Meſſala,
But Caſſius is no more. O ſetting Sunne:
As in thy red Rayes thou doeſt ſinke to night;

So

So in his red blood Cæsius day is set.
The Sunne of Rome is set. Our day is gone,
Clouds, Dewes, and Dangers come; our deeds are done:
Mistrust of my successe hath done this deed.
Mes. Mistrust of good successe hath done this deed.
O hatefull Error, Melancholies Childe:
Why do'ſt thou shew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error soone conceyu'd,
Thou never com'ſt vnto a happy byrth,
But kil'ſt the Mother that engendred thee.
Tit. What Pindarus? Where art thou Pindarus?
Mes. Seeke him Titinius, whilſt I go to meet
The Noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his eares; I may say thrusting it:
For piercing Steele, and Darts inuenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the eares of Brutus,
As tydings of this fight.
Tit. Hye you Meſſala,
And I will seeke for Pindarus the while:
Why did'ſt thou send me forth braue Cæsius?
Did I not meet thy Friends, and did not they Put on my Browes this wreath of Victorie,
And bid me giue it thee? Did'ſt thou not heare their Alas, thou hast misconstrued euery thing. (showts
But hold thee, take this Garland on thy Brow,
Thy Brutus bid me giue it thee, and I
Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cæsius:
By your leaue Gods: This is a Romans part,
Come Cæsius Sword, and finde Titinius hart Dies

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Meſſala, yong Cato, Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Bru. Where, where Meſſala, doth his body lye?
Mes. Loe yonder, and Titinius mourning it.
Bru. Titinius face is vpward.
Cato He is slaine.
Bru. O Iulius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet,
Thy Spirit walkes abroad, and turnes our Swords
In our owne proper Entrailes. Low Alarums.
Cato. Braue Titinius,
Looke where he haue not crown'd dead Cæsius.
Bru. Are yet two Romans liuing such as these?
The laſt of all the Romans, fat thee well
It is impoſſible, that euer Rome
Should breed thy fellow. Friends I owe mo teares
To this dead man, then you ſhall see me pay.
I ſhall finde time, Cæsius. I ſhall finde time.
Come therefore, and to Thaſos send his body,
His Funerals ſhall not be in our Campe,
Leaſt it discomfort vs. Lucilius come,
And come yong Cato, let vs to the Field,
Labio and Flauio set our Battailes on:
'Tis three a clocke, and Romans yet ere night,
We ſhall try Fortune in a ſecond fight. Exeunt

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Meſſala, Cato, Lucilius, and Flauius.

Bru. Yet Country-men. O yet hold vp your heads.
Cato What Baſtard doth not? Who will go with me?
I will proclaime my name about the Field.
I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.
A Foe to Tyrants, and my Countries Friend.
I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe
Enter Souldiers and fight.
And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I,
Brutus my Countries Friend: Know me for Brutus.
Luc. O yong and Noble Cato, art thou downe?
Why now thou dyeſt, as braue as Titinius,
And may'ſt be honour'd, being Cato's Sonne.
Sold. Yeeld, or thou dyeſt.
Luc. Onely I yeeld to dye:
There is ſo much, that thou wilt kill me ſtraight:
Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.
Sold. We muſt not: a Noble Priſoner.

Enter Antony.

2. Sold. Roome hoe: tell Antony, Brutus is tane.
1 Sold. Ile tell thee newes. Heere comes the Generall, Brutus is tane, Brutus is tane my Lord.
Ant Where is he?
Luc Safe Antony, Brutus is safe enough.
I dare aſſure thee, that no Enemy
Shall euer take aliue the Noble Brutus:
The Gods defend him from ſo great a ſhame,
When you do finde him, or aliue, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himſelfe.
Ant. This is not Brutus friend, but I aſſure you,
A prize no leſſe in worth; keepe this man ſafe,
Giue him all kindneſſe. I had rather haue
Such men my Friends, then Enemies. Go on,
And ſee where Brutus be aliue or dead,
And bring vs word, vnto Octauius Tent:
How euery thing is chanc'd. Exeunt.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Brut. Come poore remaines of friends, reſt on this Rocke.
Clit. Statilius shew'd the Torch-light, but my Lord
He came not backe: he is or tane, or ſlaine.
Brut. Sit thee downe, Clitus: ſlaying is the word,
It is a deed in faſhion. Hearke thee, Clitus
Clit What I, my Lord? No, not for all the World.
Brut. Peace then, no words.
Clit. Ile rather kill my ſelfe.
Brut Hearke thee, Dardanius.
Dard. Shall I doe ſuch a deed?
Clit O Dardanius.
Dard O Clitus.
Clit. What ill requeſt did Brutus make to thee?
Dard. To kill him Clitus: looke he meditates.
Clit. Now is that Noble Veſſell full of griefe,
That it runnes ouer euen at his eyes.
Brut. Come hither, good Volumnius, liſt a word.
Volum. What ſayes my Lord?
Brut. Why this, Volumnius:
The Ghoſt of Cæsar hath appear'd to me
Two ſeuerall times by Nights: at Sardis, once;
And this laſt Night, here in Philippi fields:
I know my houre is come
Volum. Not ſo, my Lord.
Brut Nay, I am ſure it is, Volumnius.
Thou ſeeſt the World, Volumnius, how it goes,
Our Enemies haue beat vs to the Pit: Low Alarums.
It is more worthy, to leape in our ſelues,
Then tarry till they puſh vs. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'ſt, that we two went to Schoole together:
Euen for that our loue of old, I prethee
Hold thou my Sword Hilts, whileſt I runne on it.
Vol. That's not an Office for a friend, my Lord.
Alarum ſtill.
Clit. Fly,

Cly. Fly, fly, fly my Lord, there is no tarrying heere.
Bru. Farewell to you, and you, and you Volumnius.
Strato, thou hast bin all this while asleepe:
Farewell to thee, to Strato, Countrymen:
My heart doth ioy, that yet in all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.
I shall haue glory by this loosing day
More then Octauius, and Marke Antony,
By this vile Conquest shall attaine vnto
So fare you well at once, for Brutus tongue
Hath almost ended his liues History:
Night hangs vpon mine eyes, my Bones would rest,
That haue but labour'd, to attaine this houre.

Alarum. Cry within, Fly, fly, fly.
Cly. Fly my Lord, fly.
Bru. Hence: I will follow.
I prythee Strato, stay thou by thy Lord,
Thou art a Fellow of a good respect:
Thy life hath had some smatch of Honor in it,
Hold then my Sword, and turne away thy face,
While I do run vpon it. Wilt thou Strato?
Stra. Giue me your hand first. Fare you wel my Lord.
Bru. Farewell good Strato. —— Cæsar, now be still
I kild not thee with halfe so good a will. Dyes.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Antony, Octauius, Messala, Lucillius, and the Army.
Oct. What man is that?
Mess. My Masters man. Strato, where is thy Master?
Stra. Free from the Bondage you are in Messala,
The Conquerors can but make a fire of him:
For Brutus onely ouercame himselfe,
And no man else hath Honor by his death.
Lucil. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee Brutus
That thou hast prou'd Lucillius saying true.
Oct. All that seru'd Brutus, I will entertaine them.
Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?
Stra. I, if Messala will preferre me to you.
Oct. Do so, good Messala.
Mess. How dyed my Master Strato?
Stra. I held the Sword, and he did run on it.
Mess. Octauius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest seruice to my Master.
Ant. This was the Noblest Roman of them all:
All the Conspirators saue onely hee,
Did that they did, in enuy of great Cæsar:
He, onely in a generall honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle, and the Elements
So mixt in him, that Nature might stand vp,
And say to all the world; This was a man.
Oct. According to his Vertue, let vs vse him
With all Respect, and Rites of Burrall.
Within my Tent his bones to night shall ly,
Most like a Souldier ordered Honourably.
So call the Field to rest, and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima

Thunder and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1. When shall we three meet againe?
In Thunder, Lightning, or in Raine?
2. When the Hurley-burley's done,
When the Battaile's lost, and wonne.
3. That will be ere the set of Sunne.
1. Where the place?
2. Vpon the Heath.
3. There to meet with Macbeth
1. I come, Gray-Malkin.
All. Padock calls anon: faire is foule, and foule is faire, Houer through the fogge and filthie ayre. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter King, Malcome, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine.

King. What bloody man is that? he can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the Reuolt
The newest state.
